Profits or Annual Value—Gross and Rateable—Evidence.—At the hearing of an appeal against a rate on a colliery, the colliery company put forward evidence that the best and only fair method of arriving at the net annual value was that of ascertaining the receipts in the year, and then deducting therefrom the proper deductions; in fact, rating it like a railway. If this was admissible, it worked out substantially correct. It was contended that this evidence was not admissible, but that it should be rated on the annual rent obtainable:—Held, that the evidence was admissible. Denaby and Cadeby Colliery Co. v. Doncaster Union, 78 L. T. 388; 62 J. P. 343—D.

Where in a rate the gross and rateable value are entered at the same figure, the gross is to be treated as an ascertained figure, and such deductions as can be properly made may be made therefrom. Ib.

Dock (Floating) and Basin—Statutory Power to Levy Harbour Dues—Dues Connected with Occupation of Land.—The Swansea Harbour Trustees were appointed and incorporated by a private Act of Parliament as conservators of the harbour and river at Swansea within certain defined limits. Besides piers and other works which the trustees had constructed on lands purchased by them within the limits of the harbour, they had also constructed under their statutory powers a floating dock and basin which occupied part of what had been the bed of the river. The soil of the harbour and river underneath this floating dock and basin was not purchased by the trustees, but remained, as it always had been, the property of the lord of the manor. By various private Acts the trustees were authorised to take certain dues in respect of ships using the harbour:—Held, (by the Divisional Court), that the trustees were in rateable occupation of the floating dock and basin; and (by the COURT OF APPEAL and HOUSE OF LORDS) that the harbour dues were not so connected with the occupation of land by the trustees that they should be taken into consideration in estimating the rateable value of the lands. Swansea Harbour Trustees v. Swansea Union, 71 J. P. 497; 5 L. G. R. 1240; 97 L. T. 585—H.L. (E.) Affirming, 94 L. T. 627; 22 T. L. R. 433—C.A.

Drill Hall—Not Used Exclusively as such—Objection to Assessment on Summons to Enforce Rate.]—A volunteer drill hall, besides being used for the purposes of the battalion, was let for concerts and other entertainments. It was assessed in the valuation list, and district rates were levied in respect of it. There had been no appeal against such assessment. On a complaint to recover the amount of the district rates, Held, that the Justices were bound to issue process for the recovery of such rates, as the premises were not exempt as being solely used by the Crown for the purposes of the Crown, nor were they exempt under section 26 of the Volunteer Act, 1863, for they were not solely used as a storehouse: Held, further, that the Justices could not go into the question of the amount of the assessment. Rayner v. Drewitt, 82 L. T. 718; 64 J. P. 567—D.

Gravel Pits—Land Occupied under Different Agreements—Part of Land Exhausted when Rate Made—Basis of Rate.]—At the date of the making of a poor rate a company were in rateable occupation of three and a-half acres of land held from the owner under three agreements made at various dates, which gave the company the right to occupy the land for one year, with liberty to dig for gravel. At the date in question the gravel in two and a-half acres out of the three and a-half acres in their occupation had been exhausted by the company, who used the two and a-half acres for storing gravel already dug. The gravel in the remaining acre was in course of being exhausted: Held, by the COURT OF APPEAL, that, in assessing the value of the land, its annual value at the time of making the rate ought to be taken at the amount of rent or royalty at which the same could then be reasonably expected to be let to a tenant for one year, regard being had to the value of the gravel in the unexhausted acre of land added to the value of the exhausted two and a-half acres for storage purposes. Farnham Flint Co. v. Farnham Union, 70 L. J. K.B. 180; [1901] 1 K.B. 272; 88 L. T. 660; 65 J. P. 102—C.A.

Rex v. Bedworth (8 East, 387) approved. Dictum of BLACKBURN, J., in Reg. v. Abney Park Cemetery Co., as reported L. R. 8 Q.B. at p. 519, as to the Legislature having taken "as a basis the rent which a tenant from year to year would give during the year preceding the time of making the rate," disapproved. Ib.

Hoarding for Advertisements.]—An advertising agent, merely as such, is not rateable to the relief of the poor as a person permitting land to be used for the erection of a hoarding used for the exhibition of advertisements within the meaning of section 3 of the Advertising Stations (Rating) Act, 1889. Burton v. St. Giles and St. George's Assessment Committee, 69 L. J. Q.B.

Home for Treatment of Epileptics—"Hospital."]—An institution having for its object the care and treatment of persons suffering from epilepsy—providing for such persons medical attendance, in combination with healthy and suitable employment and recreation, and supported partly by endowment, partly by subscriptions and donations, and partly by payments made on behalf of the patients—is a "hospital" within the meaning of the proviso in section 1 of the Poor Removal Act, 1846. Ormskirk Union v. Chorlton Union, 72 L. J. K.B. 721; [1903] 2 K.B. 498; 89 L. T. 256; 1 L. G. R. 692; 68 J. P. 42—C.A. Affirming, 51 W. R. 190—D.

"Lairage" for the Slaughter of Cattle—Profit-earning Capacity—Evidence of Receipts and Expenditure—Admissibility.]—In the assessment of premises, which are the only premises available for the purposes to which they are put, and the owners and occupiers of which are subject to statutory restrictions, although they are not the only possible occupiers of the premises, evidence is admissible of receipts and expenditure, and of other circumstances, and the assessment is not to be based solely on structural and land value. The profit-earning capacity of the premises is not the less a legitimate factor in determining the rent which a hypothetical tenant would give by reason of any statutory restriction in the application of the profits by the existing occupiers. Mersey Docks and Harbour Board v. Birkenhead Union, 70 L. J. K.B. 534; [1901] A.C. 175; 84 L. T. 542; 49 W. R. 610; 65 J. P. 579—H.L. (E.)

Lands Clauses Acts—Premises Taken by Promoters of Undertaking—Deficiency in Assessment—Liability to Make Good Deficiency.]—Under section 133 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, the promoters of an undertaking who have become possessed under their statutory powers of lands liable to be assessed to the poor rate are liable to make good the deficiency in the poor rate by reason of such land having been taken and used for their works until the works shall be completed and assessed to the poor rate. Section 10 of the London Government Act, 1899, provides (sub-section 1) that a scheme under the Act shall provide for all the expenses of a borough council being paid out of the general rate; and (sub-section 2) that the general rate and the poor rate shall be assessed, made, and levied together as one rate, which shall be assessed, made, collected, and levied as if it were the poor rate, and all enactments applying or referring to the poor rate shall, subject to the provisions of the Act as to audit, be construed as applying or referring also to the general rate: Held, that the defendants, who had under their statutory powers become possessed of lands within the Islington borough, as to which a scheme had been made under the Act of 1899, were not liable to make good the whole of the deficiency in the general rate arising by reason thereof, but only the deficiency in that part of it which represented poor rate. Islington Borough Council v. London School Board, 72 L. J. K.B. 677; [1903] 2 K.B. 354; 89 L. T. 53; 52 W. R. 115; 1 L. G. R. 704; 68 J. P. 35—C.A. Affirming, 67 J. P. 18—Wright, J.

Library—Free—Managed by Committee under Corporation—Liability to be Rated.]—Under statutory powers the appellants were authorised to establish and maintain a public library, and to appoint a committee invested with the control and management of such library. It was to be held upon trust by the appellants for the benefit of the inhabitants of L. and the neighbourhood, and others resorting thereto. Admission was to be free, and a rate was to be levied for the purpose of defraying the expenses. Premises consisting of reading-rooms where books and newspapers could be read, and a library, were established by the appellants under these powers, and, in addition to the rate, grants were made and moneys were derived from other sources for their maintenance. They were open to the public during the appointed hours without charge;—Held, that the premises were not exempt from liability to be rated; and held, further, that, even although a certificate of exemption had been obtained under the Literary and Scientific Societies Act, 1843, the premises were not exempt under that statute. Liverpool Corporation v. West Derby Union, 92 L. T. 467; 53 W. R. 633; 69 J. P. 277; 3 L. G. R. 647; 21 T. L. R. 469—D.

Machinery—Enhanced Value of Buildings—Method of Computation.]—In assessing the rateable value of buildings fitted with machinery adapting them for the particular purpose for which they are used, the machinery is to be taken into consideration in so far as it enhances the value of the buildings. This rule applies whether the machinery is or is not affixed to the freehold. It is a question of fact whether the machinery does or does not enhance the value of the buildings. The enhanced value is not to be arrived at by valuing the machinery as a separate hereditament and adding a percentage of that value to the value of the buildings. Tyne Boiler Works v. Longbenton Overseers (56 L. J. M.C. 8; 18 Q.B. D. 81) followed and applied. Crockett v. Northampton Assessment Committee, 72 L. J. K.B. 320—D.

Rating of Factory with—Machinery Tenant's Property.]—Machinery or other fixtures which are part of the stock-in-trade, though they belong to the tenant, must be taken into account in assessing the rateable value of the premises, whether or not they are attached to the freehold. The principle established in Reg. v. Guest (7 L. J. M.C. 38; 7 Ad. & E. 951), and followed ever since, cannot now be disturbed. Kirby v. Hunslet Union, 75 L. J. K.B. 129; [1906] A.C. 43; 94 L. T. 36; 70 J. P. 50; 4 L. G. R. 144; 22 T. L. R. 167—H.L. (E.)

Cranes in Docks—Warehouses in Different Parish—Docks in Different Parishes in Same Union—Deductions.]—The L. and I. Docks used cranes worked by hydraulic power communicated to them by means of mains laid under the surface of the docks in which they were used alongside the rails upon which the cranes travelled. The cranes could be made to travel along the rails upon which they rest by means of hand gearing attached to them, or by means of hydraulic capstans, or by means of levers. When in use such cranes were firmly and securely attached, by means of a flexible tube capable of resisting a pressure of 700 lb. to the square inch, to the hydraulic main by the side of the rails. While so attached the cranes could be moved along the rails 6 ft. in either direction, but in order to move them from one quay to another new lines of rails would have to be laid, or they would have to be moved by floating derricks:—Held, that these cranes must be treated as enhancing the rateable value of the dock undertaking, as they were on the premises for the purpose of making them fit as premises for the purpose for which they were used. London and India Docks v. Poplar Union, 83 L. T. 371; 64 J. P. 820—D.

Museum—Established by Act of Parliament—Public Admission—Possibility of Beneficial Occupation.]—S. Museum was established by an Act of Parliament under which the building and its contents were vested in trustees named in the Act and their successors. To these trustees was given the control of the building and museum subject to regulations contained in or made under the authority of the Act. One of these regulations was that the museum should be open on two days in each week during the months of April, May, and June each year to amateurs and students of architecture, and to persons who requested and obtained admission at any other times. Two rooms were to be set aside for the residence of a curator. The curator, besides taking care of the museum, collected the rents of a house which was settled as an endowment of the museum; and while the museum was closed to visitors the trustees of it met therein for the purpose of distributing the funds arising under a trust created for the benefit of poor architects by the founder of the museum:—Held, that the rights conferred on the public by the Act were not such as to exclude all beneficial occupation on the part of the trustees, and that consequently the building was rateable. Soane Museum v. St. Giles-in-the-Fields (Vestry), 83 L. T. 248—D.

Police Station—Residences of Officers—Rateability of Residences.]—Premises erected by a county council for the purposes of a police station, in addition to cells for prisoners and other offices constituting the police station, comprised three dwelling-houses exclusively occupied by the superintendent, inspector, and sergeant respectively and their families for their domestic use, all three residences being within the boundary wall of the police station. These dwelling-houses might be visited and inspected at any time, and in respect thereof a certain sum was deducted as rent from the salaries of the officers. The officers might be required to move elsewhere at any moment, but whilst they were attached to the station it was necessary that they should be resident within or adjacent to the station, and when appointed they were compelled to reside in such houses. There was frequent communication passing between the officers and those in charge of prisoners, and no prisoner could be locked up, bailed, or remanded unless one of the three officers was present:—Held, that the three dwelling-houses of the officers were a part of the police station, and were therefore with the police station exempt from rateability to poor rate. Cross v. West Derby Union, 81 L. T. 645; 64 J. P. 182—D.

Railway—Directly Productive and Indirectly

Productive Lines.—For rating purposes, additional or relief lines at a railway station must be treated as running lines and directly productive, and they are not the less so because they are used incidentally for other purposes, such as shunting. But lines at the station required only for purposes quite apart from anything arising in the particular parish—as for a sorting and waiting station—are to be treated as indirectly productive. Great Northern Railway and Edmonton Union, In re, 93 L. T. 479; 3 L. G. R. 1359; 69 J. P. 179, 316; 21 T. L. R. 638—Channell, J.

— Relief Lines.—A branch of the Taff Vale Railway was mainly used for the conveyance of coal from collieries to a seaport for shipment. The output of coals from the collieries was fairly constant, but the rate of shipment was irregular. The collieries had little siding accommodation on which loaded waggons could stand, and, in order that the working of the collieries might not be stopped when ships were not ready to take delivery of coal, the railway company daily took loaded waggons from the collieries and delivered empty waggons returning from the sea there. In the parish of R., through which the branch in question ran between the collieries and the port, there were, in addition to the main running lines, a series of relief lines in the nature of loop lines. In an arbitration as to the valuation of the railway in the parish of R. for rating purposes the arbitrator stated his award in the form of a Special Case. He found that the main and primary purpose for which the relief lines were laid and used was the relief of the main running lines by providing lines on which the coal waggons going down to or coming back from the sea could pass one another, and lines on which coal waggons could, if necessary, wait until a ship was ready to receive the coal. He found that the relief lines were directly productive of profit to the railway company, and that 85 per cent. of the gross receipts of the company in the parish were earned by waggons which traversed one or more of the relief lines, but did not traverse the adjacent portion of the main running line. And he made his award on the footing that the relief lines were, in the valuation of the railway, to be treated as directly productive, and not as indirectly productive.—Held, that the arbitrator was right. Taff Vale Railway and Cardiff Union, In re, 71 J. P. 529; 97 L. T. 739; 6 L. G. R. 22—C. A. Affirming, 95 L. T. 455; 4 L. G. R. 932—Bigham, J.

— Connecting Line between Two Railways used Solely for Through Traffic—Interest on Cost of Construction.—A railway company constructed a short line to connect their system with that of another railway company, the amount required for the construction of the line being borrowed from the latter company at a certain rate of interest. There were no stations or sidings on the line, nor did the line originate any traffic, the whole traffic consisting of through traffic passing between the systems of the two companies. No company other than these two companies could be found to acquire the line. Its sole advantage to these companies was for the exchange of traffic under an agreement for that purpose between them, and in the absence of such an agreement the line would be of no value, and could not be let to either of the two companies:—Held, that for rating purposes the rating authority were entitled to take into consideration the interest payable by the one company to the other on the cost of construction. Great Central Railway v. Banbury Assessment Committee, 76 L. J. K.B. 577; [1907] 1 K. B. 717; 96 L. T. 243; 71 J. P. 157; 5 L. G. R. 328; 23 T. L. R. 283—C. A. Reversing, 54 W. R. 470—D.

— Parochial Principle—Cost of Construction—Interest on Cost of Construction Guaranteed.—

A railway line was constructed by the L. and B. railway company under an Act of 1845, whereby another company, the B. railway company, were to provide for the purpose the sum of 125,000*l.*, the estimated cost of constructing the line, and were to be paid in perpetuity by the L. and B. company a sum, called in the Act a rent, equal to 4 per cent. on the capital of 125,000*l.*, or so much thereof as should have been spent on the line, together with one moiety of the surplus profits of the line, and the line when constructed was to become the property of the L. and B. company. In fact the L. and B. company spent on the construction of the line 240,000*l.* in addition to the above-mentioned sum of 125,000*l.* The appellant company became the successors of the L. and B. company; and under Acts of 1877 and 1879 the capital of the B. company was converted into guaranteed stock of the appellants, and the B. company was dissolved. On an appeal against a rate made on the portion of the railway in the parish of A. in the year 1904 the quarter sessions stated a Case, setting out the above facts, and stating also in effect that there was no such competition for the line as would give it any specially enhanced value:—Held, that interest on the capital cost of the construction of the line afforded no criterion of the rent a hypothetical tenant would give for the line, and that the portion of the line in the parish must therefore be valued for rating purposes on the parochial principle—that is to say, by computation from the net earnings of the line in the parish. Great Central Railway v. Banbury Union (supra) followed. London and North-Western Railway v. Amptwell Union, 94 L. T. 314; 4 L. G. R. 92; 70 J. P. 46—D. Affirmed, 71 J. P. 545; 97 L. T. 869; 6 L. G. R. 64—C. A.

— Signal-Box.—A signal-box is part of the non-productive property of a railway in respect of which a deduction is allowed from the gross receipts of the railway for the purpose of assessing the railway to poor rate in a parish, but is rateable locally according to the parochial principle of rating. Midland Railway v. Pontefract Union, 70 L. J. K.B. 691; [1901] 2 K.B. 189; 84 L. T. 536; 65 J. P. 455—D.

— Railway Station—Rateability as One or as Several Hereditaments.—The property of a railway company in a parish consisted of running lines, sidings, a passenger station, engine sheds, carriage and wagon, locomotive, and permanent way shops, an excursion platform, a cattle dock, a pumping station, an hydraulic pumping station, electric light and oil-gas works, a coal yard, and a goods warehouse. The whole formed a continuous area approached by gates under the sole control of the company and completely fenced round except where the main running lines passed through. There was access from every part to every other part. The gates were locked or watched at night, so that the public could not enter without permission. The main lines passed through the passenger station and under its roof. The portions of the property other than the lines and passenger station could be distinguished as separate areas, but were served by lines connected with the rest of the railway, and their use was connected with and auxiliary to the general purposes of the company's business. The carriage and wagon and locomotive shops, pumping and hydraulic pumping stations, electric light, and oil-gas works, and goods warehouse, as laid out, were only adapted for use by the company, but if suitable arrangements had been made they might have been occupied separately from the railway and by other persons:—Held, that for the purpose of assessing and rating the property to the poor rate it might be treated as one hereditament, and that its several parts need not be treated as separate hereditaments. North-Eastern Railway v. York Union, 69 L. J. Q.B. 376; [1900] 1 Q.B. 733; 82 L. T. 201; 64 J. P. 437—D.

— Lines Passing through Station — Lines Contributing Directly to Company's Earnings. —

Lines of railway constructed within the area of a railway station for the convenience of traffic, as supplementary to the original lines passing through the station, but diverging from and rejoining them, are for rating purposes to be treated, like the original lines, as part of the railway directly contributing to the company's earnings, and are assessable on the "parochial" system, notwithstanding that such supplementary lines be used for traffic destined to or coming from goods or coal yards, or for standing and unloading goods wagons, or for running goods trains, or for the standing of engines and passenger carriages, or, at times, for shunting, or as bay lines into which local trains when emptied are shunted preparatory to recommencing a journey. Stockport Union v. London and North-Western Railway, 67 L. J. Q.B. 335; 78 L. T. 180; 62 J. P. 244—C.A.

Rector's Rate — House — Occupation — Caretaker.—By 51 Geo. 3, c. 150, after reciting an Act of 1 Car. 2, c. 37, whereby a yearly sum of 250*l.* was charged upon the houses of the inhabitants of the parish of St. Paul, Covent Garden, for the support and benefit of the rector, curate, clerk, and sextons for the time being of that parish, that charge of 250*l.* was repealed, and in lieu thereof a yearly sum of 520*l.* was charged upon all houses within the said parish to be assessed by the churchwardens and paid by the occupiers of such houses respectively:—Held, that houses consisting of the offices, warehouses, storerooms, and counting-houses of publishers, some rooms in which were occupied by caretakers and their families, such caretakers having internal access to the whole of the premises, were chargeable under this statute. Lewin v. Newnes, 90 L. T. 160; 68 J. P. 164; 20 T. L. R. 206—D.

School—"Voluntary school"—Exemption from Rates.—A building maintained and used as an institution for the maintenance and education of orphan and fatherless girls, daughters of soldiers and sailors, who receive an elementary and religious education and practical instruction for domestic service, and who reside in such building, is not a building used exclusively or mainly for the purposes of the schoolrooms, offices, or playground of a voluntary school, so as to be exempt from rates by virtue of section 3 of the Voluntary Schools Act, 1897. Patriotic Fund Commissioners v. Wandsworth Borough, 88 L. T. 865; 67 J. P. 311; 1 L. G. R. 711—D.

"Sewage carrier" partially Underground—Rateability of Portions below the Surface.—A sewage carrier, above ground in some places and underground in others, is not within the exception in favour of underground sewers, nor exempt from rateability to the poor rate, but is rateable as a whole. Ystradyfodwg Sewerage Board v. Newport (Mon.) Assessment Committee, 69 L. J. Q.B. 280; [1900] 1 Q.B. 365; 82 L. T. 53; 48 W. R. 382; 64 J. P. 293—D.

Sewage Farm—Obligation on Tenant to Receive Sewage of District—Advantages to Sewerage Board in Disposal of Sewage.—Land which had been acquired by a sewerage board for the purposes of sewage disposal, and on which the board had at large expense constructed works for distributing the sewage on the land, was let by the board to a farming tenant at a rent of 490*l.* a year, the tenant covenanting to receive and dispose of the sewage delivered on the land by the board so as to satisfy the statutory obligations of the board. The rent paid by the tenant was a fair rent for the advantages which the tenant got under the lease, including the value of the sewage for manurial purposes:—Held, that in valuing the sewage farm (including the works in question) for rating purposes the annual value of the advantages accruing to the sewerage board (over and above the actual rent of the farm) in respect of the facilities afforded to them by the user of the farm as a sewage farm for the performance of their statutory duties ought to be taken into consideration. Davies v. Seisdon Assessment Committee, 76 L. J. K.B. 472; [1907] 1 K.B. 680; 96 L. T. 315; 71 J. P. 153; 5 L. G. R. 306; 23 T. L. R. 251—C.A.

— Lease to Tenant—Sewage Works on Farm—Occupation by Sewerage Board.—The S. board acquired a sewage farm and laid down thereon certain carriers and other sewage works and plant. They leased the farm to C., reserving the right of entry thereon for the purpose of constructing, maintaining, altering and repairing the works as might be requisite for using the farm as a sewage farm. C. was to irrigate by means of the works on the farm, and was to keep the pipes and carriers properly flushed and clean. The board kept the works in repair, and from time to time their surveyor and agents went on the land to see that the sewage was properly distributed and treated, and to do repairs:—Held, that the board were rightly held not to be in occupation of these carriers and other sewage works and plant, and so not legally rateable in respect thereof. Stourbridge Drainage Board v. Seisdon Union, 86 L. T. 415; 66 J. P. 372—D.

Sewer Vested in Public Authority—Underground Sewer—Sewer Outside District of Public Authority—Payment for Use of Sewer by Other Authorities.—The authorities which decide that certain underground sewers of public bodies are not liable to be rated must be regarded as anomalies in rating law and will not be extended. All sewers (which, on general principles, prima facie are rateable) must be held rateable unless, first, they are quite underground, so that the surface under which they run is not occupied or in any way affected by them; and secondly, no payment is made to the persons in whom the sewers are vested for the use of them by others. Ystradyfodwg Main Sewerage Board v. Newport (Mon.) Assessment Committee, 70 L. J. K.B. 318; [1901] 1 K.B. 406; 84 L. T. 40; 49 W. R. 292; 65 J. P. 307—C.A.

Toll-bridge—Lease of Tolls and Toll-house—De Facto Occupation of Bridge by Lessee.—The corporation of a city granted a lease of the tolls payable for passage over a swing bridge, erected in lieu of a ferry, and of a toll-house situate on or adjoining the bridge, to a lessee for a term of years. The lease reserved to the corporation right to open the bridge at certain times for the passage of ships and certain rights of passage toll-free over the bridge. It contained a covenant by the lessee not to place or permit to be placed any gate or bars across the bridge, and not to permit the exhibition of bills or placards upon it, and reserved a right of entry to the corporation on the bridge for the purpose of removing anything placed on the bridge in contravention of this covenant:—Held, that, looking at the lease as a whole, though it did not, as a matter of conveyancing, amount to a demise of the bridge, yet it showed that the intention of the parties was that the lessee should be in de facto occupation of the bridge, and that his rights over the bridge should be paramount and those of the corporation subordinate; and that the lessee was the rateable occupier of the bridge. Holywell Union v. Halkyn District Mines Drainage Co. (64 L. J. M.C. 113; [1895] A.C. 117) followed. Percy v. Hall, 88 L. T. 830; 67 J. P. 293; 1 L. G. R. 613—D.

Tramway—Deduction of Interest and Sinking Fund of Money Borrowed—Parochial or Mileage Rating.—In rating a tramway leased by a corporation to a tramway company on which tramway the company is to repay, by means of a sinking fund, borrowed money with interest thereon, no deduction is to be made in respect of the money so borrowed or the interest. Melbourne Tramway and Omnibus Co. v. Fitzroy Corporation, 70 L. J. P.C. 1; [1901] A.C. 153; 83 L. T. 442—P.C.

The company is the occupier of the land in such circumstances, though the ownership is in the Crown, and its rating is that of a simple occupation rate, and the true test of value is the rent obtainable from a hypothetical tenant. Ib.

When a tramway passes through several rating areas, the parochial principle of rating is to be applied by which buildings are rated separately to the area in which they stand, and the remainder of the rating value is distributed among the rating areas on the mileage principle. Ib.

— Tramway Lines Passing through Several Contiguous Parishes.—The undertaking of an electric tramway company comprised a system of lines of tramways which ran through several contiguous parishes. In some cases the company's cars passed over the same lines of tramway for a portion of the journey when traversing different routes. The company charged passengers conveyed in their cars specified fares for any length of journey between certain fixed points and other fixed points upon such lines. The journeys which might be taken upon payment of such fares in all cases overlapped one another. Passengers could enter and leave a car at any time upon the route traversed by the car; and upon portions of the company's system the traffic was, and consequently the receipts obtained by the company in respect of such traffic were, greater per mile of highway than upon other portions of the system:—Held, that, in order to ascertain the rateable value of the company's undertaking in a certain parish, it was not an incorrect method of valuation in the circumstances of the case to arrive in the first instance at a rateable value of the whole of the undertaking, and then (after deducting the value of the indirectly productive part thereof), for the purpose of adopting the parochial principle so far as possible, to divide such rateable value among the parishes in which the undertaking was situate, according to the number of car miles run in each parish during a period of twelve months. London United Tramways v. Brentford Union, 96 L. T. 528; 71 J. P. 249; 5 L. G. R. 682—C.A.

Warehouse—Occupation.—J. B. M. & Co. were the owners of a warehouse at L. During a certain period the warehouse was closed and had no goods in it whatever, and all the working appliances such as scales, weights, and trucks were removed, and the water-supply and hydraulic power was cut off. A notice was exhibited saying the warehouse was to let, but the owners did not intend to allow any part to be used unless they could obtain sufficient goods which would take up at least one-half of the available space of the warehouse and so make it commercially worth their while to open the warehouse. On an application for a distress warrant for the rates for such period during which the warehouse was closed, the Justices found as a fact that there had been no occupation of the warehouse during that period, and they refused the application:—Held, that the Justices were justified in so finding. Re v. Henderson; James, Ex parte, 92 L. T. 662; 69 J. P. 294; 3 L. G. R. 756—D.

— Empty Warehouse—Occupation—Intention—Liability to Rates.—From a date prior to the making of certain rates the respondents gave notice to the appellants that they intended to keep certain warehouses unoccupied during the current overseers' year, and to claim exemption from the rates in respect thereof. All goods had been removed before the making of the rate, and the warehouses had not been used since that date, though they were advertised in the list of warehouses to let belonging to the respondents. Each warehouse was one of a block, through which continuous shafting passed, and at the end of the block was a notice: "For storage, apply to the L. W. Company." A warehouse in respect of which notice had been given to the appellants was still advertised on the cards issued by the respondents, and they had tried to let it by notice affixed on the warehouse:—Held, that the Justices were justified in coming to the conclusion that there was no occupation of these warehouses so as to render the respondents liable to be rated in respect thereof. Booth Overseers v. Liverpool Warehousing Co., 85 L. T. 45; 65 J. P. 740—D.

Warehouses in Different Parish.]—The L. and I. Docks also used certain warehouses, situate outside the parishes in the P. Union, in connection with and for the purposes of their undertaking. These warehouses were separately assessed in the parishes in which they were situate, and they did not adjoin the dock warehouses or docks:—Held, that the net receipts derived from these warehouses should be deducted from the net receipts derived by the L. and I. Docks from their whole undertaking, inclusive of such warehouses, when ascertaining the rateable value of the premises of the L. and I. Docks within the parishes in the P. Union. London and India Docks v. Poplar Union, 83 L. T. 371; 64 J. P. 830—D.

Docks in Different Parishes in Same Union.]—Where one system of docks is situated in different parishes in the same union, the rateable value ought to be ascertained upon the parochial principle. Ib.

Deductions—Superannuation—Amalgamation.]—Expenses of one company, such as superannuation allowances or rents of premises made payable by such company, upon an amalgamation of several companies to form one undertaking, ought not to be deducted from receipts in order to arrive at the net revenue of the undertaking. Ib.

Waterworks—Reservoir—Capital Value—Cost of Providing New Buildings and Roads in Lieu of Buildings and Roads Submerged.]—In ascertaining the capital value of a reservoir forming part of a system of waterworks, in order to arrive at the rent which a hypothetical tenant from year to year would pay for it as an index of the rateable value, the cost of new buildings and roads compulsorily provided in accordance with the provisions of the statute under the powers of which the reservoir was constructed, in lieu of buildings and roads submerged by the reservoir, ought to be included in the calculation. Liverpool Corporation v. Llanfyllin Assessment Committee, 68 L. J. Q.B. 762; [1899] 2 Q.B. 14; 80 L. T. 667; 63 J. P. 452—C.A.

— “Intake”—Right to Use Water.]—The New River Co. has, under various Acts of Parliament, the right of appropriating water from the river Lea, at a point fixed by statute, by means of an “intake” consisting of a structure erected on land occupied by them for the purpose:—Held, that the added value of the intake, beyond the structural value of the building and the value of the land as land, by reason of the special fitness of the land and structure for the particular purpose to which they were put, should be taken into account in rating the intake:—Held, further, that the price, fixed by statute, payable by the company for the water itself so appropriated by them was not an element to be taken into consideration in arriving at the rateable value of the intake. New River Co. v. Hertford Assessment Committee, 71 L. J. K.B. 827; [1902] 2 K.B. 597; 87 L. T. 360; 51 W. R. 49; 66 J. P. 724—C.A.

— Water Main—Main Constructed under Agreement between Local Authorities for Supply of Water from One to the Other.]—The Liverpool Corporation, who are the owners of the Vyrnwy reservoir in Montgomeryshire, and of an aqueduct whereby the water from the reservoir is conveyed to Liverpool, are empowered by their local Acts to agree with any local authority whose district is within twenty miles of the aqueduct to supply them with water from the aqueduct and to execute the necessary works on behalf of such authority. Under these powers the corporation agreed with the Wallasey Urban District Council to supply them with water and to lay a main from the aqueduct to Wallasey for that purpose; and such main was laid accordingly. By the terms of the agreement the district council were to take, and they did take, the steps necessary under the Public Health Act, 1875, to enable the main to be laid. The agreement provided that the main when laid should be the property of the corporation, and that the water supplied should be paid for by the district council according to the quantity supplied as measured by a meter at the Wallasey end of the main:—Held, that the Liverpool Corporation, and not the Wallasey Urban District Council, were the rateable occupiers of the main. Liverpool Corporation v. Birkenhead Union, 94 L. T. 509; 70 J. P. 146; 4 L. G. R. 273—D.

Workmen's Lodgings—Structures Easily Removable from Place to Place.]—The appellants, who were contractors for the construction of a line of railway, desired for the purposes of their business that certain of the men whom they employed should live near the works, and for that purpose they had, by agreement with the owners or occupiers of certain pieces of land, erected upon these pieces of land wooden huts or structures. The structures were capable of being removed as occasion required without damage to the ground, and they contained no sanitary arrangements. Each structure was divided into a sleeping room, where about twenty men slept, a living room, sleeping-rooms for a caretaker and his family, and a pantry; and the structures had been in their then situation for upwards of a year. It was admitted that if the structures were rateable in law the appellants were the proper persons to be rated in respect of them:—Held, that the structures were rateable in law, and that the appellants were properly rated in respect thereof. Mitchell v. Worksop Union, 92 L. T. 62; 69 J. P. 53; 3 L. G. R. 44; 21 T. L. R. 156—D.

11. EXEMPTION.

Crown—Premises used for Purposes of—Police Residence with Cell.]—Certain premises were formerly the lodge of an old prison now pulled down. They were occupied by two members of the county constabulary, and were formerly used as a police-station with two cells. The premises are now used for the residence of two constables and their families, and one of the cells is still retained for the detention of prisoners. A certain weekly sum is deducted from the pay of the constables as rent in respect of their occupation of part of the premises. No police books are kept there, and charges are not taken there. The whole of the premises are subject to the inspection of the Government inspector of police, but no inspection has been made for six years, though they were yearly inspected by the county surveyor:—Held, that the premises were not exempt from the poor rate, as being used for police purposes. Monmouth Overseers v. Monmouthshire County Council, 87 L. T. 65; 66 J. P. 788—D.

— Volunteer Drill Hall and Storehouse—Part occasionally Let for other Purposes.—Certain premises were used as a storehouse, drill hall, &c., for a volunteer battalion, the whole of the property being in the occupation of, and vested in, the commanding officer. Certain portions of the premises were occasionally let for lectures, balls, &c., but such letting was subservient to the use of the premises for military purposes. The appellant was the caretaker, and did not reside on the premises, but the musical and dramatic licences were taken out in the name of the appellant. The appellant was rated in respect of such portions of the premises as were let out for the above-mentioned purposes:—Held, that, although the appellant was not the proper person to be rated, as he was only a servant, yet those portions of the premises which were let out were properly rateable. Lewis v. Durham Union, 90 L. T. 383; 68 J. P. 220; 2 L. G. R. 533; 20 T. L. R. 227—D.

Premises Used for Police Purposes—Chief Constable's House.—Premises used for police purposes are none the less so used because part consists of the chief constable's house where he resides with his family. The whole premises, therefore, are exempt from assessment to the poor rate. Leicester County Council v. Leicester Assessment Committee, 73 L. T. 463; 46 W. R. 585—D.

— "Society instituted for purposes of science, literature, or fine arts exclusively"—Association for Advancement of Art of Music.—A society, the primary object of which is the advancement of the art of music by means of a central teaching and examining body, by rewarding with academical degrees and certificates of proficiency persons proved worthy of such distinctions, and by the promotion and supervision of such musical instruction in schools as may be conducive to the dissemination of the art and encouragement of its cultivation throughout her Majesty's dominions, and which is supported wholly or in part by annual voluntary contributions, and does not, and by its laws may not, make "any dividend, gift, division, or bonus in money," is a society instituted for the purposes of the fine arts exclusively within section 1 of the Scientific Societies Act, 1843, and is entitled to exemption from rating. Royal College of Music v. St. Margaret and St. John, Westminster (Vestry), 67 L. J. Q. B. 540; [1898] 1 Q. B. 809; 78 L. T. 441; 62 J. P. 357—C. A.

Society Instituted for Purposes of Science Exclusively—Annual Voluntary Contributions.—The objects for which an institute was established were, inter alia, to study, investigate, discover, and improve the means of preventing and curing infective diseases, and to provide a place where research might be carried on for these purposes; to provide instruction and education in preventive medicine for practitioners and advanced students; to prepare and supply protective and curative materials for the prevention and treatment of infective diseases; to treat persons suffering from such diseases; and to examine its students. The institute was bound to apply its income and property, whencesoever derived, solely towards the promotion of its objects. It was supported by donations and annual subscriptions, fees derived from lectures and from students, fees for diagnoses and for the use of its laboratories, receipts from the sale of the protective and curative materials which it prepared, and receipts from the sale of its printed transactions. It purchased land and erected buildings thereon, which it occupied and used for the above-mentioned objects. It let several rooms, not structurally severed from the rest of the buildings, or having any separate entrance, on a yearly tenancy to the Local Government Board, who occupied and used them for purposes connected with vaccination. It made no dividend, gift, division, or bonus in money to or between any of its members. It had obtained a certificate under the Scientific Societies Act, 1843:—Held, that it was not exempt from rateability in respect of the buildings as a society instituted for purposes of science exclusively within the meaning of section 1 of that Act. Jenner Institute v. St. George's, Hanover Square, Assessment Committee, 69 L. J. Q. B. 814; 83 L. T. 344—D.

Scientific, Literary, and Artistic Societies—"Voluntary contributions"—Contributions from Local Education Authority—Government Grants.—Contributions paid out of the rates by the local education authority, and grants paid by the Board of Education out of moneys provided by Parliament, towards the support of a scientific, literary, or artistic society are "voluntary contributions" within the meaning of the Scientific Societies Act, 1843. Consequently, a society instituted for the purposes of science, literature, or the fine arts exclusively, and receiving such contributions and grants annually, is exempt from rates under that Act if the other necessary conditions are fulfilled, though not in receipt of any other voluntary contributions. Royal College of Music v. Westminster Vestry (67 L. J. Q. B. 80; [1898] 1 Q. B. 304) followed. Liverpool Corporation v. West Derby Union (3 L. G. R. 647) not followed. Hornsey School of Art v. Edmonton Union, 94 L. T. 203; 70 J. P. 121; 4 L. G. R. 178—D.

Serjeants' Inn.—Occupiers of chambers in Old Serjeants' Inn, which inn formerly belonged to the see of Ely, and was held (subject to a perpetual rent) by the Honourable Society of Judges and Serjeants-at-Law, but the fee-simple of which was sold by the society in 1877, are not exempted from being rated to the poor rate by virtue of 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. ex. Jonas v. St. Dunstan Overseers, 95 L. T. 787; 71 J. P. 33; 5 L. G. R. 147; 23 T. L. R. 13—D.

Borough—Incorporation of—Property Partially Exempted from Rates Except Poor Rate and "charges at present collected with the poor rate"—Expenses under Education Act.—In 1894 an urban district together with certain adjoining areas comprised in a rural district was formed into a municipal borough in the usual way by charter. The scheme framed under the Municipal Corporation Act, 1882, in connection with the creation of the borough contained a provision that certain harbour property in the adjoining areas should not in future "pay to the borough or be assessable for any rates or charges" (except water rate) at a higher rate than 3d. in the pound per annum "exclusive of the rate for the relief of the poor and the other charges at present collected with the poor rate within the urban district," so long as the roads, &c., in the harbour should be maintained and lighted out of the harbour revenue. At the time of the creation of the borough the adjoining areas were not under the jurisdiction of a school board, and the harbour property was consequently not rated towards the expenses of any school board; but the property was rated through the medium of the poor rate in the usual way towards expenses of a school attendance committee:—Held, that the property in question was not exempted by the above provisions from being rated for the purposes of the expenses of the borough council as local education authority. Whitehaven Harbour Commissioners v. Whitehaven Union, 94 L. T. 504; 4 L. G. R. 128; 70 J. P. 89—D.

Private Act.—A private Act of 1780 vested a piece of land in trustees for certain purposes therein mentioned for the benefit of the inhabitants of a borough, and provided that for ever thereafter the land should be deemed and taken as within and parcel of the borough, but should in no wise be assessed to poor's rate:—Held, that the land was exempt for ever from being assessable to poor's rate, and therefore a rate committee, to whom the trustees had leased a portion of the land for a race-course, were not liable to poor's rate by reason of their occupation. Pontefract Assessment Committee v. Pontefract Park Trustees, 78 L. T. 738—C.A.

12. ASSESSMENT.

Basis of—Parochial Principle.—By a private Act the lessees of a railway, which connected the systems of several railway companies, but had no terminal stations of its own, were liable to pay a minimum annual rent or sum of 30,000l. in respect of it. The line was worked at a loss. The quarter sessions, without considering the fact that 30,000l. had been fixed by the statute to be paid for the accommodation acquired by the lessees, fixed the rateable value upon the footing of what a hypothetical tenant would give for the line, having regard to its position, connections, and the accommodation afforded:—Held, that the quarter sessions proceeded on the right principle. East London Railway v. Greenwich Union, 97 L. T. 404; 71 J. P. 460; 5 L. G. R. 922—D.

Rateable Value—Licensed Premises—Trade Actually Done.—The estimated amount of business done on licensed premises, although an enquiry into profits is to be avoided, is one of the circumstances which may be taken into consideration in assessing them for poor rate. Cartwright v. Sculcoates Union, 69 L. J. Q.B. 403; [1900] A.C. 150; 82 L. T. 157; 48 W. R. 394; 64 J. P. 229—H.L. (E.)

The distinction referred to in Dodds v. South

Shields Assessment Committee (64 L. J. Q.B. 508; [1895] 2 Q.B. 133) between exceptional and ordinary cases involves no principle of law, though it may be a convenient rule of practice. Ib.

Deductions—Expense Necessary to Maintain Premises in State to Command Rent—Licensed Premises—Compensation.—The charge imposed in any year under section 3 of the Licensing Act, 1904, on licensed premises for the purpose of forming a compensation fund cannot be allowed as a deduction under section 1 of the Parochial Assessments Act, 1836, in arriving at the rateable value of such licensed premises. Waddle v. Sunderland Union, 76 L. J. K.B. 16; [1906] 2 K.B. 899; 95 L. T. 784; 4 L. G. R. 1155; 71 J. P. 1; 23 T. L. R. 7—D. Affirmed, C.A., [1908] 1 K.B. 642; 72 J. P. 99.

Sea Wall—Rent-charges Imposed on Some of Protected Lands only.—Rentcharges were by a local Act created for the purpose of maintaining works for the protection from inundation by the sea of the lands in a particular district, but were imposed upon some only of the lands within the district, although the works also benefited the remainder of the lands:—Held (VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., dissenting), that the rentcharges so imposed could not be allowed as specific deductions in arriving at the rateable value of those lands on which they were imposed. Stead v. Newport Union, 76 L. J. K.B. 753; [1907] 2 K.B. 460; 97 L. T. 413; 71 J. P. 363; 5 L. G. R. 892—C.A.

Expenses of Dredging Harbour.—The expenses of dredging a harbour are a proper deduction under section 37 of the Poor Law (Scotland) Act, 1845 [cf. section 1 of the Parochial Assessments Act, 1836], in arriving at the annual value of the harbour. Burghhead Harbour Co. v. George, 8 F. 982—Ct. of Sess.

Insurance.—In ascertaining the probable annual cost "of insurance" to be deducted, allowance is not to be made except for sums which during any of the years taken in striking the average were actually paid as premiums of insurance. Ib.

Buildings—Cost of Construction—Evidence of Letting Value.—In valuing premises consisting of a dwelling-house, a percentage on the actual cost of construction cannot properly be taken as the sole basis of assessment when there is evidence of letting value and of expense of repairs, insurance, and up-keep of the premises borne by the owner. Fletcher v. Commissioner of Valuation, [1907] 2 Ir. R. 112—K.B. D.

Statutory Restrictions as to Application of Revenue.—The Commissioners of the Leith Harbour and Docks were empowered by their private Act to levy dock-rates up to certain prescribed limits, and the revenue so obtained was directed to be applied, after payment of the expenses of maintaining the harbour and docks, "in or towards the expense of executing further improvements on or additions to and extensions of the harbour and docks and works connected therewith." The rates actually levied were much below the statutory limits, but were in excess of the cost of maintenance, and the balance, which was considerable, was applied in reduction of debt incurred in making extensions of the undertaking:—Held, that the undertaking was to be valued as a profit-earning subject; that consequently the only expenditure to be deducted from the gross revenue was tenant's expenditure; but that a sum in name of tenant's profits ought also to be deducted. Leith Harbour Commissioners v. Leith Assessor, [1907] S. C. 751—Ct. of Sess.

Valuation List in Metropolis.—See METROPOLIS.

18. APPEAL.

"Person aggrieved"—Person bound to Reimburse Rates Paid by the Person Entered in Rate Book.—The words in section 18 of the Union Assessment Committee Act, 1862, "any person who may feel himself aggrieved by any valuation list," include a person who, although his name does not appear in the rate book, is by agreement bound to refund to the person whose name does appear in the rate book the rates paid by him. He is therefore entitled to give notice to the assessment committee and the overseers of his objection to the valuation list. Reg. v. Brentford Assessment Committee; Herring, Ex parte, 96 L. T. 704; 5 L. G. R. 1188; 71 J. P. 281—D.

Appeal to Quarter Sessions—Service of Notice—Jurisdiction.—Upon an appeal to quarter sessions from a poor rate the giving proper notice of appeal is not a condition precedent to quarter sessions having jurisdiction to enter and respite the appeal. Reg. v. Kent Justices (80 L. T. 622) not followed upon this point. Reg. v. De Grey; King's Lynn Docks Co., Ex parte, 69 L. J. Q.B. 341; [1900] 1 Q.B. 521; 82 L. T. 324; 48 W. R. 348; 64 J. P. 375—D.

Service of Notice—Reasonable Notice—Parish Councils.—The L. C. and D. Railway Co. appealed to quarter sessions against the assessments for the poor rate made on their property in eleven parishes in the county of K. Seven of these parishes had parish councils, and the remaining four had parish meetings. No notices of appeal against the rate had been served within proper time on the parish councils, and the Justices refused to enter and respite the appeal with a view to proper notices being served. On a rule nisi for a mandamus calling on the Justices to show cause why they should not enter and respite the appeal in order to enable notices to be properly served on the parish councils,—Held, that the parish councils should be served with notice, and that, as notices had not been served in proper time upon them, there was no appeal that could be entered and respited. Held also that, as the rule nisi only mentioned parish councils, it was not necessary to decide whether parish meetings should be served with notice of appeal or not. Reg. v. Kent Justices; London, Chatham, and Dover Railway, Ex parte, 80 L. T. 622—D.

Next Quarter Sessions after "cause of appeal" Arises—Knowledge of Right to Appeal.—A parish authority appealing against a county rate do not appeal to the next quarter sessions after their "cause of appeal" has arisen, within the meaning of section 22 of the County Rates Act, 1852, by merely appealing to the next available quarter sessions after they have become aware of their right to appeal, if these are not the next after their right to appeal has come into existence. Yorkshire (West Riding) County Council v. Middleton Parish Council, 75 L. J. K.B. 485; [1906] 2 K.B. 157; 94 L. T. 735; 70 J. P. 326; 4 L. G. R. 624; 22 T. L. R. 493—D.

Order Altering Basis of Rate—Retrospective Operation on Existing Rate.—The Court of quarter sessions have no jurisdiction under the County Rates Act, 1852, to order that an alteration of the county rate basis shall operate retrospectively upon a rate previously made. Ib.

Appeal to Special Sessions—Notice to Parish Council.—It is a condition precedent to an appeal to special sessions against a rate, under section 6 of the Parochial Assessment Act, 1836, that notice of appeal should have been given to the parish council. Reg. v. Tewkesbury Justices, 72 L. J. K.B. 41; [1903] 1 K.B. 39; 87 L. T. 583; 51 W. R. 285; 67 J. P. 54; 1 L. G. R. 66—D.

Next Practicable Sessions—Time—Assessment Committee—Failure to Obtain Relief—Next Sessions after Failure.—A rate was made on April 21, 1903. Certain ratepayers considered themselves aggrieved by the assessment, but took no steps till October 26, 1903, when they gave notice of objection to the assessment committee. In the meantime meetings of the assessment committee had been held on May 15 and August 13, and a Court of quarter sessions had been held on June 27. A subsequent Court was held on October 27. The objection was, on November 12, heard at a meeting of the assessment committee and decided against the ratepayers, who, on December 5, gave notice of appeal to the next Court of quarter sessions, held on January 2, 1904:—Held, that, having regard to the provisions of section 1 of the Union Assessment Committee Amendment Act, 1864, and notwithstanding section 4 of the Poor Relief Act, 1743, the appeal was not necessarily out of time. Imperial and Grand Hotels Co. v. Christchurch Union, 74 L. J. K.B. 768; [1905] 2 K.B. 239; 92 L. T. 847; 53 W. R. 627; 69 J. P. 805; 3 L. G. R. 895; 21 T. L. R. 545—C.A.

Gross Estimated Rental—Finality of Figure Appearing in Rate-Book and Valuation List.—The gross estimated rental of premises as it appears in the rate-book and valuation list is final, and it is not competent to a Court of quarter sessions, upon a ratepayer's appeal from the assessment committee, to admit evidence tendered by the rating authority to shew that the gross estimated rental has been understated. Horton v. Walsall Union, 67 L. J. Q.B. 804; [1898] 2 Q.B. 237; 78 L. T. 684; 46 W. R. 607; 62 J. P. 437—D.

Rate Payable in Instalments—Appeal during Period of Second Instalment—Liability to Repay.—A rate was made payable in two instalments. Certain ratepayers paid the first instalment, and subsequently appealed successfully against the assessment:—Held, that by virtue of section 8 of the Poor Rate Act, 1801, the amount overpaid on the first instalment must be repaid. Imperial and Grand Hotels Co. v. Christchurch Union, 74 L. J. K.B. 57; [1905] 1 K.B. 89; 91 L. T. 691; 53 W. R. 343; 69 J. P. 9; 2 L. G. R. 1370; 21 T. L. R. 67—D.

Second Rate since Notice of Objection to Valuation List—Necessity for Further Notice of Objection to List.]—On June 23, 1900, the appellants gave to the assessmen^t committee notice of objection to the valuation list, on the ground that their premises were over-assessed. The assessment committee reduced the assessment, though not to the extent claimed by the appellants, and the appellants appealed to special sessions against the current rate. The next rate was made on October 26, 1900, and the assessment having subsequently been further reduced by the decision of special sessions, though not to the extent claimed, and the valuation list altered accordingly, the appellants paid that rate on the assessment so reduced. A further rate was made on May 4, 1901, and the appellants gave notice of appeal to quarter sessions against that rate. The respondents took the preliminary objection that by section 1 of the Union Assessment Committee Amendment Act, 1864, it was a condition precedent to the appellants' right to appeal that they should again have given to the assessment committee notice of objection to the list. The quarter sessions allowed the objection, and dismissed the appeal:—Held, that they had properly allowed the objection, and should not be compelled by mandamus to hear the appeal. Rex v. Essex Justices, 71 L. J. K.B. 148; [1902] 1 K.B. 180; 85 L. T. 678; 50 W. R. 188; 66 J. P. 961—D.

Whether a person who has objected to the valuation list before the assessment committee only on the ground that his own premises are over-assessed can appeal to sessions on the additional grounds that the premises of other persons are under-assessed, and that rateable premises of other persons are omitted from the rate, quære. Ib.

Right of Assessment Committee to Appear as Respondents to Appeal—Notice of Meeting to Obtain Consent of Guardians.]—By section 2 of the Union Assessment Committee Amendment Act, 1864, an assessment committee of a union may with the consent of the guardians, after notice shall have been sent to every guardian, appear as respondents to a poor-rate appeal, but in the name of the guardians of such union. By section 12 of the Divided Parishes Act, 1882, where under the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1834, or any amending Act, the consent in writing of a majority of the guardians of a union is required, it shall be a sufficient compliance with such requirement if a resolution giving consent is passed at a meeting of the guardians, of which meeting and of the business to be transacted thereat not less than fourteen days' notice shall be given to each guardian. A ratepayer having given notice of appeal against his assessment upon which a rate had been based, a clear four days' notice was sent by the clerk of the assessment committee to each of the guardians that at their next meeting the consent of the board to the appearance of the committee as respondents to the appeal would be proposed. The guardians at their meeting gave their consent to such appearance:—Held, that the consent so given was a sufficient compliance with section 2 of the Act of 1864, and that section 12 of the Act of 1882 did not apply so as to require a fourteen days' notice to render the consent to appear as respondents valid, because section 12 of the Act of 1882 referred only to a consent required by statute to be in writing, whereas section 2 of the Act of 1864 did not, as a condition precedent, require that the consent should be in writing. Smith v. Leigh Union Assessment Committee, 73 L. J. K.B. 135; [1904] 1 K.B. 484; 90 L. T. 240; 52 W. R. 340; 2 L. G. R. 283; 68 J. P. 210; 20 T. L. R. 215—C.A.

No Consent to Assessment Committee to Appear—Costs against Assessment Committee.]—Application was made to the London Quarter Sessions by a ratepayer for leave to serve notice of appeal and to enter an appeal against the decision of the assessment committee of the St. George's, Strand, and Westminster Unions respecting the valuation and assessment of his premises under the Valuation (Metropolis) Act, 1869. The assessment committee were empowered by the Westminster City Council to appear and oppose the application, which, however, was granted, and an appeal was accordingly entered. At the hearing of the appeal it was allowed with costs against the assessment committee, who had not been empowered by the Westminster City Council to appear at the hearing:—Held, that in the absence of the consent of the Westminster City Council to the appearance of the assessment committee at the hearing of the appeal, the quarter sessions had no jurisdiction to make the order as to costs against the assessment committee. Rex v. London Justices; St. George's, Strand, and Westminster Unions, Ex parte, 97 L. T. 247; 71 J. P. 322; 5 L. G. R. 704—D.

Costs—Jurisdiction to Vary Order of Special Sessions as to Costs.]—The Court of quarter sessions has jurisdiction under section 6 of the Parochial Assessments Act, 1836, on allowing an appeal from special sessions, to make an order varying the order of special sessions as to costs. Rex v. Cornwall Justices, 72 L. J. K.B. 622; [1903] 2 K.B. 178; 88 L. T. 775; 52 W. R. 31; 67 J. P. 290; 1 L. G. R. 605—D.

14. RECOVERY OF RATE.

Summons for Distress Warrant—Jurisdiction of Justices to Consider Validity of Rate—Retrospective Rate.]—On October 11, 1903, the respondent entered into occupation of certain premises in respect of which he was liable to be rated to the poor rate. On November 6, 1903, a rate was allowed by the Justices, the title of which stated the date of the allowance of the rate and that the rate was made to meet the expenses of the parish up to March 25, 1904, but did not state the date from which the expenses began. The respondent, alleging that the rate was a six months' rate from September 29, 1903, refused to pay the proportion from that date to October 11, 1903, though he paid the proportion from the latter date to March 25, 1904. On a complaint by the overseers in respect of the non-payment of the former amount, the Justices found as a fact that the rate was meant to cover the six months from September 29, 1903, held that the respondent was not liable for the amount alleged, and dismissed the complaint:—Held, that, in the circumstances, the Justices had no jurisdiction to enquire whether the respondent was liable for the amount claimed, but were bound to issue a distress warrant for payment of that amount. Cheney v. Tallwin, 73 L. J. K.B. 943; [1904] 2 K.B. 763; 91 L. T. 552; 63 J. P. 528; 2 L. G. R. 1338—D.

— Omission of Commencing Date in Title of Rate.—Where the title of a rate states the date of the allowance of the rate and the date up to which the expenses to be met by the rate will be incurred, the period for which the rate is estimated is sufficiently set forth under section 14 of the Poor Rate Assessment and Collection Act, 1869, notwithstanding that the date from which the expenses have been incurred is not stated. Ib.

— Objection before Justices on Application for—Jurisdiction to Rate.—By section 69 of the Great Northern and City Railway Act, 1892, it was enacted: "The company shall in respect of all lands and buildings acquired by them under the powers of this Act be liable to and pay all the consolidated sewer and other rates and contributions leviable in respect of such lands and buildings as if the company were assessed in respect of such lands and buildings in the valuation list in force for the parish or place within which such lands and buildings are situate at the time the company acquire such lands and buildings, whether such lands and buildings be occupied or vacant, and shall continue liable to and pay all such consolidated sewer and other rates and contributions until the undertaking shall be completed and assessed or liable to be assessed to the before-mentioned rates and contributions, or until such of the said lands and buildings as may not be required for the purposes of the undertaking shall have been otherwise duly assessed or liable to be assessed and become liable to the before-mentioned rates and contributions." The railway company acquired certain land under this Act upon which buildings formerly existed, but had been pulled down before the railway company had acquired any interest in the land:—Held, that the railway company were not liable to be rated in respect of these buildings under section 69. Held, further, that as the objection raised by the respondents as to their liability went to the jurisdiction to rate, that objection could be entertained by the Justices upon an application for a distress warrant. St. Stephen (Churchwardens) v. Great Northern and City Railway, 86 L. T. 390; 50 W. R. 395; 66 J. P. 373—D.

— Appeal to Quarter Sessions before Levy.—No appeal lies to quarter sessions under section 6 of the Poor Relief Act, 1601, from an order of Justices directing that a distress warrant shall issue for the recovery of poor rates until after a distress has actually been levied. Reg. v. London Justices; Bayne, Ex parte, 68 L. J. Q.B. 383; [1899] 1 Q.B. 532; 80 L. T. 286; 47 W. R. 316; 63 J. P. 383—D.

— Amount Payable—Hereditament Let for Term not Exceeding Three Months—Weekly Tenancy.—A weekly tenant subject, by local custom, to a week's notice to quit, is the occupier of a rateable hereditament, "let for a term not exceeding three months," within the meaning of section 1 of the Poor Rate Assessment and Collection Act, 1869, and as such occupier is entitled to the relief given by section 2 of the Act, by which he cannot be compelled to pay at one time or within four weeks a greater amount of poor rate than would be due for one quarter of the year. Hammond v. Farrow, 73 L. J. K.B. 726; [1904] 2 K.B. 332; 91 L. T. 77; 63 J. P. 352; 2 L. G. R. 817; 20 T. L. R. 497—D.

— Tender of Part of Rate—Refusal to Pay Balance—Discretion of Magistrate to Issue Distress Warrant for Balance only.—Where, on an application by overseers to a magistrate for a distress warrant to enforce payment of a rate, the ratepayer tenders in Court to the overseers a part of the rate, which they refuse to accept, but declines on conscientious grounds to pay the balance, the magistrate is not bound to issue a distress warrant for more than the balance. Rex v. Gillespie, 73 L. J. K.B. 106; [1904] 1 K.B. 174; 90 L. T. 15; 52 W. R. 367; 68 J. P. 11; 2 L. G. R. 59; 20 T. L. R. 113—D.

— Discretion of Magistrate.—On an application for a distress warrant for the recovery of poor rate the Justices have jurisdiction, at their discretion, to issue a distress warrant for the full amount of the rate, notwithstanding a tender in Court of part of it by the ratepayer; and, in default of payment and of sufficient distress for the whole, they have jurisdiction, if they think fit, to issue a warrant of commitment. Rex v. Gillespie (73 L. J. K.B. 106) explained. Wiles, Ex parte, 73 L. J. K.B. 112*n.*; 90 L. T. 225; 2 L. G. R. 103; 68 J. P. 13; 20 Cox C.C. 602; 20 T. L. R. 150—D.

— Change of Occupation—Payment of Proportion—Period for Making the Rate—Period from Allowance by Justices—Issue of Distress Warrant.—The appellant was summoned on a complaint preferred on behalf of the overseers to shew cause why he had not paid a certain poor rate. The rate was allowed by the Justices on October 21, 1893, and was intended for the period from September 29, 1893, up to March 25, 1899. The premises, in respect of which the appellant was rated, were occupied by him from before September 23, 1893, up to November 30, 1898, and the complaint was in respect of the proportion of the rate from September 29 to November 30, 1898. It was contended by the appellant that he was only liable to pay the proportion of the rate from October 21 to November 30, 1893. The magistrates were of opinion that their duties were ministerial only, and that they had no jurisdiction to enquire what excess had been charged, and they directed a distress warrant to issue for the whole amount claimed—namely from September 29 to November 30, 1898:—Held, that the contention of the appellant was right, and that he was only liable to pay the proportion from October 21 to November 30, 1893. Davis v. Woodfield, 81 L. T. 782; 64 J. P. 215—D.

— Termination of Occupation during Period of Rate—Apportionment by Justices—No Fresh Demand for Sum Apportioned—Jurisdiction to Issue Distress Warrant.—A demand for payment of a rate for the full period of the rate was made upon an occupier in respect of premises in his occupation at the commencement of the period. He ceased to occupy part of the premises during the period, but no fresh demand was made or summons issued for the reduced amount for which he then became liable. On a summons for non-payment the Justices apportioned the rate and determined the smaller amount due from the occupier:—Held, that, notwithstanding that there had been no fresh demand or summons, the Justices had jurisdiction to issue forthwith a distress warrant for the smaller amount. Mansel v. Iichen Overseers, 75 L. J. K.B. 232; [1906] 1 K.B. 221; 94 L. T. 320; 54 W. R. 456; 70 J. P. 148; 4 L. G. R. 279; 22 T. L. R. 223—D.

Jurisdiction of County Court to Entertain Action for Recovery of Excess over Reasonable Charge—"Reasonable charges of taking, keeping, and selling the distress."—The County Court has jurisdiction to entertain an action for the recovery of any charge in excess of what is reasonable in respect of the taking, keeping, and selling of a distress levied for unpaid poor rates. Re v. Bridport County Court Judge; Edwards, Ex parte, 74 L. J. K.B. 464; [1905] 2 K.B. 108; 92 L. T. 571; 53 W. R. 527; 69 J. P. 221; 3 L. G. R. 679—D.

Costs and Charges—Implied Repeal of Earlier by Later Legislation.—By the Distress (Costs) Act, 1817, the costs and charges in respect of a distress for rent are, where the amount demanded and due does not exceed 20*l.*, fixed by a schedule to the Act. By the Distress (Costs) Act, 1827, that schedule is made applicable to poor rate. By the Distress for Rates Act, 1849, "reasonable charges" are to be levied for the taking, keeping, and selling of a distress:—Held, that, with respect to a distress under 20*l.*, the Act of 1849 does not repeal the provisions of that of 1827. Hill v. Pannifer (73 L. J. K.B. 556; [1904] 1 K. B. 811) overruled. Coster v. Headland, 75 L. J. K.B. 483; [1906] A.C. 286; 94 L. T. 589; 70 J. P. 249; 4 L. G. R. 589; 22 T. L. R. 441—H.L. (E.)

Costs of Selling—Limit Imposed by Statute—Subsequent Statute Allowing "reasonable charges."—Section 1 of the Distress for Rates Act, 1849, repeals by implication the provisions of the Distress (Costs) Act, 1817 (as applied to distress for poor rate by the Distress (Costs) Act, 1827), as to the costs of distresses for poor rate, and the "reasonable charges" of selling the goods may be allowed under the Act of 1849, although they may exceed the limit imposed by the earlier Act. Hill v. Pannifer, 73 L. J. K.B. 556; [1904] 1 K.B. 811; 90 L. T. 511; 52 W. R. 588; 68 J. P. 261; 2 L. G. R. 381; 20 T. L. R. 324—D. But see Headland v. Coster, 21 T. L. R. 123—C.A.

Amount of—Implied Repeal of Earlier Legislation by Subsequent General Legislation.—The provision in section 1 of the Distress (Costs) Act, 1817, as applied to a distress for the poor rate by the Distress (Costs) Act, 1827, that in the case of a distress where the sum demanded and due does not exceed 20*l.*, no more costs and charges in respect of such distress shall be taken than are fixed in the schedule to the former Act, is still in force and has not been rendered inoperative by reason of the repeal of the statute 27 Geo. 2, c. 20 by section 86 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, or impliedly repealed by section 1 of the Distress for Rates Act, 1849. Hill v. Pannifer (73 L. J. K.B. 556; [1904]

1 K.B. 811) overruled. Moyle v. Cocksedge (Willes, 686) approved. Headland v. Coster, 74 L. J. K.B. 210; [1905] 1 K.B. 219; 92 L. T. 98; 3 L. G. R. 174; 69 J. P. 90; 21 T. L. R. 123—C.A.

Keeping Possession of Goods Distrained.]—The defendant, a police constable, under a warrant of distress for poor rate, seized goods belonging to the plaintiff. He removed the goods to the police station, where they were stored in a room which was kept locked, the key being hung up in the police station. After a lapse of five days the goods were sold, and the defendant rendered to the plaintiff an account containing an item for five days' charge for "keeping possession of the goods distrained, 5*s.*" The plaintiff paid the amount. In an action brought in the County Court to recover it back, on the ground that there was no authority for making such a charge,—Held, that the charge for "keeping possession" of the goods was one which was sanctioned by a table of fees, approved by the Secretary of State, under section 23 of the Police Act, 1890, and that it was lawfully made, notwithstanding that the goods had been removed from the plaintiff's premises. Scott v. Denton, 76 L. J. K.B. 380; [1907] 1 K.B. 456; 95 L. T. 760; 71 J. P. 66; 5 L. G. R. 251; 23 T. L. R. 78—D.

Per LORD ALVERSTONE, C.J.—The expression "man in possession" in the schedule to the Distress (Costs) Act, 1817, means a man in possession of the goods seized, but not necessarily in possession of them on the premises where they were seized. Ib.

The Postmaster-General, who is empowered by the Conveyance of Mails Act 1838, upon service of a twenty-eight days' notice, to require the conveyance and forwarding of the mails by a railway company "at such hours or times in the day or night" as he shall direct, is not restricted to the naming of fixed and definite hours for the departure and running of mail trains, but is entitled to name variable times, by making the departure and running of the mail trains dependent on the time of the arrival of the mails in ordinary course of through transit by rail and sea. *Rex v. Ferry—Exemption of Post-Office Officials from Tolls.—Although Post-Office officials, as servants of the Crown, are entitled to be carried free over ferries properly so called, such right does not apply to a ferry which a corporation is empowered by statute to establish and work, but is under no obligation to maintain. *Att.-Gen. v. 1. POWER OF APPOINTMENT.

(a) General.

Construction—Appointment under Power—Power Arising on Death or Second Marriage of Widow—Appointment at Death—Intermediate Income.—The rule of construction that a gift by will, referring to one only of two events on which a prior interest determines, will be construed as a gift subject to that prior interest, may be applied to a will exercising a power. Shuckburgh's Settlement, In re; Robertson v. Shuckburgh, 71 L. J. Ch. 32; [1901] 2 Ch. 794; 85 L. T. 406; 50 W. R. 133—Farwell, J.

By a marriage settlement a sum of 20,000l.

Three per Cent. Annuities was settled upon trust, after the testator's death, to pay the income to his wife till her second marriage, and after such marriage to pay half the income to her for her life, and subject thereto upon trust for the issue of the marriage, in such shares as the testator should by deed or will appoint, and in default of appointment for the children of the marriage in equal shares. The testator by his will appointed that, after the death of his wife, 12,000l. should be held in trust for his elder son, and 8,000l. for his younger son. The wife married again:—Held, that the appointment took effect as an appointment subject to her interest, and that the elder son was entitled on his attaining twenty-one to the payment of three-fifths of the free moiety of the fund, and of the accumulations since the date of the marriage. Ib.

— Appointment — Discretionary Power to Resort to Capital.—A testator gave the income of his property to his widow for life, and directed that "in case such income shall not be sufficient she is to use such portion of my said real and personal estate as she may deem expedient."—Held, that, on the true construction of the will, the word "sufficient" must here be taken to have reference not only to the widow's actual wants, but also to her desires; and that the direction thus amounted to a general power of appointment over the whole capital, exercisable by the widow at any rate during her life. Pedrotti's Will, In re (29 L. J. Ch. 92; 27 Beav. 583), distinguished. Richards, In re; Uglow v. Richards, 71 L. J. Ch. 66; [1902] 1 Ch. 76; 85 L. T. 452; 50 W. R. 90—Farwell, J.

Settlement of Wife's Property—Limitation "as she shall direct."—A marriage settlement dealing with real estate belonging to the wife provided that, should she survive her husband, which happened, the trustees should reconvey the lands to her "her heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns respectively for her and their own use and benefit, or otherwise as she shall direct."—Held, that these words did not necessarily confer a general power of appointment on the wife, it appearing that such a power would defeat the whole scheme of the deed. Van Grutten v. Foxwell, 84 L. T. 545—H.L. (E.)

Married Woman—Will—Intention to Pay Husband's Debt—Assets for Payment of Debts.—If a married woman, in exercise of a general power of appointment by will, gives a legacy in discharge of a debt due from her husband to the legatee, which is unpaid at her death but is afterwards paid by her husband, the amount of the legacy is under section 4 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, made assets liable for the testatrix's debts. Hodgson, In re; Darley v. Hodgson, 68 L. J. Ch. 313; [1899] 1 Ch. 666; 80 L. T. 276; 47 W. R. 443—North, J.

It makes no difference that the debt is wrongly described as due from the testatrix if the Court is satisfied that she was referring to her husband's debt. Ib.

Married Woman Married before 1881—Restraint on Anticipation of Life Interest—Release of Power.—A married woman married before the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, may under section 52 of that Act by deed unacknowledged release a power of appointment over personal property in which she has a life interest subject to a restraint on anticipation. Chisholm's Settlement, In re; Hemphill's Settlement, In re; Hemphill v. Hemphill, 70 L. J. Ch. 533; [1901] 2 Ch. 82—Stirling, J.

Successive Appointments of Specific Sums—Appointment of Residue—Duties—Costs of raising Appointed Sums.—Where successive appointments of specific sums have been made by the donee of an ordinary power of appointment, and then a final appointment is made of the residue of the trust fund after satisfying the previous appointments, the costs of raising the specific amounts, as well as the general costs of administering and distributing the fund, must be borne by the appointees rateably. Chisholm, In re; Goddard v. Brodie, 71 L. J. Ch. 289; [1902] 1 Ch. 457; 86 L. T. 183—Kekewich, J.

As a general rule, the costs of raising any particular sum cannot be distinguished from the general costs of trustees in administering the whole trust fund. The rule referred to in Saunders, In re; Saunders v. Gore (67 L. J. Ch. 55; [1898] 1 Ch. 17), followed. Ib.

Joint Power of Appointment—Husband and Wife—Assignment by Wife and Persons Entitled in Default of Appointment—Concurrence of Husband—Husband's Power as Surviving Donee—Release.—Where property is settled on trust as a husband and wife shall jointly appoint, and in default of such joint appointment as the survivor shall appoint, and the wife, with the husband's concurrence, joins with the persons entitled in default of appointment in assigning the property for value, such assignment will constitute a dealing inconsistent with any exercise of the power by the husband after his wife's death, and will in effect amount to a release of such power. Foakes v. Jackson, 69 L. J. Ch. 352; [1900] 1 Ch. 807; 83 L. T. 26; 48 W. R. 616—Farwell, J.

Exercise—By Deed or Writing Duly Executed or by Will—Testamentary Documents not Admitted to Probate—Exercise of Power.—A power of appointment exercisable by deed or writing duly executed or by will is not validly exercised by testamentary documents executed by the donee, but attested by one witness only, and containing no reference to the power or to the property subject to it. Edmonstone, In re; Bevan v. Edmonstone, 49 W. R. 555—Byrne, J.

Document "purporting to be a will."—By a settlement property was vested in trustees upon trust to pay the income to A. for her life, and after her decease to her husband for his life, and after the death of the survivor of them upon trust for the children of A. as she should by any deed or deeds, writing or writings, to be by her sealed and delivered in the presence of and attested by two or more credible witnesses, or by her last will or testament, or any codicil or codicils thereto, or "by any writing in the nature of or purporting to be a will or codicil," direct or appoint. A. executed a document which purported to be her last will, but which, inasmuch as it was not signed by her in the presence of the attesting witnesses as her last will and testament, was not admitted to probate:—Held, that, though the document was not a will according to law, it was one which "purported" to be a will, and, being so, operated as a valid execution of the power of appointment. Broad, In re; Smith v. Draeger, 70 L. J. Ch. 601; [1901] 2 Ch. 86; 84 L. T. 577—Kekewich, J. discussed: Barnett, In re; Dawes v. Izor, 77 L. J. Ch. 267; [1908] 1 Ch. 402—Warrington, J.

Residuary Gift—Lapse—Blending of Appointed Fund with Estate of Appointor.—Testatrix having a general testamentary power under a settlement, by her will appointed that the trustees of the settlement should stand possessed of a proportion of the trust funds subject to her power in favour of certain appointees, and should stand possessed of the residue thereof in trust for H. S. She gave some pecuniary legacies, and empowered the trustees of the settlement and her executors respectively, with the consent of the respective appointees and legatees, to appropriate any security subject to her power of appointment, or belonging to her, towards payment of the legacies thereinbefore appointed or bequeathed, and continued, "As to all the rest and residue of my real and personal estate, I devise, bequeath and appoint, the same, subject to the payment thereout of my debts, funeral and testamentary expenses," to the said H. S. absolutely, and she appointed executors. H. S. died in the lifetime of the testatrix:—Held (dissentiente VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.), that according to the true construction of the will the residue of the appointed trust funds was taken out of the settlement for all purposes and passed to the next-of-kin of the testatrix and not to the persons entitled under the settlement in default of appointment. Davies' Trusts, In re (41 L. J. Ch. 97; L. R. 13 Eq. 163), considered. Martem, In re; Shaw v. Marten, 71 L. J. Ch. 208; [1902] 1 Ch. 314; 85 L. T. 704; 50 W. R. 209—C.A.

Bequest of Personal Property Described in a General Manner—Gift of all Stocks, Shares, and Securities.—A testatrix had general testamentary powers of appointment over funds comprised in her marriage settlement, and over a settled legacy and share of residue under a will. Her husband, if he survived her, had a life interest in both funds. By her will she bequeathed, subject to her husband's life interest therein and his enjoyment of the annual income thereof, "all stocks shares and securities which I possess or to which I am entitled," to her sisters, and desired that after the death of her husband all such stocks, shares, and securities should be and become the absolute property of her sisters in equal proportions. The settled funds were represented by colonial and railway stocks and a small sum of cash:—Held, that the gift was a bequest of personal property described in a general manner within section 27 of the Wills Act; that the words "which I possess or to which I am entitled" did not shew a contrary intention; and that the will therefore exercised the powers to the extent to which the property subject to them came within the definition of "stocks shares and securities." Turner v. Turner (21 L. J. Ch. 843) followed. Jacob, In re; Mortimer v. Mortimer, 76 L. J.

— Severance—Income—Specific Gift.—An appointment, under general powers over two funds, of the sum of 5,000*l.* and the stocks, funds, and securities representing the same and “such part of the stocks, funds, shares, and securities comprised in the first schedule as shall with the said sum of 5,000*l.* make up the sum of 9,000*l.*” is a specific gift, and the income during the first year after the testator's death goes to the appointees. *Marten, In re; Shaw v. — General Power to Appoint Charge—Will—General Gift—Exercise of General Power of Appointment.—A testator by his will declared that it should be lawful for A. by deed or writing to limit and appoint, grant, sell, lease, and confirm all or any part of certain lands to any person or persons, by way of mortgage or otherwise, as a security for any sum not exceeding 2,000*l.*, or by any such deed, writing, or by will, to charge and incumber the lands with the payment of any sum not exceeding 2,000*l.* for such use, intent, and purpose as A. should think fit to direct and appoint. A., by his will, made after the Wills Act, and which did not refer to this power, gave, devised, and bequeathed to his wife all his property real and personal, and all his estate, goods and chattels, moneys and charges secured upon lands of or to which he was possessed or in any way entitled:—Held, that A.'s will did not operate under section 27 of the Wills Act as an exercise of the power of charging and appointing in favour of the wife. Jones, In re; Greene v. Gordon (56 L. J. Ch.

58; 34 Ch. D. 65), distinguished and observed upon. Wallinger's Estate, In re, [1893] 1 Ir. R. 139—C.A.

Section 27 of the Wills Act presupposes the existence of some real estate, or some personal estate, as the case may be, which is subject to a general power of appointment, and which, though not the testator's property, is at his uncontrolled disposition. The language of the section does not extend to the creation of property at the expense of another, or to the imposition of an otherwise non-existent charge upon the property of another, or to the conversion pro tanto of the real estate of another into a money charge, which if and when charged will be personal estate which the testator will have power to appoint as he may think fit, but which has no existence unless and until the testator creates it. Ib.

“Give, devise, bequeath and appoint”—No further or other Reference to Power.—A testator executed a will in 1894 wherein he purported to exercise a power of appointment over certain property in which he took a life interest under the terms of his father's will. In 1896 he executed a second will, whereby he did not in terms revoke the will of 1894, and which did not in terms allude to the power of appointment or purport to execute it. The second will, however, contained the words, “I give, devise, bequeath and appoint all my real and personal estate whatsoever unto my trustees upon trust. . .” The COURT, following Mayhew, In re; Spencer v. Cutbush (70 L. J. Ch. 423; [1901] 1 Ch. 677), held that the use of the word “appoint,” taken with the context and surrounding circumstances, was a sufficient exercise of the power, and that the will of 1894 was revoked. *Kent v. Charge on Realty in Aid of Personality—Residuary Bequest—Administration of Assets.—By a will, which contained no reference to a general power of appointment possessed by the testatrix over a sum of 2,000*l.*, she devised her real estate to trustees for a term of years, upon trust, by sale or mortgage, to raise such sums as would be required in aid of her personal estate for payment of debts, legacies, &c., and, after giving certain legacies and annuities, she bequeathed the residue of her personal estate to three persons:—Held, that by virtue of section 27 of the Wills Act, 1837, the gift of the residue took effect as an appointment of the sum of 2,000*l.*, but that such sum must be applied, like the rest of the personality, in payment of debts and legacies in priority to any sums raisable under the term of years. *Hartley, In re; Williams v. Exercise in Favour of Creditor as Security in Pursuance of Covenant—Rights of General Creditors against Appointed Fund.—Where the donee of a general testamentary power of appointment over a fund, in consideration of money lent to him, covenants by deed to exercise the power by a will giving the lender a first charge on the fund, and does so, the fund is assets for the payment of the appointor's debts generally, and the lender has no priority over other creditors. *Fleming v. B. having, under an English settlement, a general power to appoint a fund by will, and being a domiciled Frenchwoman, made a will in French form, appointing her husband general and universal legatee. The will was unattested, but valid according to French law, and was admitted to probate in England:—Held, that it did not operate as an execution of the power. Id.

Conflict of Laws—Will to be Attested by Two Witnesses—Foreign Unattested Will—Defective Execution of Power.]—Where the donee of a testamentary power of appointment is a foreigner with foreign domicil, and special formalities for the execution of the power are required by the instrument creating it, it is not enough for the valid execution of the power that the instrument purporting to execute it is a will according to the law of the domicil, but such will must comply with the formalities required by the power. Barretto v. Young, 69 L. J. Ch. 605; [1900] 2 Ch. 339; 83 L. T. 154—Byrne, J.

A donee of a general power to appoint by will created by a will antecedent to the Wills Act, 1837, was a domiciled Frenchwoman. She executed a holograph will in French, which was valid by the law of France, and purported to be an exercise of the power. This will, although unattested, was admitted to probate in England. The power, by the terms of the will which created it, was to be executed by the donee in the presence of and attested by two or more credible witnesses:—Held, that, the requirements for execution specified by the power not having been satisfied, the power was not well executed. Id.

French Will—Unattested Will—Execution of Power.]—A disposition of personal property by a writing signed by a person residing in France, who has since died, the writing being unattested, but in form a valid will according to French law, will not operate as an execution by that person of a general power of appointment by will, since it has not been attested by two or more witnesses as required by sections 9 and 10 of the Wills Act. Kirwan's Trusts, In re (52 L. Donee Domiciled Abroad—Holograph Will—Will Valid by Law of Domicil—Probate in England.]—Where, by an English instrument, a general power of appointment of personalty by will was given to a French subject domiciled in France, and she executed a holograph will in French which was valid by the law of France and which though unattested was admitted to probate in England, it was held that neither the provisions of the Wills Act, 1837, nor of the Wills Act, 1861, applied, and that the power was validly exercised. D'Huart v. Harkness (34 L. J. Ch. 311; 34 Beav. 324) approved and followed. Kirwan's Trusts, In re (52 L. J. Ch. 952; 25 Ch. D. 373), and Hummel v. Hummel (67 L. J. Power of Revocation and New Appointment.]—The principle that a general devise and bequest does not operate under section 27 of the Wills Act, 1837, as an exercise of a power of revocation and new appointment applies to the case where the power of revocation and new appointment is that contained in the instrument originally creating it, as well as to the case where the power is that reserved by an appointment made in exercise of the original power. Goulding's Settlement, In re; Dobell v. Dutton, 48 W. R. 183—Cozens-Hardy, J.

Gift to such Charitable Institutions as Trustees may Determine—Pure and Impure Personalty—Proceeds of Sale of Real Estate.]—Where under the will of a person dying before the passing of the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1891, a mixed fund, consisting of pure and impure personalty and the proceeds of sale of real estate, is given to trustees to apply to such charitable institutions and objects as they may determine, and in such manner as they may think fit, the gift is a valid gift to the trustees of both the pure and impure personalty and the proceeds of the sale of the realty, and confers on them a power to appoint to any charitable object that they think fit. If the trustees appoint to objects that can take the property in question, the appointment will be valid; but if they appoint to objects which cannot take—e.g. if they appoint impure personalty to institutions not exempted from the provisions of the Charitable Uses Act, 1735—the appointment will to that extent fail. Lewis v. Allenby (L. R. 10 Eq. 668) discussed. Piercy, In re; Whitwham v. Percy, 67 L. J. Ch. 297; [1898] 1 Ch. 565; 78 L. T. 277; 46 W. R. 503—C.A.

Intention to Exercise.]—Where the intention of a testator to exercise a special power of appointment over particular property can be ascertained from his will, effect will be given to it, notwithstanding that there is no actual reference in the will to the power or to the property, and the testator possesses other general powers of appointment to which the words of the will are applicable. Sharland, In re; Rew v. Wippell, 68 L. J. Ch. 747; [1899] 2 Ch. 536; 81 L. T. 384—Kekewich, J.

— Gift of Property “over which I have disposing power.”—A testator had by his marriage settlement power to appoint a rent-charge of 30*l.*, subject to the life interests therein of himself and his intended wife, amongst the children of the marriage, and in default of appointment his wife had a like power. He had no other power of appointment. The testator by his will devised and bequeathed to his executors all properties to which he might be entitled or was possessed of at the time of his death or over which he had any disposing power, on trust to pay the income thereof to his wife for life, and after her death to his children, share and share alike. There were three children of the marriage. The testator's wife survived him, and by her will devised and bequeathed the residue of the property belonging to her, or over which she had any power of appointment or disposition, to her daughter A.:—Held, that there was no intention to exercise the power expressed in the will of the testator, and that the annuity passed under the will of his wife. Sykes v. Carroll, [1903] 1 Ir. R. 17—M.R.

— Reference to Power.—Where it is manifest on the construction of a will that the testator intended to dispose thereby of property of his own, and also of property over which he had a special power of appointment, and under the disposition made by the will the property subject to the power is given to a member of the class amongst whom it can be appointed, the property passes under the power, it being immaterial whether the testator supposed that the property passed by the power or by virtue of his own interest therein. Byrne v. Cullinan, [1904] 1 Ir. R. 42—C.A.

— Appointment by Will Dated Prior to Will Creating Power—Personalty.—H. by his will gave “all the residue of the property over which at the time of my death I shall have a disposing power” to trustees upon trust for sale and conversion and investment, and he directed his trustees “to pay the yearly income or produce arising from my trust estate” to his wife during her life or widowhood; and in case she should marry again he directed his trustees “to pay to her out of the income of my trust estate in addition to the provision made for her by marriage settlement an annuity of 50*l.* payable half-yearly instead of the whole of such income.” The will contained further trusts for the benefit of his children. H.'s father by his will empowered each child of his by will or codicil to appoint to or in favour of his or her wife or husband the whole or any part of the yearly income of his or her share in the father's residuary estate for life or for any period determinable on or before death, and declared the trusts of a sum of 4,000*l.* by reference to the trusts of the residue. The father's will was dated after that of the son, but the father predeceased the son. The son had no power of appointment in favour of his widow other than that contained in the will of the father:—Held, that the case was not within section 24 or section 27 of the Wills Act, 1837, and there was no legal presumption of an intention on the part of the son to exercise the power contained in the father's will; and the son's will could not fairly be construed as disclosing an intention to exercise a non-existent special power, supposing it were possible to exercise such a power, by anticipation. Hayes, In re; Turnbull v. Hayes, 70 L. J. Ch. 770; [1901] 2 Ch. 529; 85 L. T. 85; 49 W. R. 659—C.A.

Appointment to Uses of Prior Settlement—“Capable of taking effect”—Trusts Void for Remoteness—Non-objects of Power.—Where property is appointed, under a special power, to the uses of a prior settlement or such of them as are “capable of taking effect,” and some of the uses so incorporated fail for remoteness or by reason of the cestuis que trust not being objects of the power, the void trusts may be disregarded as not being “capable of taking effect,” and the power will be otherwise well exercised. Finch and Chew's Contract, In re, 72 L. J. Ch. 690; [1903] 2 Ch. 486; 89 L. T. 162—Kekewich, J.

The phrase “capable of taking effect” means what the law allows to take effect, and is not confined to trusts which by reason of the intervening circumstances are still in fact subsisting and capable of coming into existence. Id.

Appointment of Specified Sums—Invested Sum of 30,000*l.*—Rise in Value of Securities—Surplus.—Testator gave a sum of 30,000*l.* to be invested by his trustees upon trust to pay the interest and annual proceeds thereof to his daughter for life, and after her death upon trust for her children or grandchildren as she should by deed or will appoint. By her will the daughter, after reciting the power, appointed that the “said sum of 30,000*l.*, together with the interest and annual proceeds thereof,” should be held as to two sums of 1,000*l.*, one of 4,000*l.*, and three sums of 6,000*l.*, each of which was described as “part of the said sum of 30,000*l.*,” and “as to another sum of 6,000*l.*,” being the remaining part of the said sum of 30,000*l.*,” upon trusts in favour of various objects of the power. On the death of the daughter the securities upon which the 30,000*l.* was invested were worth 39,000*l.* sterling:—Held, that the daughter's will operated as an appointment of the entire fund in aliquot shares. Cruddas, In re; Smith, In re; Cruddas v. Smith, 69 L. J. Ch. 355; [1900] 1 Ch. 730; 82 L. T. 514—C.A.

Appointment of Specified Sum Described as One Third Portion—Deficiency of Fund.—A donee of a power of appointment in favour of younger children over a sum of 4,500*l.* raisable out of lands and over lands, which money and lands in default of appointment were to be divided equally among the objects of the power by deed poll, executed at a date when three objects of the power were living, and on the intended marriage of J. E. B. one of the objects of the power directed and appointed as follows: "That the sum of 1,500*l.* being one third portion of the sum of 4,500*l.* so raisable as aforesaid . . . shall accordingly be raised, and also interest therefor at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum; and doth hereby appoint that the said sum of 1,500*l.* and the interest thereon as aforesaid shall, immediately upon the execution of these presents . . . belong to and be vested in the said J. E. B."; and also appointed to J. E. B. one moiety of the lands, but did not at any time make any appointment of the residue. The lands proving insufficient to realise 4,500*l.*,—Held, that the specific sum of 1,500*l.* and interest was appointed and payable in full out of the deficient gross sum. Butler v. Blackall, [1907] 1 Ir. R. 405—Ross, J.

Grandchildren of Donor Objects of Power—Appointment by Mother by Will to Children in Equal Shares—Subsequent Appointment by Deed of Part of Fund to One Child—Person "in loco parentis"—Rule against Double Portions—Satisfaction—Evidence Admissible.—Appeal from a decision of STIRLING, J. (66 L. J. Ch. 731; [1897] 2 Ch. 574), allowed upon the facts, evidence being admitted to shew that a part of a fund irrevocably appointed by deed was accepted by the appointee on account and in part payment pro tanto of her share under a previous appointment by will of the same fund by the same appointor. Ashton, In re; Ingram v. Papillon, 67 L. J. Ch. 84; [1898] 1 Ch. 142; 77 L. T. 582; 46 W. R. 231—C.A.

Absence of Hotchpot Clause—Implied Appointment—Conditional Appointment.—A donee of a power of appointing a trust fund amongst her son and two daughters and their issue, by her will, after appointing two sixths to her son for life or until alienation, and then to his children, and one sixth to each of her two daughters, declared as follows: "I make no appointment of the other two sixth parts as I wish them to pass directly to my said two daughters, and I also declare that neither my son nor his children shall take any share or interest in the said unappointed parts of the said trust fund":—Held, that the other two sixths were not appointed by implication, and that the appointment to the son was not conditional on his claiming no part of them, but that they were distributable as in default of appointment amongst the son and two daughters in equal shares. Jack, In re; Jack v. Jack, 68 L. J. Ch. 188; [1899] 1 Ch. 374; 80 L. T. 321—Romer, J.

Real Estate—Power of Sale—Appointment to Trustees upon Trust for Sale.—A power of appointment over real estate in favour of children is well exercised by an appointment to trustees upon trust for sale and to hold the proceeds upon trust for the objects of the power; and the trustees so appointed by the donee of the power will have the legal estate vested in them, and will be the proper persons to sell. Kenworthy v. Bate (6 Ves. 792) and Cowx v. Foster (1 J. & H. 30) followed. Paget, In re; Mellor, In re; Mellor v. Mellor, 67

Excessive Exercise of Power—Invalidity.—A testator gave to his son a power to appoint certain real estate in certain events to his (the donee's) sons for life, with remainder to their issue in tail. By a testamentary instrument the donee, after referring to the power given to him by the testator, appointed one part of the estate "to my eldest son E. R. A. and his issue":—Held, that the Court was not at liberty to speculate as to the meaning of the terms of the appointment, but must interpret it according to the actual language used; and that there was nothing in that language to entitle the Court to put a different construction on the appointment than that the donee intended that E. R. A. should take an estate tail. Adams, In re; Adams v. Adams, 94 L. T. 720—C.A. Reversing, 54 W. R. 42—Buckley, J.

—Appointment to Object for Life, with Power to Appoint by Will—Perpetuity—Delegation—Appointment to Children of S. Born in Testator's Lifetime—Gift over if S. should Die without Leaving any Child—Hotchpot Clause—Two Funds.—By marriage settlement the husband's moneys were settled upon trust, after the death of the husband and wife, for the children, grandchildren, or other issue of the marriage, born in the lifetime of the husband and wife, or one of them, in such shares as they or the survivor should appoint, and in default of appointment, for the children being sons attaining twenty-one, or being daughters attaining twenty-one or marrying; and certain Government stock (the wife's fortune) was settled upon trust, after the death of the husband and wife, thereout to pay 1,000*l.* to each of the children at twenty-one if sons, or if daughters at that age or marriage, and as to the residue of the said stock for the children, grandchildren, or other issue of the marriage, on the same limitations as in the case of the husband's moneys. The settlement contained a proviso that in case any appointment should be made in pursuance of the powers therein contained, or either of them, which should only extend to a part or parts of the said moneys or stock, such appointment should be valid, notwithstanding the non-appointment of the remaining part or parts, but in that case any child entitled to a share under such appointment should be entitled to no further share of the unappointed part or parts of the said respective trust moneys, stocks, &c., unless and until he or she should have brought his or her appointed share into hotchpot. There were children of the marriage, two sons and a daughter. The husband died without having joined in any appointment, leaving his wife surviving. Two granddaughters were born in her lifetime. She by her will appointed the husband's moneys to one son, and after reciting the settlement of the stock, and that 1,000*l.* was to be paid thereout to each child, she appointed 10,000*l.* thereof to her daughter, and as to the residue of the said stock, she appointed it to trustees upon trust to pay the income to the other son for life, and after his decease upon trust for such one or more of his children born in her own lifetime and in such shares as he should by will appoint, and in default for such persons as he should by will appoint, with a gift over in case the son should die without leaving any children or remoter issue him surviving. Afterwards

she made a codicil revoking the appointment of the 10,000*l.* stock and appointing same to trustees upon trust for her daughter for life, and after her death for her child or children born in the testatrix's lifetime in such shares as the daughter should by deed or will appoint, and in default of such appointment for such children share and share alike: provided that if the daughter should die without leaving any child or children, the trustees should hold the said trust funds upon trust for the testatrix's said granddaughters:—Held, (1) that the limitations in the will of the residue of the stock subsequent to the appointment of the life interest to the son were void for remoteness, and that the power of appointment to the son was a delegation of the power given by the settlement, and void, and that, so far, those limitations were void on this ground also; (2) that the limitations in the codicil after the daughter's death constituted a direct valid appointment to the daughter's children born in the testatrix's lifetime, leaving it to the daughter only to appoint the shares in which they should take; that the latter power was separable from the appointment to the daughter's children, and void as a delegation, leaving the appointment to the children unaffected; and applying Ellicombe v. Gompertz (3 Myl. & Cr. 127) that the gift over was to be construed as applying only to the failure of children of the daughter, born in the testatrix's lifetime, and that the appointment to the granddaughters was valid; (3) that the single hotchpot clause applied to all the funds without distinction, and that the son to whom the husband's moneys in the settlement were appointed was bound to bring his interest into hotchpot. Hutchinson v. Tottenham, [1898] 1 Ir. R. 408—V.C.

Cy-près—General Intent—Particular Intent.]

—The donee of a power of appointment amongst the children or other issue of the donee born in his lifetime appointed the hereditaments subject to the power to his son for life, with remainder to his son's sons successively according to seniority, for life, with remainder to the sons of such son's sons successively according to seniority in tail, with remainders over. All the children of the donee of the power were born after the death of the original testator:—Held, that the appointment could not be construed cy-près so as to give an estate tail to the first appointee, as any such estate tail would sacrifice the particular intent and defeat the general intent of the testator. Monypenny v. Dering (22 L. J. Ch. 318; 2 De G. M. & G. 145) and Hampton v. Holman (46 L. J. Ch. 248; 5 Ch. D. 138) considered and applied. Rising, In re; Rising v. Rising, 73 L. J. Irrevocable Appointment in Favour of First Wife and Children—Subsequent Appointment in Favour of Second Wife—Inconsistency.]—If an irrevocable appointment is made of a life interest in favour of a first wife, and subject thereto the fund is appointed absolutely to children, the appointor cannot after the death of his first wife make a valid appointment to a second wife to take effect in priority to the interests of the children. Such second appointment will be void as inconsistent with the previous exercise of the power. In re Hancock; Malcolm v. Burford-Hancock, 65 L. J. Ch. 690; [1896] 2 Ch. 173—C.A.

Donee of Power Appointing to Herself.]

Under the terms of a settlement, and in a particular event, a lady had a power to appoint the settled trust funds by deed or will in favour of a grandchild or grandchildren of her paternal grandfather, and in default of any such appointment the trust funds were to be held in trust for all such grandchildren equally. The lady was thus an object of the power and also entitled to a share in default of appointment:—Held, that, upon the true construction of the power, the lady might appoint to herself as one of the grandchildren. *Taylor v. Ademption—Settled Estate—Premiums on Leases by Tenant for Life—"Capital money."]

Where the tenant for life of land under a settlement grants leases on which premiums are paid by the lessees, and subsequently exercises a power of appointment by will conferred upon him by the settlement, the premiums so paid do not pass under the appointment of the property in respect of which they were paid, but go as in default of appointment; and there is no distinction whether the power exercised is a general or a special power. Dowsett, In re; Dowsett v. Meakin (70 L. J. Ch. 149; [1901] 1 Ch. 398), approved. Beddington v. Baumann, 72 L. J. Ch. 155; [1903] A.C. 13; 87 L. T. 658; 51 W. R. 383—H.L. (E.)

Revocation.]—A testatrix who, besides other property, was entitled to a sum of 4,000*l.* under the will of her father for life, with power of appointment by will among her children, left three testamentary documents, dated respectively 1890, 1894, and 1895. By the will of 1890 she bequeathed to her daughter G. the sum of 4,000*l.* absolutely, for her use and benefit, "being the sum left me by my late father, &c." By the will of 1894 she left 4,000*l.* to her daughter G. without specifying any fund. By the will of 1895 she left all her property to her daughter G., with remainder over in case she should predecease her. Neither the will of 1894 nor the will of 1895 contained any words of revocation:—Held, first, that the will of 1890 was a sufficient execution of the power; and secondly, that in the absence at least of a general revocatory clause, the fact that the will of 1895 disposed of the whole property was not by itself sufficient to revoke the execution of the power effected by the will of 1890. Cadell v. Wilcocks, 67 L. J. P. 8; [1898] P. 21; 78 L. T. 83; 46 W. R. 394—Jeune, P.

Bequests to Persons not Objects of Power—"Give bequeath and appoint" Residue of Estate and Effects.]

Where a lady who had a testamentary power of appointment over certain funds in favour of her husband by her will bequeathed certain legacies "out of my separate estate or out of the estate and effects over which I have any disposing power" to persons not objects of the power, and proceeded, "I give bequeath and appoint all the residue of my estate and effects whatsoever and wheresoever unto my husband . . . absolutely," it was held that the power had been exercised. Evidence was admitted to prove that the lady had no other testamentary power of appointment. Milner, In re; Milner v. Bray, 68 L. J. Ch. 255; [1899] 1 Ch. 563; 80 L. T. 151; 47 W. R. 369—Stirling, J.

Will Invalid by Law of Domicil—Probate in England—Valid Exercise of Power.]—A special power of appointment by deed or will conferred by an English settlement over the trust funds therein comprised is well exercised by the will of the donee made in English form and subsequently proved in this country, although an invalid will by the law of the donee's foreign domicil. Pouey v. Hordern, 69 L. J. Ch. 281; [1900] 1 Ch. 492; 82 L. T. 51—Farwell, J.

The exercise of such a power operates not as a disposition of property belonging to the donee, but as a nomination of beneficiaries under the settlement, and consequently the property appointed is not affected by the law of the donee's domicil restricting testamentary disposition. Ib.

After-acquired Property.]—By a marriage settlement in 1859 real estate was settled for the benefit of S. R. and her husband W. R. for their lives and then for the children of S. as she should by deed or will appoint, and, in default, to them in equal shares, and if no such child, then for such persons as S. should by deed or will appoint, and in default for S., her heirs and assigns. And in the settlement was a covenant by W. that after-acquired property of S. should be conveyed to the trustees to be held by them upon the trusts of the settlement. W. and S. R. married and had four children, one only of whom was now living. W. R. died in 1891. By her will made in that year S. "in pursuance of all powers and authorities in anywise enabling me thereto" directed, limited, and appointed her residuary estate as to a moiety for her son M. and his wife and children, and as to the other moiety to persons not objects of the special power. She died in 1898. During her coverture she had become entitled to certain real and personal estate which was never conveyed to the trustees of the settlement:—Held, first, that the after-acquired property was not bound by the covenant in the settlement; secondly, that there was not sufficient evidence to shew an intention on the part of the testatrix to exercise her special power of appointment in favour of her son M. Rickman, In re; Stokes v. Rickman, 80 L. T. 518—Stirling, J.

Whether Coupled with a Trust—Fund Bequeathed to Trustees upon Trust to Pay Income to A. for Life—Power to "Demise" Fund to such of her Brothers or Sisters or their Children as she should think proper—Power Executed in Favour of Niece who Predeceased Donee—Residuary Gift.]—A testatrix bequeathed the sum of 3,000l. upon certain trusts, and, amongst others, upon trust to pay the interest on a sum of 500l., part thereof, to her niece Rebecca for life or until she should be married, in which event she directed the said sum of 500l. should be settled. The testatrix then declared the trusts of other portions of the 3,000l. in favour of her nieces Anne and Frances, and declared that it was her will and desire that her said nieces or such of them as died unmarried should have power to "demise" the above-mentioned legacies to such of their brothers and sisters or their children as she or they should think proper. The will contained a residuary gift to a sister of the testatrix. Rebecca died without having married. By her will she left the 500l.

so bequeathed to a sister who predeceased her:—Held, that there was no trust for the objects of the power, and that the sum of 500l. fell into the residue. Hall, In re; Sheil v. Clark, [1899] 1 Ir. R. 308—M.R.

Gift of Residue after Payment of Debts, &c.—"Appoint, devise, and bequeath"—Execution of Special Power—Evidence.]—A testatrix, who possessed a special power of appointment in favour of nephews and nieces over a fund of personalty, after giving a number of pecuniary legacies, proceeded to "appoint, devise, and bequeath" all the residue of her real and personal estate to trustees, upon trust to covert the same and out of the proceeds thereof to pay her debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, and to pay and divide the residue of the proceeds equally between certain nephews and nieces:—Held, that evidence was admissible to prove that the testatrix possessed at the time of her death no other power of appointment, having reference to the fact that the word "appoint" was found in her will, and that the above disposition was under the circumstances an exercise of the special power of appointment. Dictum in Richardson's Trusts, In re (17 L. R. Ir. 436), questioned. Mayhew, In re; Spencer v. Cutbush, 70 L. J. Ch. 428; [1901] 1 Ch. 677; 84 L. T. 761; 49 W. R. 330—Farwell, J.

Conditions Attached to Appointment—Validity—Election.]—By an ante-nuptial marriage contract a fund was provided to the children of the marriage "in such proportions" as the spouses might "direct and appoint." The husband's will, which was also signed by the wife, contained this joint appointment: "We hereby apportion amongst our children equally, share and share alike, the fund falling to them under our marriage contract, the issue of any of them predeceasing taking their parent's share, the share of any such child or his or her issue being held, managed and dealt with as hereafter provided for my children's shares of my estate." The will contained directions to the trustees in regard to the children's shares (including their shares of the marriage-contract fund as well as their shares of his own estate) which in the case of sons might, and in the case of daughters would, have the effect of reducing their right in a share to a life interest, and in both cases without the right to dispose of it by will or otherwise. This appointment was challenged, on the grounds—first, that issue of predeceasing children who were included in the appointment were not objects of the power; and secondly, that the restrictions created by the will, so far as attaching to the children's shares of the marriage-contract fund, were invalid and invalidated the whole appointment. When the appointment took effect there were no issue of predeceasing children in existence:—Held, first, that the appointment was not invalid on the first of these grounds, as issue were not included in the appointment in the event which happened; secondly, that the appointment was valid as a division of the fund among the children, but that the restrictions imposed were invalid; and, thirdly, that the children were entitled (without being put to an election) to their share of the marriage-contract fund, free of the restrictions imposed, as well as to their share of their father's own estate bequeathed by his will. Matthews Duncan's Trustee v. Matthews Duncan, 3 F. 533—Ct. of Sess.

"Give, devise, bequeath and appoint" the Residue—Exercise of Power—Indications of Intention of Testator.—A testator, who under his marriage settlement possessed a special power of appointment over certain leasehold hereditaments in favour of all and every the children of such marriage, after giving certain specific legacies, proceeded to "give devise bequeath and appoint" all the rest, residue, and remainder of his estate whether real or personal to trustees upon trust to convert the same and out of the proceeds thereof to pay his debts and funeral expenses and to hold the residue of such trust moneys upon trust to pay and divide the same unto and equally between three of his eight sons. He proceeded: "and I make no provision under this my will for my other children, they being sufficiently provided for." He further gave his trustees power to postpone conversion of his estate and to invest the trust moneys representing the shares of two of the three sons during their respective minorities in certain securities, and to pay the whole of the income thereof to the other son as their guardian for and on account of their support and maintenance:—Held, there being several indications that the testator was not dealing with the property the subject of the power, that, notwithstanding the use of the word "appoint," the will did not operate as an exercise of the special power of appointment. Mayhew, In re; Spencer v. Cutbush (70 L. J. Ch. 428; [1901] 1 Ch. 677), distinguished. Weston's Settlement, In re; Neeves v. Weston, 76 L. J. Ch. 54; [1906] 2 Ch. 620; 95 L. T. 581—Buckley, J.

Equitable Limitations—Appointment to Trustees to Convert—Conversion—Legal Estate Outstanding in Trustees of Instrument Creating Power.—A power to appoint real estate to such child or children and "for such estate or estates manner and form" as the donee should appoint is well exercised by an appointment by the donee by will to trustees upon trust to convert and divide the proceeds amongst the appointees, and such appointment operates as a conversion of the real estate into personal estate, notwithstanding that the legal estate in the property appointed is outstanding in the trustees of the instrument creating the power. Principle of Kenworthy v. Bate (6 Ves. 792) applied. Redgate, In re; Marsh v. Redgate, 72 L. J. Ch. 204; [1903] 1 Ch. 356; 51 W. R. 216—Buckley, J.

Shares to be Vested in and Paid to Children on Attaining Majority, or, in the Case of Daughters, on Marriage—Payment Deferred till Death of Parents—Unappointed Residue—Death of Son in Parents' Lifetime, of Age and Intestate—Period of Vesting—Absolute Interest.—Certain trust funds were settled on the husband and wife for life, with power of appointment, and in default of appointment in trust for the children equally who being a son should attain twenty-one or die under that age leaving issue, or being a daughter should attain that age or marry; such shares to be vested in and paid to them, respectively, at the same age, day, or time, if the same should happen after the decease of their parents; but if the same should happen in their lifetime, then immediately after the decease of the survivor. The settlement contained the usual hotchpot clause. There were two children of the marriage, a son and a daughter. On the occasion of the daughter's marriage one moiety of the trust funds was appointed to her by her parents, and was settled on certain trusts by her marriage settlement. The parents likewise appointed a further portion of the trust funds in favour of the son, which, however, did not exhaust the whole. The son died in the lifetime of his parents, having attained age, unmarried and intestate:—Held, that the postponement of enjoyment was solely for the convenience of the estate, there being nothing to shew that the postponement was intended to depend on any event personal to the children themselves; that consequently the son, having attained age, had acquired an absolute interest in the unappointed residue, and that his personal representative was entitled to receive it. Darley v. Percival, [1900] 1 Ir. R. 129—V.C.

Successive Appointments—Cumulative or Substitutionary—Election.—A marriage settlement contained a power of appointment over a fund in favour of children (other than an eldest son) exercisable by the husband and wife jointly and by the survivor of them. In 1872 the husband and wife appointed one-seventh of the fund to a daughter, and in 1878 another one-seventh to another daughter. At the date of each of these appointments there were seven children of the marriage living, besides an eldest son. In 1891, after the death of the husband and one of the children, the wife purported to appoint the fund in sixths to her six surviving children, other than the eldest son, for life, with remainders to their children respectively. The appointment to grandchildren being discovered to be in excess of the power given by the settlement, the wife in 1893 executed a deed-poll supplemental to the appointment of 1891, whereby she appointed that after the deaths of her six children their one-sixth shares should be held in trust for them absolutely, and stated that her intention was that, under the appointment of 1891 and present appointment, each of her children should take a vested interest in one-sixth of the capital and income of the fund:—Held, that the intention of the wife, as appearing from the subsequent appointments, was that the fund should be divisible in sixths; that the daughters to whom the one-sevenths were appointed could not take the one-sixth in addition to the one-seventh appointed to them respectively, and that no question of election arose. England v. Lavers (L. R. 3 Eq. 63) followed and explained. Ashton, In re; Ingram v. Papillon (66 L. J. Ch. 731; [1897] 2 Ch. 574), distinguished. *Tancred's Settlement, In re; Somerville v. Tancred. Remoteness.—A testator being entitled, under settlement executed on his marriage in 1877, to a life interest in lands, with power of appointment to child or children after his death, by his will dated May 20, 1896, appointed all the lands comprised in the settlement to one daughter on her attaining twenty-five. The testator died in 1901, when the appointee was fifteen years old:—Held, that the appointment was not void for remoteness. Hallinan's Trusts, In re, [1904] 1 Ir. R. 452—C.A.

— Appointment to Class Ascertainable on Daughter's Marriage—Appointment to Daughter who shall Marry—Appointment of Income to Daughters Living and Unmarried.—By a marriage settlement made in 1793 personal estate was settled in trust for the husband and wife successively for life with remainder in trust for the children of the marriage as the husband and wife should jointly appoint. There were seven children. In 1835 the husband and wife appointed 1,500*l.* to be paid to each of the three unmarried daughters who should afterwards marry, and so long as the three daughters or any of them should remain unmarried directed the income of the residue to be paid to them or such of them as should be living and unmarried in equal shares, with a gift over, if all of them should marry, to such three daughters equally, but if one or two only should marry, then after the death or marriage of such one as should be last living and unmarried to the four other children and such of the three unmarried daughters as should marry in equal shares. One only of the three married. The survivor of them died unmarried in 1897:—Held, that the ultimate gift over was void for remoteness, as the class was not necessarily ascertainable within twenty-one years from the death of the survivor of the appointors. Held also, that the appointments of 1,500*l.* to each of the daughters who should marry were void on the same principle. Held further, that there was a good gift of an equal undivided one-third of the income to each of the three unmarried daughters, but that the implied gift over of the share of a daughter, upon her marriage, to the remaining daughters, was bad. Wainwright v. Miller (66 L. J. Ch. 616; [1897] 2 Ch. 255) considered and followed. Gage, In re; Hill v. Gage, 67 L. J. Ch. 200; [1898] 1 Ch. 493; 73 L. T. 347; 46 W. R. 569—Kekewich, J.

— Election.—A case of election can be raised, if the facts admit of it being raised, as much in the case of an appointment void for remoteness by reason of the rule against perpetuities as in the case of an appointment void for being to a person not an object of the power. Hancock's Trusts, In re (23 L. 2. POWER OF CHARGING.

Power to Charge Portions—Provision Limiting Amount to be Charged—Form of Provision—Common Form at Date of Will.—By his will, made in 1860, a testator who died in 1863 devised his real estate in strict settlement, and empowered each person thereby made tenant for life, whether in possession or not, to charge the property with the payment of any annual sum not exceeding 1,000*l.* by way of jointure, and with any sum not exceeding 20,000*l.* for portions of younger children. The will then provided that the devised property should not by virtue of these powers at any one time be liable to the payment of more than the annual sum of 1,500*l.* for jointures, and more than the principal sum of 30,000*l.* for portions of younger children. Provisions similar to this were to be found in books of precedents published before the date of the will. One tenant for life died in 1872, having charged the property with 20,000*l.* for portions; and another tenant for life died in 1874, having made the same charge. Both these sums of 20,000*l.* were raised and paid. In 1890 a third tenant for life, who never came into possession, died, having also charged the property with 20,000*l.* for portions. On a summons taken out to determine whether this third charge was a good exercise of the power and valid and effectual for the whole amount,—Held, that, the form of the provision having been the common form at the date of the will, the words "at any one time" must be construed as applying to the sum chargeable for portions as well as to the sum chargeable for jointures; and that the third charge of 20,000*l.* therefore did not transfer the limitations imposed by the will in respect of portions, but was valid and effectual for the whole amount. Beckett, In re; Bethell v. Grimthorpe, 93 L. T. 746; 22 T. L. R. 84—Joyce, J.

Power to Tenant for Life to Charge Settled Property—Gift of Remainder of Personality—Charge on Realty.—Where by a settlement power is given to the tenant for life, by deed or by will, to charge all or part of the settled property with payment to himself or any other person of a sum not exceeding a certain amount, with interest, and to appoint the premises so charged to any person for any term of years without impeachment of waste, upon trusts for raising the sums charged, with interest, and by his will, after giving certain legacies, the tenant for life gives all his real property to one person and all the rest of his personal property to others, the general gift of the personality does not operate as a charge, in favour of the donees, on the real estate which he had power to charge. Wallinger's Estate, In re ([1898] 1 Ir. R. 139), followed. Jones, In re; Greene v. Gordon (56 L. J. Ch. 53; 34 Ch. D. 65), distinguished. Salvin, In re; Marshall v. Wolseley, 75 L. J. Ch. 825; [1906] 2 Ch. 459; 95 L. 3. POWER OF JOINTURE.

Power to Jointure—Defective Execution—Covenant to Exercise before Power in Existence—Approval of Draft Deed—Effect.—A settlement on marriage contained a covenant by the husband that he would charge the real and personal estate which might come to him on the death of his father, whether under settlement, will, intestacy, or otherwise, with a jointure of 400*l.* to his wife for life. At the date of the covenant his father was living, but had made a will giving his son power to appoint a jointure of 400*l.* to any wife for life, to be charged upon certain freehold hereditaments settled thereby. After his father's death the covenantor approved a draft deed to carry out the covenant, and appointing, in exercise of the power, a jointure of 400*l.* to his wife for life, to be charged upon the settled hereditaments; but he died a few days afterwards, before the deed had been executed. He had made a will appointing, in alleged exercise of the power, a jointure of 400*l.* out of the settled estate to his wife during widowhood only:—Held (applying Affleck v. Affleck, 26 L. J. Ch. 353; 3 Sm. & G. 394), that the covenant, coupled with the approval of the draft deed, constituted a due exercise of the power of appointment; and, following Coventry v. Coventry (2 P. Wms. 222), that the approval of the draft deed constituted a selection of the property upon which the jointure was to be charged. The wife was therefore entitled to a jointure of 400*l.* for life charged upon the settled hereditaments. Charlton v. Charlton, 75 L. J. Ch. 715; [1906] 2 Ch. 523; 95 L. T. 714—Warrington, J.

4. POWER OF LEASING.

Lease by Donee to Himself and Others.—The donee of an ordinary power of leasing cannot validly exercise the power by leasing to himself either alone or jointly with others. Quare, whether, independently of express statutory authority or some long-established special custom, the donee can validly exercise such a power by leasing to a trustee for himself, as such an execution would seem to transgress the doctrine of equity forbidding a man to put himself in such a position that his interest conflicts with his duty. Boyce v. Edbrooke, 72 L. J. Ch. 547; [1903] 1 Ch. 836; 88 L. T. 344; 51 W. R. 424—Farwell, J. And see MORTGAGE and SETTLEMENT.

5. POWER OF SALE.

"Trustees for the time being" of Will—Executors of Surviving Trustee.—A testator devised his real estate to certain trustees, their heirs and assigns, upon certain trusts, and the will contained a power of sale of real estate exercisable by "the trustees for the time being" under the will:—Held, that the power of sale was exercisable by the executors of the last surviving trustee. Pixton and Tong's Contract, In re, 46 W. R. 187—Byrne, J.

To Trustees—Execution by Survivor.—A power of sale given to trustees, not being a bare power, but one coupled with an interest, can be executed by the survivors or survivor. Bacon, In re; Turner, In re; Toovey v. Turner, 76 L. J. Ch. 213; [1907] 1 Ch. 475; 96 L. T. 630—Swinfen Eady, J.

6. RELEASE OF POWER.

Validity—Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 52.—A release of a limited power of appointment is not void although made by the donee for his own benefit. In re Radcliffe; Radcliffe v. Bewes (61 L. J. Ch. 136; [1892] 1 Ch. 227), followed. In re Somes; Somes v. Somes, 65 L. J. Ch. 262; [1896] 1 Ch. 250—Chitty, J.

The Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 52, does not apply to cases of powers coupled with a duty where the release would be a breach of trust. Id.

Joint Power—Husband and Wife—Assignment by Wife and Persons Entitled in Default of Appointment—Concurrence of Husband—Husband's Power as Surviving Donee.—Where property is settled on trust as a husband and wife shall jointly appoint, and in default of such joint appointment as the survivor shall appoint, and the wife, with the husband's concurrence, joins with the persons entitled in default of appointment in assigning the property for value, such assignment will constitute a dealing inconsistent with any exercise of the power by the husband after his wife's death, and will in effect amount to a release of such power. Foakes v. Jackson, 69 L. J. Ch. 352; [1900] 1 Ch. 807—Farwell, J.

Married Woman Married before 1881—Restraint on Anticipation of Life Interest.—A married woman married before the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, may under section 52 of that Act by deed unacknowledged release a power of appointment over personal property in which she has a life interest subject to a restraint on anticipation. In re Chisholm's Settlement; In re Hemphill's Settlement; *Hemphill v. 7. FRAUD ON POWER.

Covenant to Exercise Testamentary Power in Particular Way—Family Arrangement.—The donee of a special power to appoint by will among children (which is a fiduciary power) is intended to and should keep the ordinary exercise of it under his control until the moment of his death; and he cannot, in anticipation of his last will, validly covenant that it shall be exercised in a particular way. Such a covenant is bad, as calculated to defeat the object of the creation of the power. Dicta of JAMES, L.J., in Thacker v. Key (L. R. 8 Eq. 403, 414) and BRETT, L.J., in Palmer v. Locke (50 L. J. Ch. 113, 115; 15 Ch. D. 294, 301), approved. In re Bradshaw; Bradshaw v. Bradshaw, 71 L. J. Ch. 230; [1902] 1 Ch. 436—Kekewich, J.

Such a covenant being bad cannot be sued upon even if made in a deed or deeds of family arrangement. It is not analogous to the release of a power of this kind, which depends upon a foundation of its own. Ib.

Jointuring—Bargain between Husband and Wife—Appointment in Consideration of Payment by Wife to Husband—Validity of Appointment.] The exercise of a power of jointuring can be the subject of a bargain between a husband and wife; and so long as no part of the jointure itself is under the appointment to be received by any person other than the wife, the husband can exercise the power in favour of the wife in consideration of receiving some benefit out of her property, and the fact that the consideration given by her is the full actuarial value of the jointure annuity is immaterial. Saunders v. Shafto, 74 L. J. Ch. 110; [1905] 1 Ch. 126; 91 L. T. 789; 53 W. R. 424—C.A.

A tenant for life of real estate had a power to charge the estate with a jointure to his wife of 300*l.* a year. He married in 1868, and in 1882 he exercised the power to the full extent in favour of his wife in consideration of a sum of 50*l.* then paid to him by his wife out of her own money. He died in 1902. There was evidence of an actuary that 50*l.* was at the time the full market value of the annuity secured by the jointure, having regard to the respective ages of the husband and wife:—Held, that the execution of the power was not a fraud upon the power, and was valid. Baldwin v. Roche (5 Ir. Eq. R. 110) followed. Whelan v. Palmer (57 L. J. Ch. 784; 39 Ch. D. 648) overruled. Ib.

1. PARTIES.

(a) Plaintiffs.

Action Commenced in Name of Wrong Person as Plaintiff—Bona fide Mistake—Substitution of Other Person as Plaintiff after Decision that Original Plaintiff has no Cause of Action.]—Where a bona fide mistake of law or of fact has been made in commencing an action in the name of the wrong person as plaintiff, the Court has jurisdiction under Order XVI.

rule 2 to order another person to be substituted as plaintiff even after it has been decided that the original plaintiff has no right of action. Hughes v. Pump-House Hotel Co. (No. 2), 71 L. J. K.B. 803; [1902] 2 K.B. 485; 87 L. T. 359; 50 W. R. 677—C.A.

Separate Transactions—Joint and Separate Causes of Action.—In an action by the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge for an injunction to restrain the defendants from selling or advertising books bearing the title "The Oxford and Cambridge Publications," or "The Oxford and Cambridge Edition," the statement of claim alleged that the plaintiffs carried on an extensive business in printing and publishing at their respective presses known as the Oxford University Press and the Cambridge University Press; that certain works were the joint publications of the two presses; that the defendants had commenced to publish and advertise text-books under the titles in question; and that the use by the defendants of such titles was calculated to deceive, and induce the belief that the books emanated from the presses of the plaintiffs, or were authorised by them:—Held, that the case came within Order XVI. rule 1, as interpreted by CHITTY, L.J., in Stroud v. Lawson (67 L. J. Q.B. 718; [1898] 2 Q.B. 44), for, first, the right of relief alleged to exist in each plaintiff arose out of one transaction, or series of transactions, if each publication by the defendants was to be treated as a separate transaction; and secondly, the question of publication, and the belief that would be induced by the publications of the defendants, were common questions of fact that would arise in the action, and consequently that the two Universities could be joined as plaintiffs. Oxford and Cambridge Universities v. Gill, 68 L. J. Ch. 34; [1899] 1 Ch. 55; 79 L. T. 338; 47 W. R. 248—Stirling, J.

"Same transaction."—Where several persons, separately, apply for debentures in a company, relying on a prospectus and covering letter which contain misrepresentations, they may jointly sue the directors, as they have, within Order XVI. rule 1, a claim for relief arising out of the "same transaction." Drincobier v. Wood, 68 L. J. Ch. 181; [1899] 1 Ch. 393; 79 L. T. 543; 47 W. R. 252; 6 Manson, 76—Byrne, J.

Conspiracy—Compulsion by Illegal Means.—Persons whom it is sought to compel by illegal means to act not in accordance with the views they would themselves adopt, but in accordance with the views of others, may join as co-plaintiffs in an action against those seeking to coerce them. Walters v. Green, 68 L. J. Ch. 730; [1899] 2 Ch. 696; 81 L. T. 151; 48 W. R. 23; 63 J. P. 742—Stirling, J.

Co-plaintiffs—Compromise of Action by One of Co-plaintiffs—Application by Defendants to Strike Out His Name as Co-plaintiff—Discretion of Court.—A co-plaintiff who has compromised an action is not entitled as a matter of course to have his name struck out as a co-plaintiff. Matheus, In re; Oates v. Mooney, 71 L. J. Ch. 656; [1905] 2 Ch. 460; 93 L. T. 158; 54 W. R. 75—Swinfen Eady, J.

Where two of three defendants in an action applied to have the name of one of three co-plaintiffs struck out on the ground that they had entered into a binding agreement with such co-plaintiff for the compromise of the action so far as she was concerned, the Court refused to make the order. Ib.

Joinder of—Libel—Separate Causes of Action.—Where a libel is published in the same words and in the same document of different persons, they cannot be joined as plaintiffs in one action of libel. Smurthwaite v. Hannay (63 L. J. Q.B. 737; [1894] A.C. 494) followed, and Booth v. Briscoe (2 Q.B. D. 496) considered and explained. Peddie v. Kyle, [1900] 2 Ir. R. 265—Q.B. D.

Refusal of Joint-Promisee to Join in Action as Plaintiff—Joinder as Defendant.—A joint-promisee who, after tender of an indemnity against costs, has refused to be joined as plaintiff in an action brought by his co-promisee to enforce a right in which they are jointly interested, may be properly joined as a defendant to the action. Cullen v. Knowles, 67 L. J. Q.B. 821; [1898] 2 Q.B. 380—Bigham, J.

Action by Firm—Statement of Names and Addresses of Persons Constituting Firm—Affidavit Verifying Statement—Power to Order Cross-examination on Affidavit—Jurisdiction to Direct Trial of Issue as to Co-partners.—Where, in an action in which the writ is issued in the name of a firm, a statement of the names and addresses of the persons constituting such firm has been furnished under Order XLVIII.A, rules 1 and 2, there is no jurisdiction either to direct the person making such affidavit to attend for cross-examination on the affidavit, or to order an issue to be tried to determine the question as to the persons constituting such firm. Abrahams v. Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre Co., 74 L. J. K.B. 14; [1905] 1 K.B. 46; 91 L. T. 11—C.A.

(b) Defendants.

Joinder of—Separate Causes of Action.—The plaintiff was engaged by H. to act at a theatre of which D. was lessee and manager. In an action brought by him against H. and D. in respect of an alleged slander spoken by one defendant on one occasion and by the other defendant on another occasion, and also in respect of an alleged conspiracy between them wrongfully to dismiss him from his employment,—Held, that these claims could not be joined in one action. Pope v. Hawtrey, 85 L. T. 263—C.A.

— Cause of Action—Separate Remedies—Action on Prospectus of Company—Company and Directors—Executors of Deceased Director.—A person who has taken shares in a company on the faith of a prospectus which contains, as he alleges, in material matters misrepresentations and suppression of facts, can join in one action claims against the company to have the allotment of shares made to him cancelled and his money repaid, and also claims against the directors who had issued the prospectus and the executors of a deceased director for damages, the cause of action being as regards all the defendants the same thing—namely, the issue of the prospectus. Gower v. Couldridge (67

L. J. Q.B. 251; [1898] 1 Q.B. 348) and Thompson v. London County Council (68 L. J. Q.B. 625; [1899] 1 Q.B. 840) distinguished. Frankenburg v. Great Horseless Carriage Co., 69 L. J. Q.B. 147; [1900] 1 Q.B. 504; 81 L. T. 684; 7 Manson, 347—C.A.

Libels—Severing of Damages.—In an action for libel by the plaintiff against three defendants the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff with 110*l.* damages, and they apportioned the damages, by permission of the Judge, between the three defendants—100*l.* against C, and 5*l.* each against A and B:—Held, that the jury had no power to sever the damages, and that Order XVI. rule 4 had made no difference in that respect. Dawson v. McClelland, [1899] 2 Ir. R. 486—C.A.

Conspiracy.—Persons who conspire illegally to watch and beset a place with a view to persuade workmen not to work, or to cease working for a person, may be sued jointly in one and the same action. Sadler v. Great Western Railway (65 L. J. Q.B. 462; [1896] A.C. 450) distinguished. Walters v. Green, 68 L. J. Ch. 730; [1899] 2 Ch. 696; 81 L. T. 151; 48 W. R. 23; 63 J. P. 742—Stirling, J.

Counterclaim—Cause of Action by Defendant Jointly with Another Person.—The defendant in an action is not entitled to set up a counterclaim in respect of a cause of action which he jointly with another person claims to have against the plaintiff, making the other person a defendant to the counterclaim. Pender v. Taddei, 67 L. J. Q.B. 703; [1898] 1 Q.B. 798; 78 L. T. 581; 46 W. R. 452—C.A.

One Injury or Damage Caused by Independent Torts.—In an action to recover damages for injury caused to the plaintiffs' house in consequence of an excavation made by the defendants in the course of constructing a sewer in the roadway fronting the house, the defendants in their defence set up that the injury to the house was not caused by the act of the defendants, but by the default of a waterworks company in leaving their main in the roadway insufficiently stopped. Thereupon the plaintiffs applied under Order XVI. rule 7 for an order allowing them to join the waterworks company as defendants in the action:—Held, that the causes of action against the defendants and the waterworks company were separate and distinct, and could not be joined in one action. Bennetts v. McIlwraith (65 L. J. Q.B. 632; [1896] 2 Q.B. 464) explained. Thompson v. London County Council, 68 L. J. Q.B. 625; [1899] 1 Q.B. 840; 80 L. T. 512; 47 W. R. 433—C.A.

"Actio personalis moritur cum persona."—In an action it was held that the plaintiff had been induced by the fraudulent misrepresentations of certain defendants to take shares in a company to his damage, and the defendants were ordered to pay to the plaintiff the amount paid by him in respect of the shares with interest less the value of the shares, and an enquiry was directed to ascertain such value. The defendants appealed, two of them joining in their appeal, and the others appealing separately. After the appeals were opened, and before the arguments were concluded, one of the two appellants who joined in their appeal died:—Held, that the rule

Actio personalis moritur cum persona applied, and that the proceedings could not be continued against the personal representatives of the deceased appellant. Davoren v. Wootton, [1900] 1 Ir. R. 273—C.A.

Partners Sued in Name of Firm—Separate Defences by Partners—Death of Partner—Form of Defence.—Where one of two partners sued in the name of their firm dies, the surviving partner is not entitled to deliver a defence as an individual, but must defend for the firm and in the firm's name. Ellis v. Wadeson, 68 L. J. Q.B. 604; [1899] 1 Q.B. 714; 80 L. T. 508; 47 W. R. 420—C.A.

Co-defendants—Judgment in Default of Appearance against One—Subsequent Proceedings against Other.—A plaintiff, by entering judgment in default of appearance against one of two joint defendants, does not abandon his right to proceed to judgment against the other defendant. Pym v. Coyle, [1903] 2 Ir. R. 457—K.B. D.

Indemnity—Costs.—In an action against an adjoining owner and his builder for an injunction restraining interference with light, the builder severed his defence, and appeared separately:—Held, that the builder, being justified in severing, was entitled to have solicitor-and-client costs paid by his co-defendant. Born v. Turner, 69 L. J. Ch. 593; [1900] 2 Ch. 211; 48 W. R. 697—Byrne, J.

(c) Representative.

Representative Action—Class—Public Right—Attorney-General.—Where there is a common interest and a common grievance a representative action is in order if the relief sought is in its nature beneficial to all whom the plaintiffs propose to represent; and the rule is not limited to persons having a beneficial proprietary interest. And if the alleged rights of the class represented are being denied or ignored, it is of no moment whether or not the nominal plaintiffs have been wronged in their individual capacity. The Attorney-General is not a necessary party to such an action. Bedford (Duke) v. Ellis, 70 L. J. Ch. 102; [1901] A.C. 1; 83 L. T. 686—H.L. (E.)

Growers of produce alleging statutory rights in a market, claiming a declaration on the construction of the statute, and an injunction and account, held entitled to be joined as co-plaintiffs. Ib.

Observations by LORD MACNAGHTEN on Temperton v. Russell (62 L. J. Q.B. 300; [1893] 1 Q.B. 435). Ib.

Unascertained Persons—Representation.—A. and R., having executed a disentailing deed and a deed of appointment of a fund in Court representing proceeds of sale of part of the settled property, petitioned for payment out:—Held, that, immediate relief being sought, it was not premature to determine the construction of the will, and that the trustees of the will represented unascertained persons. Cardigan v. Curzon-Howe, 70 L. J. Ch. 763; [1901] 2 Ch. 479; 49 W. R. 715—Byrne, J.

Representation Order—Articles of Association—Rights of Preference Shareholders.]—Upon an originating summons issued by a company against one of its preference shareholders on behalf of the class to determine questions affecting the rights of that class, the Court will not nominate such shareholder to represent the class unless he has been previously nominated and selected for that purpose by a meeting of the preference shareholders. Morgan's Brewery Co. v. Crosskill, 71 L. J. Ch. 585; [1902] 1 Ch. 898; 10 Manson, 235—Buckley, J.

Interests of Unborn Children—Representation by Trustees.]—A condition subsequent in a settlement caused the forfeiture of a previous gift in the event of a marriage at any time without consent, and defeated the interest of the children as well as that of the tenant for life. On a summons raising this question, the trustees of the settlement sufficiently represent the interests of children otherwise unrepresented, whether in existence or not, who may be entitled under the trusts of the settlement. Whiting's Settlement, In re; Whiting v. De Rutzen, 74 L. J. Ch. 207; [1905] 1 Ch. 96—Byrne, J.

(d) Absent Parties.

Power to Bind—Bondholders' Action—Compromise—Time-limit for Absent Parties to come in.]—In a bondholders' action to administer a trust fund the Court in 1894 sanctioned a scheme of compromise under which all the bondholders were to receive a certain sum in respect of each bond. The great majority of the holders had come in under the scheme, and after a lapse of six years the railway company applied for an order limiting the time within which the outstanding bondholders must accept the scheme or be held excluded from its benefits:—Held, that the Court had jurisdiction to make the order asked, and ordered that the outstanding bondholders must within six months express their acceptance of the scheme or be excluded therefrom. Saragossa and Mediterranean Railway v. Collingham, 73 L. J. Ch. 568; [1904] A.C. 159; 52 W. R. 609; 20 T. L. R. 354—H.L. (E.)

Compromise—Time Limit.]—See TRUST.

(e) Change of Parties.

Change of Character—Adding Parties.]—The Court being asked to convert an action against the Lords of the Admiralty for an injunction in respect of alleged trespass into a maintainable action, by giving the plaintiffs leave to amend the writ by suing the Lords individually and adding as parties the servants of the Admiralty who were the trespassers, refused such leave and dismissed the action, but without prejudice to any action maintainable by the plaintiffs. Raleigh v. Goschen, 67 L. J. Ch. 59; [1898] 1 Ch. 73; 77 L. T. 429; 46 W. R. 90—Romer, J.

Adding Defendant—Objection by Plaintiff—Jurisdiction.]—In an action by a beneficiary against one of two trustees liable for breach of trust, the Court will not, against the wish of the plaintiff, add the other trustee as a defendant under Order XVI. rule 11; for, although such other trustee may be liable to the defendant for contribution as equally liable in respect of the alleged breach of trust, he is not a person "whose presence before the Court may be necessary in order to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the cause or matter." Montgomery v. Foy (65 L. J. Q.B. 18; [1895] 2 Q.B. 321) distinguished. McCleane v. Gyles (No. 2), 71 L. J. Ch. 446; [1902] 1 Ch. 911; 86 L. T. 217; 50 W. R. 387—Buckley, J.

Concurrent Actions—Action in Rem—Foreign Ships—Action by Cargo-owner—Action by Shipowner Abroad—Writ—Power to Add Parties.]—A collision occurred between two Norwegian ships, the Fernando and the Charlotte, in the North Sea, and the cargo on board the Fernando was damaged. The Charlotte was arrested upon arrival in England by the plaintiffs alleging that they were the owners of the cargo on board the Fernando. A preliminary objection was taken that the plaintiffs were not the owners of the cargo, and this objection was held to be good, and the Charlotte was ordered to be released. An application was then made to add the real owners of the cargo as plaintiffs:—Held, that the Court had jurisdiction to do so. The Charlotte was then arrested in Norway at the instance of the owners of the Fernando, and by Norwegian law the master of a vessel was entitled to act in the interests of and to sue on behalf of the cargo-owners, and the liability of a wrongdoing vessel was limited to the value of the ship and freight. The owners of the Charlotte gave bail in that amount, and the vessel was released. Upon arrival in this country she was re-arrested in the action by the cargo-owners. The owners of the Charlotte moved to set aside the writ upon the ground that there was no jurisdiction to entertain the action, both vessels being foreign vessels, and there being proceedings in the Norwegian Courts, where the plaintiffs could be heard:—Held, that the cargo-owners had a right to bring their action in this country. The Charlotte, 23 T. L. R. 750—Bargrave Deane, J.

Bankruptcy of Plaintiff Suing for Himself and all other Creditors—Abatement—Application to Dismiss Action—Action in Representative Capacity.]—Where a receiving order followed by an adjudication in bankruptcy had been made against the plaintiff in an action in which the claim on behalf of himself and all other creditors was for an order setting aside an assignment of personal property by way of settlement made by the first defendant upon his wife, the second defendant, previously to his bankruptcy, and the defendants applied for a stay of proceedings in the action:—Held, that the action must be dismissed unless the official receiver intervened within a specified time, on the ground that, although the action was brought on behalf of all the creditors, the plaintiff could only sue as a creditor, and that, when he ceased to be such by the assignment by operation of law to his trustee in bankruptcy, he ceased to be a person capable of continuing the action; that he was not a trustee of the right of action, but suing as a creditor in his own right; and that a receiving order and injunction obtained in the action did not operate in the same manner as a judgment in a creditor's administration action, where the Court undertakes to protect all the creditors. Wolff v. Van Boelen, 94 L. T. 502—Kekewich, J. And see BANKRUPTCY, col. 74.

Death—Action for Negligence against Solicitor—“Actio personalis moritur cum persona.”]—An action by a client for damages for the alleged negligence of a solicitor while acting upon the client's retainer does not die with the solicitor, but survives and may be maintained against the personal representative of the deceased solicitor. Davies v. Hood, 88 L. T. 19—Ridley, J.

— after Judgment declaring Defendants liable for Breach of Trust—Order to Continue Proceedings—Application of Co-defendant seeking Contribution.]—In an action against trustees for a breach of trust, one of the defendants paid into Court a sum for which the defendants were subsequently declared liable. Some years after the final judgment in the action a co-defendant, who at the time of the judgment had no means, died entitled, as alleged, to a policy of insurance which then became payable. On the application of the first-mentioned defendant, who desired to seek contribution from the estate of the deceased, the Court made an order for continuing the proceedings against the personal representative of the latter. Collings v. Wade, [1903] 1 Ir. R. 89—V.C.

— Sole Plaintiff, a Tenant for Life—Application by Remainderman to be Substituted as Plaintiff.]—The plaintiff as tenant for life under an indenture of marriage settlement executed in 1869, sued in an action of ejectment on the title to recover certain lands. He died in 1895 during the pendency of the action, and his eldest son, as tenant in tail in remainder under the settlement, applied to be substituted as plaintiff:—Held, that the applicant did not represent the interest of the plaintiff in the action, that there was no change or transmission of the interest of the plaintiff to the applicant, and that the application must be refused. Ferrall v. Curran, [1899] 2 Ir. R. 470—Q.B. D.

(f) Intervention by Persons not Parties.

Setting Aside Judgment—Application by Person not Party to Record.]—Where in an action against the administrator of a deceased intestate for money alleged to have been paid by the plaintiff for the use of the deceased, judgment was allowed to be signed by collusion between the plaintiff and the defendant,—Held, that a next-of-kin, not a party to the record, whose interest in the assets of the deceased was prejudicially affected by the judgment, had such a specific interest in the deceased's assets as to entitle him to an order in the action setting aside the judgment and giving him leave to intervene. Mehaffey v. Mehaffey, [1905] 2 Ir. R. 292—K.B. D.

Fidelity Bond—Right to Sue by Person not a Party to the Contract.]—A bank, who were mortgagees of A's estate, appointed B receiver under their statutory power conferred by the Conveyancing Act, 1881, and B and the defendant corporation entered into a bond with the bank conditioned for B's due discharge of his duty as statutory receiver. A was not a party to this bond. B having made default, the bank were paid off the full amount of their demand out of the mortgaged estate:—Held, that A and the bank were entitled to sue on the bond for the amount of the default. Kenney v. Employers' Liability Assurance Corporation, [1901] 1 Ir. R. 301—C.A.

(g) Interested Person.

Contingent Liabilities—Distribution—Retention of Assets—Practice.]—On an application for an order directing the distribution of a testator's estate among the residuary legatees, notwithstanding the existence of a possible future claim against the estate for calls on shares of a company which are not fully paid up, the company are not proper parties to the proceedings. King, In re; Mellor v. South Australian Land Mortgage and Agency Co., 76 L. J. Ch. 44; [1907] 1 Ch. 72; 95 L. T. 724—Neville, J.

(h) Third-Party Procedure.

Third-Party Notice—Service out of Jurisdiction—Jurisdiction of Court.]—Leave to serve a third-party notice out of the jurisdiction can only be given in cases where the claim of the defendant covered by the third-party notice is of such a character that if it had been made by an independent action for the like purpose, an order could have been made for service of the writ out of the jurisdiction under Order XI. rule 1. McCheane v. Gyles (No. 1), 71 L. J. Ch. 183; [1902] 1 Ch. 287; 86 L. T. 1; 50 W. R. 876—C.A.

Claim for Contribution—Action against One of Two Trustees for Breach of Trust—Third Party in Ireland.]—Action brought by a beneficiary under a settlement made in 1874 in Ireland, between persons domiciled and resident in Ireland, seeking to make the survivor of the two trustees of the settlement liable for an alleged breach of trust. The defendant was in England, and was served there. His co-trustee had died in 1877, and his executrix was resident in Ireland. The defendant issued a third-party notice, claiming contribution from the executrix on the ground that the co-trustee was equally liable with him in respect of the alleged breach of trust, he having been a trustee at the time when it was stated to have occurred:—Held, that leave ought not to be given to serve the third-party notice in Ireland. Id.

Marine Insurance—Re-insurance.]—Where in an action on a policy of marine insurance the defendants sought under Order XVI. rule 48 to bring in as a third party the underwriter of a policy of re-insurance on the same subject-matter,—Held, that the third-party procedure was not applicable to such a case, inasmuch as a contract of re-insurance was not one of “indemnity” within the meaning of the rule. Nelson v. Empress Assurance Corporation, 74 L. J. K.B. 699; [1905] 2 K.B. 281; 93 L. T. 62; 53 W. R. 648; 10 Com. Cas. 237; 10 Asp. M.C. 68; 21 T. L. R. 555—C.A.

Contract of Indemnity—Undertaking by Shipowner to Indemnify Charterer.]—A charterparty provided that the shipowner should keep the charterers indemnified to the same extent as the shipowner would be indemnified by the Protection and Indemnity Club, in which the ship was entered, against claims and risks covered by such Indemnity Club. Such claims and risks included damage to goods and loss consequent on seizure. The vessel was seized as trading with an enemy, and claims were made against the charterers by the owners of goods on board:—Held, that the charterers were not entitled to bring in the shipowner as a third party, the liability of the charterers to the owners of the goods and of the shipowner to the charterers not being necessarily the same or dependent on the same considerations. Dunn v. Donald Currie & Co., 6 Com. Cas. 118—Bigham, J.

Counterclaim—Plaintiff Claiming to be Entitled to Contribution or Indemnity—Adding Person not Party to Action as Third Party.—The provisions of Order XVI. rule 43, which enable a defendant who claims to be entitled to contribution or indemnity over against any person not a party to the action, by leave of the Court or a Judge, to bring in such person as a third party to the proceedings, apply to a plaintiff who, by reason of a counterclaim being set up by the defendant, claims to be entitled to contribution or indemnity over against a person not a party to the action. Levi v. Anglo-Continental Gold Reefs of Rhodesia, 71 L. J. K.B. 789; [1902] 2 K.B. 481; 86 L. T. 857; 50 W. R. 625—C.A.

Action for Libel—Counterclaim by Defendant in respect of Alleged Libel against Him by Plaintiff's Agent—Joinder of Third Party.—“Relief relating to or connected with the original subject of the cause or matter.”—The plaintiffs, a registered company, and their managing director, carrying on business as dealers in motor cars, brought an action against the defendant, who was the managing director of another registered company carrying on a similar business, claiming damages in respect of an alleged libel written by the defendant, and caused by him to be published in two trade journals concerning the plaintiffs and their motor cars. The defendant, while admitting that he had written the statements complained of, which he said was done in the course of and concerning a long controversy in the motoring press with regard to the respective merits of the plaintiffs' cars and those manufactured by his company, each company puffing their own wares and decrying those of trade rivals, counterclaimed as follows: That the plaintiffs by their agent falsely and maliciously wrote and caused to be published in one of the trade journals a statement which, as the defendant alleged, meant that he was a man who did not pay wagers when he had lost them, and was a dishonourable man with whom it was not safe to have any dealings. The defendant accordingly joined the plaintiffs' agent as a defendant to his counterclaim, and asked for damages:—Held, that, upon the true construction of section 24, sub-section 3 of the Judicature Act, 1873, the counterclaim did not seek “relief relating to or connected with the original subject of the cause or matter.” and ought therefore to be struck out. Edge v. Weigel, 97 L. T. 447—C.A.

Damage by Collision—Action against Tug and Tow—Notice by Tug for Indemnity over against Tow—Tug Held Solely to Blame—Tow Dismissed from Action—Appeal by Tug Withdrawn—Right of Tow to Appeal from Judgment against Tug.—In an action against the owners of a tug, and of a barge which was being towed by the tug, to recover damages caused to the plaintiffs' cargo by collision, in which action a third-party notice for indemnity against all damages and costs had been served by the tug-owners on the barge-owners, the tug was held solely to blame and the barge-owners were dismissed from the action. The tug-owners were held liable also to pay to the plaintiffs the costs payable by them to the barge-owners. As between the tug-owners and the barge-owners the latter were held to be liable to indemnify the tug-owners in respect of all the damages and the costs. The tug-owners gave notice of appeal against the judgment holding the tug to blame, but subsequently withdrew the appeal. The barge-owners appealed both against the judgment in favour of the plaintiffs against the tug-owners and also against the judgment holding them liable under their indemnity:—Held, that neither under the Judicature Acts nor under the third-party procedure provided by Order XVI. were the barge-owners entitled to appeal against the judgment holding the tug solely to blame. The Millwall (No. 1), 74 L. J. P. 61; [1905] P. 155; 93 L. T. 426; 53 W. R. 471; 10 Asp. M.C. 110; 21 T. L. R. 346—C.A.

Towage—Contract of Indemnity by Tow—Negligence of Tug—Damage to Cargo of Tow—Action by Cargo-owner against Tug—Judgment against Tug—Liability of Tow under Indemnity for Costs.—The owners of certain sulphate of ammonia instructed a firm of lightermen to convey it in a barge to a ship and to engage a tug for the purpose. While the tug was towing the barge with the cargo on board, the barge collided with another barge, and the cargo was damaged. The owners of the cargo brought an action against the owners of the barge and the owners of the tug, in which the owners of the tug served a third-party notice on the owners of the barge, claiming to be entitled to be indemnified by them, upon the ground that the towage was upon their usual terms that they would not be answerable for any loss or damage which might happen to any barge or its cargo while in tow, and that their customers undertook to indemnify them from any such loss or damage. At the trial of the action, the President found that the owners of the barge were free from blame and ordered the owners of the cargo to pay their costs, and further found that the damage was due to the negligence of the tug, and, holding that there was no privity of contract between the owners of the cargo and the owners of the tug, gave judgment for the owners of the cargo against the owners of the tug for the damage, together with their costs and the costs payable by them to the owners of the barge. The judge further held that, under the terms of the contract between the owners of the barge and the owners of the tug, the owners of the tug were entitled to be indemnified by the owners of the barge not only in respect of the damage and the costs of the owners of the cargo, and the costs payable by the owners of the cargo to the owners of the barge, but also in respect of their own costs in defending the action:—Held, on appeal by the owners of the barge, that, there being no privity of contract between the owners of the tug and the owners of the cargo, the owners of the tug were liable to the owners of the cargo, but were entitled to be indemnified by the owners of the barge; and, as they had given the owners of the barge full notice of the claim and full opportunity of intervening and paying or resisting it, and had acted reasonably in defending the action, they were entitled to recover not only the actual damage, but also the costs payable by them to the owners of the cargo and their own costs in the action. The Millwall (No. 2), 74 L. J. P. 82; [1905] P. 155; 93 L. T. 429; 53 W. R. 471; 10 Asp. M.C. 113; 21 T. L. R. 346—C.A.

— Collision—Damage—Contract of Indemnity.—A steamship was brought from the entrance of a dock to her berth by two tugs, and was made fast; but was unable to haul on her winches, so as to get completely into position alongside the quay, owing to a barge, attached to a buoy, being in the way. The dock master sent two men from the two tugs to loosen the barge's headfast, and directed a third tug to tow the barge away; but, in so doing, the barge was negligently allowed to come into contact with the propeller of the steamship, and sustained such damage that the barge sank with her cargo. In an action of damage by collision brought by the barge owners against the dock owners, the dock owners admitted liability, but brought in the steamship owners as third parties liable to indemnify them under a towage contract made between the dock owners and a firm of ship repairers who had undertaken to bring the vessel from their yard to her berth at their risk. By the towage contract the dock owners were to supply tugs to assist in transporting the steamship within the dock on condition that the masters and crews of the tugs should cease to be under the dock owners' control in connection with the towage, and become subject to the orders and control of the master or person in charge of the vessel and be the servants of the owners thereof:—Held, that the steamship owners were not liable, as third parties, to indemnify the dock owners, as the contract to supply the two tugs was made with the ship repairers, and not with the steamship owners; but, whether that were so or not, the contract for the supply of the two tugs was at an end, and therefore the two men from the two tugs, directed by the dock master to loosen the headfast, had resumed their position as servants of the dock owners, and the action of the third tug under the direction of the dock master was independent of the transporting contract, which applied only to the two tugs. The Kate, 75 L. Costs.—Certain lands were subject to a building scheme, the provisions of which were contained in a deed of 1854. The purchaser of a plot was informed by the vendor in good faith that the original deed was lost or destroyed, and what purported to be a true copy was produced. This copy subsequently proved to be defective. The third party to an action against the defendant for a contravention of the provisions in the building scheme had sold the property to the defendant, and upon such sale had written a letter agreeing to indemnify the defendant, as purchaser, against all "costs, damages, and expenses" which the defendant might suffer or incur "by reason of the building stipulations and conditions being other than those set out in the copy." The issue whether by virtue of such indemnity the third party was liable to pay the costs of the whole proceedings was tried subsequently to the hearing of the action:—Held, that the costs were within the discretion of the Court, and that under the contract of indemnity the defendant was entitled to recover from the third party all costs for which he was liable—that is to say, the costs of the plaintiff as between party and party and his own costs as between solicitor and client. Hooper v. Lindsay ([1892] A.C. 110), the respondent in the House of Lords was not liable for party and party costs, — Held, on an application by the solicitor against the estate of his deceased client for taxation of the costs of the appeal to the House of Lords, that the solicitor was entitled to recover from the client's estate the ordinary costs which a solicitor is entitled to charge—namely, costs to be taxed as between solicitor and client. Raphael, In re; Salomon, ex parte, 68 L. 2. WRIT OF SUMMONS.

Specially Indorsed Writ—Liquidated Damages—Penalty—Bond for Lump Sum—Condition to Refrain from Several Acts in Obedience to Injunction.]—In an action to recover 100*l.*, money due upon a bond for that amount, the condition of which was that the defendant should, in obedience to an injunction of the High Court, refrain from trespassing on certain lands or the walls, gates, or fences thereof, and pulling down or removing, or otherwise injuring the same, or inciting others to commit any such trespasses, it appeared that the bond was executed by the defendant upon his release from imprisonment for disobedience to the injunction, which was in the same terms as those set out in the condition of the bond.—Held, that the sum payable by the bond became payable on a single event only—namely, on disobedience to the injunction—and was therefore liquidated damages, and not a penalty, and consequently the plaintiff was entitled to proceed by writ specially indorsed under Order III. rule 6, and to apply for final judgment under Order XIV. rule 1. Strickland v. Williams, 68 L. J. Q.B. 241; [1899] 1 Q.B. 382; 80 L. T. 4—C.A.

— Action for Rent by Personal Representatives.]—In an action by personal representatives of an intestate for rent accrued due from his tenants since his death, the writ is not specially indorsed unless it contains an averment that the intestate's interest was for a term of years. Murphy v. Murphy, [1903] 2 Ir. R. 329—K.B. D.

— Amendment without Leave.]—Where a plaintiff by amendment under Order XXXVIII. rule 2 converts an ordinary into a specially indorsed writ, he cannot obtain final judgment upon the amended writ under Order XIV. without service of the amended writ upon the defendant. Guinness v. Caraher ([1900] 2 Ir. R. 505) followed. Roberts v. Plant (64 L. J. Q.B. 847; [1895] 1 Q.B. 597) considered. Haigh v. Purcell, [1908] 2 Ir. R. 56—C.A.

Service within the Jurisdiction on Officer or Clerk—Foreign Corporation—Carrying on of Business within the Jurisdiction.]—A foreign shipping company, with an agent in this country occupying offices of which the rent and other expenses, including salaries of clerks, income tax, legal charges, advertising, printed forms, postage and telegrams, are paid by the company, although such agent carries on other business in addition to that of the company, is resident within the jurisdiction in such circumstances as to make service of a writ on such agent good service within the meaning of Order IX. rule 8. La Bourgogne, 68 L. J. P. 104; [1899] A.C. 431; 80 L. T. 845; 8 Asp. M.C. 550—H.L. (E.)

Service within Jurisdiction on Head Officer of Corporation—Foreign Corporation—Residence—Carrying on Business within Jurisdiction—Exclusive Occupation of Stand at Exhibition for Nine Days.]—A foreign trading company rented a stand at an exhibition in this country of goods of the kind manufactured by them. The company had their name on the stand, and had the exclusive use of it during the exhibition. A representative of the company and a clerk were in attendance at the stand, where exhibits of the goods manufactured by the company were on view, and where orders for such goods were received and accepted. The exhibition was for a period of nine days only.—Held, nevertheless, that the company were carrying on business at the stand under such circumstances as to make them resident within the jurisdiction so as to make service upon their representative good service on the company under Order IX. rule 8. Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre Co. v. Actien-Gesellschaft für Motor, 71 L. J. K.B. 284; [1902] 1 K.B. 342; 86 L. T. 472; 50 W. R. 226—C.A.

Action Commenced in England against Scottish Corporation—Service on Manager of Branch Office in England—“Statutory provision regulating service of process.”]—An action was brought in the High Court against a Scottish corporation, which had a branch office in England, where it carried on business. The corporation was incorporated by Acts of Parliament, which contained no provision as to service of process upon it. The writ of summons was served upon the manager of the branch office of the corporation in England under Order IX. rule 8:—Held, that the Citation Amendment (Scotland) Act, 1882, which relates exclusively to process issued from the Courts of Scotland and contains no provision applicable to the service of process issuing from an English Court, was not a “statutory provision regulating service of process” within Order IX. rule 8, and that the writ had been rightly served under that rule. Logan v. Bank of Scotland, 73 L. J. K.B. 794; [1904] 2 K.B. 495; 91 L. T. 252; 53 W. R. 39; 20 T. L. R. 640—C.A.

Substituted Service—Writ for Service within the Jurisdiction—Defendant out of Jurisdiction at Date of Application.]—The Court has jurisdiction under Order IX. rule 2 to make an order for substituted service of a writ of summons issued for service within the jurisdiction where the defendant, having been within the jurisdiction when the writ was issued, has since gone abroad, although it does not appear that the defendant went abroad to evade service of the writ. — Order for, at Places Abroad and within the Jurisdiction.]—In ordering substituted service of a writ on a person out of the jurisdiction the kind of service ordered need not be restricted to service out of the jurisdiction, but may be extended to include substituted service within the jurisdiction. *Western Suburban Permanent Benefit Building Society v. — Scotland or Ireland—Defendant Domiciled or Ordinarily Resident in—Appointment of Agent to Accept Service within the Jurisdiction.]—A person domiciled or ordinarily resident in Scotland or Ireland may appoint an agent to accept service of a writ of summons within the jurisdiction on his behalf. Service within the jurisdiction upon such an agent is good personal service within the jurisdiction upon the principal. Tharsis Sulphur Co. v. Societe des Metaux (58 L. J. Service out of the Jurisdiction—“Necessary or proper party to an action properly brought.”] —A defendant who is merely a trustee for the plaintiff, and against whom no relief is really sought or right claimed to be enforced, and who would more properly be joined as a co-plaintiff in the action, is not a person against whom the action is “properly brought,” so as to justify an order for service out of the jurisdiction on another defendant as a “necessary or proper party to an action properly brought,” under Order XI, rule 1 (g) of the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883. Deutsche National Bank v. Paul, 67 L. J. Ch. 156; [1898] 1 Ch. 283; 78 L. T. 35; 46 W. R. 243—Stirling, J.

— Insufficient Disclosure of Facts—Discretion of Court.—This was an action brought against four persons for relief in respect of a breach of trust in improper investment of trust funds. The first three defendants were partners in a firm of solicitors practising in Calcutta; the fourth was the legal personal representative of the survivor of the two trustees who were alleged to be responsible for the breach of trust. He was resident in England, and had been duly served. An order had been made for service out of the jurisdiction upon the first three defendants upon affidavits which only stated that the money was in their hands when invested, and the investment was really made by them. The three defendants now moved to discharge the order. It appeared from the evidence on this motion that the defendants’ firm had only acted as solicitors for the trustees, the business having been brought in and entirely conducted by a deceased member of the firm:—Held, that the order for service must be discharged because (1) the affidavits on which the order was obtained did not sufficiently disclose the facts; (2) the first three defendants were not necessary or proper parties to the action; (3) the case was not one in which the Court ought, in the exercise of its discretion, to order the case to be tried in England. Plaskitt v. Eddis, 79 L. T. 136—North, J.

— Injunction.—In an action against M., a vendor of cycles within the jurisdiction, and L. and F., cycle manufacturers in England, for an injunction to restrain the defendants from infringing in Ireland the plaintiffs’ patent, and for damages, it appeared that L. and F. supplied M. with cycles having the article complained of as an infringement attached. The plaintiffs alleged that these cycles were sold by M. as agent for L. and F., while the latter alleged that the cycles were sold by them to M. for resale by him. L. and F. also alleged that the plaintiffs’ invention had been anticipated, and was not novel. M. had been duly served with the writ within the jurisdiction:—Held, that an order giving leave to issue a concurrent writ and to serve it on L. and F. out of the jurisdiction had been rightly made. Joynt v. McCrum, [1899] 1 Ir. R. 217—V.C.

— “Action founded on any breach of contract.”—An action by a mortgagee, framed as a claim for a declaration that the plaintiff is entitled to a charge on property, the subject-matter of the action, that the charge may be enforced by foreclosure, for all necessary accounts and enquiries, and for further and other relief, is not an action “founded on any breach of contract” within the meaning of — Contract to be Performed within Jurisdiction.—In order to constitute a contract one which “according to the terms thereof ought to be performed within the jurisdiction” within Order XI, rule 1 (e), it is not necessary that it should be stated in express terms in the contract that it is to be performed within the jurisdiction, but it is sufficient if it appears from the general terms of the contract, having regard to the surrounding circumstances, that it is to be so performed. The rule laid down to the above effect in Reynolds v. Coleman (56 L. J. Ch. 903; 36 Ch. D. 453), and followed in Rein v. Stein (61 L. J. Q.B. 401; [1892] 1 Q.B. 753), has not been overruled or affected by the decision of the House of Lords in Comber v. Leyland (67 L. J. Q.B. 884; [1898] A.C. 524). Comber v. Leyland (supra) explained. Duval v. Gans & Pick, 73 L. J. K.B. 907; [1904] 2 K.B. 685; 91 L. T. 308; 53 W. R. 106; 20 T. L. R. 705—C.A.

— There cannot be a breach within the jurisdiction of a contract such as to justify service out of the jurisdiction of a writ of summons or notice thereof, under Order XI, rule 1 (e), unless some part of the contract is by its terms to be and can only be performed in the United Kingdom. Comber v. Leyland, 67 L. J. Q.B. 884; [1898] A.C. 524; 79 L. T. 180—H.L. (E.)

— Contract Alleged to be made in Ireland with Agent—Construction.—The plaintiff entered into a contract with a steamship company in Ireland for the through carriage of certain live stock from Londonderry to York. The carriage necessitated the live stock being taken to Liverpool, and thence by two lines of railway to their destination:—Held, on the construction of the contract and on the facts, that there were three independent contracts with the steamship company and the two railway companies, that the contracts with the railway companies were made and to be performed in England, and that consequently an order giving leave to issue and serve a writ out of the jurisdiction in an action for a breach at York of one of these contracts could not be maintained, and should be discharged. M’Gettigan v. North-Eastern Railway, [1899] 2 Ir. R. 375—Q.B. D.

— Determination of Contract by Letter Written and Posted Abroad.—Where a contract, intended to be performed in this country, is determined by a letter written and posted abroad by one of the parties and addressed to the other party in this country, the Court has no power under Order XI, rule 1 (e) to allow service out of the jurisdiction of a writ or notice thereof, in an action founded upon such determination of the contract. Cherry v. Thompson (41 L. J. Q.B. 243; L. R. 7 Q.B. 573), Mathews v. Alexander (Ir. R. 7 C.L. 575), and Hamilton v. Barr (18 L. R. Ir. 297) followed. Holland v. Bennett, 71 L. J. — Agent in England of Foreign Company—

Implied Covenant to Continue Agency.]—The plaintiffs, who carried on business in London, were employed by a Spanish insurance company who had no office in this country to act as their agents for the United Kingdom and for certain other countries, under an agreement made abroad. Under the agreement, which was to continue for five years, the defendants were to put the plaintiffs in credit at a bank in London, into which the plaintiffs were to pay moneys received on behalf of the defendants. The defendants agreed not to undertake any business whatever coming within the jurisdiction of the agreement (with certain exceptions) without the intervention of the plaintiffs, who were to be paid by commission. An arbitration clause provided for the settlement of any dispute by a Swiss tribunal. After the agreement had been in operation for about a year a representative of the defendants came to this country charged with the duty of considering the position of the agency business, and he, while in this country, wrote to the plaintiffs determining the agency:—Held, first, that there was a breach of the agreement within the jurisdiction; and secondly, that the agreement was one “which, according to the terms thereof, ought to be performed within the jurisdiction” within the meaning of Order XI. rule 1 (e), inasmuch as there was an implied obligation on the defendants to abstain from doing anything in this country which would interfere with the performance by the plaintiffs of the agency business. Mutzenbecher v. La Aseguradora Espanola, 75 L. J. K.B. 172; [1906] 1 K.B. 254; 94 L. T. 127; 54 W. R. 207; 22 T. L. R. 175—C.A.

— Prima Facie Evidence of Breach within Jurisdiction.]—Where application is made for leave to serve a writ out of the jurisdiction, or to discharge an order for such service, the Court is not called upon to try the merits of the action, but the affidavits should shew a prima facie cause of action within the jurisdiction, and disclose a substantial question which the plaintiff bona fide desires to try. Sufficient information should be given to make clear the ground on which the Court is asked to proceed. Chemische Fabrik vormals Sandoz v. Badische Anilin- und Soda-Fabrik, 90 L. T. 733; 20 T. L. R. 552—H.L. (E.)

— Contract in England—Charge on Land in Brazil—Some Defendants Properly Served within the Jurisdiction—Foreigner Resident Abroad—“Necessary or proper party.”]—Where an action is properly brought to enforce a contract made in England under which the plaintiffs allege that they are entitled to a charge on land and other property in Brazil and for a receiver, and some of the defendants are properly served within the jurisdiction, to allow service of notice of the writ upon a foreigner resident abroad who is a “necessary or proper party” within the terms of Order XI. rule 1 (g) is not to extend the jurisdiction in personam, but to enable the old jurisdiction to be exercised in a case in which at one time it could not have been exercised by reason of defective rules of procedure. Norris v. Chambres (30 L. J. Ch. 285; 29 Beav. 246; affirmed, 3 De G. F. & J. 588) distinguished. Bawtree v. Great North-West Central Railway (14 Times L. R. 448) applied. Duder v. Amsterdamsch Trustees

— Claim to Injunction as to Something to be Done within Jurisdiction—Libel in Newspaper—Small Circulation of Newspaper within Jurisdiction—Subject of Libel no Longer in Existence—Apprehension of Repetition of Libel.]—Order XI. rule 1 (f), which provides that service out of the jurisdiction of a writ of summons may be allowed whenever any injunction is sought as to anything to be done within the jurisdiction, makes the allowance of such service a matter for the discretion of the Court, and does not entitle a plaintiff to obtain it as of right from the mere fact that his writ claims an injunction; and before allowing such service the Court should be satisfied not only that the plaintiff has a good cause of action for an injunction, but also that there is a reasonable probability that he will obtain an injunction. Watson v. “Daily Record” (Glasgow), 76 L. J. K.B. 448; [1907] 1 K.B. 853; 96 L. T. 485; 23 T. L. R. 333—C.A.

The plaintiffs were a firm of soap manufacturers domiciled in England, and it had been proposed that they and other firms should amalgamate and form what was called a “soap trust.” The defendants were a newspaper company having their registered office in Scotland, and the circulation of their newspaper was confined to Scotland, except that a few dozen copies were on sale in the extreme north of England. The defendants in their newspaper severely criticised the proposed soap trust and the firms concerned in it, and in two issues of the newspaper they published statements about the plaintiffs which were alleged to be libellous. The proposed soap trust had since been abandoned, and had ceased to be a topic of public interest, and the defendants stated that they had no intention of repeating these statements. The plaintiffs brought an action for libel against the defendants, claiming in the writ damages and an injunction, and applied, under Order XI. rule 1 (f), for leave to issue the writ against the defendants and serve it upon them out of the jurisdiction:—Held, that, in these circumstances, the Court, in the exercise of its discretion under the rule, ought not to grant the application. De Bernales v. New York Herald (62 L. J. Q.B. 385; [1893] 2 Q.B. 97n.), observations explained. Id.

— Patent—Infringement—Foreign Manufacturers—Soliciting Orders in England—Using, Exercising, or Vending Invention—Prima Facie Evidence of Breach within the Jurisdiction.]—A foreign company owning English letters patent for the manufacture of certain articles commenced an action against another company, also domiciled abroad, for alleged infringement of those letters patent. Subsequently the plaintiffs obtained an order for service upon the defendants out of the jurisdiction. That order the defendants moved to discharge. It was admitted that the defendants had by their agents solicited from persons in England orders for articles to be executed and delivered abroad; but it was contended that this did not amount to using, exercising, or vending the invention claimed by the plaintiffs’ letters patent:—Held, that the evidence before the Court shewed information coming from perfectly trustworthy persons which pointed to infringement by the defendants of the plaintiffs' letters patent within the jurisdiction; that the Legislature had not imposed upon the Court the duty of trying the action before giving leave for service on the defendants out of the jurisdiction in order to have the parties before the Court; that if there was prima facie evidence the necessary conditions had been fulfilled that there had been a breach within the jurisdiction; and that there were sufficient facts to raise the question, which the Court was not bound at present to finally decide—namely, that the acts of the defendants amounted to infringements. Badische Anilin- und Soda-Fabrik v. Chemische Fabrik vormals Sandoz, 88 L. T. 490—C.A.

— Action against Owners of English Tug and Owners of Foreign Tow—Service Abroad on Owners of Tow—"Necessary or proper party" to Action.—A collision occurred on the high seas between an English steamship and a French barque, which was in tow of an English steam-tug. There was no collision between the steamship and the tug. The owners of the steamship commenced an action in England against the owners of the tug and the owners of the French vessel, and duly served the owners of the tug within the jurisdiction:—Held, that leave could be given to the plaintiffs under Order XI. rule 1 (g) to issue a concurrent writ against, and serve notice thereof out of the jurisdiction upon, the owners of the French vessel as "proper parties" to the action within the meaning of the rule. The Duc D'Aumale (No. 1), 72 L. J. P. 11; [1903] P. 18; 87 L. T. 674; 51 W. R. 332; 9 Asp. M.C. 359—C.A.

— Action to Enforce Charging Order.—Leave to issue a writ for service out of the jurisdiction, under Order XI. rule 1 (e), cannot be granted in an action to enforce a charging order on shares by sale. Moritz v. Stephan (36 W. R. 779) approved. Kolchmann v. Meurice, 72 L. J. K.B. 289; [1903] 1 K.B. 534; 88 L. T. 369; 51 W. R. 356—C.A.

— Enticing Defendant within the Jurisdiction—Setting Aside Service.—If a person has been induced by fraud of any kind to come within the jurisdiction for the concealed purpose of serving him with a writ in an action, the Court will set aside the service as an abuse of the process of the Court. Where an invitation was issued to the defendant, who was a foreigner resident abroad and the general manager abroad of an English company, by the directors of the company to come within the jurisdiction with a real intention to discuss certain matters in difference between them and the defendant, although the directors also intended to serve him with a writ, and the defendant came and was served with a writ, the Court refused to set aside the service. Watkins v. North American Land and Timber Co., 20 T. L. R. 534—H.L. (E.)

Default in Appearance—Amendment of Writ by Addition of Plaintiff—Filing in Central Office—Personal Service—Notice of Motion for Judgment.—There is nothing in the Rules of Court which requires an amended writ of summons to be personally re-served on a non-appearing defendant who was personally served with the original writ. The amended writ therefore can prima facie be filed in the Central Office against a non-appearing defendant under Order LXVII. rule 4, without any personal re-service on him, but the Court in each case has a discretion to require stricter service, either as a term of granting leave to amend or as a condition of giving judgment by default, if the nature of the amendment is such as to raise a new case against the non-appearing defendant. Hartley, In re; Nuttall v. Whitaker ([1891] 2 Ch. 121), Gee v. Bell (56 L. J. Ch. 718; 35 Ch. D. 160), Webster v. Myer (54 L. J. Q.B. 101; 14 Q.B. D. 231), Trilling v. Blythe (68 L. J. Q.B. 350; [1899] 1 Q.B. 557), and The Cassiopeia (48 L. J. P. 89; 4 P. D. 188) discussed and explained. Jamaica Railway v. Colonial Bank, 74 L. J. Ch. 410; [1905] 1 Ch. 677; 92 L. T. 548; 53 W. 3. ORIGINATING SUMMONS.

Benefit of Written Contract and Option to Repurchase Vested in Trustee for Bankrupt—"Written instrument"—"Interested."—A summons was taken out under Order LIV.A by the trustee of a bankrupt who claimed an interest under a contract of sale of certain real estate and option of repurchase conferred on the bankrupt, asking certain questions which involved the construction of the written document:—Held, first, that the contract was an instrument within the meaning of the rule; secondly, having regard to the decision in Buckland v. Papillon (15 L. T. 378), that the plaintiff was a person interested within the meaning of the rule; thirdly, that the scope of the rule was not limited to cases where an action might be brought, but that the limit was the discretion of the Court on the question of construction provided by rule 4; and fourthly, that, having regard to Palmer v. Johnson (51 L. T. 211), the execution of the conveyance which had taken place did not destroy the right of repurchase contained in the contract. Mason v. Schuppisser, 81 L. T. 147—Stirling, J.

Construction of Agreement—Question of Fact.—On a summons under Order LIV.A to determine whether under the description of part of an estate mentioned in an agreement for the distribution of the estate the plaintiff was entitled to a right of way over a private road,—Held, that the Court was not precluded from determining this question of fact by reason of the procedure being under Order LIV.A. Nicholls v. Nicholls, 81 L. T. 811—Stirling, J.

Construction of Document—Questions of Fact—Jurisdiction.—An originating summons under Order LIV.A, rule 1, is not the proper mode of procedure in a case where questions both of fact and of construction of a written instrument arise, and where the decision of the questions of construction will not necessarily put an end to the litigation. Lewis v. Green, 74 L. J. Ch. 632; [1905] 2 Ch. 340; 93 L. T. 303; 54 W. R. 93—Warrington, J.

Trustee Convicted of Felony—Removal from Trusteeship.—The Court has jurisdiction on an application by originating summons to make an order for the removal from the trust of a trustee who has been convicted of felony but who is unwilling to retire. Danson, In re, 48 W. R. 73—Byrne, J.

Question Arising in the Administration of Estate.—A supported and took care of B, an aged relative, for some years, during which time she received income of B to an amount exceeding the expenditure upon her. After the death of A and B,—Held, that the question whether A's executors were bound to account to B's administrator for the income so received was not a question arising in the administration of A's estate within Order LV. rule 4 (g) [English Order LV. rule 3 (g)]. Herrick v. Cooper, [1899] 1 Ir. R. 321—V.C.

Covenant to Pay Annuity—Evidence that Annuitant is Alive—Jurisdiction.—The Court has no jurisdiction under Order LIV. A to make a declaration on an originating summons as to what evidence (if any) ought to be furnished to a person liable to pay an annuity to shew that the annuitant is alive. Hunt v. Hunt, 97 L. T. 822—C.A.

4. JOINDER OF CAUSES OF ACTION.

Joinder of Plaintiffs—Different Causes of Action—Right to Relief Arising out of Same Transaction or Series of Transactions.—The plaintiff in an action brought by him on his own behalf and also on behalf of himself and all other the shareholders of a company against the directors of the company, the company being added as a defendant, alleged in his statement of claim that the directors, intending by deceit and fraud to cheat such members of the public as could be induced to purchase shares in the company at prices beyond their real value, had declared and paid a dividend of 100 per cent. on the shares of the company; that such dividend was not paid out of the profits of the company, nor did the profits admit of such payment, but was paid out of capital; that the plaintiff, believing that the dividend was paid out of profits, purchased shares in the company, and in consequence suffered damage. The plaintiff then, in the statement of claim, repeated on behalf of himself and the other shareholders of the company the statement as to the payment of the dividend out of capital, and alleged that such payment was ultra vires and illegal. The plaintiff claimed—first, on his own behalf, damages against the directors in respect of loss occasioned to him by their deceit and fraud; and secondly, on behalf of himself and the other shareholders, a declaration that the declaration of the dividend of 100 per cent. was ultra vires and illegal, and that the directors were liable to make good to the company all moneys paid out of its capital.—Held, that in substance the action was brought by two different plaintiffs in respect of two different causes of action, and that the right to relief in the two cases did not arise out of the same transaction or series of transactions within the meaning of Order XVI. rule 1, and therefore the claims could not be joined in one action under the provisions of the rule. Stroud v. Lawson, 67 L. J. Q.B. 718;

[1898] 2 Q.B. 44; 78 L. T. 729; 46 W. R. 626—C.A.

Claim for Damages—Action of Conspiracy—Separate Defendants Joining Conspiracy at Different Dates.—Where an action is brought against a number of defendants jointly for an illegal conspiracy, the fact that separate defendants joined the conspiracy at different times is no ground for objection that the action is wrongfully constituted in law, as joining separate causes of action against separate defendants, there being in substance only one cause of action—namely, the conspiracy to injure. O'Keefe v. Walsh, [1903] 2 Ir. R. 681—C.A.

Deceit—Conspiracy.—A plaintiff joined two causes of action founded on deceit and a statutory liability under the Directors' Liability Act, 1890, against three defendants, with a separate cause of action founded on conspiracy against two only of such defendants:—Held, on the authority of Sadler v. Great Western Railway (65 L. J. Q.B. 462; [1896] A.C. 450), that such a joinder of separate causes of action was inadmissible. Gower v. Couldridge, 67 L. J. Q.B. 251; [1898] 1 Q.B. 348; 77 L. T. 707; 46 W. R. 214—C.A.

Recovery of Land—Joinder of other Causes of Action—Joinder of Plaintiff after Issue of Writ—Leave of Court—Irregularity—Waiver.—Where the indorsement on a writ of summons is irregular by reason of a claim for the recovery of land being joined with other causes of action without the leave of a Court or Judge, contrary to the provisions of Order XVIII. rule 2, leave to amend the writ by adding a plaintiff so as to validate the claims may be given after the issue of the writ; and, further, such irregularity is capable under Order LXX. of being waived by a defendant. Lloyd v. Great Western and Metropolitan Dairies, 76 L. J. K.B. 924; [1907] 2 K. B. 727; 97 L. T. 384; 23 T. L. R. 570—C.A.

Allegation of Joint Tort—Alternative Allegation of Separate Torts.—The plaintiff was injured by a collision between two vehicles, and brought an action against the respective owners. The statement of claim alleged that the injury to the plaintiff was caused by the joint negligence of the two defendants, and it also alleged in the alternative negligence on the part of each defendant causing the injury. No application was made to strike out either of the defendants, and the case went to trial:—Held, that after verdict and judgment it was too late to object to the jurisdiction to try the action on the ground that torts were alleged severally against the two defendants. Bullock v. London General Omnibus Co., 76 L. J. Q.B. 127; [1907] 1 K.B. 264; 95 L. T. 905; 23 T. L. R. 62—C.A.

After the alteration of rule 1 of Order XVI. following on the decision in Smurthwaite v. Hannay (63 L. J. Q.B. 737; [1894] A.C. 494) the joinder, in an action of tort, of defendants against whom the right to any relief, in respect of or arising out of the same transaction, is claimed, whether jointly, severally, or in the alternative, is authorised by rule 4 of the Order. Sanderson v. Blyth Theatre Co. (72 L. J. K.B. 761; [1903] 2 K.B. 533) applied.

Sadler v. Great Western Railway (65 L. J. Q. B. 462; [1896] A.C. 450) distinguished. Ib.

5. PLEADINGS AND PARTICULARS.

Statement of Claim—Filing—Amendment of Claim on Writ—Necessity for Re-filing Statement of Claim.]—A writ of summons was issued indorsed with a claim for an injunction to restrain a breach of a restrictive covenant. The defendant did not enter an appearance, and in consequence a statement of claim was filed under Order LXVII. rule 4. Subsequently the indorsement on the writ was amended, and the writ as amended with a copy of the statement of claim was personally served on the defendant, but the statement of claim, in which no alteration had been made, was not re-filed:—Held, that the service of the amended writ after filing the statement of claim was of no avail, and that the plaintiffs must file another statement of claim before moving for judgment in default of appearance. Southall Development Syndicate v. Dunsdon, 96 L. T. 109—Kekewich, J.

Judgment Obtained by Fraud—Fresh Action to Set Aside.]—As a general rule, an action to set aside a judgment as having been obtained by fraud ought not to be stopped summarily under Order XXV. rule 4. Wyatt v. Palmer, 68 L. J. Q.B. 709; [1899] 2 Q.B. 106; 80 L.T. 639; 47 W. R. 549—C.A.

An action will lie to set aside a judgment on the ground of its having been obtained by fraud, although such judgment was obtained by default; but, inasmuch as a shorter method of doing it in chambers in such a case has been provided by Order XXVII. rule 15, it may be a question whether a plaintiff who adopts the more dilatory method of an action will not be put upon terms. Ib.

Striking Out.]—An application to strike out a statement of claim under Order XXV. rule 4, on the ground that it discloses no reasonable cause of action, is only appropriate to cases which are plain and obvious, so that any Master or Judge can say at once that the statement of claim as it stands is insufficient, even if proved, to entitle the plaintiff to the relief he claims. Hubbuck v. Wilkinson, Heywood & Clark, 68 L. J. Q.B. 34; [1899] 1 Q.B. 86; 79 L. T. 429—C.A.

Disclosing no Reasonable Cause of Action—Gaming Transactions.]—In an action to recover a sum of money the defendant, before putting in a statement of defence, applied to strike out the statement of claim indorsed on the writ as disclosing no reasonable cause of action, and to dismiss the action as being frivolous and vexatious, and made an affidavit that the claim was in respect of bets made between him and the plaintiff. The plaintiff admitted that the transactions were gaming transactions:—Held, that the action, being one which was forbidden by the Gaming Acts, ought not to be allowed to proceed. Kershaw v. Sievier, 21 T. L. R. 40—C.A.

“Reasonable cause of action”—Agreement not to be Performed within a Year—

Statute of Frauds.]—In an action brought upon an alleged breach of agreement, it appeared from the statement of claim that the agreement was one which was not to be performed within one year from the making thereof, but there was nothing in the statement of claim or the particulars to indicate the existence of any memorandum or note of the agreement in writing to satisfy the requirements of section 4 of the Statute of Frauds. Upon an application by the defendant that the statement of claim should be struck out under Order XXV. rule 4, —Held, that the statement of claim disclosed a reasonable cause of action, and therefore ought not to be struck out. Fraser v. Pape, 91 L. T. 340; 20 T. L. R. 798—C.A.

Proceeding in Lieu of Demurrer—Right to Begin.]—On a proceeding in lieu of demurrer under Order XXV. rule 2, the party who by his pleading raises the point of law has the right to begin. Stevens v. Choun, [1901] 1 Ch. 894; 84 L. T. 796—Farwell, J.

Defence—Case set up by Plaintiff—Discovery—Privilege—Documents Relating Solely to Defendant's Case.]—Where a defendant by his defence pleads an independent transaction which would defeat the plaintiff's claim, such as a plea of purchase for value without notice, without any particulars, the plaintiff is entitled to particulars of the alleged transaction, though the documents carrying out the transaction are privileged from discovery as relating solely to the defendant's title; but the plaintiff is not entitled to inspection of the documents. Milbank v. Milbank, 69 L. J. Ch. 287; [1900] 1 Ch. 376; 82 L. T. 63; 48 W. R. 339—C.A.

Per VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—Particulars under the Judicature Act are allowed as amendments of the pleadings, and, semble, the particulars asked for would amount to a pleading within Order XXXI. rule 15. Ib.

Striking Out—Frivolous and Vexatious—Abuse of Process of Court.]—In an action for specific performance of an agreement to purchase leasehold property, the Court, upon the pleadings and correspondence, having come to the conclusion that the defence was a dishonest one and put in for the purpose of gaining time, ordered it to be struck out under Order XXV. rule 4, and gave immediate judgment for the plaintiffs. Mackellar v. Hornsey, 49 W. R. 301—Buckley, J.

Abuse of Process of Court—Admission of Liability—Payment into Court with Denial of Liability.]—Where the defendant in an action delivers to the plaintiff a letter containing an admission of his liability, and along with it a formal defence of payment into Court with a denial of liability, the defence will, in the absence of an order of the Court specially authorising it, be struck out as being embarrassing and an abuse of the process of the Court. Critchell v. London and South-Western Railway, 76 L. J. K.B. 422; [1907] 1 K.B. 860; 96 L. T. 603—C.A.

Motion for Judgment in Default of Defence—Joinder of Motions.]—Where a plaintiff moves under Order XXXI. rule 21 to have a defendant's defence struck out for non-compliance with an order to answer interrogatories, there is no objection to his joining with such motion a motion for judgment as upon his statement of claim in default of defence, but such motion for judgment must be set down and two separate orders should be made. Salomon v. Hole, 53 W. R. 588—Warrington, J.

Counterclaim—Action by Trustee—Unliquidated Claim by Defendants against Cestui que Trust—Defence.—In an action by a trustee a counterclaim by the defendant against the cestui que trust for an unliquidated amount may be relied upon as a defence to the plaintiff's claim or part of it. Banks v. Jarvis, 72 L. J. K.B. 267; [1903] 1 K.B. 549; 88 L. T. 20; 51 W. R. 412—D.

Reply—Set-off and Counterclaim in Reply.—A plaintiff, against whom a defendant by counterclaim alleges a cause of action the existence of which the plaintiff denies in his reply, may in the reply, alternatively, counterclaim against the defendant on the footing that the cause of action exists, though it arose, if at all, before the date of the writ. Toke v. Andrews (51 L. J. Q.B. 281; 8 Q.B. D. 428) followed. Gibbs v. Neville, 69 L. J. Q.B. 514; [1900] 2 Q.B. 181; 82 L. T. 446; 48 W. R. 532—C.A.

Co-defendants—Judgment by Consent against one Defendant—Merger of Cause of Action.—A judgment obtained by consent against one of two co-defendants in an action where each defendant enters an appearance is a bar to further proceedings against the other defendant. Observations of BOWEN, L.J., in Hodgson, In re; Beckett v. Ramsdale (55 L. J. Ch. 241; 31 Ch. D. 177), adopted and applied. M'Leod v. Power, 67 L. J. Ch. 551; [1898] 2 Ch. 295; 79 L. T. 67; 47 W. R. 74—Byrne, J.

If a defendant wishes to take advantage of his co-defendant having consented to judgment he ought to plead this fact. Id.

Particulars—Payment into Court by Defendants—Marine Insurance—Action brought by Underwriters for Return of Claims Paid on Policies—Alleged Fraud.—An action was brought by a large number of underwriters to recover from their assured—(a) damages for conspiracy and fraud, and (b) the amounts of claims paid by them on policies of marine insurance in consequence of the alleged fraudulent misrepresentations of the assured over a period of many years. The assured in their defence denied liability and brought into Court sums of money specified in a schedule and allocated to the various underwriters who were suing. On the underwriters applying for particulars of the items so brought into Court, Held, that the underwriters were entitled to particulars. Boulton v. Houlder (No. 1), 9 Com. Cas. 75—C.A.

Reasonable Ground for Belief—Directors' Liability.—Where to an action claiming compensation under the Directors' Liability Act, 1890, in respect of alleged false statements in a prospectus, the defendant pleads that he had reasonable ground for believing the statements to be true, he may be ordered to give particulars of the ground of such belief. Alman v. Oppert, 70 L. J. K.B. 745; [1901] 2 K.B. 576; 84 L. T. 828; 8 Manson, 316—C.A.

VOL. II.

Contributory Negligence and Inevitable Accident.—Where, in an action for negligence, the defendants pleaded in general terms inevitable accident and contributory negligence, the Court ordered particulars. Martin v. M'Taggart, [1906] 2 Ir. R. 120—K.B. D.

Claim to Ownership without Setting out Title—Embarrassing Statement of Claim.—The plaintiffs, being owners of a mill, claimed to be owners of a watercourse, alleging that by a deed of 1805 their predecessors in title became possessed of the mill and watercourse, and that the watercourse had ever since belonged to the mill. The defendants, before delivering their defence, applied for further and better particulars on the ground that the plaintiffs ought to set out their title, and that the statement of claim was embarrassing:—Held, that no further particulars were necessary for pleading, and that the statement of claim was not embarrassing. Pledge v. Pomfret, 74 L. J. Ch. 357; 92 L. T. 560—Joyce, J.

Action for Libel.—See DEFAMATION.

Trespass on Land—Right of Way—Presumption of Lost Grant—Date of Lost Deed—Parties Concurring in Grant.—In claiming a right under the presumption of a lost grant it is not necessary to allege the date or other particulars of the grant, but if the claimant relies on it as having been made before or after any particular date he must say so definitely. Hendy v. Stephenson (10 East, 55) not followed. Palmer v. Guadagni, 75 L. J. Ch. 721; [1906] 2 Ch. 494; 95 L. T. 258—Swinfen Eady, J.

Foreign Government—Plaintiff—Submission to Jurisdiction—Concession Funds—Action to Appoint New Trustee—Counterclaim for Moneys Due under Concession.—A foreign sovereign who brings an action against his concessionnaires for the mere appointment of a new trustee of funds subject to the trusts of the concession does not thereby submit to the jurisdiction quoad a counterclaim for moneys payable under the concession, and such a counterclaim will be struck out on his application. Held, further, as a matter of discretion in the particular case, that, independently of the question of jurisdiction, a counterclaim so foreign to the subject-matter of the action must be struck out under Order XIX. rule 3. South African Republic v. Transvaal Northern Railway, 67 L. J. Ch. 92; [1898] 1 Ch. 190; 77 L. T. 555; 46 W. R. 151—North, J.

6. INTERLOCUTORY PROCEEDINGS.

(a) Summons for Directions.

Foreclosure.—The Court has jurisdiction to make an order for foreclosure in chambers on a summons under Order XV. Whether there is jurisdiction to make the usual order for accounts and enquiries, foreclosure or sale, on the hearing of a summons for directions under Order XXX., quære; but if such an order is made without objection on the hearing of a summons for directions under that Order, it cannot subsequently be set aside solely on the ground of want of jurisdiction. Horton v. Bosson, 80 L. T. 435—C.A.

Notice of Application—Security for Costs after Judgment—Proceedings before Official Referee—Jurisdiction.]—A summons for directions taken out under Order XXX. of the Rules of the Supreme Court ceases to operate with the trial of the action, so that an application for security for costs for subsequent proceedings—for example, the taking of an account before an official referee ordered at such trial—must be made by separate summons, and cannot be made on notice under rule 5 of Order XXX. Brown v. Haig, 74 L. J. Ch. 591; [1905] 2 Ch. 379; 93 L. T. 99; 54 W. R. 26—Kekewich, J.

But the Court has jurisdiction under Order LXV. rule 6 to order security for such costs in a proper case on a proper application. Ib.

Application by Defendant on Notice under Summons—Order Striking out Statement of Claim and Dismissing Action—“Interlocutory matter or thing.”]—When a summons for directions has been taken out, an order striking out the statement of claim in an action, on the ground that it discloses no reasonable cause of action and dismissing the action as frivolous, may be made in chambers on the application of a defendant, by notice under the summons for further directions, inasmuch as such application has reference to an “interlocutory matter or thing” within Order XXX. rule 5, that rule not being confined to the special matters mentioned in rule 2 of the same order. Pepperell v. Hird, 71 L. J. Ch. 282; [1902] 1 Ch. 477; 50 W. R. 491—Byrne, J.

No Summons for Directions—Statement of Claim—Judgment in Default of Defence.]—K. commenced an action against C. for an injunction. C. appeared. K. having no motion obtained an interim injunction, delivered a statement of claim to C. without taking out a summons for directions as required by Order XXX. rule 1 (b). C. failed to deliver a defence, and K. moved for judgment in default of defence, under Order XXVII. rule 11. At the hearing of the motion C. contended that it should be dismissed as irregular, since it and the delivery of the statement of claim were steps in the action, and they were taken without first taking out a summons for directions:—Held, that C. was not entitled to have the motion dismissed. K.’s procedure was irregular, but C.’s only remedies were to take out a summons to have the action dismissed under Order XXX. rule 8, or to move to have the notice of motion set aside as irregular. Kemp v. Colman, 80 L. T. 54—D.

(b) Ordinary Summons.

Summons to Vary Certificate—Decision of Judge in Chambers.]—Upon a summons to vary the certificate of a Master in respect of an item which the Judge in chambers has adjudicated upon, it is open to the Judge before whom the summons comes, in open Court, to reconsider and reverse the previous decision in chambers. Howlings v. Graham, 70 L. J. Ch. 568; 84 L. T. 497—Joyce, J.

Adjournment into Court—Costs.]—A party to a summons in chambers in the Chancery Division has a right to have the summons adjourned into Court, but his right, in cases where the rules do not make an order by the Judge in person necessary, is subject to the discretion of the Court as to the costs of the adjournment, which will not be exercised against him merely because his application has failed. Lloyd’s Bank v. Princess Royal Colliery Co. (No. 2), 82 L. T. 559; 43 W. R. 427—Byrne, J.

Summons to Enforce Award—Service on Foreigner out of the Jurisdiction.]—See ARBITRATION.

(c) Summary Judgment.

Order XIV.—Judgment Signed against One Defendant.]—Rule 5 of Order XIV. does not apply to the case of an action against two persons in the alternative, where one or other of them only can be made liable, so that if judgment is signed against one, the rule does not enable a plaintiff to proceed against the other. Morel v. Westmorland (Earl), 73 L. J. K.B. 93; [1904] A.C. 11; 89 L. T. 702; 52 W. R. 353; 20 T. L. R. 38—H.L. (E.)

—Leave to Defend—Payment into Court.]—Judgment should only be ordered under Order XIV. where, assuming all the facts in favour of the defendant, they do not amount to a defence in law. Jacobs v. Booth’s Distillery Co., 85 L. T. 262; 50 W. R. 49—H.L. (E.)

Where there is a triable issue, though it may appear that the defence is not likely to succeed, the defendant should not be shut out from laying his defence before the Court either by having judgment entered against him, or by being put under terms to pay money into Court as a condition of obtaining leave to defend. Ib.

—Leave to Defend upon Defendant giving Security to Satisfaction of Master—Decision of Master as to Sufficiency of Security Tendered—Appeal from Master.]—Where leave to defend is given under Order XIV. rule 6, upon security being given by the defendant to the satisfaction of the Master, no appeal lies from the decision of the Master as to the sufficiency of the security tendered. Hoare v. Morshead, 72 L. J. K.B. 724; [1903] 2 K.B. 359; 89 L. T. 125; 52 W. R. 87—C.A.

—Leave to Sign Judgment—Payment into Court—Receiving Order—Secured Creditor.]—Money paid into Court under an order under Order XIV. giving the defendant leave to defend upon the terms that the plaintiff may sign final judgment if the money is not paid in is money paid in as security to abide the event of the action. Accordingly, if the defendant files a bankruptcy petition before the event is determined, the trustee in his bankruptcy is not entitled to payment out of the money. Ford, In re; MacLister, ex parte, 69 L. J. Q.B. 690; [1900] 2 Q.B. 211; 82 L. T. 625; 43 W. R. 638; 7 Manson, 281—Wright, J.

—Improper and Vexatious Action—Stay of Execution—Mortgage—Foreclosure Action—Second Action for Principal and Interest while

First Action Pending—Application for Judgment under Order XIV.]—It is an abuse of the process of the Court for a mortgagee to commence an action in the King's Bench Division against his mortgagor to recover the amount of the principal and interest due under the covenant in the mortgage deed while there is still pending in the Chancery Division a foreclosure action between the same parties in respect of the same mortgage deed, although the writ in this latter action contains no claim for payment of principal and interest. Poulett (Earl) v. Hill (Viscount) (62 L. J. Ch. 466; [1893] 1 Ch. 277) followed. Williams v. Hunt, 74 L. J. K.B. 364; [1905] 1 K.B. 512; 92 L. T. 192—C.A.

— Money-lender—Action to Enforce Security—Interest Charged Prima Facie Excessive.]—In an action by a money-lender to enforce a security taken in respect of money lent and interest thereon, it appeared, upon an application by the plaintiff for final judgment under Order XIV., that the interest charged on the loan was prima facie excessive:—Held, that the action was not within the operation of Order XIV. since it involved a further enquiry, which could not be made upon that application, as to whether the transaction was harsh and unconscionable within the meaning of section 1, subsection 1 of the Money-lenders Act, 1900, and the defendant entitled to relief under that Act. Wells v. Allott, 73 L. J. K.B. 1023; [1904] 2 K.B. 842; 91 L. T. 749; 53 W. R. 195; 20 T. L. R. 694—C.A.

— Excessive Bonus—Harsh and Unconscionable Transaction.]—The plaintiff, who was a money-lender, lent to the defendant at various times sums of money amounting in all to 940*l.*, which, with a cash bonus of 100*l.* agreed to be paid to the plaintiff, made a debt of 1,040*l.* Upon each advance the defendant gave to the plaintiff a bonus in the shape of shares in a company. In this way the plaintiff received from the defendant shares to the value of 1,800*l.*, and he also held an undertaking to deliver a number of other shares. The defendant brought an action in the Chancery Division to have these transactions re-opened, and the plaintiff sued in the King's Bench Division to recover the 1,040*l.* Upon an application in this latter action for judgment under Order XIV., the defendant alleged that the transactions were harsh and unconscionable and that he was entitled to relief under the Money-lenders Act, 1900. The Master and Judge gave the defendant leave to defend upon bringing 1,040*l.* into Court:—Held, that the case was not one for Order XIV., and that the defendant must have unconditional leave to defend. Dott v. Bonnard, 21 T. L. R. 166—C.A.

— Action on Foreign Judgment—Substantial Question for Trial.]—Leave should not be given to sign judgment under Order XIV. unless it is clear that there is no real substantial question to be tried. Therefore when, in an action on a foreign judgment, the defendant made an affidavit that the judgment had been obtained by fraud,—Held, that the plaintiff should not be allowed to sign judgment under Order XIV. Codd v. Delap, 92 L. T. 510—H.L. (E.)

— Action Referred to Master with Consent of Parties—Appeal from Master to Court of Appeal.]—No appeal from the decision of a Master, to whom an action has been referred with the consent of the parties, under Order XIV. rule 7, lies direct to the Court of Appeal. Whether any appeal lies to the Divisional Court in such a case—q.v. Fraser v. Fraser (No. 1), 73 L. J. K.B. 6; [1904] 1 K.B. 56; 89 L. T. 491; 52 W. R. 147; 20 T. L. R. 54—C.A.

— Appeal to Divisional Court.]—Where an action in the King's Bench Division has been referred to a Master, with the consent of the parties, under Order XIV. rule 7, a motion lies to a Divisional Court, under Order XL. rules 6 and 6a, to set aside the judgment which he has directed to be entered, and to enter some other judgment. Fraser v. Fraser (No. 2), 74 L. J. K.B. 183; [1905] 1 K.B. 368; 92 L. T. 341; 53 W. R. 310; 21 T. L. R. 186—C.A.

Reference to Master by Consent—Power to Give Costs.]—See Haycocks, Lim. v. Mulholland, 73 L. J. K.B. 125.

Writ Specially Indorsed—Ejectment for Non-payment of Rent—Motion for Final Judgment—Amendment of Indorsement.]—In an action to recover possession of land from J. C. for non-payment of rent, the indorsement of the writ stated that the plaintiff's claim was to recover possession of No. 13 M. Square, Dublin, and that one year's rent was due—90*l.* On motion for final judgment, leave was given to the plaintiff to amend the writ and to sign final judgment for recovery of possession, with costs of the action and of the motion. The indorsement as amended stated that the plaintiff claimed to recover possession of No. 13 M. Square, Dublin, held from the plaintiff's predecessor under lease dated October 13, 1882, made between W. N. G. and E. C., at the rent of 90*l.*, that one year's rent was due, of which the particulars were given, and that all the lessor's interest was vested in the plaintiff:—Held, that the writ as amended was not specially indorsed, and also that the plaintiff should not have been allowed, at the time of moving for judgment, to amend so as to change an ordinary writ into a specially indorsed writ. Guinness v. Caraher, [1900] 2 Ir. R. 505—C.A.

(d) Motion.

Exhibits to Affidavit in Support—Service of Copies of Exhibits.]—Upon a motion for attachment it is not within the terms of Order LII. rule 4 necessary in all cases to serve, together with the notice of motion and the copy of the affidavit upon which the motion is founded, copies of the exhibits to the affidavit so as to impose upon a moving party not serving copies of the exhibits the absolute result of having his motion dismissed for irregularity. Carter v. Roberts, 72 L. J. Ch. 655; [1903] 2 Ch. 312; 89 L. T. 239; 51 W. R. 520—Byrne, J.

A party, however, moving to attach, who did not furnish copies of such exhibits as were reasonably necessary to enable the respondent to understand and know the nature of the evidence that would be brought against him, would be in peril of having his motion dismissed on the ground that he had not sufficiently brought the matter before the respondent. Hutchings, In re (22 L. J. N.C. 174;

W. N. (1887), p. 254), distinguished. Rosenbaum v. Belson (86 L. J. N.C. 309; W. N. (1901), p. 124) commented on. Ib.

Undertaking—Remedy for Breach—Committal or Attachment—Service of Order containing Undertaking.]—The proper method of enforcing an undertaking given in Court, whether affirmative or negative, is committal, and not attachment. Notice of motion for committal must be personally served; but service of the order containing the undertaking is not necessary. D. v. A. & Co., 69 L. J. Ch. 382; [1900] 1 Ch. 484; 82 L. T. 47; 48 W. R. 429—Cozens-Hardy, J.

(e) Short Cause.

Affidavits in Support.]—In actions coming on as short causes without pleadings or notice of motion, copies of the affidavits in support should be left with the papers for the use of the Judge. Church Stretton Mineral Water Co., In re, 52 W. R. 375—Byrne, J.

Setting Down for Trial—Motion for Judgment.]—A debenture-holder's action on a summons for directions had been ordered by a Master to be set down for trial without pleadings to be heard as a short cause; judgment to be applied for on minutes; the evidence to be taken by affidavit. Two days' notice of motion was served on the defendants, and an objection was taken at the hearing that this was not in compliance with the Master's order, and that ten days' notice of trial ought to have been given under Order XXXVI. rule 14:—Held, that the order was defective in that it did not give the plaintiff leave to serve notice of trial, but, assuming that leave to serve such notice was implied in the order, it remained that the order was to set down the action for trial, and that ten days' notice must be given. Pringle & Co., In re; Pawnall v. Pringle & Co., 89 L. T. 743—Buckley, J.

(f) Payment into and out of Court.

(i.) Payment into Court.

Admission of Liability—Defamation—Death of Defendant—Abatement of Action.]—In an action of libel the defendant, without denying liability, paid a sum of money into Court, saying that the amount so paid was sufficient to satisfy the plaintiff's claim. While the money was still in Court, and before trial of the action, the defendant died. The legal personal representatives of the defendant made an application by way of originating summons for an order as to whom the money in Court should be paid:—Held, that the Court had jurisdiction to declare to whom the money should be paid, and that, under the circumstances, it should be paid to the plaintiff. Brown v. Feeney, 75 L. J. K.B. 494; [1906] 1 K.B. 563; 94 L. T. 460; 54 W. R. 445; 22 T. L. R. 893—C.A.

Defamation—Death of Plaintiff—Abatement of Action—Payment out of Court.]—In an action of libel the defendant pleaded an apology in mitigation of damages under section 1 of the Libel Act, 1843, and, admitting liability, paid a sum of money into Court, saying that the amount so paid was sufficient to satisfy the plaintiff's claim. While the money was still in Court, and before trial of the action, the plaintiff died. The defendant made an application by way of originating summons for an order that the money should be paid out of Court to him; and there was a cross-application by the personal representatives of the plaintiff for payment out to them. The Judge having decided that, under the circumstances, the money should be paid out to the personal representatives of the plaintiff, the Court declined to interfere with the exercise of his discretion. Brown v. Feeney (75 L. J. K.B. 494; [1906] 1 K.B. 563) applied. Maarwell v. Wolseley (Viscount), 76 L. J. K.B. 163; [1907] 1 K.B. 274; 96 L. T. 4; 23 T. L. R. 157—C.A.

Mention of Amount Paid in to Jury.]—In an action for personal injuries the defendants admitted liability and paid a sum into Court:—Held, that the amount paid in should not be mentioned to the jury. Jaques v. South Essex Waterworks Co., 20 T. L. R. 563—Lord Alverstone, C.J.

Counterclaim—Taking Money Out.]—In an action for a liquidated demand, brought by plaintiffs carrying on business outside the jurisdiction, the defendants admitted the claim and lodged in Court the full amount thereof, but set up a counterclaim for damages to a greater amount. The Court granted an application under Order XXII. rule 6 for an order restraining the plaintiffs from drawing out the money so lodged until the matter in dispute in the counterclaim should be disposed of, notwithstanding that security for costs had been given by the plaintiff. Cyprian Fabre & Co. v. Hall, [1905] 2 Ir. R. 132—K.B. D.

Denial of Liability—Co-defendants.]—Where two defendants are sued on a joint tort and one defendant pays into Court with a denial of liability a sum sufficient to satisfy the plaintiff's claim, such payment does not disentitle the plaintiff to judgment for costs against the other defendant. Penny v. Wimbledon Urban Council, 68 L. J. Q.B. 704; [1899] 2 Q.B. 72; 80 L. T. 615; 47 W. R. 565; 68 J. P. 406—C.A.

A local authority, acting under the powers of section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, employed a contractor to make up a road in their district. The contractor in doing the work left obstructions upon the road unguarded. The plaintiff was thereby injured. In an action against the local authority and the contractor both defendants, who delivered separate defences, denied liability. The contractor with his defence paid 75*l.* into Court. The jury awarded 50*l.* damages to the plaintiff, which sum was paid out of the money in Court:—Held, that the payment into Court by the contractor afforded no defence to the local authority, and did not disentitle the plaintiff to judgment against them for costs. Ib.

Before Defence—Right to Costs.]—The defendant in an action to recover the balance of an account paid money into Court in satisfaction of the plaintiff's claim before defence. The plaintiff accepted the money so paid into Court and gave the defendant notice that he had done so within the four days limited by Order XXII. rule 7, but on the same day the defendant's solicitors gave notice that they would not sign a consent to the action being withdrawn from the short cause list unless the plaintiff gave an undertaking to pay the defendant's costs incurred between the date of the payment of money into Court and its acceptance by the plaintiff:—Held, that Order XXII. rule 7 applied to such a case, and that the Judge at the hearing could not order the plaintiff to pay the costs in question. Lomer v. Waters, 67 L. J. Q.B. 653; [1898] 2 Q.B. 326; 79 L. T. 81—C.A.

With Defence—Two Defendants.—Where an action to recover damages for personal injuries has been brought against a district council and their contractor, and they have delivered separate defences denying liability, but the contractor has paid money into Court with a denial of liability, the district council cannot, upon a verdict being found for the plaintiff for a less amount than the sum paid in, avail themselves of such payment and escape judgment being entered against them for costs. Penny v. Wimbledon Urban Council, 67 L. J. Q.B. 754; [1898] 2 Q.B. 212; 78 L. T. 748; 62 J. P. 582—Bruce, J.

Separate Causes of Action—Payment into Court generally—Particulars of Cause of Action in Respect of which Money Paid in.—The plaintiffs, who were shipowners, claimed against the defendants, who were the charterers of one of the plaintiffs' ships—first, the balance of freight under the charter-party; secondly, a sum alleged to have been overpaid to the defendants' stevedores, who were employed by the plaintiffs at the port of loading in pursuance of the charterparty upon the faith that they charged no more than other stevedores of good standing at those ports; and thirdly, damages for demurrage. The defendants, while denying liability, brought into Court 250*l.* as sufficient to satisfy the plaintiffs' claim. The plaintiffs applied for an order for particulars of the payment into Court:—Held, that, as the three claims were in respect of separate causes of action, the plaintiffs were entitled to particulars stating how much was paid into Court in respect of each head of claim. James Tucker Steamship Co. v. Lamport and Holt, 23 T. L. R. 10—C.A.

General Payment into Court—Costs.—Twelve persons, a mortgagor and his mortgagees in possession, joined as co-plaintiffs in an action to recover damages for injuries to the mortgaged properties by a flood caused by the defendants' negligence. The defendants, while denying liability, paid into Court 100*l.*, but without apportioning the amount amongst the several plaintiffs. The defendants afterwards admitted their liability, and the action was referred to an official referee, who found against the claim of the mortgagor, but awarded the other plaintiffs several small sums amounting in all to 79*l.* 10*s.*, and ordered that judgment should be entered for the defendants with costs from and after the date of the payment into Court, after deducting therefrom the plaintiffs' costs up to that date:—Held, that the plea of payment into Court was a good plea, although it did not apportion the amount paid in to the various causes of action, and that the judgment of the official referee was therefore correct. Benning

v. Ilford Gas Co., 76 L. J. K.B. 681; [1907] 2 K.B. 290; 97 L. T. 102; 23 T. L. R. 435—D.

Two Causes of Action—Counterclaim—Money Accepted—Satisfaction—Right to Continue Action and Counterclaim.—Under Order XXII. rule 1, money can be paid into Court only in respect of a claim for debt or for damages; it cannot be paid in in respect of an action brought to establish a right and obtain an injunction. Coote v. Ford, 68 L. J. Ch. 508; [1899] 2 Ch. 93; 80 L. T. 697; 47 W. R. 489, 548—C.A.

Where a plaintiff brings an action for damages and an injunction, and the defendant pays money into Court "in respect of the matters complained of," with a denial of liability, and sets up by way of counterclaim a right adverse to that claimed by the plaintiff, the latter cannot, by taking the money out of Court "in satisfaction of the claim in respect of which it is paid in," convert the payment into Court into an admission of his title so as to put an end to the whole of the action and the counterclaim. Ib.

Semble, a plaintiff in an action for damages and an injunction, who takes out of Court money which has been paid in in respect of the damages with a denial of liability, can go on with the rest of his action, and will not be deprived of his costs if he succeeds in establishing his right but fails to prove that he has sustained damages to a greater amount than the sum paid into Court. Ib.

If the entire claim or cause of action is satisfied by payment into Court, it would seem that the proceedings are not available for a plea of res judicata; but if either party were to attempt to re-open the matter, the appropriate defence of the other would be an application to the Court to stay proceedings either under rule 6 of Order XXII. or as an abuse of the process of the Court. Coote v. Ford, supra, per Stirling, J.

Libel—Newspaper—Failure of Defence under Libel Act—Claim to Treat Money Paid in as General Payment into Court.—In an action for a libel contained in a newspaper, the defendants pleaded that the libel was inserted without actual malice and without gross negligence, and that before the commencement of the action they had published a full apology, and they brought into Court 5*l.*, and said that that sum was sufficient to satisfy the plaintiff's claim. At the trial of the action the defendants' case was conducted on the basis that the defence was under section 2 of the Libel Act, 1843. The jury found that the libel was published without actual malice, but not without gross negligence, and that the apology and the amount paid into Court were both sufficient. The Judge having entered judgment for the plaintiff,—Held, on appeal, that, as the defence was intended to be, and at the trial was treated as, a defence under the Libel Act, 1843, the defendants were not entitled to treat the payment into Court as a general payment into Court under Order XXII. rule 1, and that the plaintiff was therefore entitled to judgment. Oxley v. Wilks, 67 L. J. Q.B. 678; [1898] 2 Q.B. 56; 78 L. T. 728—C.A.

— Insufficiency of Apology.—In a libel action judgment was given for the plaintiff for 35*l*. The defendants had paid 50*l*. into Court with their plea of apology. It was admitted, however, by them that the apology was insufficient:—Held, that the defence must be treated as one that had altogether failed; that the plaintiff never having had an opportunity of taking the money out of Court without accepting the apology, was entitled to his costs. Sley v. Tillotson, 62 J. P. 505—Bruce, J.

Money Received by Defendant, but Paid Away.—The plaintiff and defendant were co-trustees. In August, 1893, the plaintiff became absolutely entitled to the whole of the trust estate. Shortly afterwards the plaintiff and defendant transferred certain shares (forming part of the trust estate) into the name of the defendant. The defendant sold and transferred these shares to a purchaser, and received the purchase-money. The plaintiff moved for an order that the defendant should pay the purchase-money into Court (the defendant alleging, and the plaintiff denying, that it had ceased to be trust-money). The defendant, in his affidavit in answer to the motion, said that, before any question was raised, he in good faith paid away all the purchase-money, and that he had no power over the shares; but did not say that he had no power over the purchase-money:—Held, that he must be ordered to pay the purchase-money into Court. Benson, In re; Elletson v. Pillers, 63 L. J. Ch. 5; [1899] 1 Ch. 39; 79 L. T. 590; 47 W. R. 264—North, J.

Payment into Court—Verdict for Less Amount—Taxation.—See COSTS.

Costs—Denial of Liability—Judgment for Plaintiff for Less than Amount Paid into Court—Costs of Action—Order for Payment out of Court—Discretion.—Where a plaintiff after the defendant has, with a denial of liability, paid money into Court in satisfaction of the plaintiff's claim, proceeds with the action and recovers judgment for an amount which carries costs but is less than that paid into Court, he is entitled to the costs of the action up to the time of payment into Court and to the costs of the issues upon which he has succeeded, and the defendant is entitled to the general costs of the action subsequent to the date of such payment into Court. Powell v. Vickers, Sons & Maxim, 76 L. J. K.B. 122; [1907] 1 K.B. 71; 95 L. T. 774; 23 T. L. R. 78—C.A.

Where money has been paid into Court, with a denial of liability, in satisfaction of the plaintiff's claim, the plaintiff, if he recovers less than the sum paid in, is prima facie entitled, under Order XXII. rule 6 (c), to have paid out to him so much of the sum as is necessary to satisfy the claim which he has established, but he is not absolutely entitled to an order to that effect, inasmuch as the Judge has a discretion under the rule upon proper evidence to order the money to remain in Court. Ib.

Costs of Issue—Payment into Court with Denial of Liability—Verdict for Amount Paid in—Costs of Issues.—In an action for damages for personal injuries caused by the negligence of the defendants' servant, the defendants by their statement of defence denied any negligence on the part of their servant, and, while denying liability, paid money into Court. At the trial the jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff for the exact amount that the defendants paid into Court:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to an order that the defendants should pay to him his costs of and occasioned by the issue of negligence raised by the defence. Fitzgerald v. Tilling, 96 L. T. 718—C.A. And see COSTS.

(ii.) Payment out.

Estate Duty—Tenant for Life.—When payment out of Court is authorised of funds in which one of the petitioners had a life interest now released, the practice of the Court is to retain a sufficient sum of money to satisfy the amount of estate duty payable in the event of the death of the tenant for life within twelve months of the date of the release. Taylor v. Poncia, 49 W. R. 596—Cozens-Hardy, J.

Fund under 20*l*.—Where a person entitled to a fund in Court has died intestate, the Court will not allow the fund to be paid out to the person entitled to take out letters of administration to the estate of the intestate, but who has not done so, even although the fund is under 20*l*. Hinings v. Hinings (2 H. & M. 32) not followed. Frogley v. Phillips, 50 W. R. 184—Byrne, J.

Payment Out to Wrong Person—Stop Order—"Default" of Paymaster-General.—The words "guilty of any default" in section 5 of the Court of Chancery (Funds) Act, 1872, point to some act of misfeasance or carelessness attributable to the Paymaster-General himself or to those under his direction and superintendence. Consequently, where a person entitled to a fund in Court has not obtained a stop order on the fund, and it has been paid out to a wrong person, the Paymaster-General is not guilty of default within the meaning of the section, and the Treasury cannot be called upon to replace the fund in Court out of the Consolidated Fund. Bath v. Bath, 70 L. J. Ch. 270; [1901] 1 Ch. 460; 84 L. T. 107; 49 W. R. 341—Kekewich, J. In C.A., but not on this point, 71 L. J. Ch. 500; 86 L. T. 435; 50 W. R. 535.

(g) Discovery. See DISCOVERY.

(h) Inspection of Property.

Identification of Subject-matter in Dispute—Production to Witness out of Jurisdiction.—The Court or a Judge may, either under Order XXXVII. rule 5 or under Order L. rule 3, in any cause or matter, where it shall appear to be necessary for the purposes of justice, order that the property which is the subject-matter in dispute shall be sent out of the jurisdiction for the purpose of identification by witnesses who are to be examined on commission. Chaplin v. Puttick, 67 L. J. Q.B. 516; [1893] 2 Q.B. 160; 73 L. T. 410; 46 W. R. 481—C.A.

Interlocutory Application for Order to Enter upon and Make Excavations in Defendant's Land—Action to Restrain Interference with the Plaintiffs' Water Supply.—The plaintiffs applied by motion for an order permitting them to enter upon the defendants' land in order to inspect a certain shaft, and if necessary sink other shafts for the purpose of ascertaining whether water which came to the surface at a certain spring flowed underground in a known and defined channel:—Held, without deciding whether the plaintiffs might or might not be entitled to make the necessary inspection and excavations at some time, that there was no sufficient evidence to justify the Court in making any order on the motion. Bradford Corporation v. Ferrand (No. 1), 86 L. T. 497—Farwell, J.

Trial—Passing-off Goods—Probability of Deception—Evidence—View by Judge.—In an action to restrain the defendant from running omnibuses so got up as to be a colourable imitation of the plaintiffs' omnibuses, the plaintiffs offered no evidence of actual deception or probability of deception; but the Judge, having inspected the omnibuses, and come to the conclusion on their appearance that the defendant's omnibuses were calculated to deceive, granted an injunction:—Held, on appeal, that a Judge is not entitled to place his impression derived from a view in the place of such evidence as should be given to support an action of deceit, and that the plaintiffs' case failed for want of evidence. London General Omnibus Co. v. Lavell, 70 L. J. Ch. 17; 83 L. T. 453—C.A.

A view under Order L. rule 4 is not intended to take the place of evidence, but is merely to enable the tribunal to understand the questions raised, and to follow and apply the evidence. Ib.

(i) Staying Proceedings.

Abuse of Process of Court—Indorsement on Writ—Striking Out.—Where certain claims in an indorsement on a writ in an action are an abuse of the process of the Court, the better course is not to strike out those paragraphs only in which the claims in question are contained, but to strike out the writ altogether and leave the plaintiff to take such other proceedings as he may be advised. Huntly (Marchioness) v. Gaskell, 75 L. J. Ch. 66; [1905] 2 Ch. 656—C.A. Affirming, 93 L. T. 297; 21 T. L. R. 752—Kekewich, J.

Frivolous and Vexatious Applications—Interlocutory Proceedings before Judgment—Order to Prevent—Costs.—Before the trial of the action the defendant made twenty-four interlocutory applications with reference to pleadings, discovery, and the like. Most of these applications had been dismissed with costs, and the remainder had proved abortive owing to some irregularity in service or the failure of the defendant to appear. None of the costs incurred in these applications had been paid by the defendant:—Held, that there was jurisdiction to make an order prohibiting any further application by the defendant under the summons for directions, or on any matters of procedure, without the leave of the Judge in chambers, and an order was made to that effect. Grepe v. Loam (57 L. J. Ch. 435; 37 Ch. D. 168) applied. Kinnaird (Lord) v. Field (No. 1), 74 L. J. Ch. 554; [1905] 2 Ch. 306; 93 L. T. 147; 54 W. R. 3—C.A.

— Parties Resident out of the Jurisdiction—Cause of Action Arising out of the Jurisdiction—Inconvenience.—The power of the Court to stay an action which is vexatious and oppressive and an abuse of the process of the Court will be exercised where an action is brought by a person residing out of the jurisdiction against a person residing out of the jurisdiction in respect of matters which occurred out of the jurisdiction, if it appears that the effect of bringing the action in the English Court will be to subject the defendant to any injustice or unfair disadvantage to which he would not be subjected if proceedings were taken in another accessible and competent Court. Logan v. Bank of Scotland, 75 L. J. K.B. 218; [1906] 1 K.B. 141; 94 L. T. 153; 54 W. R. 270; 22 T. L. R. 187—C.A.

The inconvenience of trying the action in the English Court may be so great as to constitute such injustice or unfair disadvantage to the defendant. Ib.

— Interlocutory Application in County Court—Subsequent Action in High Court raising same Question.—Where an action was brought in good faith to try a legal point which ought to be tried, a motion, under Order XXV. rule 4, to dismiss the action as frivolous and vexatious and an abuse of the process of the Court, on the ground that the point was res judicata, having been raised and determined in previous proceedings, was dismissed with costs in any event. Lea v. Thursby, 90 L. T. 265—C.A.

— Litigating Identically Same Question in Subsequent Action.—The defendant recovered judgment in an action in a County Court against the plaintiff, and subsequently entered into a compromise under which he executed a deed whereby he released the plaintiff from the judgment debt and covenanted not to tax the costs or take any proceedings to enforce the judgment so long as certain instalments were regularly paid by the plaintiff. The instalments were regularly paid, but the defendant carried in his bill for taxation by the district Registrar upon the ground that the deed of release had been obtained from him by the fraud of the plaintiff. The County Court Judge heard an objection to the taxation, and held that the defendant had been induced by the fraud of the plaintiff to execute the deed; and directed the taxation to proceed. The plaintiff then commenced an action in the County Court claiming a declaration that the defendant had released him from payment of the judgment debt and costs, and also an injunction restraining the defendant from taking any proceedings to enforce payment of the judgment debt and costs. The district Registrar made an order staying the action, and striking out the statement of claim as being frivolous and vexatious and an abuse of the process of the Court. On appeal from an order of a Judge in chambers affirming the district Registrar's order, —Held, that, as the County Court Judge had jurisdiction to determine, in the proceedings before him, the question whether the defendant had been induced by the fraud of the plaintiff to execute the deed, and had determined that question, and as identically the same question was raised in the present action, the Court would order the action to be stayed as being frivolous and vexatious, and an abuse of the process of the Court. Stephenson v. Garnett, 67 L. J. Q.B. 447; [1898] 1 Q.B. 677; 78 L. T. 371; 46 W. R. 410—C.A. And see Goodson v. Grierson, [1908] 1 K.B. 761—C.A.; and Norton v. Norton, 77 L. J. Ch. 312; [1908] 1 Ch. 471—C.A.

— Action to Revoke Grant of Probate—Laches—Acquiescence.—A person claiming to be sole next-of-kin of a testator who died ten years before, having made a will leaving his property, very small in amount, to a stranger, brought an action to revoke the grant of probate made to the executor in common form. The plaintiff was shortly after the death of the testator aware of the existence of the will and of its terms, but took no step to contest the will, and allowed the executor to administer the estate. No grounds were alleged for disputing the will. The Court held that it would be contrary to settled principle to allow the plaintiff to proceed with the action, which was groundless and vexatious, and made an order staying further proceedings. Mahon v. Quinn, [1904] 2 Ir. R. 267—Andrews, J.

— Proceedings Brought with Ulterior Motive.—The motive of a party who commences proceedings before a Court, however reprehensible, is not enough to make it an abuse of process or a fraud upon the Court, unless it be shewn that the remedy would be unsuitable, and would enable the person obtaining it fraudulently to defeat the rights of others. King v. Henderson, 67 L. J. P.C. 134; [1898] A.C. 720; 79 L. T. 37; 47 W. R. 157; 5 Manson, 308—P.C.

Inherent Jurisdiction of Court—Action Commenced in England—Cause of Action Arising in India—Frivolous and Vexatious—Abuse of Process of Court—Staying Proceedings in England.—In 1902 a deed of separation was executed between the plaintiff, who was then domiciled in India, and her husband. The defendant, a solicitor practising in Madras, was trustee of the deed. The husband made default in paying an allowance under the deed. While the defendant was in England on a holiday in 1906 he was, on the eve of leaving for India, served with the writ in this action, by which the plaintiff charged him with wilful or negligent conduct in his capacity of solicitor when acting for her in India against her husband. At the time of the issue of the writ the plaintiff was temporarily in England. On motion by the defendant to stay or dismiss the action as frivolous and vexatious and an abuse of the process of the Court, Held, that the action ought to be dismissed, and the plaintiff must be left to take any proceedings she thought fit against the defendant in India. Logan v. Bank of Scotland (75 L. J. K.B. 218; [1906] 1 K.B. 141) applied. Egbert v. Short, 76 L. J. Ch. 520; [1907] 2 Ch. 205; 97 L. T. 90; 23 T. L. R. 558—Warrington, J.

Action in Foreign Country—Application to Stay Action in England.—Only very special circumstances will justify the Court in staying an action here on the ground that proceedings are pending in a foreign Court out of the King's dominions. Where, therefore, probate proceedings were pending in France and subsequently a probate action in respect of the same will was commenced in England—the plaintiffs not being the same in both cases—the Court refused to stay the English action. Bryan, In the goods of; Board of Education v. Reubell, 20 T. L. R. 290—Jeune, P.

Action in King's Bench Division—Action brought in Chancery Division by Defendant in King's Bench Division—Cross-actions—Refusal to Stay Chancery Proceedings.—A money-lender issued in the King's Bench Division a specially indorsed writ claiming £500. on a promissory note signed by the defendant. The borrower admitted the facts, but said that various transactions between him and the money-lender were harsh and unconscionable, and a week after the issue of the writ in the King's Bench Division issued a writ against the money-lender in the Chancery Division asking that these transactions might be reopened, and for an account. On a motion by the money-lender that the Chancery action might be dismissed with costs, as an abuse of the process of the Court, or stayed, Held, that the motion failed. Although the money-lender's proceedings in the King's Bench Division came first in point of time, and although the King's Bench Division could decide all other questions between the parties on a counterclaim by the borrower, yet the Chancery Division had the better machinery for taking accounts, which, moreover, were assigned to it by the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 34, sub-s. 3, and as a general rule it was preferable to allow that action to go on in which the burden of proof rested on the plaintiff. Both actions must continue, unless the King's Bench transferred or stayed the King's Bench action, or until the Court of Appeal, which controlled both Divisions, had pronounced judgment. Thomson v. South-Eastern Railway (51 L. J. Q.B. 322; 9 Q.B. D. 320) approved. Rechnitzer v. Samuel, 95 L. T. 75—Buckley, J.

Tender by Debtor of Amount—Act of Bankruptcy Committed by Debtor.—The plaintiff, who had obtained two judgments against the defendant for 32*l.* and 41*l.* respectively, served on the defendant a bankruptcy notice in respect of the judgment for 41*l.* The defendant tendered to the plaintiff the amount due on the judgment for 32*l.*, which the plaintiff refused to accept. Upon the application of the defendant, the Judge at chambers made an order staying all proceedings on the judgment for 32*l.*, upon payment of that amount. When this order was made the defendant had committed an available act of bankruptcy, which was known to the plaintiff and brought to the notice of the Judge:—Held, that if the Judge had power to make such an order he had not properly exercised his discretion, and the order ought not to have been made. Brook v. Emerson, 95 L. T. 821—C.A.

(j) Injunction.

Interlocutory Relief—Motion for Injunction by Defendant before Counterclaim—Relief Arising from Same Cause of Action—Contract—Mandatory Injunction to Restrain Interference with Occupation of House.]—Where an action is brought by a plaintiff relying on a cause of action—for example, a contract—and the defendant wants relief arising from the same cause of action—not necessarily the same relief—he may by motion in the same action, before counterclaim delivered, obtain interlocutory relief until the trial. Collison v. Warren, 70 L. J. Ch. 382; [1901] 1 Ch. 812; 84 L. T. 482—C.A.

Where the plaintiff, the proprietor of an hotel, had executed a deed of assignment of all his property to a trustee for the benefit of his creditors, and had been retained as manager by the trustee under a power in that behalf contained in the deed, and subsequently dismissed, the Court, at the instance of the trustee of the deed, the defendant in the action, granted an injunction to restrain the plaintiff until the trial from interfering with or disturbing the trustee in his occupation of the hotel. Spurgin v. White (2 Giff. 473) followed. Ib. And see INJUNCTION.

(k) Receiver.

Appointment of—Service of Summons—Party for whom no Appearance has been Entered.]—Where a plaintiff has obtained judgment against a defendant on default of appearance, a summons taken out by him for the appointment of a receiver of property of the defendant cannot be served by filing it with the proper officer in accordance with Order LXVII. rule 4, but falls within rule 5 of that order, as being a document of which personal service is required. Tilling v. Blythe, 68 L. J. Q.B. 350; [1899] 1 Q.B. 557; 80 L. T. 44; 47 W. R. 273—C.A.

Rights and Duties—Receiver Appointed in an Action—Sale by Mortgagee under Order Outside the Action—Purchase by Receiver.]—The general principle that a receiver cannot, without special leave, purchase the property of which he is receiver, applies equally where the sale is not under a decree in the action in which the receiver was appointed, but is by a mortgagee selling with leave of the Court under his power of sale. Nugent v. Nugent, 77 L. J. Ch. 271; [1908] 1 Ch. 546—C.A.

Costs—Judgment—Taxation Unfinished.]—The Court has jurisdiction independently of section 25, sub-section 8 of the Judicature Act, 1873, to appoint a receiver to protect an equitable fund out of which costs are payable by an order of the Court, although the costs are not yet taxed and the order does not specify any particular fund. Cummins v. Perkins, 68 L. J. Ch. 57; [1899] 1 Ch. 16; 79 L. T. 456; 47 W. R. 214—C.A.

Protection of Fund—Separate Estate—Married Woman.]—Where an action brought by a married woman had been dismissed with costs, to be paid out of her separate estate, the Court appointed a receiver of the share of an estate coming to the married woman to the amount of the bill of costs delivered by the solicitors, although the taxation of the bill had not been completed by the granting of a certificate. Ib.

Ejectment Action—Defendant in Possession—Disputed Title—Tenants—Discretion.]—Under section 25, sub-section 8 of the Judicature Act, 1873, the Court has jurisdiction to appoint a receiver in an ejectment action where the title to real property is in dispute. On such an application all the circumstances must be considered, and where it appears on the materials then before the Court that the plaintiff will probably succeed in the action, and that the tenants on the property will run a risk of having to pay their rents twice, the Court will appoint a receiver till the trial of the action. Foxwell v. Van Grutten (66 L. J. Ch. 53; [1897] 1 Ch. 64) distinguished. John v. John, 67 L. J. Ch. 616; [1898] 2 Ch. 573; 79 L. T. 362; 47 W. R. 52—C.A.

Public-house—Licences in Jeopardy—Landlord and Tenant—Ejectment—Disputed Title.]—By an agreement in writing the tenant of a public-house agreed with the landlords, a firm of brewers, that he would do nothing to jeopardise the licences; that he would reside on the premises and would not close them except for the period required or allowed by law; and that he would upon quitting the premises assign over and take all steps to transfer the licences to the landlords. In breach of this agreement the tenant, during the continuance of the tenancy, shut up and left the premises, thereby jeopardising the licences. The landlords commenced an action for recovery of possession, and moved for the appointment of an interim receiver in order to preserve the licences:—Held, that the Court had power under the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 25, sub-s. 8, to appoint, pending the dispute, a receiver of the licences and of the rents and profits, giving the receiver possession of the premises so far as the same might be necessary for the preservation of the licences. Charrington v. Camp, 71 L. J. Ch. 196; [1902] 1 Ch. 386; 86 L. T. 15—Joyce, J.

Recovery of Land—Enforcing Judgment—Writ of Possession—Leave of Court.]—Where a mortgagee of leaseholds has obtained the appointment by the Court of a receiver, the lessor who by leave of the Court brings an action for recovery of the land against the lessee, and recovers judgment, cannot proceed to enforce the judgment as against the receiver in possession by writ of possession without the leave of the Court. Morris v. Baker, 73 L. J. Ch. 143; 52 W. R. 207—Buckley, J.

Writ of Possession—Time.]—Where an order was made directing delivery of certain premises into the possession of a receiver appointed by the order, but no time within which delivery of possession was to be made was specified in the order, it was held that a writ of possession could not issue because Order XLI. rule 5 had not been complied with. Savage v. Bentley, 90 L. T. 641—Farwell, J.

Interference with—Stranger to Action—Injunction.]—The Court will restrain all improper interference with one of its receivers, whether such interference be by a party or by a stranger to the action in which the receiver has been appointed. Any deliberate act that is calculated to injure property under the protection of the Court by means of a receiver amounts to such improper interference, even though the act be not in itself one which the Court would restrain if done against the property of a private individual. Dixon v. Dixon, 73 L. J. Ch. 103; [1904] 1 Ch. 161; 89 L. T. 272—Swinfen Eady, J.

The Court will restrain a man from inducing the servant of the receiver of a business to leave his employment and to engage himself in the service of an opposition business, even though such leaving involve no breach of contract on the part of the servant. Ib.

Indemnity—Action Charging Receiver with Misconduct—Dismissal of Action—Defence—No Benefit to Estate—Costs of Defence.—A receiver is not entitled to be indemnified against every action that may be brought charging fraud against him personally, but only in cases where in defending himself as receiver in an action brought in respect of the estate he is also defending the estate. The nature of the indemnity in such circumstances is similar to that given in the case of trustees. Dunn, In re; Brinklow v. Singleton, 73 L. J. Ch. 425; [1904] 1 Ch. 648; 91 L. T. 135; 52 W. R. 345—Byrne, J.

Where an action charging a person with gross personal fraud both as administrator pendente lite and also as receiver of an estate was, in default of appearance by the plaintiff at the trial, dismissed with costs, and the plaintiff was unable to pay the costs, the receiver was not allowed out of the estate the costs of his defence of the action, on the ground that the defence had not and could not have resulted in any benefit to the estate. Walters v. Woodbridge (47 L. J. Ch. 516; 7 Ch. D. 504) discussed, and principle applied. Ib.

Action in Queen's Bench Division under Fatal Accidents Act, 1846, against Shipowners—Decree in Admiralty Division for Limitation of Liability.—An action in the Queen's Bench Division under the Fatal Accidents Act, 1846, against shipowners, to recover damages for the loss of a husband by reason of the negligent management of their ship, will not be transferred to the Admiralty Division upon the ground that a decree has been made there under section 503 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, for the limitation of the liability of the owners of the ship. Roche v. London and South-Western Railway, 68 L. J. Q.B. 1041; [1899] 2 Q.B. 502; 81 L. T. 315; 48 W. R. 1; 8 Asp. M.C. 588—C.A.

Transfer to Commercial List.—Where a Judge of the Queen's Bench Division charged with commercial business orders the transfer of a cause to the Commercial List, an appeal lies to the Court of Appeal upon the ground that the cause is not a commercial cause. See Insurance Co. v. Carr, 69 L. J. Q.B. 954; [1901] 1 K.B. 7; 83 L. T. 517; 49 W. R. 55; 9 Asp. M.C. 138; 6 Com. Cas. 11—C.A.

Transfer of Proceedings.—See CROWN, col. 662.

(m) Discontinuance of Action.

"The Court or a Judge"—Master.—The words "the Court or a Judge" in Order XXVI. rule 1, do not mean only the Judge in person, and an order made by a Master in the Chancery Division is an order made by the Court or a Judge. Lloyd's Bank v. Princess Royal Colliery Co. (No. 2), 82 L. T. 559; 48 W. R. 427—Byrne, J.

Leave to Discontinue Action—Costs of Auxiliary Proceedings before Another Tribunal.—A plaintiff seeking to discontinue an action upon the terms of paying the defendant's costs in that action will not be compelled as part of his bargain to pay the costs incurred by the defendant in auxiliary proceedings taken by the plaintiff before another tribunal, arising out of the same case, and the result of which caused the plaintiff to discontinue his action. Lloyd's Bank v. Princess Royal Colliery Co. (No. 1), 81 L. T. 533; 48 W. R. 460—Byrne, J.

(n) Dismissal of Action.

Abuse of Process of Court—Indorsement on Writ—Striking Out.—Where certain claims in an indorsement on a writ in an action are an abuse of the process of the Court, the better course is not to strike out those paragraphs only in which the claims in question are contained, but to strike out the writ altogether and leave the plaintiff to take such other proceedings as he may be advised. Huntly (Marchioness) v. Gaskell (No. 1), 75 L. J. Ch. 66; [1905] 2 Ch. 656; 93 L. T. 785; 54 W. R. 164; 22 T. L. R. 20—C.A.

Illegality—Power of Court to take Notice of—New Trial—Questions not Raised in Court Below.—It is the right and duty of the Court at any stage of a cause to consider, and, if it be proved, to act upon, an illegality which may be fatal to the contention of either party to the litigation, so as to prevent the process of the Court from being used to establish a claim which ought not to be enforced. But in a case in which a Court of Appeal, after argument and before judgment, raised of its own motion the question of the illegality of the contract upon which the action was brought, which had not been raised in argument before them, the Judicial Committee, though considering the circumstances very suspicious, declined to give judgment upon questions which had not been raised in the Court below, and sent the case back for a new trial. Connolly v. Consumers' Cordage Co., 89 L. T. 347—P.C.

(o) Undertaking.

No Time Limited for Fulfilment—Breach—Committal—Supplemental Order.—Ordinarily, where an undertaking is given, not fixing any time, for payment of money into Court or to a joint account at a bank, an order fixing a time is required before the undertaking can be enforced. But there may be cases of contempt for non-payment so gross as to justify committal without such an order. D. v. A. & Co., 69 L. J. Ch. 332; [1900] 1 Ch. 484; 82 L. T. 47; 48 W. R. 429—Cozens-Hardy, J.

(p) Security for Costs.

Bankruptcy of Plaintiff—Libel against Newspaper—Previous unsuccessful Action against another Newspaper Founded on Similar Statements.—The plaintiff sued the proprietors of a newspaper for libel. He had previously brought a similar action against another newspaper on similar statements and was unsuccessful. The plaintiff had been adjudicated a bankrupt and had not paid the costs in the first action:—Held, that the plaintiff could not be ordered to give security for the costs of the action. Le Mesurier v. Ferguson, 20 T. L. R. 32—C.A.

Insolvent Plaintiff—Assignment for Benefit of Creditors—Assignment of Cause of Action—Nominal Plaintiff.—The plaintiff, being insolvent and having brought an action against the defendants, executed a deed whereby he assigned to a trustee for the benefit of his creditors all his property, estate, and effects (with one insignificant exception), consisting of the goodwill and assets of his business of a tile and mosaic merchant, including the stock and book debts of the business, and also all the beneficial interest and property in the action brought by him against the defendants, but the right, property, or interest of the trustee therein was not to arise until judgment had been obtained or the plaintiff had effected terms of settlement. The plaintiff covenanted with the trustee to prosecute the action diligently against the defendants, and not to arrange terms of settlement without the trustee's consent in writing, and also to settle the action, if occasion should arise, upon such terms as the trustee should consider fair and reasonable:—Held, that the plaintiff was merely a nominal plaintiff suing for the benefit of third persons, and therefore that he must give security for the defendants' costs of the action. Lloyd v. Hathern Station Brick Co., 35 L. T. 158—C.A.

— Nominal Plaintiff—Trustee for Benefit of Creditors.—An insolvent person, who brings an action as trustee under a deed of assignment executed by a debtor for the benefit of his creditors, may be ordered to give security for the costs of the action. He is not within the principles which exempt a trustee in bankruptcy, or a liquidator of a company, or an executor or administrator, from the general rule that an insolvent plaintiff bringing an action, not for his own benefit, but merely on behalf of another or others, must give security for the costs of the action. The fact that, by the terms of the deed of assignment, the trustee is entitled to retain out of the debtors' assets the costs, charges, and expenses of distributing the assets among the creditors, makes no difference in this respect. Reader or Greener v. Kahn, 75 L. J. K.B. 660; [1906] 2 K.B. 374; 95 L. T. 481; 22 T. L. R. 694—C.A.

Foreigner out of Jurisdiction—General Enquiry—Claimant against Fund in Court.—In the case of a person claiming against a fund in Court under an enquiry in ordinary circumstances, the Court will not order security for costs to be given by a claimant who is a foreigner resident out of the jurisdiction; but where the circumstances are such that the claimant is in the position of plaintiff he will be ordered to give security, the case being then analogous to a case of interpleader. Milward & Co., In re, 69 L. J. Ch. 247; [1900] 1 Ch. 405; 82 L. T. 339—C.A.

Bond of Foreign Company.—There is no general rule of practice that the bond of a foreign company cannot be accepted as a sufficient security for costs. Aldrich v. British Griffin Chilled Iron and Steel Co., 74 L. J. K.B. 23; [1904] 2 K.B. 850; 91 L. T. 729; 53 W. R. 1; 21 T. L. R. 1—C.A. And see Costs, col. 571.

Special Jury.—61 & 62 Vict. c. 6 is the Special Juries Act, 1898.

Notice of—Assizes—Notice of Trial less than Ten Days before First Day of Assizes, but Trial not to take place till Expiration of Ten Days.—Upon a summons for directions under Order XXX. an order was made that the defendant should take notice of trial on November 26 for the next Liverpool Assizes, but that the action should not be tried before December 7. The assizes commenced on November 28—that is to say, less than ten days after the notice of trial was to be given:—Held, that there was jurisdiction under Order XXX. rule 2 to make the order. Baxter v. Holdsworth, 68 L. J. Q.B. 154; [1899] 1 Q.B. 266; 47 W. R. 179; 79 L. T. 434—C.A.

Place of—Discretion.—The Court of Appeal will not interfere with an order of a Judge at chambers fixing the place of trial of an action, except a clear case is made out against it. Thorogood v. Newman, 23 T. L. R. 97—C.A.

Trial with a Jury—Short Cause—Right to Trial with a Jury.—Upon an application under Order XVI. for leave to enter final judgment, the Judge made an order giving unconditional leave to defend and ordered the action to be put into the short cause list. The defendant then applied, on the summons for directions, for an order for a trial with a jury, but the Judge refused to make the order:—Held, that although the Judge might have given leave to defend upon the terms that the trial should be without a jury, yet, as this had not been done, the defendant was entitled to an order for a trial with a jury under Order XXXVI. rule 6. Wolfe v. De Braam, 81 L. T. 533; 48 W. R. 161—C.A.

— Injunction and Damages.—In an action charging several defendants with a conspiracy to compel the plaintiff to sell his property at a price below its value, by boycotting, threats, intimidation, and other unlawful means, the plaintiffs sought an injunction and also damages for the injuries already done. One of the defendants asked to have the issues of fact and the amount of damages ascertained and assessed by a jury:—Held, that the action must be treated as substantially one for unliquidated damages; and that it was a proper case in which, in the exercise of its discretion, the Court should direct the issues of fact and the amount of damages to be ascertained and assessed by a jury. De Freyne v. Fitzgibbon, [1904] 1 Ir. R. 400—C.A. Affirmed, 20 T. L. R. 454, sub nom. De Freyne v. Johnston, H.L. (Ir.)

— Action in Chancery Division—Counterclaim for Slander, Libel, and Malicious Prosecution—Defendant's Right to Trial by Jury.—A defendant to an action in the Chancery Division, who counterclaims for libel, slander, or any of the other matters mentioned in rule 2 of Order XXXVI., is not by virtue of that rule entitled to have the action and counterclaim transferred to the King's Bench Division for trial by a Judge with a jury; but the Court, in the exercise of its discretion under rule 7 (a) of the same Order, will, at the defendant's request, generally direct the issues raised by the counterclaim, so far as they relate to libel, slander, or the other matters mentioned in rule 2, to be tried by a Judge with a jury. Kinnaird (Lord) v. Field (No. 2), 74 L. J. Ch. 692; [1905] 2 Ch. 361; 93 L. T. 190; 54 W. R. 85; 21 T. L. R. 682—C.A.

— Jury Expressing Opinion in Favour of Plaintiff after Hearing Plaintiff's Case only—Right of Defendant to New Trial.—The mere communication by the jury who are trying an action of an opinion in favour of the plaintiff during or at the close of the plaintiff's case before the defendant's evidence is heard is not of itself such misconduct on the part of the jury as will justify counsel for the defendant in refusing to go on with the case before that jury and entitle the defendant to a new trial. Campbell v. Hackney Furnishing Co., 22 T. L. R. 318—D.

— Leave to Defend Given Unconditionally as to Mode of Trial—Right of Defendant to Trial with Jury.—Where on a summons under Order XIV. an order has been made giving the defendant leave to defend without any condition or direction as to the mode of trial, the Judge at chambers cannot on a subsequent summons deprive the defendant of his right under Order XXXVI. rule 6 to have the action tried with a jury. Wolfe v. De Braam, 48 W. R. 161—C.A.

— Person in Contempt—Right of Hearing.—The general rule that a person who is in contempt cannot be heard to make any application to the Court applies prima facie to voluntary applications by him—that is, when he comes to the Court asking for something. The rule does not prevent a person who is in contempt from appealing against an order, made after the contempt was committed, on the ground that the order was made without jurisdiction. Gordon v. Gordon, 73 L. J. P. 41; [1904] P. 163; 90 L. T. 597; 52 W. R. 389; 20 T. L. R. 272—C.A.

Per COZENS-HARDY, L.J.—Whether for this purpose there is in principle any sound distinction between contempt committed before and contempt committed after the order which the person in contempt seeks to challenge—quære. Ib.

— Illegality Disclosed—Duty of Court.—Where on the trial of an action the plaintiffs' case discloses that the transaction which is the basis of the claim is illegal, the Court cannot properly ignore the illegality and give effect to the claim, even where the defendant has not pleaded the illegality. Buchanan v. Faber (4 Com. Cas. 223) considered. Gedge v. Royal Exchange Assurance, 69 L. J. Q.B. 506; [1900] 2 Q. B. 214; 82 L. T. 463; 9 Asp. M.C. 57; 5 Com. Cas. 229—Kennedy, J.

— Nonsuit—Discontinuance.—A plaintiff has no longer the old common-law right of election to be nonsuited at the trial. He cannot at that stage of the proceedings discontinue his action without the leave of the Court or a Judge. Fox v. "Star" Newspaper Co., 69 L. J. Q.B. 117; [1900] A.C. 19; 81 L. T. 562; 48 W. R. 321—H.L. (E.)

— Passing-off Goods—Probability of Deception—Evidence—View by Judge.—In an action to restrain the defendant from running omnibuses so got up as to be a colourable imitation of the plaintiffs' omnibuses, the plaintiffs offered no evidence of actual deception or probability of deception; but the Judge, having inspected the omnibuses, and come to the conclusion on their appearance that the defendant's omnibuses were calculated to deceive, granted an injunction:—Held, on appeal, that a Judge is not entitled to place his impression derived from a view in the place of such evidence as should be given to support an action of deceit, and that the plaintiffs' case failed for want of evidence. London General Omnibus Co. v. Lavell, 70 L. J. Ch. 17; [1901] 1 Ch. 135; 88 L. T. 453—C.A.

A view under Order L. rule 4 is not intended to take the place of evidence, but is merely to enable the tribunal to understand the questions raised, and to follow and apply the evidence. Ib.

8. NEW TRIAL.

— Verdict against Evidence.—Where a question of fact is left to the jury, and they have answered it reasonably, their verdict cannot be disturbed. But where the verdict is one that could not reasonably have been found if the attention of the jury had been directed to the whole of the facts of the case, or if the Court is not satisfied that the real question to be determined was so left to them that their verdict was given upon the determination of that question, the Court may set aside the verdict and order a new trial. Jones v. Spencer, 77 L. T. 536—H.L. (E.)

Setting Aside Verdict of Jury.—In discharging the verdict of a jury, the Court must be satisfied that there is such a preponderance of evidence against it as to make it unreasonable and almost perverse that the jury, when instructed and properly assisted by the Judge, should have returned it. Cox v. English, Scottish, and Australian Bank, 74 L. J. P.C. 62; [1905] A.C. 163; 92 L. T. 483—P.C.

Improper Admission of Evidence—No Substantial Wrong or Miscarriage.—The defendants, husband and wife, were sued for slander spoken by the defendant Mrs. B. of the plaintiff. Mrs. B. at first denied the speaking of the words; but afterwards, at the invitation of S., Mrs. B. wrote two apologies, one to S. and another to A., a person implicated, but did not apologise to the plaintiff. The male defendant was not present when the apologies were written, and there was no evidence that he was aware of the apologies. The male defendant subsequently made an offer of 10*l.* to the plaintiff to settle the case, accompanied with a threat if the plaintiff did not accept the offer. At the trial the speaking of the words was proved by two witnesses, and neither of the defendants was examined. The Judge admitted the apologies as evidence, subject to objection. The jury found for the plaintiff:—Held, that the apologies of the wife were not admissible in evidence, but held, further, that even if they were wrongly admitted there was evidence without them sufficient to sustain the verdict; and no substantial wrong or miscarriage had been occasioned; and that the verdict should stand. Bray v. Ford (65 L. J. Q.B. 213; [1896] A.C. 44) considered. Tait v. Beggs, [1905] 2 Ir. R. 525—C.A.

Evidence not Submitted to the Jury—Power of Court.—Section 438 of the Jamaica Civil Procedure Code, which is in identical terms with Order XL, rule 10, under the Judicature Act, and permits the Court on a motion for judgment or on an application for a new trial to draw inferences of fact not inconsistent with the finding of the jury, and, if it has sufficient materials, to give judgment, does not authorise the Court to take away questions from the jury which are questions of fact properly for their consideration, or to decide upon evidence the meaning and effect of which were not brought before the jury. Royal Mail Steam Packet Co. v. George, 69 L. J. P.C. 107; [1900] A.C. 480; 82 L. T. 539—P.C.

Discovery of Fresh Evidence.—A new trial will not be granted upon the ground that fresh evidence has been discovered, which could not with reasonable diligence have been discovered before the trial, unless that fresh evidence is so conclusive as to make it practically certain that the verdict would be different if it were adduced. Young v. Kershaw, 81 L. T. 531—C.A.

Non-disclosure of Deed—No Application for Discovery.—Application for a new trial, on the ground of the non-disclosure of a deed—no case of fraud or surprise having been made out and no application made in the action for discovery of documents—refused. Turnbull v. Duval, 71 L. J. P.C. 84; [1902] A.C. 429; 87 L. T. 154—P.C.

Verdict—Damages—Inconsistent Findings—Judgment.—The respondent sued the appellants, in person and as tutor to his minor son, for damages on the ground of negligence resulting in the death of his wife and the child's mother, to whom tartar emetic instead of bismuth had been supplied by the appellants. The jury found—first, that the death was accelerated, but not to any appreciable extent, by such negligence; secondly, that the respondent had suffered no damage by his wife's death; and thirdly, that the child suffered damage by his mother's death, which they assessed at $1,000:—Held, that there was no inconsistency in these findings; that they did not amount to an award of damages to the infant, it being the province of the Judge to say whether on the facts the plaintiff can recover the assessed damages from the defendant; and that as the jury found that the death, which was the foundation of the damage, had only to an inappreciable extent been accelerated by the appellants' negligence, the damage could only be inappreciable. Kerry v. England, 67 L. J. P.C. 150; [1898] A.C. 742—P.C.

— — — Power of Court of Appeal to Modify Damages without Consent of both Parties.—On an application for a new trial the Court of Appeal has no power, without the consent of both parties, to alter the amount of damages awarded by the jury. Belt v. Lawes (53 L. J. Q.B. 249; 12 Q.B. D. 356) overruled. Watt v. Watt, 74 L. J. K.B. 438; [1905] A.C. 115; 92 L. T. 480; 53 W. R. 547; 69 J. P. 249; 21 T. L. R. 386—H.L. (E.)

Security for Costs—Motion for New Trial.—The Court will now order security for the costs of a motion for a new trial in the same circumstances as security for the costs of any other appeal will be ordered, and the rule of practice laid down in Heckscher v. Crosley (60 L. J. Q.B. 75; [1891] 1 Q.B. 224) will no longer be followed. Wightwick v. Pope, 71 L. J. K.B. 709; [1902] 2 K.B. 99; 86 L. T. 750; 50 W. R. 531—C.A.

9. JUDGMENTS AND ORDERS.

Action for a Declaration—Sanitary Authority — Sewer — Right to Drain into Sewer.—The plaintiffs were owners of certain land and proposed to lay it out as building land, and prepared a plan shewing sewers, and claimed that as owners of the premises they were entitled to connect their sewers with the defendants' sewer. The defendants contended that the construction of such sewers was outside section 22 of the Public Health Act, 1875. A writ was then issued asking for a declaration that the plaintiffs were entitled to connect their proposed sewers with the sewer of the defendants:—Held, that, although there is jurisdiction under Order XXV. rule 5 to make a declaratory order, the jurisdiction is one to be exercised with extreme caution; that, as no portion of the estate had been built on and no drains or sewers constructed, it was inexpedient to make a declaration that the plaintiffs had a legal right to connect their sewers when made with that of the defendants. Faber v. Gosworth Urban Council, 88 L. T. 549; 67 J. P. 197; 1 L. G. R. 579—Swinfen Eady, J.

— Invalidity of Patent—Discretion of Court—Petition for Revocation.—The Court, in the exercise of its discretion as to declaratory judgments under rule 5 of Order XXV. of the Rules of the Supreme Court, refused to allow a company which deemed itself liable for infringement of letters patent to bring an action after the letters patent had expired merely for a declaration that the patent was invalid ab initio. North-Eastern Marine Engineering Co. v. Leeds Forge Co., 75 L. J. Ch. 720; [1906] 2 Ch. 498; 95 L. T. 178; 22 T. L. R. 724—C.A. Affirming, 54 W. R. 370—Joyce, J.

Per CURIAM.—The mere fact that a patent has expired is not a sufficient reason why a petition for its revocation should not be presented under section 26 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883. Ib.

— Liability to Perform Contract.—Where sufficient reason is shewn, parties to a mercantile contract are entitled to ask the Court for a declaration whether they are bound by the contract or not. Therefore where a contract (if it had been binding) would have continued in force for a year and a-half and the breach of it would have involved the plaintiffs in heavy damages, the Court in an action brought by them claiming a declaration that they were not bound to perform the contract granted the declaration as prayed. Société Maritime v. Venus Steam Shipping Co., 9 Com. Cas. 289—Channell, J.

— Public Authorities Protection.—The plaintiff erected a fence round a piece of land. The local authority pulled down the fence and afterwards wrote a letter asserting their claim to the land. More than six months after this letter the plaintiff brought an action against them for a declaration that the land belonged to him and an injunction to restrain them from trespassing on it. By his statement of claim he alleged that the defendants had pulled down his fence; that they claimed that the land formed part of the highway, and that this claim prevented him from selling the land:—Held, that the assertion of the defendants' claim to the land gave the plaintiff no cause of action, and therefore that he could not take advantage of the power given to the Court by the Rules of the Supreme Court, Order XXV. rule 5, to make a merely declaratory judgment; that the only act of the defendants which gave him any cause of action was the pulling down of the fence; that the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, applied; the action was brought too late, and must be dismissed with costs as between solicitor and client. Offin v. Rockford Rural Council, 75 L. J. Ch. 348; [1906] 1 Ch. 342; 94 L. T. 639; 54 W. R. 244; 4 L. G. R. 595; 70 J. P. 97—Warrington, J.

— Mortgagee in Possession—Charter—Ship Arrested and Freight Attached in Proceedings taken in Foreign Court by Creditors of Mortgagors—Judgment Declaratory of English Law for Use in Foreign Proceedings.—Mortgagees of a ship, having taken possession under their mortgage, chartered the vessel for a voyage to a French port. On her arrival at her destination the ship was arrested and the freight attached in the hands of the consignees of the cargo, in proceedings instituted in the French Courts against the mortgagors—a limited company which had gone into liquidation—by certain creditors of such company, who alleged that the ship and freight were the property of the mortgagors. In an action brought by the mortgagees against the plaintiffs in the French proceedings claiming under Order XXV. rule 5 a judgment declaratory of the validity of the mortgage and the rights of the mortgagee in possession to the ship and to freight earned by her, with the object of using such judgment in the French proceedings, the learned Judge—with certain amendments—gave the judgment asked for. The Manor (No. 2), 72 L. J. P. 64; 89 L. T. 218; 9 Asp. M.C. 482—Bucknill, J.

Declaratory Order—Perpetuation of Testimony.—See West v. Sackville, ante, EVIDENCE, col. 822.

Judgment by Consent Obtained by False Statement—Action of Review—Costs of Former Action—How far Recoverable.—A successful plaintiff in an action of review, brought to set aside a judgment wrongfully obtained in a former action, is, if he has paid the costs of the former action, entitled in the action of review to recover the party and party costs of the former action, inasmuch as he is entitled to be placed in the same position as if the former action had been brought to its legitimate conclusion in his favour. Sturrock v. Littlejohn, 68 L. J. Q.B. 165—D.

Claim for Unliquidated Damages—Judgment for Defendants at Trial of Action Reversed by Court of Appeal, and instead thereof Judgment Ordered to be Entered for Plaintiff for Amount to be Assessed by Referee—Interest—Date of Judgment from which Interest to Run—Antedating Judgment.—Judgment for defendants at the trial of an action for unliquidated damages was reversed by the Court of Appeal, and it was ordered that instead thereof judgment should be entered for the plaintiff for such sum as damages as should be assessed by a referee to be agreed upon by the parties. The parties subsequently agreed that the damage should be a certain agreed sum and interest. The plaintiff applied to the Court of Appeal that judgment should be entered for him for the agreed amount and interest from the date of the judgment at the trial of the action in the first instance:—Held, that judgment must be entered for the plaintiff for the agreed amount and interest from the date on which the judgment was pronounced in the Court of Appeal. Borthwick v. Elderslie Steamship Co. (No. 2), 74 L. J. K.B. 772; [1905] 2 K.B. 516; 93 L. T. 387; 53 W. R. 643; 10 Asp. M.C. 121; 21 T. L. R. 630—C.A.

Judgment Signed against One of Two Defendants—Joint Liability Negatived—Principal and Agent—Alternative Remedy—Election.—In an action against a husband and wife on the footing of a joint liability the plaintiff, on certain admissions made by the wife, obtained judgment against her for 4*l.* in respect of the amount claimed, with leave to defend as to the residue, the husband being given unconditional leave to defend as to the whole amount, and the action was remitted for trial to the County Court. At the trial the jury found that the plaintiff gave credit to the husband alone, and negatived the joint liability. The County Court Judge entered judgment against the husband for the claim, less the amount for which judgment had been signed against the wife, and the Divisional Court (LORD ALVERSTONE, C.J., and KENNEDY, J.; dissentiente JELF, J.) affirmed his decision:—Held, that on the finding of the jury the judgment against the wife for an indivisible part of the claim was a complete bar to the claim against the husband, and that the County Court Judge was wrong in entering judgment against the husband. Morel Brothers v. Westmorland (Earl) (72 L. J. K.B. 66; 73 L. J. K.B. 93; [1908] 1 K.B. 64; [1904] A.C. 11) applied. French v. Howie, 75 L. J. K.B. 980; [1906] 2 K.B. 674; 95 L. T. 274—C.A.

Joint Debtors—Judgment Signed against One Defendant.—A took out a summons under Order XIV. rule 2, against B, C, and D, who were alleged to be jointly indebted to him. B took no further part in the proceedings, but C and D shewed cause by filing affidavits. On the hearing of the summons leave was given to sign judgment against B, and liberty to C and D to defend. A signed judgment against B:—Held, although B, C, and D were sued as jointly liable, and judgment was signed against B, yet that was not a bar to further proceedings against C and D, the general rule of law, as laid down in McLeod v. Power (67 L. J. Ch. 551; [1898] 2 Ch. 295) being no longer applicable to cases falling under Order XIV. rule 5. Walton v. Topakyan, 53 W. R. 657—C.A.

Judgment against Agent—Setting Aside—Reviving Rights against Principal—Election.—Two defendants, M. & W., having been sued in the High Court for goods sold and delivered, judgment was entered against M., and the action as against W. was remitted for trial to the County Court. At the trial it was found that the debt was contracted by W. alone, and that M. had merely acted as his agent. Judgment was postponed, and the judgment against M. was set aside. The learned County Court Judge then entered judgment against W.:—Held, that the judgment against W. was wrong, as the plaintiffs had conclusively elected to enforce their remedy against M. Cross v. Matthews, 91 L. T. 500; 20 T. L. R. 603—D.

Account—Extraneous Matters in—Disallowance of Entries.—Where the scope and ambit of an account are finally determined by an order of the Court, entries relating to matters outside the order must be disallowed. Bennicourt v. Le Gendre, 69 L. J. P.C. 21; [1900] A.C. 173—P.C.

Service—Notice of Judgment in Lieu of.—The Court having ordered an unregistered society to be wound up, in view of the numerous members and to save expense, allowed service of the judgment by circular on members whose addresses were known, and by advertisement on members whose addresses were unknown. Lead Co.'s Workmen's Fund Society, In re; Lowes v. Lead Smelting Co., 73 L. J. Ch. 628; [1904] 2 Ch. 196—Warrington, J.

Enforcing Order—Lancaster Palatine Court—Defendant out of Jurisdiction.—In order to enforce against a defendant an order for leave to issue a writ of attachment made by the Court of the County Palatine of Lancaster, the defendant having submitted to the jurisdiction, but being out of the jurisdiction of that Court, application should be made to the High Court under the Court of Chancery of Lancaster Act, 1850, s. 15. Dunmore v. Wharam, 67 L. J. Ch. 221; 73 L. T. 38; 46 W. R. 366—Byrne, J.

Judgment for Recovery of Money—Enforcing—Four-day Order.—A judgment in the form that the plaintiff recover money from the defendant cannot be supplemented or enforced under Order XLII. rule 3 by a subsequent four-day order for payment by the defendant, and it makes no difference that the defendant is a defaulting trustee. Drewett v. Edwards (87 L. T. 622) and Hulbert v. Cathcart (63 L. J. Q.B. 121; [1894] 1 Q.B. 244) followed and approved. Oddy, In re; Major v. Harness, 75 L. J. Ch. 141; [1906] 1 Ch. 93; 94 L. T. 146; 54 W. R. 291—C.A.

Sale by the Court—Debenture-holder's Action—Property Forming Debenture-holder's Security in Jeopardy—Motion for Judgment on Admissions in Pleadings.—On motion for judgment on admissions in the pleadings in a debenture-holder's action in which the plaintiff sued on behalf of himself and all other debenture-holders, and the debenture-holders were entitled to a charge on the company's property, the Court directed a sale of the company's property under Order LI. rule 1b, upon proof of the company's insolvency and the jeopardy of the property comprising the debenture-holder's security, although the principal moneys secured by the debentures were not due, no interest thereon being in arrear for six months, and no resolution having been passed, or order made, for the winding up of the company. In such a case the admitted allegations of the statement of claim should be verified by affidavit. Day and Night Advertising Co., In re; Upward v. Day and Night Advertising Co., 45 W. R. 362—Cozens-Hardy, J.

Order for Sale of Land—Appointment of Person to Convey—Form of Order.—Form of order and mode of execution of conveyance where the Court orders a sale of land and a person entitled, being a party to the proceeding, refuses to execute the deed. Beale v. Bragg, [1902] 1 Ir. R. 99—V.C.

Writ of Possession—Costs.—Under section 5 of the Judicature Act, 1890, the Court or Judge has power on summons to order that the costs of a writ of possession shall be taxed and paid by the unsuccessful defendant to the plaintiff in an action for possession of land. Dartford Brewery Co. v. Moseley, 75 L. J. K.B. 279; [1906] 1 K.B. 462; 94 L. T. 263; 54 W. R. 333; 22 T. L. R. 304—C.A.

Mistake—Power of Court to Rectify in Order pending Appeal.—The Court has power to rectify a mistake or omission in an order, even though an appeal against such order is pending in the Court of Appeal at the time of such application to rectify, and in spite also of the fact that the application to rectify is made by the party who is appealing against the order as drawn up. E. v. E. (otherwise T.), 72 L. J. P. 44; [1903] P. 88; 88 L. T. 570—Jeune, P.

Amendment—Power of Court—Inherent Jurisdiction—Accidental Slip or Omission.]—The plaintiffs in an action recovered judgment with costs for an amount to be ascertained by a referee. The amount was ascertained and final judgment entered for the amount so found, with costs. In preparing the plaintiff's bill of costs the referee's fees were accidentally omitted, and the Taxing Master's certificate passed for a sum which did not include these fees:—Held, that notwithstanding the final judgment and certificate, the Court had power under Order XXVIII. rule 11, and semble also by its inherent jurisdiction, to make an order referring the fees for taxation and amending the Master's certificate, if necessary. Fritz v. Hobson (49 L. J. Ch. 735; 14 Ch. D. 542) approved. Chessum v. Gordon, 70 L. J. K.B. 394; [1901] 1 K.B. 694; 84 L. T. 137; 49 W. R. 309—C.A.

Action of Review—Apparent Error.]—The High Court has now no jurisdiction to review its own order by means of an independent action on the ground of error of law apparent upon the face of the order, but the party complaining must appeal to the Court of Appeal. Bright v. Sellar (No. 1), 72 L. J. K.B. 921; [1904] 1 K.B. 6; 89 L. T. 431; 52 W. R. 148; 20 T. L. R. 12—C.A.

Setting Aside on Ground of Fraud.]—An action to set aside a judgment on the ground of fraud ought not to be allowed to proceed unless the plaintiff can produce evidence shewing a reasonable probability of the alleged fraud being established; but (per VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.) such evidence need not necessarily be of such a character that it would be evidence in the action itself. Birch v. Birch, 71 L. J. P. 58; [1902] P. 130; 86 L. T. 364; 50 W. R. 437—C.A.

— Obtained by Perjury.]—A judgment obtained in an action will not be set aside in a subsequent action brought for that purpose upon mere proof that the judgment was obtained by perjury. Baker v. Wadsworth, 67 L. J. Q.B. 301—D.

— Obtained by Fraud.]—The Court has jurisdiction to set aside a judgment obtained by fraud in a subsequent action brought for that purpose. Cole v. Langford, 67 L. J. Q.B. 698; [1898] 2 Q.B. 36—D.

6 Edw. 7 c. 34 is the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1906.

2. AUTHORITY OF AGENT.

(a) Generally.

Instructions to Procure a Tenant—Authority of House Agent to Enter into Agreement for Lease.—Estate agents as such have no general authority to enter into contracts for their employers. Their business is to find offers and submit them to their employers for acceptance. If any authority to enter into contracts is given in any case it must be proved, and cannot be inferred from the relation existing between the parties. Thuman v. Best, 97 L. T. 239—Parker, J.

Bills of Exchange—Authority to Indorse “per pro” for Purpose of Paying Bills into Bank—No Authority to Cash Bills—Agent Cashing Bills.—The plaintiff, who carried on business in Paris and elsewhere as Wys, Muller & Co., had two branches in London, at one of which he had a manager, named C., who had verbal authority to conduct the business of that branch, to receive bills and cheques sent in payment of accounts collected abroad, and to indorse the bills and cheques “per pro Wys, Muller & Co.—H. E. C.,” for the purpose of paying them into the plaintiff's banking account. He had no authority to cash bills or cheques. Certain bills received at the office were indorsed by C., some “Wys, Muller & Co.” only, and some “Wys, Muller & Co., per pro.” C. took these bills to the defendant, to whom he was known as the agent of the plaintiff, and asked him to cash them for him to pay wages and small disbursements. The defendant cashed them and handed the proceeds to C., who misappropriated same. In an action for the conversion of the bills the jury found that C. had no authority to indorse otherwise than per procurator; that the plaintiff did not hold C. out as having general authority to indorse or to cash cheques; that as to the bills indorsed per pro it was done for the purpose of defrauding the plaintiff; and that the defendant was a holder in good faith:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the amount of the bills. Gompertz v. Cook, 20 T. L. R. 106—Wright, J.

Libel—Liability of Corporation for its Agent's Tort.—The ordinary doctrines of agency and of master and servant are as applicable to corporations as to private persons, whether they arise in questions of contracts or of torts and frauds. A corporation is therefore liable for the publication by its agent of a libel when the agent is acting in the course and within the scope of his employment. Dicta to the contrary effect of LORD CRANWORTH in Western Bank of Scotland v. Addie (L. R. 1 H. L. Sc. 145, 167) and of LORD BRAMWELL in Abrath v. North-Eastern Railway (55 L. J. Q.B. 457, 458; 11 App. Cas. 247, 250) disapproved. Citizens Life Assurance Co. v. Brown, 73 L. J. P.C. 102; [1904] A.C. 423; 90 L. T. 739; 53 W. R. 176; 20 T. L. R. 497—P.C.

Holding out—Ratification.—B. sold a race-horse to H., a minor, upon the representation by H. that his mother would pay. On former occasions H. had, to B.'s knowledge, purchased horses for which the mother afterwards paid. The mother allowed the son to keep a pack of hounds at her residence, and paid for his equipment as master. She went frequently to races to see her son ride, and was kept informed, when not present, of the results of races in which he engaged. In an action by B. against the mother for the price of the horse, it was contended that the mother's conduct in relation to the son's former purchase transactions and her acquiescence in his sporting proclivities constituted the son her general agent for the purchase of horses. The case was tried twice, owing to a disagreement of the jury at the first trial, and in the interval between the trials the mother entered into negotiations with B. for the return of the horse, a course which B. agreed to accept upon two alternative conditions which the mother agreed to consider; and this incident was relied upon by B. at the second trial as a ratification by the mother of the contract with the son:—Held, that the facts proved did not amount to evidence of general agency in the son. Held, also, that no multiplication of acts as special agent can convert a special into a general agent so as to bind a principal in a transaction of this kind. Held, also, that the negotiations between the trials were not of such a character as to amount to ratification by the mother. Baxett v. Irvine, [1907] 2 Ir. R. 462—C.A.

Illegal Distress.—A broker, to whom a warrant of distress was handed by the defendant vestry to be executed, illegally seized certain goods of the plaintiff in executing the warrant. When the plaintiff knew of this he wrote to the defendants demanding reparation, and in reply to his letter the defendants wrote that their solicitors would accept service of any process he thought proper to issue:—Held, that this reply was evidence of a ratification by them of the broker's illegal act, and that they were liable in damages. Carter v. St. Mary Abbott's Vestry, 64 J. P. 548—C.A.

Unauthorised Borrowing by Manager of Branch Business for Purposes of Business—Use of Borrowed Money in Payment of Business Debts—Right of Lender to Recover from Prin-

Principal Money so Used.—The defendants, who carried on business as shipowners in Liverpool, established a branch business in London under the sole management of one H., with power to sign the firm's name. An account was opened at a London bank in their name, and H. alone drew upon that account. H. being in want of money borrowed various sums at different times from the plaintiff, who lent them for the purposes of the firm. The greater proportion of the sums so borrowed was paid by H. into the defendants' account at the bank, and practically the whole of the amounts so paid in were used by H. for the purpose of paying certain debts for which the defendants were legally liable in respect of the branch business. The sums borrowed by H. were entered in the books as loans by the plaintiff to the defendants, but it did not appear that they had ever seen the entries. In an action by the plaintiff on a bill of exchange, accepted by H. in the defendants' name, and in the alternative for money lent, the defendants pleaded that H. had no authority from them to borrow money:—Held, that the plaintiff was, in accordance with the equitable principle laid down by LORD SELBORNE, L.J., in Blackburn Building Society v. Cunliffe, Brooks & Co. (52 L. J. Ch., at p. 96; 22 Ch. D., at p. 70), entitled to have an account taken of, and to be repaid by the defendants, so much of the money lent which had been actually used in payment of debts in respect of which the defendants were legally liable. Bannatyne v. MacIver, 75 L. J. K.B. 120; [1906] 1 K.B. 103; 94 L. T. 150; 54 W. R. 293—C.A.

Repairs to Ship—Ratification.—Where the plaintiffs contracted with the agent of an absent shipowner to effect certain specified repairs (all confined to damage by stranding), and instead of doing the work as stipulated alleged that they had, on the agent's authority, done the equivalent thereto or better, and in the same contract stipulated that they should be paid for repairs due to deterioration at scheduled prices stated by them,—Held, that it appearing that the agent's authority to their knowledge was limited to the said specified repairs, they could not recover on the contract, which was an entire one, and in its entirety had never been performed:—Held, further, that the shipowner having taken the ship as repaired and sold it, did not thereby ratify the contract. Appleby v. Myers (L. R. 2 C.P. 651) followed. Norman v. The Liddesdale, 69 L. J. P.C. 44; [1900] A.C. 190; 82 L. T. 331; 9 Asp. M.C. 45—P.C.

Party Invested with Indicia of Ownership—Estoppel—Mortgage—Priority—Conflicting Equities—Negligence—Fraud.—There is no general rule of law that, where one of two innocent parties must suffer for the acts of a third party, that innocent party who has enabled such third party to occasion the loss must himself sustain the loss; but there is a general rule of law that in such a case an innocent party who has enabled the third party to occasion the loss by his neglect of some duty owing from him to the other innocent party must himself sustain the loss. Rimmer v. Webster, 71 L. J. Ch. 561; [1902] 2 Ch. 163; 86 L. T. 491; 50 W. R. 517—Farwell, J.

Where, accordingly, an owner of property invests another person with his indicia of title, neither intending, nor giving grounds for a legitimate presumption that he intends, that such person should deal with the property with some third party, the owner is not primarily liable, as between himself and an innocent third party, for any loss occasioned by a dealing with the property, unauthorised by him, between the innocent third party and the person so invested with the indicia of title; for no duty on the part of the owner can be inferred towards the third party, and there cannot accordingly be any neglect of such duty. Ib.

Where, however, an owner of property invests another person with his indicia of title, intending, or giving grounds for a legitimate presumption that he intends, that such person should deal with the property with some third party in a limited manner, the owner in such a case is primarily liable, as between himself and an innocent third party whom he has neglected to inform of the existence and extent of the limitation, for any loss occasioned by a dealing with the property between the innocent third party and the person so invested with the indicia of title in excess of the limit imposed; for a duty is inferred on the part of the owner to inform the third party, whom he invites to deal with the property, of the existence and extent of the limitation; and for any loss arising from the neglect of such duty the owner is primarily liable as between himself and the third party. Ib. And see FACTOR, infra, col. 1969.

Payment by Agent on Account—Inference of Promise to Pay Balance.—An agent who has authority to pay a debt of his principal has authority to promise to pay it; and where an agent acting within the scope of his authority makes a payment on account of a debt of his principal, and nothing more is said or done, a promise to pay the balance of the debt will be inferred so as to take the case out of the Statute of Limitations. Hale, In re; Lilley v. Foad, 68 L. J. Ch. 517; [1899] 2 Ch. 107; 80 L. T. 827; 47 W. R. 579—C.A.

Coachman Pledging Master's Credit—Liability of Master.—The mere relation of master and coachman does not of itself invest the coachman with ostensible authority to pledge his master's credit for forage. Wright v. Glynn, 71 L. J. K.B. 497; [1902] 1 K.B. 745; 86 L. T. 373; 50 W. R. 402—C.A.

Act done for Interests of Agent—Liability of Principal.—Where an act done by an agent on behalf of his principal is authorised by the terms of an authority given to the agent by the principal, the act is binding on the principal as to all persons dealing in good faith and for valuable consideration with the agent, and the principal cannot escape from liability upon the ground that the act was done by the agent in abuse of his authority, for his own purposes, and not in the interest of the principal. Hambro v. Burnand, 73 L. J. K.B. 669; [1904] 2 K.B. 10; 90 L. T. 803; 52 W. R. 533; 9 Com. Cas. 251; 20 T. L. R. 398—C.A.

Warranty of Authority—Signature of Contract—Misrepresentation of Fact—Damages.—In order to enable a plaintiff to maintain an action for damages against a defendant who has purported to sign a contract on behalf of an alleged principal, the plaintiff must prove a representation by the defendant that he was authorised so to sign when in fact he was not authorised, and that such misrepresentation was believed. Collen v. Wright (27 L. J. Q.B. 215; 8 E. & B. 647) must be considered as having overruled Smout v. Ilbery (12 L. J. Ex. 357; 10 M. & W. 1). Halbot v. Lens, 70 L. J. Ch. 125; [1901] 1 Ch. 344; 83 L. (b) Power of Attorney.

Construction—General Power of Borrowing.—A power of attorney authorising an agent in England to purchase goods in connection with the business carried on by his principal in the colonies, and either for cash or on credit, and "where necessary in connection with any purchases made on my behalf as aforesaid or in connection with my said business" to make, draw, and accept bills of exchange, and to sign the name of the principal to any cheques on the London banking account of the principal, does not confer on the agent a general borrowing power. Montaignac v. Shitta (15 App. Cas. 357) distinguished. Jacobs v. Morris, 70 L. J. Ch. 133; [1901] 1 Ch. 261; 84 L. T. 112; 49 W. R. 365—Farwell, J.

Loan to Agent Secured by Bill of Exchange—Duty to Enquire as to Agent's Authority—Payment into Principal's London Banking Account—Money Had and Received to Use of Lender.—Money borrowed by the agent under the power secured by bills of exchange accepted by him in the name of his principal and paid into the London banking account, and then drawn out by the agent and applied for his own purposes, cannot be recovered from the principal in an action "for money had and received" to the use of the lender in the absence of proof by the lender that the principal knew or had the means of knowledge that the money, whilst it remained in the banking account, was the money of the lender and not of the agent, or else that the principal had the benefit of it. Moses v. Macferlan (2 Burr. 1005; 1 W. Bl. 219) and Marsh v. Keating (1 Bing. N.C. 198) discussed and applied. Ib.

General Power of Borrowing—Excess of Authority—Loan to Agent without Enquiry—Payment into Principal's Banking Account—Misappropriation by Agent—Money Had and Received—Estoppel.—Plaintiff was sole partner in an Australian firm. The defendants had dealt with his firm since 1889. In January, 1899, the plaintiff gave to his agent in England a power of attorney to purchase goods in connection with the plaintiff's business, and either for cash or on credit, "and for me and on my behalf, and where necessary in connection with any purchases made on my behalf as aforesaid or in connection with my said business," to make, draw, sign, accept, or indorse any bills of exchange or promissory notes which should be requisite or proper, and to sign the plaintiff's name, or his trading name, to any cheques on his banking account in London. The attorney, purporting to act under the power, obtained from the defendants a loan of 4,000*l.*, and accepted bills of exchange for that amount in the name of the firm per pro himself. He represented to the defendants that he had full power to borrow, and produced the power, but they accepted his word, and did not read the power. The 4,000*l.* was paid by two cheques of the defendants in favour of the plaintiff's firm. The attorney indorsed these cheques, and paid them into the London banking account of the plaintiff's firm. He afterwards drew out the whole sum, and applied it to his own purposes. The plaintiff brought this action to restrain the negotiation of the bills. The defendants counterclaimed for payment of the money due on the bills, or, in the alternative, for the 4,000*l.*, as money had and received by the plaintiff to their use. The Judge found that the plaintiff had no knowledge of the borrowing by the attorney, and got no benefit from it:—Held, first, that the power of attorney conferred no general power to borrow, and the claim for the money due on the bills of exchange failed; secondly, that the defendants must be taken to have had notice of the terms of the power, and that the attorney had no general power to borrow, and they could not recover the 4,000*l.* as money had and received by the plaintiff to their use. Jacobs v. Morris, 71 L. J. Ch. 363; [1902] 1 Ch. 316; 86 L. T. 275; 50 W. R. 371—C.A.

Marsh v. Keating (1 Bing. N.C. 198; 2 Cl. & F. 250) discussed. Per STIRLING, L.J.—According to the principle of that case, to make a man liable for money of another passed through his banking account as for money had and received to the use of that other, he must know or have had the means of knowing, while it remained to his credit, that it was the money of the other. Per VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—Quere, whether it was meant to decide in that case that knowledge or means of knowledge in such a case was essential to liability. Ib.

Power to Mortgage—Excess of Authority—Liability of Donor.—D. gave G. a power of attorney authorising him to buy, sell, charge, and transfer in any form whatsoever any estate, stocks, or funds, "following his letters of instructions and private advices which, if necessary, shall be considered part of these presents." G. executed a mortgage upon property to which D. became entitled upon the death of his mother:—Held, that the power authorised the execution of the mortgage, although as between D. and G. the mortgage was unauthorised. Davy v. Waller, 81 L. T. 107—North, J.

Mortgagee—Power of Sale—Right to Exercise.—A power of attorney given by a mortgagee authorising the donee of the power to "recover and receive all sums of money" owing or payable to the principal "by virtue of any security" and "to give sign and execute receipts releases and other discharges for the same" and "to sell any real or personal property now or hereafter belonging" to the principal, does not enable the donee to exercise the power of sale over real property conferred on the mortgagee by his mortgage deed. Dowson & Jenkins' Contract, In re, 73 L. J. Ch. 684; [1904] 2 Ch. 219; 91 L. T. 121—C.A.

Power Coupled with an Interest—Revocability—Power of Attorney.]—Where an agreement is entered into for sufficient consideration, and either forms part of a security or is given for the purpose of securing some benefit to the donee of an authority, the authority is irrevocable. Frith v. Frith, 75 L. J. P.C. 50; [1906] A.C. 254; 94 L. T. 383; 54 W. R. 618; 22 T. L. R. 388—P.C.

The appellant was by deeds executed by the tenant for life and tenants in remainder constituted their attorney to receive the rents, manage the estates, and pay the debts of the owners. He entered into possession, and with the consent of the tenant for life created a mortgage on the property, giving the mortgagee a personal guarantee to pay the mortgage debt. Notice to revoke the powers of attorney was given before the mortgage debt was paid. There was no reference in the powers of attorney to the mortgage debt or to the guarantee, and there was no charge or lien in them in favour of the mortgagee, and they formed no part of the mortgagee's security:—Held, that the authority conferred upon the appellant was not a power coupled with an interest, and was revocable. Ib.

Implied Warranty of Authority—Forged Signature—Transfer of Consols—Bank of England—Liability of Stockbroker—Indemnity.]—One of two trustees of stock standing in their joint names in the books of the Bank of England sold it under a power of attorney, to which the signature of his co-trustee was forged, and the Bank allowed a stockbroker who innocently acted under the power to transfer the stock to other persons. The Bank having been made to replace the stock:—Held, that the stockbroker was liable to indemnify the Bank upon the ground that he had impliedly warranted his authority to the Bank. Oliver v. Bank of England, 71 L. J. Ch. 388; [1902] 1 Ch. 610; 86 L. T. 248; 50 W. R. 340; 7 Com. Cas. 89—C.A.

The principle laid down in Collen v. Wright (27 L. J. Q.B. 215; 8 E. & B. 647) is not confined to the simple case where a professed agent, acting without authority, induces a person to enter into a contract with a supposed principal, but has a wider application, as stated in Firbank v. Humphreys (56 L. J. Q.B. 57; 18 Q.B. D. 54), and that principle is not affected by the decision of the House of Lords in Derry v. Peek (58 L. J. Ch. 864; 14 App. Cas. 337). Ib.

— Authority—Forged Signature—Transfer of Consols—Liability of Stockbroker—Indemnity.]—Where a person, proposing to act as the agent of another, induces a third person to enter into a transaction with him on the faith of such agency, whereas in fact no such agency exists, he is liable for any injury sustained by such third person in consequence of such untrue representation, whether or not he believed he was acting with the authority of the alleged principal. Starkey v. Bank of England, 72 L. J. Ch. 402; [1903] A.C. 114; 83 L. T. 244; 51 W. R. 513; 8 Com. Cas. 142—H.L. (E.)

One of two trustees of stock standing in their joint names in the books of the Bank of England sold it under a power of attorney, to which the signature of his co-trustee was forged, and the bank allowed a stockbroker who innocently acted under the power to transfer the stock to other persons, and were held liable to replace the stock:—Held, that the stockbroker was liable to indemnify the bank upon the ground that he had impliedly warranted his authority to the bank. Ib.

Execution by Lunatic—Validity.]—See LUNATIC, col. 1433.

3. CONTRACTS BY AGENTS.

Whether Contract one of Agency or of Subordination and Service—Implied Undertaking to Continue Employment.]—Where there is a contract to employ another as an agent merely, but with no service or subordination, there is no implied undertaking that the agent is to be supplied with the means of earning his commission. But if the contract is one of service, then the commission is merely intended to be in the place of salary, and the contract cannot be determined without compensation to the servant. The defendant, who carried on business in India, appointed the plaintiff to be his sole buying agent in Great Britain for ten years, the defendant to send all orders to the plaintiff, who was to receive 8½ per cent. on all goods bought by or for the defendant, whatever their destination in India might happen to be, the commission to be paid quarterly. The plaintiff was to keep proper books of account of all incidental expenses, which were to be paid by the defendant together with the commission every quarter, and in case any firms should refuse to supply goods unless invoiced direct to the plaintiff, he was to be under no obligation to place such orders unless he was fully satisfied that the bank would hand him cash covering such purchases immediately these goods were ready for shipment:—Held, that there was no implied contract that the defendant would continue to carry on business for the term of ten years so as to supply the plaintiff with orders. For commercial purposes Rangoon is not in India. Rhodes v. Forwood (47 L. J. Ex. 896; 1 App. Cas. 256) and Turner v. Goldsmith (60 L. J. Q.B. 247; [1891] 1 Q.B. 544) explained. Northey v. Trevillion, 7 Com. Cas. 201—Phillimore, J.

Contract by Agent in Name of Principal, but for Agent's Benefit—Liability of Principal.]—Where an agent is authorised to underwrite policies "in the name and on behalf of" principals, such a mandate does not authorise him to make a contract which, although the agent purports to make it on behalf of the principal, is in fact to enure only for the benefit of the agent. If a person contracts with an agent, it is for him to see as best he can that the agent is acting within his authority. Hambro v. Burnand, 72 L. J. K.B. 662; [1903] 2 K.B. 399; 89 L. T. 180; 51 W. R. 652; 8 Com. Cas. 252—Bigham, J.

Contract Made by Person in his Own Name—Intention to Contract for Another without Authority—Ratification by Intended Principal.]

—A contract made by a man purporting and professing to act on his own behalf alone, and not on behalf of a principal, but having an undisclosed intention to give the benefit of the contract to a third party, cannot be ratified by that third party so as to render him able to sue or liable to be sued on the contract. Keighley, Mawsted & Co. v. Durant, 70 L. J. K.B. 662; [1901] A.C. 240; 84 L. T. 777—H.L. (E.)

Broker and Customer—Authority of Agent to Bind Principal—Evidence—Inference.]

—The fact of a principal allowing an agent to obtain orders for him which he may or may not execute, as he thinks fit—this being well known to the person giving the orders—does not afford any evidence from which the inference of fact can reasonably be drawn that the principal holds out the agent either as having authority to bind him by contracts or as representing that he, the principal, will execute the orders brought to him by the agent:—So held, per A. L. SMITH, L.J., and CHITTY, L.J.; COLLINS, L.J., dissenting. Spencer v. Browning, 67 L. J. Q.B. 389; [1898] 1 Q.B. 528; 78 L. T. 98; 46 W. R. 369—C.A.

Breach of Duty Outside Agency—Secret Commission—Absence of Fraud—Right of Agent to Retain Commission Received by Him.]

—Where an agent in effecting a sale of property for his principal has, without fraud, received a secret commission or discount in an incidental matter which is not connected with the agent's duty to sell, the principal is entitled to recover from the agent the secret commission or discount, but not commission which has been paid to the agent by way of remuneration for his services in effecting the sale. Andrew v. Ramsay (72 L. J. K.B. 865; [1903] 2 K.B. 635) distinguished. Hippesley v. Knee, 74 L. J. K.B. 68; [1905] 1 K.B. 1; 92 L. T. 20; 21 T. L. R. 5—D.

Real Property—Agent Authorised to Sell—Commission—Authority to Sign Contract.]

—Instructions given by an owner of real estate to an agent to sell the property for him, and an agreement to pay a commission on the purchase price accepted, are an authority to the agent to make a binding contract, including an authority to sign a contract for sale. Chadburn v. Moore (61 L. J. Ch. 674) and Hamer v. Sharp (44 L. J. Ch. 53; L. R. 19 Eq. 108) distinguished. Rosenbaum v. Belson, 69 L. J. Ch. 569; [1900] 2 Ch. 267; 82 L. T. 658; 48 W. R. 522—Buckley, J.

Repudiation by Purchaser—Fraudulent Intent of Agent—Subsequent Ratification by Principal.]

A principal may, in the absence of fraud on his part, ratify and adopt a contract made by his agent without his authority, notwithstanding that the other parties to it have before ratification repudiated it, and notwithstanding that the agent acted with fraudulent intent. Tiedemann and Ledermann, Frères, In re, 68 L. J. Q.B. 852; [1899] 2 Q.B. 66; 81 L. T. 191—D.

Agent's Liability to Third Party—Contract by Agent in Own Name.]

—The defender was appointed sales manager for a cycle company and for a tyre company under separate agreements, in which each company respectively authorised him to appoint travellers at its expense. Thereafter the defender employed the pursuer by a letter in these terms: "I beg to confirm arrangement made with you this day, and appoint you as representative for" the two companies "on following terms—45s. per week salary and 1½ per cent. commission on all orders for cycles sold by us or you. . . Yours truly, J. J. Shannessy." The letter was written on notepaper bearing as a heading the trade name and address of one of the companies:—Held, in an action by the pursuer against the defender for payment of commissions, that the latter was personally liable to the pursuer in respect that the letter above set out was signed by him in his own name without qualification, and that it contained no indication that he did not intend to bind himself as principal. Stewart v. Shannessy, 2 F. 1288—Ct. of Sess.

Independent Contractor—Abandonment of Possession, Management, and Control.]

—An owner does not abandon or properly transfer the possession, management, and control of a wreck by employing an independent contractor to raise it, although the person so employed be placed in the actual physical custody of the wreck. The Snark, 69 L. J. P. 41; [1900] P. 105; 82 L. T. 42; 48 W. R. 279; 9 Asp. M.C. 50—C.A.

4. TORTS BY AGENTS.

Fraud—Sale of Goods—Conduct of Principal Enabling Agent to Commit the Fraud—Estoppel.]

—The plaintiffs, who were timber merchants, imported timber which they warehoused at the docks. The timber when sold by them was delivered to purchasers by means of delivery orders addressed by the plaintiffs to the dock company. The plaintiffs gave their confidential clerk authority to sign delivery orders for the purpose of carrying through sales and gave the dock company notice to honour delivery orders signed by him. The clerk, by means of delivery orders signed by him in fraud of the plaintiffs, had certain timber at the docks transferred into a fictitious name, and then sold the timber in this fictitious name to the defendants, who acted bona fide in the transaction, and he converted the purchase-money to his own use. In an action against the defendants to recover damages for the conversion of the timber,—Held (STIRLING, L.J., dissenting), that the plaintiffs had, by their conduct in giving their clerk authority to sign delivery orders, enabled him to commit the fraud, and that therefore the loss must fall upon them. Farguharson v. King, 70 L. J. K.B. 985; [1901] 2 K.B. 697; 85 L. T. 264; 49 W. R. 673—C.A.

Dishonest Agent—Honest and Dishonest Acts—Commission—Scope of Agency.]

—An agent entered into an agreement with his principal to sell only the manufactured goods of the latter. In some cases he in fact sold these goods honestly; in others he made a fraudulent secret profit; in others he sold the similar goods of rival manufacturers:—Held, that, in taking an account of the moneys due to the principal from the agent as a result of the agency, the agent was bound to account for the profits made by him in selling the goods of the rival manufacturers, inasmuch as these sales had been made by him within the scope of his agency. Held, also, that, since the various transactions of the agency were severable, the agent was entitled to his commission in cases in which he had acted honestly, though not in those in which he had acted dishonestly. Andrew v. Ramsay & Co. (72 L. J. K.B. 865; [1903] 2 K.B. 635) distinguished. Nitedals Tændstikfabrik v. Bruster, 75 L. J. Ch. 798; [1906] 2 Ch. 671—Neville, J.

Money Collected for Principal Paid into Agent's General Banking Account—Disbursements Paid out of Account—Right of Principal to Follow Money in Bank.]—The B. company collected advance freights on account of the plaintiffs, and the course of business known and assented to by the latter was for the B. company to pay the freights when collected into their general account with the P. bank. They also paid into that account moneys of their own and freights collected for other shipowners. They paid disbursements on behalf of the plaintiffs by cheques drawn on the same account. Accounts were rendered periodically by the B. company to the plaintiffs shewing the freights received and disbursements made and the balance owing to the plaintiffs, or, as sometimes happened, the balance owing by the plaintiffs to the B. company. The B. company having gone into liquidation, and there being a large sum due to the plaintiffs for freights collected by the B. company, the plaintiffs claimed to be entitled to the amount standing to the credit of the B. company with the P. bank, alleging that it was the proceeds of freights collected on their account:—Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to follow the money in the hands of the P. bank, as there was no fiduciary relationship between the B. company and the plaintiffs, but merely the relationship of debtor and creditor. Hallett's Estate, In re (13 Ch. D. 696), considered. Wilson and Furness-Leyland Line v. British and Continental Shipping Co., 23 T. L. R. 397—Walton, J.

Libel—Agent Acting within the Scope of his Employment—Liability of Corporation for its Agent's Tort.]—The ordinary doctrines of agency and of master and servant are as applicable to corporations as to private persons, whether they arise in questions of contracts or of torts and frauds. A corporation is therefore liable for the publication by its agent of a libel when the agent is acting in the course and within the scope of his employment. Dicta to the contrary effect of LORD CRANWORTH in Western Bank of Scotland v. Addie (L. R. 1 H.L. Sc. 145, 167) and of LORD BRAMWELL in Abrath v. North-Eastern Railway (55 L. J. Q.B. 457, 458; 11 App. Cas. 247, 250) disapproved. Citizens Life Assurance Co. v. Brown, 73 L. J. P.C. 102; [1904] A.C. 428; 90 L. T. 739; 53 W. R. 176; 20 T. L. R. 497—P.C.

Misstatements by Agent—Measure of Damages.]—The measure of damages for which an agent is responsible in consequence of his misrepresentations is the actual loss which the principal thereby sustains, and does not include the anticipated profit which the principal might have made if the representation had been true. Cassaboglon v. Gibb (52 L. J. Q.B. 538; 11 Q.B. D. 797) approved. Salvesen v. Rederi

Aktiebolaget Nordstjernen, 74 L. J. P.C. 96; [1905] A.C. 302; 92 L. T. 575—H.L. (Sc.)

The respondents, foreign shipowners, employed the appellants, shipbrokers, on the usual terms of remuneration to find freight for a steamship. The appellants reported that they had concluded a bargain, whereas no bargain had been concluded. Three days afterwards the respondents learned that the arrangement was not to be carried out. The respondents made no efforts to look for another charter and employed this ship under a current contract at a lower rate. They first brought an action against the intending charterers, having been misled by the appellants that there was a concluded contract. The charterers' defence was that there was no such contract, and the action was abated. Then the respondents brought the present action against the appellants claiming loss of freight and the expenses incurred in the action against the charterers:—Held, that the respondents were not entitled to damages for loss of freight, but were entitled to damages for the trouble taken, actual outlay, and expenses of the abortive action. Collen v. Wright (26 L. J. Q.B. 147; 8 E. & B. 647) distinguished. Ib.

—Statement made in Course of Business—Estoppel.]—M'N., whose motor car was being repaired at the works of M. & Co., communicated to M. & Co. his intention to effect a policy of insurance against the destruction or injury of the motor car by fire while on their premises. Thereupon M. & Co., as was found by the jury at the trial, negligently, carelessly, and without due and proper care, represented to M'N. that they had insured the car for him, which in fact they had not done, in consequence of which representation M'N. refrained from insuring the car. The car, with other goods (which were in fact insured) on the premises of M. & Co., was afterwards destroyed by fire, and M. & Co. were paid the insurance moneys in respect of the goods actually insured:—Held, that, on the facts so found, M'N. was entitled to recover damages from M. & Co. for the loss of his car. M'Neill v. Millen, [1907] 2 Ir. R. 328—C.A. And see INSURANCE AGENT, infra, col. 1972.

Misrepresentation by Agent to Principal that Contract Concluded—Shipbroker—Measure of Damages.]—Where a person, by asserting the authority of a principal, induces another person to enter into any transaction which he would not have entered into but for that assertion, and the assertion turns out to be untrue to the injury of the person to whom it is made, it must be taken that the agent undertook that it was true, and he is personally liable to the injured person for the damage that he has sustained by loss of bargain. Rideri Aktiebolaget Nordstjernen v. Salvesen, 6 F. 64—Ct. of Sess.

A shipbroker, negotiating for a charterparty between a shipowner and a coal merchant, received an offer from the shipowner for a voyage charter at a specified rate per ton, loading to be completed one hundred and twenty hours after arrival at port of loading. The coal merchant agreed to the rate of freight, but insisted that the loading clause should be—loading to be completed within ninety-six hours after berth-

ing. Ultimately, the shipbroker, being willing to take the risk of the difference, wrote to each of the parties that the contract had been concluded on his own terms. The coal merchant repudiated the contract on the ground that his offer was not a firm offer. In an action of damages by the shipowner against the shipbroker,—Held, that the shipowner was entitled to rely on the shipbroker's representation that a contract had been completed, and was entitled to recover from the shipbroker, as damages, the difference between the profit which would have been made on the abortive contract and the best terms which could be obtained in the market when the misrepresentation was discovered. Ib.

Duty of Agent—Limitation of Duty—Failure to Provide for Event not Contemplated by either Party.]—An agent is bound to take reasonable care in doing what he undertakes to do, but is not bound to meet consequences which are not contemplated in the contract, and the probability of which is as well known to his principal as to himself. Commonwealth Portland Cement Co. v. Weber, Lohmann & Co., 74 L. J. P.C. 25; [1905] A.C. 66; 91 L. T. 813; 53 W. R. 337; 10 Asp. M.C. 27; 21 T. L. R. 149—P.C.

The respondents undertook to lighter and load machinery of the appellants at fixed charges, and to pass the goods through the Custom House without extra payment. It was common knowledge that duties were about to be imposed on imported machinery, and the respondents might have cleared the goods in time to escape the taxation. They did not do so, however, although the goods were cleared within the time prescribed by the Customs regulations:—Held, that the respondents were under no legal obligation to anticipate the action of the Government, and were not liable to the appellants for the duty paid, and that the Judge at the trial was right in withdrawing the case from the jury and entering a nonsuit. Ib.

5. EXPRESS TRUST.

Moneys Entrusted to Agent for Special Purpose—Express Trust—Limitations, Statute of.]—Where a principal has remitted moneys to an agent for the purpose of being invested in the purchase of lands, an express trust is created, and the Statute of Limitations will be no bar to an action brought by the principal against the agent for an account in order to recover the balance for the moneys remitted to him, and not applied for the particular purpose. North American Land and Timber Co. v. Watkins, 73 L. J. Ch. 626; [1904] 2 Ch. 233; 91 L. T. 425; 20 T. L. R. 642—C.A. Affirming, 52 W. R. 360—Kekewich, J.

6. RIGHT OF INDEMNITY.

Indemnity of Agent—Stockbroker—Unjustifiable Sale by Broker.]—A stockbroker who, in the ordinary course of business upon the London Stock Exchange, has rendered himself personally liable to a jobber upon the purchase of stocks on behalf of a principal, and who has contracted for good consideration with his principal that the stocks shall be carried over and not sold before the next settling day, loses his right of indemnity against his principal if before that day in breach of his contract he wrongfully sells the stocks against his principal. Duncan v. Hill (42 L. J. Ex. 179; L. R. 8 Ex. 242) and Lacey v. Hill; Scrimgeour's Claim (42 L. J. Ch. 657; L. R. 8 Ch. 921) discussed. Hartas v. Ribbons (58 L. J. Q.B. 187; 22 Q.B. D. 254) distinguished. Ellis v. Pond, 67 L. J. Q.B. 345; [1898] 1 Q.B. 426; 78 L. T. 125—C.A.

The plaintiff, a stockbroker, who had purchased for the defendant 35,000l. railway stock upon the London Stock Exchange, upon the carrying-over day upon the Stock Exchange agreed with the defendant to carry over the stock until the then next settling day, and upon the same day purchased for the plaintiff further 10,000l. railway stock for the next settling day. Before the settling day arrived the plaintiff wrongfully and unjustifiably, with the object of closing the account between himself and the defendant, sold the stocks at prices less than the prices at which the 35,000l. stocks had been carried over and the 10,000l. stock had been purchased, and less also than the stocks would have realized if sold on the settling day. In an action by the plaintiff, who, according to the ordinary course of business upon the Stock Exchange, had rendered himself personally liable to the jobber in respect of the stocks, for an indemnity against the loss sustained by him upon the sale of the stocks,—Held (RIGBY, L.J., dissenting), that the sale being wrongful and contrary to the plaintiff's agreement with the defendant, he was not entitled to an indemnity. Per RIGBY, L.J. (in affirmance of MATHEW, J.), the plaintiff was entitled to be credited in account with the prices at which he purchased for the defendant, being charged by way of damages with the losses arising from the wrongful sales. Ib.

The plaintiff, a stockbroker, purchased certain stocks on the London Stock Exchange for the defendant. The plaintiff having paid for the stocks partly with moneys advanced by him by way of loan to the defendant, took delivery of the stocks to himself or his nominees, and held the stocks as security for the moneys advanced by him. The plaintiff, for good consideration, agreed with the defendant that he would not sell the stocks before a certain date. Before the arrival of the agreed date the plaintiff, in breach of his agreement, sold the stocks for prices less than they would have realised if sold on the agreed date:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the moneys advanced by him in payment of the stocks as money paid for the defendant at his request, but that the defendant was entitled to recover from the plaintiff in account damages in respect of the loss sustained by him by reason of the wrongful sale of the stocks. Ib.

7. REMUNERATION OF AGENT.

Commission—Introducing Purchaser—Time—Implied Term—Withdrawal by Vendor.]—When all the terms of an agreement are stated except the term as to the time when it is to be carried out, and there is no express stipulation as to the time, then it is an implied term that the agreement is to be performed within a reasonable time. The plaintiff was instructed by the defendant to find a purchaser for his house for 4,000*l.* On January 16 he found one S. ready and willing to pay that sum, who required possession by March 15. The defendant refused the offer on the ground that he could not give up possession on March 15. The jury found that from January 16 to March 15 was a reasonable time:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to his commission. Nosotti v. Auerbach, 79 L. T. 413—Bruce, J.

— Special Bargain—Purchaser Procured—Default of Purchaser—Purchase not Completed.]—The owner of certain houses, who was desirous of selling, made an agreement with an agent in the following terms:—"I agree to accept a sum of 1,150*l.* for the above property, and you are to be at liberty to receive anything over and above that as a commission, it being understood that I am to receive the full sum of 1,150*l.* without deduction." The agent found a purchaser who entered into a contract to purchase for 1,250*l.*, but the purchase was never completed owing to the default of the purchaser:—Held, that the agent was not entitled to recover commission under the agreement. Beale v. Bond, 84 L. T. 313—C.A.

— Payable on Purchase being Completed.]—The defendants, who were mortgagees of an estate, agreed to pay to the plaintiff a commission of 3 per cent. on the purchase money of the estate, with an additional 2 per cent. in the event of the purchase being completed by a certain date. It was agreed that the purchase would be considered completed if a definite offer and acceptance were made. Before the specified date a memorandum of agreement between the intending purchaser and the defendants was signed, by which the former undertook to send professional persons to verify the particulars of the property; and, provided he received a satisfactory report, he undertook to enter into a formal contract for the purchase of the estate for a named sum. The contract for the purchase was not signed until some time after the specified date. In an action to recover the 2 per cent. commission, — Held, that, as the memorandum of agreement contemplated a formal contract, the terms of which would require settlement, there was no definite offer and acceptance made on or before the specified date, and the 2 per cent. commission was not payable. Henry v. Gregory, 22 T. L. R. 53—Walton, J.

— Agreement to Pay Commission on Properties Purchased—Property Introduced to Principal—Promotion by Principal of Company to Purchase Property.]—The defendant brewery desired to acquire some public-houses in a particular district, and agreed to pay the plaintiff commission on all licensed property they might purchase through his introduction. Subsequently the defendants abandoned that idea, and instead promoted a new company, which ultimately acquired certain licensed property originally brought to the notice of the defendants by the plaintiff:—Held, that, as the new company was merely ancillary to the old, the commission was payable by the defendants. Gunn v. Shewell's Brewery Co., 50 W. R. 659—C.A.

— "When and if the purchase is completed by private treaty"—Binding Contract by Purchaser—Inability of Purchaser to Carry out Contract.]—The defendant gave to the plaintiff a commission note in these terms:—"If your friend is named and introduced within one week, and becomes the purchaser of the above hotel, you shall be paid as and by way of commission a sum of 50*l.* when and if the purchase is completed by private treaty." The plaintiff introduced his friend, who signed a formal contract to purchase the hotel for 2,000*l.*, of which 200*l.* was paid at once, and the balance was to be paid upon completion. The purchaser, being unable to find the balance of the purchase-money and carry out the contract, was released by the defendant, he retaining the 200*l.* paid as deposit:—Held, that, upon the true construction of the contract, the plaintiff was not entitled to the commission. Chapman v. Winson, 91 L. T. 17; 53 W. R. 19; 20 T. L. R. 663—C.A.

— Agent Employed to Sell House—Rescission of Employment—Subsequent Sale through Third Party.]—The plaintiffs were employed by the defendant to negotiate the sale of defendant's business on the terms that they were to receive a commission if they found a purchaser, but that if no sale took place there was to be no charge. The plaintiffs advertised the business for sale, and in October, 1904, introduced to the defendant one N. as a possible purchaser, who inspected the premises and stock, but made no offer. In February, 1905, the defendant, with the plaintiffs' approval, decided not to sell. In May, 1905, the plaintiffs claimed and were subsequently paid a small sum for their out-of-pocket expenses in the matter. In June, 1905, the defendant consulted a friend C. as to the sale of the business. C. knew N. and knew he was looking out for a business of the kind, but did not know of his introduction to the defendant by the plaintiffs. He suggested N. as a likely purchaser, and subsequently communicated with N., advising him to purchase. N. inspected the premises and stock, and made an offer, and after some negotiations between the defendant, N., and a third party, a price was fixed at which N. bought the business. The plaintiffs having brought an action claiming commission on the purchase-money, the jury found that the sale really and substantially proceeded from the plaintiffs' acts, and found for the plaintiffs for the commission claimed:—Held, that the verdict could not be sustained on the evidence, and that verdict and judgment should be entered for the defendant. Brandon v. Hanna, [1907] 2 Ir. R. 212—C.A.

— on Business Done—Termination of Employment—Notice—Subsequent Business.]—By an agreement in writing the plaintiff was engaged by the defendants to represent them in the sale of their goods in certain specified towns on the terms that the plaintiff was to receive a commission on all business done by the defendants through orders obtained by the plaintiff. The agreement contained no stipulation as to the length of time during which the plaintiff's engagement was to last, nor did it provide for the termination of the engagement by notice:—Held, that the engagement could be terminated by a reasonable notice, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to be paid commission on business done by the defendants after the engagement had been terminated. Barrett v. Gilmour & Co., 6 Com. Cas. 72—Phillimore, J.

— on "Hire earned"—Time Charterparty—Cancellation.]—The plaintiff, acting as broker for the defendants, obtained a time charterparty for their ship upon terms of being paid a commission on all hire earned. During the currency of the charterparty litigation arose between the defendants and the charterers as to the fitness of the ship for the purpose for which she was chartered, which resulted in the cancellation of the charterparty, there being no wilful act or default on the part of the defendants in bringing about this result:—Held, that, upon the true construction of the contract, the intention of the parties was that the plaintiff should not be entitled to commission if the earning of hire was prevented by reason of causes such as had in fact put an end to the charterparty. White v. Turnbull, 78 L. T. 726—C.A.

S. SECRET PROFIT BY AGENT.

Right of Principal to Recover Profit—Company—Promoter—Fiduciary Relation.]—The vendor of certain gold mines corruptly agreed with the agent of the purchasers to pay him a secret commission of 10 per cent., payable by instalments, upon the cash amount, 25,000*l.*, of the purchase-money. Before the whole of the commission became payable under this agreement, the vendor agreed with the agent to pay him a sum of 2,000*l.* in cash down in lieu of the full commission of 2,500*l.* The purchasers, on discovering the fact of the corrupt agreement by their agent and that the 2,000*l.* had been paid to him in lieu of the commission as originally agreed, claimed and received from the agent the 2,000*l.* They also in an action by the vendor for the balance of the purchase-money counterclaimed from the vendor the balance of the agreed commission, 500*l.*:—Held, that the effect of the corrupt agreement between the vendor and the purchasers' agent was that the amount of the purchase-money was enhanced by the amount of the secret commission, and that the purchasers were entitled to recover the 500*l.* from the vendor. Grant v. Gold Exploration and Development Syndicate of British Columbia, 69 L. J. Q.B. 150; [1900] 1 Q.B. 233; 82 L. T. 5; 48 W. R. 280—C.A. And see COMPANY, cols. 355-6.

— Right of Principal to Recover back Commission Paid by Himself to Agent.]—Where an agent in effecting a sale of property for his principal has taken a secret commission from the purchaser, the principal, notwithstanding that he has recovered from the agent the amount of the secret commission, is further entitled to recover back the commission which he himself has paid to the agent. Salomons v. Pender (34 L. J. Ex. 95; 3 H. & C. 639) applied. Andrew v. Ramsay & Co., 72 L. J. K.B. 865; [1903] 2 K.B. 635; 89 L. T. 450; 52 W. R. 126—D.

Secret Commission—Custom.]—If an agent conducts business in carrying out negotiations between his principal and a person whose interests are adverse to his principal, he cannot receive a commission from the person with whom he is negotiating without the knowledge of his principal, and any custom wide enough to cover such a case will not be upheld by the Court. Semble, that even in the case of a broker who merely introduces the vendor to the purchaser, such a custom could not be upheld. Bartram v. Lloyd, 88 L. T. 286—Bruce, J.

— Bribe—Action against Briber—Money Had and Received—Amount Recoverable.]—The ascertained amount of bribes given by a vendor to the buying agent of a purchaser may be recovered by the purchaser from the vendor as money had and received. The Court will not enquire into the motive of the vendor in giving the bribe, and there is an irrebuttable presumption that the agent was influenced by the bribe. Semble, also, that as between vendor and purchaser, the true price of the thing purchased is less than the amount charged by the amount of the bribe. Hovenden v. Millhoff, 83 L. T. 41—C.A.

— Rescission of Contract—Promise to Agent to Bias Him Contrary to his Principal's Interest.]—The defendant agreed to purchase a pair of horses from the plaintiff, provided the defendant's agent gave a certificate that the horses were sound. The plaintiff secretly offered the defendant's agent a sum of money if the horses were sold, and the agent accepted the offer. The agent gave a certificate that the horses were sound, and the defendant sent the plaintiff a cheque for the price. When the horses were delivered they were found to be unsound, and the defendant returned them to the plaintiff and stopped payment of the cheque. In an action by the plaintiff upon the cheque,—Held, that it was immaterial to enquire whether the mind of the agent was biased by the offer made to and accepted by him, that the offer and its acceptance invalidated the agent's certificate and the sale founded upon it, and that the plaintiff could maintain no action upon the contract of sale. Shipway v. Broadwood, 68 L. J. Q.B. 360; [1899] 1 Q.B. 369; 80 L. T. 11—C.A.

— Corrupt Bargain—Confirmation by Principal—Evidence—Necessity of Full Knowledge of all Facts.]—The defendant, acting through his agent, entered into a contract with the plaintiffs, who were shipbuilders, for the building of a ship. Before the contract was arranged the plaintiffs secretly agreed to give a commission to the defendant's agent. At an interview which afterwards took place between the plaintiffs and the defendant as to the payment by him of money due under this contract, the plaintiffs informed him that they had agreed to pay commission to the agent, and the defendant, after being so informed, paid them a small sum on account. The plaintiffs afterwards brought an action to recover the balance due to them. At the trial of the action the Court held that, by reason of the plaintiffs' secret agreement to give a commission to the defendant's agent, the contract was one which entitled the defendant to repudiate, but that by what had occurred at his interview with the plaintiffs he had confirmed the contract and debarred himself from repudiating it:—Held, that the plaintiffs had not shewn that there had been a full disclosure to the defendant of all the circumstances in connection with the plaintiffs' agreement to pay commission to the agent, and that therefore there had been no such confirmation by the defendant of his contract as debarred him from repudiating it. Bartram v. Lloyd, 90 L. T. 357; 20 T. L. R. 281—C.A.

— Concealment of Material Fact—Right to Commission.—A house agent held not entitled to commission upon the sale of property, upon the grounds that he had kept a material fact from the knowledge of his principal, and that he had made a secret profit. Price v. Metropolitan House Investment and Agency Co., 23 T. L. R. 630—C.A. And see Hippesley v. Knee, 74 L. J. K.B. 63; [1905] 1 K.B. 1; 92 L. T. 20; 21 T. L. R. 5—D.

Sub-agent—Fiduciary Relation—Secret Commission—Right of Principal to Secret Commission Received by Sub-agent—Money had and Received—Declaration as to Future Payments to Sub-agent under Agreement for Secret Commission.—A firm of shipowners employed stockbrokers as their agents to obtain an advance for them upon the security of certain vessels. The stockbrokers employed a sub-agent to negotiate the advance. The sub-agent knew that in so acting he was procuring the advance for the shipowners and for their benefit, and was acting in their interests. The sub-agent, without the knowledge of either the ship-owners or their agents, the stockbrokers, arranged with the persons whom he procured to make the advance for the payment to him of a commission upon the amount of the advance. Part of such secret commission was paid to the sub-agent:—Held (following De Bussche v. Alt, 47 L. J. Ch. 381; 8 Ch. D. 286), that a fiduciary relation existed between the shipowners and the sub-agent which entitled them to recover from him so much of the secret commission as had actually been received by him. But held, also (following Lister & Co. v. Stubbs, 59 L. J. Ch. 570; 45 Ch. D. 1), as regards so much of the secret commission as remained unpaid, that, the persons making the advance not being parties to the action, the shipowners were entitled to no further declaration than that the sub-agent should become indebted to them for any further sums as and when he should receive the same. Powell v. Jones, 74 L. J. K.B. 115; [1905] 1 K.B. 11; 92 L. T. 430; 53 W. R. 277; 10 Com. Cas. 36; 21 T. L. R. 55—C.A.

No Evidence of Increased Price of Goods—Action by Principal to Recover from Donor—Liability.—Where a secret commission has been paid to a buyer acting for his principal, the amount of such commission can be recovered at the suit of the principal from the donor, although there is no evidence that the price of the goods has been enhanced by the amount of the commission. Cohen v. Kuschke, 83 L. T. 102—Bruce, J.

9. TERMINATION OF AGENCY.

Commission Agent—Agreement—Custom Requiring Notice.—The defendants, who carried on business in the glove trade, made an agreement with the plaintiff, a commission agent, in these terms: "We will give the 2½ per cent. commission on all business you do for us in London. You let us know to whom you show our samples, and, if business results from the transaction, we will forward your commission quarterly. This refers to orders executed." The defendants terminated this agreement without giving any notice, and the plaintiff brought this action to recover damages. At the trial the plaintiff tendered evidence of a custom in the glove trade that six months' notice must be given to terminate the agency of a commission agent. The Judge rejected that evidence, and directed a verdict and judgment for the defendants:—Held, that evidence of the alleged custom, being inconsistent with the terms of the written agreement, was not admissible, and that the defendants were entitled to terminate the agency without notice. Joynton v. Hunt, 93 L. T. 470; 21 T. L. R. 692—C.A.

10. ACTIONS AGAINST.

Election—Right to Proceed against Principal.—Two persons were sued in the High Court for the price of goods supplied. Judgment was obtained by default against one; the other had leave to defend, and the action was remitted to the County Court. At the trial the County Court Judge found as a fact that the debt was contracted by the former solely as agent for the latter, and that the plaintiff had given credit to the latter alone, and he adjourned the case to enable an application to be made to set aside the judgment against the agent. This was accordingly done, and the judgment was set aside and the action against both defendants was remitted to the County Court. At the second trial the County Court Judge entered judgment for the agent and against the principal:—Held, that the plaintiff by signing judgment against the agent had conclusively elected to proceed against him, and there was no power to set aside that judgment so as to revive the right of the plaintiff to proceed against the principal. Cross v. Matthews, 91 L. T. 500; 20 T. L. R. 608—D.

Undisclosed Principal—Baptist Minister—Appointed to Pastorate by Deacons of Chapel—Fund Insufficient to Pay Salary—Claim against Deacons.—The deacons of a chapel were held not to be personally liable as agents for an undisclosed principal to make up arrears of salary due to the pastor of the chapel, although they had invited him to become pastor of the Baptist Chapel of which they were the deacons and had signed the document under which he became pastor, because there was evidence on the face of the document that the salary of the pastor was to be payable out of the chapel fund, of which fund the plaintiff himself was treasurer, and from which he had paid himself salary as it became due, so long as the fund was sufficient to meet it. Morley v. Makin, 54 W. R. 395; 22 T. L. R. 7—D.

11. PARTICULAR AGENTS.

(a) Auctioneer.

Indemnity—Sale of Goods by Direction of True Owner—Claim by Person not True Owner—Mistake as to Ownership—Damages.—The true owner of goods who instructs an auctioneer to sell them is not bound to indemnify the auctioneer, who, while acting on the instructions, is sued and cast in damages on a claim by a third person of which the true owner has no notice. Halbroun v. International Horse Agency and Exchange, 72 L. J. K.B. 90; [1903] 1 K.B. 270; 88 L. T. 232; 51 W. R. 622—Bruce, J. And see AUCTIONEER and SALE OF GOODS.

(b) Contractor.

Negligence—Dangerous Work—Liability.—Where a public body takes upon itself the making-up of a road, such work being of itself, unless carefully done, likely to be dangerous to the public, a duty is cast upon such public body to see that no dangerous obstructions are allowed to exist to passengers passing along the road. That duty cannot be evaded by employing a contractor to carry out the work. Hill v. Tottenham Urban Council, 79 L. T. 495—Bruce, J.

A person who, acting under an authority conferred by statute, does an act likely to cause danger to the public, is bound to see that the work is properly carried out, and that reasonable means are taken to guard against the danger, and does not discharge this duty by delegating it to a contractor who neglects its fulfilment; but such duty does not extend to guarding against casual or collateral acts of negligence on the part of the contractor or those employed by him. Penny v. Wimbledon Urban Council, 68 L. J. Q.B. 704; [1899] 2 Q.B. 72; 80 L. T. 615; 47 W. R. 565; 63 J. P. 406—C.A.

A local authority, acting under the powers of section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, employed a contractor to make up a road in their district. The contractor in doing the work left obstructions upon the road unguarded. The plaintiff was thereby injured:—Held, that the local authority were liable for the negligence of the contractor. Ib.

—Dangerous Work on Highway—Liability of Person Executing by Contractor—Joint Execution of Work with Contractor for Part—Independent Contractor—Casual and Collateral Negligence.—A telephone company were lawfully engaged in laying telephone wires in a public highway with the consent of the local authority. The work was carried out by digging a trench, laying down tubes, threading the wires through them, soldering the joints of the tubes, and filling up the trench. The company did all the work themselves except the soldering of the joints, as to which they contracted with a plumber that he should do the work to the satisfaction of the company's foreman at 12s. per joint. In carrying out the work the plumber, in order to get a flare from a benzoline lamp, plunged it into an iron pot containing melted solder; but the safety-valve being out of order, the lamp exploded, and the molten solder flew up and injured the plaintiff, who was passing by on the highway. It was necessary for the work to obtain the flare from the lamp, and to dip the lamp into the solder was a proper and usual mode of obtaining it if the lamp had been in order, but it was an act of negligence on the part of the plumber to use the lamp in the condition in which it was:—Held, in an action by the plaintiff against the company to recover damages for personal injury, that the company were liable for the negligence of the plumber—first, upon the ground that the work was being done not by the plumber alone as an independent contractor, but jointly by the company and the plumber in such circumstances that the company were responsible for negligence in the joint operation such as that which caused the injury; and secondly, upon the ground that, even assuming that the plumber was an independent contractor, as the company were carrying out a dangerous work upon a highway, whether they carried it out by themselves or by a contractor, it was their duty to take care that the works were not negligently carried out so as cause injury to persons using the highway. Holliday v. National Telephone Co., 68 L. J. Q.B. 1016; [1899] 2 Q.B. 392; 81 L. T. 252; 47 W. R. 658—C.A.

Independent Contractor—Abandonment of Possession, Management, and Control.—An owner does not abandon or properly transfer the possession, management, and control of a wreck by employing an independent contractor to raise it, although the person so employed be placed in the actual physical custody of the wreck. The Snark, 68 L. J. P. 22; [1899] P. 74; 80 L. T. 25; 47 W. R. 398; 8 Asp. M.C. 488—Gorell Barnes, J.

(c) Driver.

Negligence—Watering Streets—Employment of Contractor for Horses and Drivers—Negligence of Driver.—In an action for damages for negligence against a Metropolitan borough council, and against the person who had contracted to supply horses and drivers to work the council's water vans employed in watering streets, the jury, in giving their verdict for the plaintiff, found that there had been negligence on the part of the driver of a water van, who, they found as a fact, was the contractor's servant, but who, at the time of the accident, was acting under the control of the council in his work. The Court, upon this verdict, gave judgment against the council, upon the authority of Penny v. Wimbledon Urban Council (68 L. J. Q.B. 704; [1899] 2 Q.B. 72); and gave judgment against the contractor as master of the driver because, upon the construction the Court placed on the contract between the defendants, the contractor had not parted with the control of his servant: following Jones v. Liverpool Corporation (54 L. J. Q.B. 345; 14 Q.B. D. 890). Mileham v. St. Marylebone Borough Council, 1 L. G. R. 412—Channell, J. And see MASTER AND SERVANT, cols. 1459–1462.

Agreement for Sale of Goods—Hire-Purchase Agreement.—“Person having agreed to buy goods.”—By an agreement one W. agreed with the defendant to hire goods of the value of — £., “and to pay her the sum of 11. on signing this agreement and the balance in instalments of 11. per month until the full amount of the aforesaid value be paid,” when the goods were to become the property of W. The agreement contained a clause: “But in default being made in payment of such sums of 11. per month,” W. agreed “to give up all claims to the said goods, and to deliver the same free from damage or injury beyond fair wear and tear” to the defendant or to her agents on demand:—Held, that W. was a person who had “agreed to buy goods” under section 9 of the Factors Act, 1889. Wylde v. Legge, 84 L. T. 121—D.

Factors Act—Indorsement of Delivery Orders to Pledgee—Arrestment by Creditor—Rights of Pledgee and Creditor.—The Factors (Scotland) Act, 1890, makes no alteration in the general law of contracts of pledge in Scotland, and does not in all cases make a pledge of the documents of title equivalent to a completed pledge of the goods themselves. By the common law the indorsement and hypothecation of delivery orders, although they may give the pledgee a right to retain the documents, do not give him any real right in the goods which they represent. He can only attain to that right by presenting the delivery orders to the custodian by whom they were granted, and obtaining delivery of the goods from him, or by making such intimation of his right to the custodian as will make it the legal duty of the latter to hold the goods for him. Inglis v. Robertson, 67 L. J. P.C. 108; [1898] A.C. 616; 79 L. T. 224—H.L. (Sc.)

— Mercantile Agent.—Section 3 of the Factors Act, 1889, which enacts that a pledge of documents of title is to be deemed a pledge of the goods, only applies to “mercantile agents” within the meaning of that Act, which by the Act of 1890 is made applicable to Scotland. The pledgor of goods within the meaning of section 9 must be a person who has obtained the documents of title either from his seller or with the consent of his seller. Ib.

Goods of a debtor were stored in a bonded warehouse. The debtor indorsed the delivery orders to the appellant in consideration of a loan, with a letter purporting to hypothecate part of the goods. The appellant gave no intimation of his rights to the warehouse keeper. The seller of the goods arrested them in the hands of the warehouse keeper, and brought an action against the debtor. By arrangement the goods were sold and the proceeds placed in a bank. In an action of multiplepoinding, in which the appellant claimed as pledgee and the respondents as personal creditors of the debtor,—Held, that the property of the goods was not effectually vested in the appellant as against the creditors, inasmuch as the warehouse keeper was not a “mercantile agent” in the statutory sense. Ib.

— Possession of Goods by Mercantile Agent

—Consent of Owner—Larceny by a Trick—Disposition by Mercantile Agent to Several Joint Purchasers—Want of Good Faith in One Joint Purchaser—Invalidity of Disposition as regards all the Joint Purchasers.—The plaintiff, a diamond merchant, entrusted certain diamonds to a broker who stated that he had customers for them, and mentioned the names of two firms. The broker did not offer the diamonds to either firm, but gave them to B., asking him to sell them. B. took the diamonds to F. & W., explained that he came from the broker, and asked them to purchase them on joint account with himself. F. & W. agreed, and paid the price required by the broker, debiting B. in their books with one-half thereof, and afterwards disposed of the diamonds, crediting B. with half the profits realised. In an action for conversion by the plaintiff against B. and F. & W., the jury found that the broker obtained the diamonds from the plaintiff by larceny by a trick; that F. & W. had acted in good faith, but that B. had not:—Held, that for the particular purpose of purchasing the diamonds B. and F. & W. were partners; and that though F. & W. personally had acted in good faith, B.’s want of good faith deprived them, as well as himself, of the protection of section 2, sub-section 1 of the Factors Act, 1889, and consequently that they were all jointly liable to the plaintiff for the conversion of the diamonds. Oppenheimer v. Fraser, 76 L. J. K.B. 806; [1907] 2 K.B. 50; 97 L. T. 8; 12 Com. Cas. 289; 23 T. L. R. 410—C.A.

Semble, that a mercantile agent who obtains possession of goods from the owner by means of larceny by a trick is not in possession of them with the “consent” of the owner within the meaning of section 2, sub-section 1 of the Factors Act, 1889. Ib.

— Transfer of Title—Re-sale—Possession of Document of Title—Consent of Seller—Bill of Lading sent to Buyer with Draft—Draft not Accepted—Stoppage in Transitu.—English merchants contracted to sell to a merchant abroad ten tons of copper to be delivered at Rotterdam, payment to be made by the buyer’s acceptance at thirty days from date of bill of lading. The sellers forwarded to the buyer the bill of lading indorsed in blank for ten tons of copper shipped on board the defendants’ vessel, to be carried to Rotterdam, together with a draft for the price for his acceptance. The buyer retained the bill of lading, and indorsed it to the plaintiffs in fulfilment of a prior sale by him to them of ten tons of copper. The buyer never accepted the draft, but the plaintiffs received the bill of lading in good faith for valuable consideration and without notice of any right of the original sellers in respect of the goods. The buyer having become insolvent, the sellers stopped the copper in transitu. In an action by the plaintiffs, as indorsees of the bill of lading, against the shipowners for non-delivery of the copper,—Held, that the buyer was in possession of the bill of lading with the consent of the sellers within the meaning of section 25, sub-section 2 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, so that the transfer by him of the bill of lading to the plaintiffs gave them a good title to the copper, and that the sellers had no right to stop it in transitu. Cahn v. Pockett’s Bristol Channel Steam Packet Co., — Mercantile Agent—Pledge.—The plaintiff, a dealer in diamonds at Amsterdam, sent some diamonds to a diamond broker in London for sale. The broker, without the authority in fact of the plaintiff, asked a friend of his to pledge the diamonds for him. The friend pledged them with the defendants, who were pawnbrokers. The defendants acted in good faith and without notice that the diamonds were pledged without the authority of the owner. In an action to recover the diamonds, —Held, that, though the broker was a mercantile agent within the meaning of the Factors Act, 1889, it was not the ordinary course of business of a mercantile agent to ask a friend to pledge goods entrusted to him, but to pledge them himself, and that therefore the defendants were not protected by section 2, sub-section 1 of the Act. De Gorter v. Attenborough, 21 T. L. R. 19—Channell, J.

— Pledge of Diamonds by Agent—Custom in Diamond Trade.—“Pledge . . . made . . . in the ordinary course of business of a mercantile agent.”—The expression in section 2, sub-section 1 of the Factors Act, 1889, “pledge . . . made . . . in the ordinary course of business of a mercantile agent,” means “of a mercantile agent,” and not “of the mercantile agent” which the particular agent happens to be; and therefore a custom in the diamond trade, that it is not usual for agents employed to sell diamonds to pledge them, cannot be set up to prevent the application of the Factors Act to a pledge by such an agent. Oppenheimer v. Attenborough, 76 L. J. K.B. 177; [1907] 1 K.B. 510; 96 L. T. 501; 12 Com. Cas. 88; 28 T. L. R. 182—Channell, J.

The pledging of packets of diamonds by an agent employed to sell diamonds in order to raise money for his principal is not out of the ordinary course of business of such agent. Hastings, Llm. v. Pearson (62 L. J. Q.B. 75; [1893] 1 Q.B. 62) distinguished. Ib.

Quære, whether, when goods have been obtained by larceny by a trick, and afterwards have been pledged by the person so obtaining them, the mode of obtaining them by a trick has any effect to take the subsequent pledging out of the protection of the Factors Act, 1889. Ib. Affirmed O.A., 77 L. J. K.B. 209; [1908] 1 K.B. 221; 98 L. T. 94; 24 T. L. R. 115.

— “Sale, pledge, or other disposition” of Property—“Ordinary course of business.”—Goods were consigned by the plaintiffs to H., a mercantile agent, for sale by him on their behalf for cash or on the hire system. H. sent the goods to the defendants, a firm of auctioneers, for sale by auction, and obtained from them an advance upon the goods in contemplation of their sale. In an action by the plaintiffs against the defendants for conversion of the goods, —Held, that the transaction was not “a sale, pledge, or other disposition of the goods made by a mercantile agent when acting in the ordinary course of business of a mercantile agent” within the meaning of section 2 of the Factors Act, 1889, and that consequently the defendants were not protected by the

Collecting Premiums.—An insurance agent was instructed to effect an insurance on goods against fire. He forwarded the particulars to brokers in London, who effected the insurance with underwriters at Lloyd's. The agent collected the premiums from the assured, and, after deducting therefrom the amount of his commission, forwarded the balance to the brokers:—Held, that the insurance agent was the agent of the assured and not of the underwriters. Bancroft v. Heath, 5 Com. Cas. 110—Mathew, J.

Insurance Broker and Insurance Agent—Money Received by Broker—Settlement in Account with Agent.—The plaintiff employed an insurance agent to effect an insurance of his mare and unborn foal. The agent sent a proposal form to the defendants, insurance brokers, who effected an insurance with underwriters at Lloyd's. A loss having occurred, the plaintiff informed the agent of the fact, and the agent obtained the policy from the plaintiff and sent it to the defendants. They collected the amount due from the underwriters, and paid to the agent the balance after deducting from the amount a sum due to the defendants from the agent in respect of other transactions. The agent did not pay to the plaintiff the sum received by him:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover from the defendants the whole amount received by them from the underwriters, less 1*l.* per cent. commission for collecting. Legge v. Byas, Mosley & Co., 7 Com. Cas. 16—Walton, J.

Insurance Broker—Dealings between Managing Owner and Broker.—M. & Co., who acted as managing owners of the Gordon Castle and other ships belonging to different owners, instructed insurance brokers to insure the Gordon Castle and other ships managed by them. The course of dealing between M. & Co. and the insurance brokers was for the brokers to pay the premiums to the underwriters and for M. & Co. to accept bills drawn by the insurance brokers for sums representing the whole premiums disbursed by the insurance brokers on the policies on the various ships insured by them. In the course of dealing it was agreed between M. & Co. and the insurance brokers that if any acceptance was not met by M. & Co. the insurance brokers would be entitled to cancel any of the policies in whole or in part, and apply the return premiums due in respect of such cancellation in liquidation of any debt due to them by M. & Co. On the bankruptcy of M. & Co. certain premiums disbursed by the insurance brokers on policies on the Gordon Castle had not been paid to them by M. & Co. In an action by the insurance brokers against the owners of the Gordon Castle for payment of these premiums, —Held, that the defendants were not liable, as the pursuers had elected to take M. & Co. as their sole debtors. Xenos v. Wickham (86 L. J. C.P. 313; L. R. 2 H.L. 296) commented on. Lamont, Nisbett & Co. v. Hamilton, [1907] S.C. 628—Ct. of Sess.

Fine Arts Copyright—Pictures—Penalties—Damages.—Under section 6 of the Fine Arts Copyright Act, 1862, the printers, although merely innocent agents, are liable for penalties for an infringement as well as the publishers; and a penalty must be assessed in respect of each copy of the infringement which has been sold. *Baschet v. (g) Receiver for Debenture-holders.

Winding-up—Business Carried on by Receiver—Liability of Trustees for Goods Ordered by Receiver.—By a deed made between a limited company and trustees for debenture-holders, the property of the company was transferred to the trustees, upon trust to permit the company to carry on the business until the happening of one or other of events specified. On the happening of such event, the trustees were empowered to appoint a receiver; but it was an express condition of the exercise of that power that “any person so appointed shall be the agent of the company, who alone shall be liable for his acts and defaults.” One of the events happened, and the trustees appointed a receiver, who took possession of the mortgaged premises and carried on the business of the company. An order was made for the winding-up of the company and a liquidator appointed, who permitted the receiver to carry on the business as before. The respondents sued the trustees for goods supplied to the receiver after the winding-up order:—Held, that the trustees were not principals of the receiver, and were therefore not liable for the price of the goods supplied. Gosling v. Gaskell, 66 L. J. Q.B. 843; [1897] A.C. 575; 77 L. T. 314; 46 W. R. 208—H.L. (E.) And see COMPANY, col. 437.

(h) Shipbroker.

Commission on “Hire earned”—Time Charterparty—Cancellation.—The plaintiff, acting as broker for the defendants, obtained a time charterparty for their ship upon terms of being paid a commission on all hire earned. During the currency of the charterparty litigation arose between the defendants and the charterers as to the fitness of the ship for the purpose for which she was chartered, which resulted in the cancellation of the charterparty, there being no wilful act or default on the part of the defendants in bringing about this result:—Held, that, upon the true construction of the contract, the intention of the parties was that the plaintiff should not be entitled to commission if the earning of hire was prevented by reason of causes such as had in fact put an end to the charterparty. White v. Turnbull, 78 L. T. 726; 8 Asp. M.C. 406—C.A.

(i) Stockbroker.

Liability of Broker to Client—Sold Note not Disclosing Jobber's Name.—There is no proved rule or custom of the London Stock Exchange that where a stockbroker who is employed by a client to sell shares sends a contract note to the client in which the name of the jobber or purchaser is not disclosed, the stockbroker becomes a principal and liable to the client for the purchase price of the shares. Gill v. Shepherd, 8 Com. Cas. 48—Kennedy, J.

Tender of Shares by Broker to Client—Right of Broker to Indemnity—Delay by Broker—Tender of Portion of Shares—Jurisdiction of Stock Exchange Committee.—Where a client who is not a member of the Stock Exchange instructs a broker who is a member of the Stock Exchange to purchase shares for him, and the broker accordingly purchases them and receives them from the seller within the time allowed by the rules of the Stock Exchange and pays for them, although it is the broker's duty to tender the shares to the client within a reasonable time, it is no answer to his claim for an indemnity for the client to say that the shares were not delivered in time, although that might be a good ground for a counterclaim. Where, under such circumstances, the broker tenders to the client a portion only of the total number of shares comprised in the contract note, the client is bound to accept delivery of the portion so tendered or to indemnify the broker against the price he has paid for them, although there is no valid tender by the broker of the remainder of the shares. Benjamin v. Barnett, 8 Com. Cas. 244—Kennedy, J.

But where the seller does not tender the shares to the broker within the time allowed by the rules of the Stock Exchange, and the client gives notice to the broker that he will not accept delivery after such time has elapsed; if the broker does not then accept them and pays the seller he will not be entitled to be indemnified by the client in respect of the sum he has paid for the shares. Nor will a resolution of the Stock Exchange that the broker is to pay the jobber for the shares when delivered be binding on the client, or, semble, on the broker, inasmuch as the committee cannot by passing a resolution make valid a contract which has been broken. Union Corporation v. Charrington (col. 1981) followed. Id.

Statement of Account by Clerk—Receipt.—B, a clerk employed by a firm of stockbrokers, sent a fortnightly statement of account to A, a client of the firm. The statement contained an entry of a sum of money as paid by A to the firm as the price of certain shares. The statement was written by B, and was initialled by him as on behalf of the firm. In an action by A against the firm for delivery of the shares, the defence was that the defenders had not received the price. It being admitted that the defenders had not received the money,—Held, that they were not barred by the entry in respect—first, that it was not in itself a receipt, and, secondly, that even if it were, it had not been proved that B had authority to grant it so as to bind the defenders. Robb v. Gow, 8 F. 90—Ct. of Sess.

Liability for Loss by Fraud of Clerk.—A, whose brother-in-law B was a trusted clerk in the office of a firm of stockbrokers, carried on a series of transactions with the stockbrokers, in the course of which he instructed them to buy for him certain shares. The shares were bought and paid for, and, transfers having been duly executed, A became the registered owner of the shares. The share certificates, which had been duly forwarded by the various companies to the stockbrokers, were not handed over to A, but were allowed by him to remain in the stockbrokers' office for periods varying from one to two years, when it was found that B had, by taking possession of the certificates and by executing forged transfers, sold the shares on his own behalf and had absconded with the proceeds. Throughout the course of dealing between A and the stockbrokers, B was recognised both by A and the stockbrokers as the person in the stockbrokers' office who attended to A's business. In an action by A against the stockbrokers for delivery of the share certificates or for damages,—Held, that the stockbrokers were not liable in respect that either—first, A, in the knowledge that he might have got delivery of the certificates, had chosen to leave them in the stockbrokers' office for his own purposes and under the general management of B, so that B had received delivery of the certificates as A's agent for the time; secondly, if B was not A's agent for the time, B had got hold of the certificates fraudulently; in which case, under the rule of Barwick v. English Joint-Stock Bank (86 L. J. Ex. 147; L. R. 2 Ex. 259), the stockbrokers, as innocent principals, were not liable for B's fraud, the fraud not having been committed in the course of his service and for their benefit. Robb v. Gow, 8 F. 90—Ct. of Sess.

Authority to Carry over Specified Number of Shares—Purchase by Stockbroker of Larger Number—Failure of Stockbroker—Liability of Undisclosed Principal—Privity of Contract.—Appeal by the plaintiffs from the judgment of Kennedy, J., reported 69 L. J. Q.B. 413, dismissed on the facts. Beckhussen v. Hamblet, 70 L. J. K.B. 600; [1901] 2 K.B. 73; 84 L. T. 617; 40 W. R. 481; 6 Com. Cas. 141—C.A.

Broker Instructed by Several Clients—Orders Lumped Together by Broker in One Transaction with Jobbers—Privity of Contract between Jobbers and Client.—The defendant instructed a broker on the London Stock Exchange to "carry over" to the next account 225 shares in a company. The broker, who had been instructed by other clients to carry over to that account shares in the company, employed the plaintiffs, who were jobbers on the Exchange, to carry over to the next account 925 shares in the company, and appropriated in his own books 225 of those shares to the defendant. Before the next settling day the broker was declared a defaulter. The plaintiffs then ascertained from him who his principals were. The defendant wrote to a clerk of the broker claiming that the broker's failure had closed his account, and the letter was shown by the clerk to the plaintiffs, who thereupon sold the 225 shares in the market, and eventually brought an action against the defendant for the difference between the price at which they had carried over these shares and the price at which they had sold them. The jury found that there was a custom of the Exchange by which a broker lumped together the orders of his clients and executed them by means of one contract with the jobber; that the defendant gave his order on the terms that it might be executed in accordance with that custom; and that there was a further custom by which the jobber and each client of the broker became bound to each other to carry out the part of the contract applicable to the client's order:—Held, that there was a contract between the plaintiffs and the defendant in respect of the 225 shares; that it had been repudiated by the defendant; and that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover. Scott v. Godfrey, 70 L. J. K.B. 954; [1901] 2 K.B. 726; 85 L. T. 415; 50 W. R. 61; 6 Com. Cas. 226—Bigham, J.

Shares Bought and Carried Over on Stock Exchange—Defaulting Broker—Customer's Liability to Stockjobber—Carrying-over Price—"Hammer" Price.—Where a person buys shares on the Stock Exchange through his broker from a jobber and has them carried over to a future settling day, and in the meantime his broker has been declared a defaulter on the Stock Exchange, a relationship of buyer and seller is established between him and the jobber; and where such a buyer, on his broker's default, refuses the shares at "hammer" price and repudiates the transaction, the jobbers are entitled to sell out the shares and recover from him the whole difference between the price realised and the price at which they were carried over, and are not restricted to the difference between that price and the "hammer" price. Anderson v. Beard, 69 L. J. Q.B. 610; [1900] 2 Q.B. 260; 82 L. T. 714; 5 Com. Cas. 261—Mathew, J.

Death of Client—Continuation—Carrying over to Next Settling Day—Continuation Contract.—A stockbroker on the death of his client has no authority, express or implied, to carry over shares purchased for his client to the next settling day, but should close the account. Phillips v. Jones (4 Times L. R. 401) followed. Overweg, In re; Haas v. Durant, 69 L. J. Ch. 255; [1900] 1 Ch. 209; 81 L. T. 776—Byrne, J.

A carrying over or a continuation on the Stock Exchange is in form and in law both a sale and re-purchase, or a purchase and re-sale, as the case may be (Bongiovanni v. Société Générale, 54 L. T. 320), and therefore if a broker, when under an obligation to close an account by selling his client's shares, prefers to carry over, he does so at his own risk, and is not entitled as against his client to treat the continuation as one transaction, but is responsible to his client as if there had been an immediate sale at the price named. Id.

Sale of Shares for Client—Deposit of Shares by Client with his Bank—Obligation of Broker to Pay Bank against Delivery of Shares—Payment of Bank by Purchasing Jobber.—Where a stockbroker who is a member of the London Stock Exchange has sold shares for a client and the shares are in the possession of the client's bank, there is no duty upon the broker to himself pay the bank the price at which the shares have been sold against delivery by the bank of the shares; nor is he under any obligation to ask the jobber who has bought the shares to make the payment for them direct to the bank. Hawkins v. Pearce, 9 Com. Cas. 87—Walton, J.

— Custom of Stock Exchange—Refusal of Company to Register Transfer—Action by Vendor for Specific Performance or Rescission of Contract.]

—A contract for the sale of shares in a registered company with unlimited liability was made through stockbrokers subject to the rules of the Stock Exchange. In accordance with the practice of the Stock Exchange, the transferee of the shares paid the price of them to the vendor upon delivery to him by the vendor of a duly executed transfer, together with the certificate of the shares. One of the regulations of the company provided that it should be lawful for the directors to decline to register the transfer of shares to any person not approved of by the directors as transferee, and that thereupon such transfer should be void. An application for registration of the transfer being subsequently made to the company by the purchaser, they refused to register him as the transferee of the shares. The vendors issued an equity civil bill, claiming specific performance of the contract and asking that the purchaser should be ordered to procure the shares to be registered in his own name, or in that of some other person. The claim was subsequently amended by adding a prayer for an indemnity and for rescission of the contract; and the Judge made a decree declaring the plaintiff a trustee of the shares of the defendant, and that the defendant was bound to indemnify the plaintiff against calls:—Held (FITZGIBBON, L.J., dissentiente), that the contract for the sale of shares on the Stock Exchange did not import an undertaking by the vendor that the company would register the transfer, and that the equity civil bill should have been dismissed. Casey v. Bentley, [1902] 1 Ir. R. 376—C.A.

Closing Account on Stock Exchange—Breach of Contract—Measure of Damages.]—A stockbroker on the London Stock Exchange who, in breach of his agreement to keep his customer's account open till the settlement at the end of the month, wrongfully closes it, is liable to his customer in damages; and the measure of such damages is the highest price the stocks and shares would have realised between the date he so wrongfully closed the account and the date to which he agreed to carry it over. Michael v. Hart, 70 L. J. K.B. 1000; [1901] 2 K.B. 867; 85 L. T. 548; 50 W. R. 154—Wills, J. See s.c. in C.A., 71 L. J. K.B. 265; [1902] 1 K.B. 482.

— Sale of Shares Purchased for Client—Repurchase by Broker for Himself at Time of Sale—Validity of Sale.]—Stockbrokers, who had upon the instructions of a client made a contract on the Stock Exchange for the purchase of shares for him, claiming to be entitled by the terms of their agreement with him to close his account, went for that purpose to a jobber and asked him to make a cash price for the shares. The jobber fixed a price, and a bargain was then made for the sale of the shares by the brokers to the jobber at the price fixed, and for the repurchase of them by the defendants from the jobber for the next account. In an action by the client against the brokers for damages for wrongfully selling the shares, the brokers counterclaimed for the balance of their account, in which they debited the client with the amount for which they originally purchased the shares, and credited him with the amount for which they sold the shares to the jobber.

At the trial the plaintiff failed to show that the brokers were not entitled to sell and made no imputation of want of good faith on the part of the brokers, and the Judge's judgment was given for the brokers upon their counterclaim. On an application by the client for judgment or a new trial, upon the ground that, the brokers being agents acting in a fiduciary capacity, the sale of the shares by them to a person from whom they at the same time repurchased the shares for themselves did not constitute a valid closing of the account with respect to those shares,—Held, per VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., and ROMER, L.J., that, having regard to the course which matters took at the trial, the point was not open upon the application to the Court of Appeal; per A. L. SMITH, M.R., and ROMER, L.J., that in the circumstances there was a sale of the shares which constituted a valid closing of the account with respect to them. Macoun v. Erskine, Oxenford & Co., 70 L. J. K.B. 973; [1901] 2 K.B. 493; 85 L. T. 372—C.A.

— Sale and Repurchase of Client's Shares by Broker—Profit made by Broker—Liability of Broker to Account.]—Brokers on the London Stock Exchange, who had entered into contracts on behalf of clients for the purchase of certain shares, which the clients failed to take up, in order to close the account in accordance with the rules and usage of the Exchange, went into the market and sold to jobbers shares to a like amount. At the same time, and as part of the transaction between themselves and the jobbers, the brokers repurchased the shares for themselves, but the price at which the brokers sold the shares was the proper market price for them. In consequence of the sale and repurchase of the shares having been effected at the same time, the brokers obtained the shares at a less price than they would have had to pay for them in the ordinary course, and thereby made a profit:—Held, that the brokers, having in the sale of the shares acted in a fiduciary relation to their clients as their agents, and having in consequence of the sale made a profit on the repurchase of the shares, must account to the clients for the profit so made. Macoun v. Erskine, Oxenford & Co. (70 L. J. K.B. 973) and Walter v. King (18 Times L. R. 270) considered. Erskine, Oxenford & Co v. Sachs, 70 L. J. K.B. 978; [1901] 2 K.B. 504; 85 L. T. 385—C.A.

Transfer of India Stock—Request to Transfer by Stockbroker—Identification of Transferor—Innocent Misrepresentation—Forged Signature—Implied Warranty of Identity—Liability of Stockbroker—Third Party—Indemnity.]—A stockbroker, believing his client to be the holder of India Stock, requested the Bank of England to make a transfer of the stock, and subsequently attended at the Bank and identified the client as the stockholder. In fact, the signature to the transfer was forged by the client and the stockbroker had been himself deceived as to the identity of the client. The stock was subsequently, but before discovery of the fraud, transferred bona fide to third parties. Upon discovery of the fraud the real stockholder called upon the Bank to replace the stock. The Bank, being advised that they were liable, bought stock on the market, which was transferred into the name of the stockholder:—Held, that, as the Bank had been compelled, by reason of the subsequent transferees having a good title by estoppel against the Bank, to replace, by purchase, the stock which had been transferred, the stockbroker was liable to indemnify the Bank upon the ground that he had impliedly warranted the identity of the person signing the transfer, and had, by requesting the Bank to make the transfer, brought himself within the doctrine established in Sheffield Corporation v. Barclay (74 L. J. K.B. 747; [1905] A.C. 392). Bank of England v. Cutler, 76 L. J. K.B. 504; [1907] 1 K.B. 889; 96 L. T. 636; 23 T. L. R. 374—A. T. Lawrence, J.

Lien—Securities in Stockbroker's Hands—Specific Loan.]—A stockbroker has, in the absence of special agreement to the contrary, a general lien on a customer's securities which are in his hands in the course of his business. Jones v. Peppercorne (28 L. J. Ch. 158; Johns. 430) followed. London and Globe Finance Corporation, In re, 71 L. J. Ch. 693; [1902] 2 Ch. 416; 87 L. T. 49—Buckley, J.

A customer deposited shares with his broker as security for a particular loan, which was paid off shortly after it was made, and for successive advances from time to time made. At a Stock Exchange account all that was payable between customer and broker was paid, but some speculative transactions were carried over, which, when the next account arrived, had resulted in a loss. The shares had remained in the broker's custody:—Held, that the broker had a general lien on the shares for the sum due to him from the customer. Wylde v. Radford (33 L. J. Ch. 51) and Bowes, In re; Strathmore (Earl) v. Vane (56 L. J. Ch. 143; 33 Ch. D. 586), distinguished. Id.

Broker Making Default—Client of Broker and Jobber—Privity of Contract.]—A broker on the London Stock Exchange, upon the instructions of the defendant, who was not a member thereof, purchased for him 330 shares from the plaintiffs, who were jobbers on the Exchange. Subsequently, the broker, being instructed by the defendant to carry over these shares and others of the same kind which the defendant had bought, to the next account, carried over 300 of the shares with the plaintiffs, and appropriated the shares so carried over to the defendant, carrying over the other shares with other jobbers. Before the next settlement the broker was declared a defaulter upon the Stock Exchange, and the plaintiffs under rule 177 of the Stock Exchange Rules closed the transaction as to the 300 shares by buying them back from the broker at the price fixed by the official assignee. The plaintiffs having discovered that the defendant was the broker's principal, gave him notice that they should look to him to complete the transaction, but the defendant claimed that the transaction was closed under rule 177. At the next settlement the plaintiffs tendered the shares to the defendant, and on his refusing to accept them sold them at their market price at a loss, and sued the defendant for the difference between the price they obtained and the price at which the shares were carried over:—Held, that there was privity of contract between the plaintiffs and the defendant upon the transaction for carrying over the 300 shares; that rule 177 of the Stock Exchange Rules was applicable to members of the Stock Exchange only as between themselves, and did not close the transaction as regards the defendant; that there is no established usage of the Stock Exchange of which the Courts will take judicial notice that upon the default of a broker his client has the option of closing a transaction entered into by the broker for him with a jobber at the price fixed by the official assignee under rule 177; and that, as no such usage was proved upon the facts of the case, the plaintiffs were entitled to recover from the defendant the amount claimed. Levett v. Hamblet, 70 L. J. K.B. 520; [1901] 2 K.B. 53; 84 L. T. 638; 6 Com. Cas. 79—C.A.

—Jobber and Customer—Privity of Contract—Difference between Contract Price and Hammer Price received by Jobber out of Broker's Estate—Failure of Customer to Complete—Liability to Jobber.]—Where a broker on the Stock Exchange has entered into a contract with a jobber on behalf of a customer in such circumstances as to create privity of contract between the jobber and the customer, and the broker is before completion declared a defaulter, and the jobber claims in the liquidation of the estate of the broker for the difference between the contract price and hammer price, and is paid such difference in full, the jobber is nevertheless entitled, in the event of the customer failing to complete with him, to recover damages from the customer; but, in the event of the damages exceeding the sum received by the jobber from the broker's estate, the jobber is bound to account to the broker's estate for that sum. Stoneham v. Wyman, 6 Com. Cas. 174—Mathew, J.

—Refusal of Jobber to Complete with Nominee of Broker's Client.]—Where a broker on the Stock Exchange has sold shares on behalf of a client to a jobber, and is, before completion, declared a defaulter, the client, if he elects to complete the transaction on his own account, is not entitled to require the jobber to pass a name to a person nominated by the client as an incident to "making down" the shares with the nominee, inasmuch as the effect of so making down the shares would be to release the client and to substitute his nominee as principal. Currie v. Booth, 7 Com. Cas. 77—C.A.

—Several Accounts—Fraudulent Deposit of Securities—General Indebtedness—Debit to Loan Account—Credit to Current Account—Equities between Persons Claiming under Customer.]—A firm of brokers kept two accounts with their bankers, a current account and a loan account. The brokers wrongfully deposited bonds of their clients to secure their general indebtedness to the bank, and also paid to the credit of their current account moneys of other clients which they had received to pay for investments. The brokers having been declared defaulters, the bank opened a new liquidation account, to which they transferred 1,362*l.* then standing to the credit of the current account and the amount standing to the debit of the loan account, which largely exceeded the 1,362*l.* The bank never, in fact, appropriated the 1,362*l.* to meet the debit, but satisfied it by sale of a sufficient part of the deposited bonds:—Held, that, as against the clients entitled to follow the 1,362*l.*, the owners of the deposited bonds, in calculating the amount for which the bonds were a security, were entitled to have the 1,862*l.* first applied in reduction of the debit. Mutton v. Peat, 69 L. J. Ch. 484; [1900] 2 Ch. 79; 82 L. T. 440; 48 W. R. 486—C.A. • — Jurisdiction of Stock Exchange Committee — Default in Delivery of Shares—Suspension of "Buying in"—Release of Intermediaries.—The committee of the London Stock Exchange has jurisdiction under rule 19 of the rules and regulations of the Stock Exchange to pass a resolution that the buying in of shares in a security shall be suspended, inasmuch as the rule contemplates that the committee have it in their power to alter the dates when a particular thing may be done. But the committee has no jurisdiction to pass a resolution "that when the buying in of any security is suspended by order of the Committee the clause in the rules relating to the release of intermediaries shall remain inoperative until such suspension is removed," inasmuch as such a resolution amounts to the entire alteration of the contract by placing upon the buyer of shares the obligation of waiting, possibly for ever, leaving to the vendors the right to come with their shares when they please. Where there is a sale of shares, speedy, prompt, and proper delivery is essential. Union Corporation v. Charrington, 8 Com. Cas. 99—Bigham, J.

— Liquidation by Official Assignee of Stock Exchange—Receipt of Dividend by Creditor — Right of Creditor to Present Petition for Balance of Debt.—Where the assets of a defaulting member of the Stock Exchange are distributed by the official assignee of the Stock Exchange, a member being a creditor who has received a dividend in such distribution is not thereby precluded from suing the defaulter for the balance of his debt or from presenting a petition in bankruptcy against him in respect of such balance. Mendelssohn v. Ratcliff, 73 L. J. K.B. 1027; [1904] A.C. 456; 91 L. T. 204; 53 W. R. 240; 10 Com. Cas. 14; 20 T. L. R. 670—H.L. (E.)

1. GUARANTEE.

"Continuing" Guarantee—Advances More than Six Years Before Action Brought—Liability of Guarantor for Interest Accrued Within Six Years.—By a guarantee to secure the account of a bank with their customer the guarantor guaranteed the due payment of all advances made or to be made by the bank to the customer "with interest," and it was provided that the guarantee should be "a continuing guarantee," but that the amount ultimately recoverable thereunder should not exceed 1,000*l.* Advances were made by the bank to the customer up to December, 1890, after which no further advances were made; but the customer continued to make payments on account down to March, 1897. In an action upon the guarantee commenced in September, 1897, by the bank against the guarantor in respect of the balance for advances and interest then owing by the customer,—Held, that the bank's cause of action against the guarantor in respect of the advances to the customer accrued as and when the advances were made, and consequently the claim of the bank, so far as it related to the advances, was barred by the Statute of Limitations; but held, that, upon the true construction of the guarantee, interest was intended to be guaranteed on the same footing as principal, and inasmuch as the customer, by reason of the payments by him on account, remained liable to the bank in respect of the advances so that interest thereon continued to accrue as against him, the bank were entitled to recover against the guarantor the interest accrued within six years before action brought. Parr's Banking Co. v. Yates, 67 L. J. Q.B. 851; [1898] 2 Q.B. 460; 79 L. T. 321; 47 W. R. 42—C.A.

— Fidelity Bond—Death of Guarantor—Notice—Determination of Liability.—A continuing guaranty under seal, where the consideration is given once for all, is not determined by the death of the guarantor, nor by the fact that his death has come to the knowledge of the person to whom the guaranty is given. Such a guaranty cannot be determined by the guarantor or his executors upon notice, unless there be an express stipulation to that effect. Crace, In re; Balfour v. Crace, 71 L. J. Guarantee for Employee—Criminal Conduct of Employee—Intimation to Guarantor.—By bond of guaranty S. became surety to an insurance company for J., one of the company's agents. On August 11, J. embezzled 25*l.* which had been entrusted to him by the company to be given to a policy-holder. On September 25, J. confessed his crime to the company's manager, and was suspended. On October 8 he absconded. On October 11 the company gave information to the police and also to S.:—Held, that the company had failed to give intimation within proper time to S. of the criminal conduct of J., and were barred from claiming against S. under the bond of guaranty. Snaddon v. London, Edinburgh, and Glasgow Assurance Co., 5 F. 182—Ct. of Sess.

2. SURETY: RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES.

Covenant by Surety to Pay Interest "so long as any principal money remains due"—Covenant to Pay Premiums on Policy of Insurance on Principal's Life—Proof in Bankruptcy of Principal—Valuation of Security.—H. covenanted jointly and severally with a debtor, M., to whom he had himself made advances, to pay the interest on a loan made to M. by C. "so long as any principal money should remain due," and he also covenanted to pay the premiums on a policy of insurance on M.'s life. On M.'s bankruptcy H. tendered a proof in respect of his liability to continue the payment of both interest and premiums notwithstanding the bankruptcy. C. also proved in respect of the amount due to him, and valued the policy at a certain sum:—Held, that on the debtor's bankruptcy the principal sum was no longer due within the meaning of the covenant, and that, the policy having been valued, the liability to pay the premiums ceased, and H.'s proof had therefore been rightly rejected. Moss, In re; Hallett, ex parte, 74 L. J. K.B. 764; [1905] 2 K.B. 307; 92 L. T. 777; 53 W. R. 558; 12 Manson, 227—D.

Alteration of the Duties and Office of Principal Debtor.—B. was in 1896 duly appointed to "the office of clerk and storekeeper" of an asylum at a salary of 80*l.* a year, with allowances valued at 50*l.* On the passing of the Local Government (Ireland) Act, 1898, the committee of management separated the office of clerk and storekeeper, and appointed another person to be storekeeper. B. was continued as clerk at a salary of 100*l.*, without apartments or other allowances, and was compensated (under the Act) for the loss of his emoluments as storekeeper. He was dismissed in 1900, and accounts shewed that he was in default in respect of a sum of 52*l.* received by him during that year. The defendants, in 1897, had executed, as B.'s sureties, a bond to the Crown, conditional on the due discharge by B. of his duties in "the office of clerk and storekeeper." They had no notice of the changes made in 1899-1900. In proceedings against them as sureties,—Held, that, even assuming that the old office had not been in fact abolished, still it had been subjected to such material alterations that the bond could not be held to apply to it, and that the defendants were not liable. Held, further, following Holme v. Brunskill (47 L. J. Q.B. 610; 3 Q.B. D. 495), that, even assuming the bond to apply to the office in its altered form, the defendants should have been given an opportunity of considering whether they would adhere to the bond or not. Rees v. Herron, [1908] 2 Ir. R. 474—K.B. D.

Right of Surety to Security given by Principal Debtor—Mortgage.—The right of a surety against the security given to the creditor by the principal debtor arises at the time of his becoming surety, and does not arise merely if, and when, he discharges the obligation of the principal debtor. Dicta of PAGE-WOOD, V.C., in South v. Bloxham (34 L. J. Ch. 369; 2 H. & M. 457), considered and explained. Dixon v. Steel, 70 L. J. Ch. 794; [1901] 2 Ch. 602; 85 L. T. 404; 50 W. R. 132—Cozens-Hardy, J.

Building Contract—Sub-contractor for Part of Work—Accident Indemnity—Claims under Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897—Indemnity not Signed by Sub-contractor.—A contractor for the erection of a building agreed to employ sub-contractors selected by the architect to do certain parts of the work. The architect selected the defendant to do the carving work, and the contractor sent him a written order to execute the whole of the carving, the order concluding as follows: "You agree in accepting this order to sign and send per return of post the enclosed accident indemnity." The indemnity was to hold the contractor and any insurance company with whom he might be insured harmless against all claims under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, by any person in the defendant's employment upon such work in respect of any accident. The defendant not return any answer to the order, nor did sign the indemnity form, but he went on with the work. An accident happened to a workman employed by him upon the work, which the contractor had to pay compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. The contractor claimed indemnity from the defendant:—Held, that the defendant executed the work upon the footing of the order given to him by the contractor and of indemnity inclosed with it, and that he was liable to indemnify the contractor. *Greenwood v. 3. CO-SURETIES.

Contribution—Joint and Several Bond by Sureties, by which Sureties as against Creditor to be Treated as Principals—Payment by Surety Transfer of Bond to Surety—Liability of Surety.—Upon the execution of a mortgage its property by a limited company, three of the directors agreed to guarantee the repayment of the mortgage money and executed a joint and several bond to the mortgagees, by which it was stipulated that as between the mortgagees and the obligors, the three sureties, the obligor should be taken to be principal debtors, and should not, nor should either of them, be released from their or his liability under the bond by reason of time being given to the company by the mortgagees or by reason of any forbearance, or omission of the mortgagees or their assignees. Two of the sureties paid off the mortgage and took an assignment of the mortgage and of the bond, and agreed with a new company, who had purchased the goodwill, stock-in-trade, and premises of the original company, not to enforce the mortgage for six months. In an action for contribution by the two sureties against the co-surety, the latter set up the defence that he was released from liability to contribution by reason of the agreement not to enforce the mortgage for six months:—Held, that the two sureties, as assignees of the bond, were entitled to stand in the place of the original mortgagees and that, inasmuch as, by reason of the provisions of the bond, this defence could not have been set up against the mortgagees, it could not be set up against the sureties, who had by the assignment become principals, and that the co-surety was liable to contribution subject to any claim he might have for injury done him by reason of the wrongful action, if any, of the two sureties. Greenwood v. Francis, 1 L. J. Q.B. 228; [1899] 1 Q.B. 312; 79 L. T. 624; 47 W. R. 230—C.A.

Signature of Three out of Four Sureties—Liability of Three Signatories.—A guarantee by a bank for an overdraft was, on its face, intended to be a joint and several guarantee by four guarantors. Three out of the four signed the guarantee, but the fourth did not sign, though willing to do so, and then died:—Held, that the three who signed were not liable to the bank on the guarantee. National Provincial Bank of England v. Brackenbury, 22 T. L. R. 797—Walton, J.

Non-execution of Deed of Suretyship by one of Several Co-Sureties.]—Where several persons sign a memorandum by which they agree to execute a deed of covenant binding themselves jointly and severally for the payment of a certain debt in a certain amount, and where, on the faith that the deed will be executed by all the signatories of the memorandum, several execute it, they are entitled to repudiate liability if all do not in fact sign the deed. The known insolvency of one of those who should sign the deed does not render its execution by him immaterial. Evans v. Bremridge (8 De G. M. & G. 102; 2 K. & J. 174) followed. Fitzgerald v. McCowan, [1893] 2 Ir. R. 1—Q.B. D.

Duty of Obtaining Execution by All Co-Sureties.]—In the absence of other arrangements, it is the person by whom a security is to be taken or to whom it is to be made—for example, a mortgagee, an obligee, a grantee, or covenantee, or creditor, or the like—and by whom the draft security instrument is prepared and engrossed, who should see that the instrument is duly executed by all the necessary parties. Ib.

Mortgage—Insurance—Joint Liability.]—A mortgage deed contained a covenant by a surety for repayment of the mortgage debt of 4,000*l.*, subject to a proviso that the surety should in no case be liable for more than 1,000*l.* It also contained a covenant by the mortgagor for the insurance of the mortgage debt with a mortgage insurance corporation. The mortgage debt was accordingly insured by a policy of insurance which provided that the insurance corporation would, subject to certain conditions, repay the mortgage debt within six months of the power of sale contained in the mortgage deed becoming exercisable by the mortgagees. By one of the conditions of the policy it was agreed that, on the insurance corporation paying in accordance with the policy, the mortgagees should assign or transfer to the corporation the mortgage debt and interest and all securities held by the mortgagees for the same. The insurance corporation were aware at the time of their granting their policy of the covenant made by the surety:—Held (VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., dubitante), that the insurance corporation were not co-sureties with the surety, but collateral guarantors against the default both of the principal debtor and the surety, and that, a loss having occurred by the mortgagor's default, the insurance corporation were subrogated to the mortgagees' rights against the surety, without any right on the part of the surety to require them to contribute to the loss. Craythorne v. Swinburne (14 Ves. 160) applied. Denton, In re; Licences Insurance Corporation v. Denton, 73 L. J. Ch. 465; [1904] 2 Ch. 178; 90 L. T. 698; 52 W. R. 484—C.A.

Joint Cautioners—Relief—Measure of Cautioners' Liability inter se—Insolvency.]—Five persons jointly and severally guaranteed to a bank payment of all sums for which a company might become liable to the bank. The company having gone into liquidation, the bank called on two of the cautioners to pay the balance due under the guarantee. They did so, and then brought an action against another of the guarantors for relief to the extent of one-third of the sum they had paid. The pursuers averred, and gave evidence to prove, that the two remaining guarantors were insolvent. The defender denied that the insolvency of either of the remaining guarantors had been proved, and pleaded that he was liable in relief to the extent of a fifth only of the sum paid by the pursuers:—Held, that, whether the two remaining guarantors were insolvent or not, the pursuers were not bound to bear the whole risk of their insolvency, and therefore that the defender was liable in relief to the extent of one-third of the sum paid by the pursuers. Buchanan v. Main, 3 F. 215—Ct. of Sess.

4. DISCHARGE OF SURETY.

Rate Collector's Bond—Defalcation of Collector in Another Employment—Obligees Unable to Dismiss Collector—Neglect of Obligees to Inform Sureties of Defalcation—Relationship of Collector to Sureties.]—Sureties in a bond for the due performance of his office by a collector of poor rates are not released by his non-dismissal on the obligees becoming aware of his having been in arrear with public money, where such money has not been collected by him in an office held under the obligees; or where the obligees have not power to dismiss him and have done all in their power to procure his dismissal; nor by the neglect of the obligees, on becoming aware of his having been so in arrear, to inform the sureties of the fact, where, from the relationship and transactions between the collector and the sureties, it cannot be supposed that the sureties were ignorant of it. Phillips v. Foxhall (41 L. J. Q.B. 298; L. R. 7 Q.B. 666) distinguished. Byrne v. Muir (8 L. R. Ir. 396) approved. Caxton and Arrington Union v. Dew, 68 L. J. Q.B. 380; 80 L. T. 325—Bruce, J.

Joint and Several Guarantee—Judgment against Guarantors Jointly and Severally—Release of One Co-Debtor—Accord and Satisfaction—Extinguishment of Debt.]—The rule that the release of one of two joint or joint and several debtors is the release of the other applies equally whether the obligation arises upon a judgment or upon any other security. E. W. A. (a debtor), In re, 70 L. J. K.B. 810; [1901] 2 K.B. 642; 85 L. T. 31; 49 W. R. 642; 8 Manson, 250—C.A.

The debtor A. and B. entered into a joint and several guarantee to the extent of 6,000*l.* to a bank in respect of money owing to the bank by the P. Co. The bank recovered judgment against the debtor and B. jointly and severally for 6,000*l.* They presented a petition in bankruptcy against B., but arranged terms with him which were embodied in a document of March 7, 1901. The document was a receipt on behalf of the bank for 2,500*l.* and five bills for 100*l.* each "in full discharge of all claims by the bank against B. in connection with the P. Co., and all guarantees given by him to the bank in connection with that company, and in settlement of any outstanding questions as to the amount due to the bank," and the bank undertook to consent to the petition against B. being withdrawn on the terms of B. paying the costs. The bank now presented a petition in bankruptcy against A. in respect of 3,000*l.*, the balance of the judgment debt, and the interest thereon, the consideration for the judgment debt being alleged to be the amount due under the joint and several guarantee. A. contended that he was no longer indebted to the bank, on the ground that his co-debtor had by the document of March 7, 1901, been discharged from all liability under the judgment:—Held (dubitante ROMER, L.J.), that under the document of March 7, 1901, B. had been released from his liability by way of accord and satisfaction without any reservation of the rights of the bank against A., and consequently the liability of A. under the judgment had been discharged. Good, Ex parte; Armitage, in re (46 L. J. Bk. 65; 5 Ch. D. 46), distinguished. Ib.

ROMER, L.J., but for the opinion of the rest of the Court, would have construed the document of March 7, 1901, not as a release of the debt, but only as an agreement by the bank with B. not to sue him personally. Ib.

PRISON.

STATUTES.

Prisons.—61 & 62 Vict. c. 41 is the Prison Act, 1898.

Prison Officers.—2 Edw. 7 c. 9 is the Prison Officers (Pensions) Act, 1902.

Governor of Prison—Legal Custody of Prisoners during Trial in Court—Illegal Detention of Prisoner by Warder after Acquittal—Liability of Governor.—The legal custody of prisoners when at the place of trial and during actual trial in Court is in the governor of the gaol from which they have come, or from which, if bailed, they would have come if they had not been bailed, as the effect of the Prison Act, 1865, and the subsequent legislation, has been to transfer such custody from the sheriff to the gaoler; and consequently, if, after a prisoner, whether he has come from the prison or having been admitted to bail has surrendered in Court to take his trial, has been tried, acquitted, and ordered to be discharged, the warders unlawfully detain him, the governor of the prison is responsible for the illegal act of the warders, although he may not have been present in Court or have ordered or directed it. The plaintiff was committed to quarter sessions on a charge of felony; he was admitted to bail, he surrendered, took his trial, and was acquitted, and was ordered by the chairman of the Court to be discharged; whereupon the warders who were in charge of the prisoners for trial, instead of allowing the plaintiff to go, took him to the cells below the Court and detained him for a considerable time, and questioned him as to his age, parentage, and other particulars, and noted down his answers in a book, and afterwards allowed him to go. The governor of the prison from which the plaintiff would have come if he had not been bailed was not present in Court, and the unlawful detention by the warders was not by his orders or directions. In an action for false imprisonment against the governor,—Held, that the legal custody of the plaintiff after he had surrendered and during his trial was in the governor of the prison, and that the governor, whose duty it was to see that the plaintiff was properly discharged after acquittal, was responsible for the illegal acts of the warders in so detaining the plaintiff. Mee v. Cruikshank, 86 L. T. 708; 66 J. P. 89; 20 Cox C.C. 210—Wills, J.

— Clerk of the Peace—Action against Governor and Clerk of the Peace—Governor Receiving Prisoner without Proper Warrant of Commitment—Warrant by Magistrate—Sentence Altered on Appeal by Quarter Sessions—No Fresh Warrant by Quarter Sessions—Liability of Governor and Clerk of the Peace.—The plaintiff was convicted by a Court of summary jurisdiction and sentenced to a term of imprisonment with hard labour. He was taken to prison under a warrant of commitment made out by the magistrate, but released pending an appeal to quarter sessions. The conviction was affirmed, but the sentence was altered. No fresh warrant of commitment was made out by the Recorder at quarter sessions, but the original conviction by the magistrate was altered by the Recorder in accordance with his sentence. The plaintiff was then taken to prison, and the only documents handed to the governor of the prison were a copy of the original conviction by the magistrate as altered by the Recorder and the original warrant of commitment by the magistrate. He was detained in prison for some days, when the conviction was quashed upon other grounds, and he was released. In an action for false imprisonment against the clerk of the peace of the borough and the governor of the prison for unlawfully imprisoning the plaintiff,—Held, that the action could not be maintained against the clerk of the peace, as he was merely a ministerial officer and his act was a ministerial act; but that the action was maintainable against the governor, as he was not justified in receiving the plaintiff into custody and detaining him without a fresh warrant of commitment by the Recorder, and that the documents which the governor received were not equivalent to such warrant of commitment, and that the governor was liable in damages to the plaintiff. Demer v. Cook, 88 L. T. 629; 67 J. P. 206; 20 Cox C.C. 444—Lord Alverstone, C.J.

PUBLIC AUTHORITIES PROTECTION.

1. When Act Applicable, 1899.
2. When Act not Applicable, 1992.
3. Costs, 1994.

1. WHEN ACT APPLICABLE.

Effect of Act.]—Operation of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, discussed. Pearson v. Dublin Corporation, 77 L. J. P.C. 1; [1907] A.C. 351—H.L. (Ir.)

"Public authority."]—The meaning of "public authorities" in the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, is not confined to municipal corporations. The Johannesburg, 76 L. J. P. 67; [1907] P. 65; 96 L. T. 464; 11 Asp. M.O. 402—Gorell Barnes, P.

Judgment Obtained by Consent.]—Whether section 1 (b) of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, applies when the judgment is for the defendants by consent, quære. Aird v. Tarbert School Board, [1907] S.O. 22—Ct. of Sess.

Action against Colonel of Volunteers.]—An action against a colonel of Volunteers for an alleged neglect by him in the execution of his public duty as commander of Volunteers must be brought within six months of the act complained of. Wilson v. Mackay, 7 F. 168—Ct. of Sess.

Statutory Notification of Infectious Disease—Public Authorities Protection.]—Semble, a medical practitioner in giving in respect of a private patient the statutory notification to the local medical officer of health that such patient is suffering from an infectious disease is acting in the execution of a statutory or public duty, and is therefore entitled to the benefit of the provisions of section 1 (a) of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893. Salisbury v. Gould, 68 J. P. 153—Grantham, J.

Trading Municipalities.]—Section 1 of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, applies to and protects municipal authorities who carry on under a statute such profit-earning undertakings as a tramway. The continuance of the injurious effects or damage caused by an accident is not "a continuance of injury or damage" within the meaning of the section. Spittal v. Glasgow Corporation, 6 F. 828—Ct. of Sess.

Negligent Working of Tramway—Neglect or Default in Execution of "public duty or authority"—Action for Injuries—Limitation of Action.]—Where a county council acquire and work a tramway under statutory powers, negligence on the part of their servants in driving the tramcars is a neglect or default in the execution of a "public duty or authority" within the meaning of section 1 (a) of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, and consequently an action against the council in respect of such negligence must be commenced within six months after the occurrence of the negligence. The Ydun (68 L. J. P. 101; [1899] P. 236) followed. Parker v. London County Council, 73 L. J. K.B. 561; [1904] 2 K.B. 501; 90 L. T. 415; 52 W. R. 476; 68 J. P. 239; 2 L. G. R. 662; 20 T. L. R. 271—Channell, J.

Neglect in Execution "of public duty or authority"—Action for Injuries—Limitation of Time.]—A municipal corporation were working an electric tramway under the provisions of an order made under the Light Railways Act, 1896, which imposed on the corporation the duty of carrying passengers on this tramway constructed by them. An accident occurred to a passenger travelling on the tramway, for which he claimed damages. The action was not commenced within six months of the accident:—Held, that the plaintiff's cause of action did not depend upon contract, but arose out of an alleged breach of duty by the defendant corporation to carry him safely, and that such breach of duty was a "neglect or default in the execution of a public duty or authority" within the meaning of section 1 of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, and the action not having been brought within six months failed. Lyles v. Southend-on-Sea Corporation, 74 L. J. K.B. 484; [1905] 2 K.B. 1; 92 L. T. 586; 69 J. P. 193; 3 L. G. R. 691; 21 T. L. R. 389—C.A.

Per VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—It was not the intention of the Legislature that every act done by the corporation which was within the powers conferred by the order should be subject to the protection conferred by the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893. An act done not only in pursuance, execution, or intended execution of the Light Railway Order, but also of some obligation incurred by the public authority voluntarily beyond the obligation cast upon them by the order, would not be an act done in pursuance or execution or intended execution of the order. Ib.

Semble, the word "person" in section 1 of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, ought to receive a limited construction, and to be construed as excluding bodies or persons who are mere traders, and in no sense public authorities. The Act only applies to duties and acts which the "person" was under statutory duty to perform or do. Ib.

Alleged "act, neglect, or default" of High Bailiff of County Court—Non-service of Judgment Summons—Committal.]—So long as a committal order stands, an action will not lie at the suit of a judgment debtor against the high bailiff of the County Court for not having served him, the debtor, with the judgment summons upon which the order is made. Any such action against the high bailiff, by virtue of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, must be brought within six months of the "act, neglect, or default" complained of, and therefore it must be brought within six months of the time when the bailiff made the return of the service of the judgment summons and the County Court Judge acted upon it. The date of the arrest on the committal order is not the date of the "act, neglect, or default." Turley v. Daw, 94 L. T. 216; 22 T. L. R. 231—Bray, J.

Time for Commencement of Proceedings—Continuance of injury or damage.—By the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, an action against a person for an act done in pursuance of an Act of Parliament or in respect of an alleged neglect or default in the execution of any such Act must be commenced "in case of a continuance of injury or damage within six months next after the ceasing thereof":—Held, that the words "in case of a continuance of injury or damage" do not refer to a damage inflicted once and for all which continues unrepaired, but to a new damage recurring day by day in respect of an act done, it may be, once for all at some prior time, or repeated, it may be, from day to day:—Held, therefore, that where there was such a continuing injury an action would lie, when instituted within six months after the ceasing of the continuing injury, for damages up to the period of six years limited by the Statute of Limitations. Harrington (Earl) v. Derby Corporation, 74 L. J. Ch. 219; [1905] 1 Ch. 205; 92 L. T. 153; 69 J. P. 62; 3 L. G. R. 321; 21 T. L. R. 98—Buckley, J.

Action for Declaration.—Where a public authority, by way of asserting its right to a piece of land, pulled down a fence, and an action for a declaration that the land belonged to the plaintiff and for an injunction to restrain the local authority from trespassing on it was commenced against them more than six months after the date of the trespass, —Held, that the action was barred by the limitation imposed by the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, s. 1, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to a declaration of right under Order XXV. rule 5. Offin v. Rochford Rural Council, 75 L. J. Ch. 348; [1906] 1 Ch. 342; 94 L. T. 669; 54 W. R. 244; 70 J. P. 97; 4 L. G. R. 595—Warrington, J.

Magistrate—Improper Conviction—Distress.—A magistrate, having convicted and fined the plaintiff for an offence under the Vaccination Acts, issued a distress warrant in default of payment of the fine, and a distress was put in on the plaintiff's premises accordingly. Subsequently the conviction of the plaintiff was quashed for want of jurisdiction. In an action by the plaintiff against the magistrate for illegal distress:—Held, that the period limited by section 1 of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, began to run from the entry on the plaintiff's premises, and not from the date of the conviction. Polley v. Fordham (No. 1), 73 L. J. K.B. 637; [1904] 2 K.B. 345; 90 L. T. 755; 53 W. R. 48, 188; 63 J. P. 321; 20 T. L. R. 435—D.

Damages for Negligence Causing Personal Injury.—Gawley v. Belfast Corporation, [1908] 2 Ir. R. 34—C.A.

2. WHEN ACT NOT APPLICABLE.

Payment of Debt—Public Duty—Damages.—Where a contractor brought an action under a building contract against a public authority for payment for work done and damages after the expiration of the time limited by the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, for the suing of a public authority in respect of acts done in the performance of a public duty,—Held, that the public authority was not entitled to the protection given by the said Act, and that the plaintiff could recover. West Ham Guardians v. Churchwardens of St. Matthew's, Bethnal Green (65 L. J. M.C. 201; [1896] A.C. 477), followed. Sharpington v. Fulham Guardians, 73 L. J. Ch. 777; [1904] 2 Ch. 449; 91 L. T. 739; 52 W. R. 617; 68 J. P. 510; 2 L. G. R. 1229; 20 T. L. R. 648—Farwell, J.

Action of Deceit—Contract.—The Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, limiting the time within which an action may be commenced against a public body, does not apply to an action against such a body where the cause of action alleged is a fraud which induced the contract entered into between him and the public body. Pearson v. Dublin Corporation, [1907] 2 Ir. R. 537; [1907] A.C. 351; 97 L. T. 645; 77 L. J. P.C. 1—H.L. (Ir.)

Independent Contractor.—The provisions of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, do not apply to the case of an independent contractor, who under a contract with a public authority, and for his own profit, carries out works which that authority are by statute authorised to execute. Tilling, Lim. v. Dick, Kerr & Co., 74 L. J. K.B. 359; [1905] 1 K.B. 562; 92 L. T. 731; 53 W. R. 380; 69 J. P. 172; 3 L. G. R. 369; 21 T. L. R. 281—Warrington, J.

Collision—Action in Rem—Limitation of Action—"Action commenced against any person."—The Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, s. 1 (a), which provides that an action "commenced against any person" (for—so far as material—any alleged neglect in the execution of any act done in intended execution of an Act of Parliament) shall not lie unless commenced within six months next after the neglect complained of, has no application to an action in rem. The Burns, 76 L. J. P. 41; [1907] P. 137; 96 L. T. 634; 5 L. G. R. 676; 71 J. P. 193; 23 T. L. R. 323; 10 Asp. M.C. 424—C.A.

Rule for Writ of Quo Warranto Discharged—Costs.—A rule nisi for a writ of quo warranto calling upon a person to shew by what authority the clerk to the guardians claimed to act as returning officer at an election of guardians was discharged with costs:—Held, that the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, did not apply to such a proceeding, and that the clerk was not therefore entitled to costs as between solicitor and client. Rex v. Carter, 68 J. P. 466—D.

Action against Corporation on Breach of Contract to Let Town Hall.—The magistrates of a burgh let the town hall to A, a public entertainments manager, for the purpose of giving a public entertainment therein on September 7, 1903. On that day the magistrates refused to allow A the use of the hall unless he omitted a wrestling competition from the programme, and A having refused to do this the entertainment did not take place. On April 8, 1904, A brought an action for breach of contract against the magistrates, who pleaded section 1 of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893:—Held, that the Act did not apply. McPhie v. Greenock Magistrates, 7 F. 246—Ct. of Sess.

Public Body taking over Liabilities of Water Company.]—A water company's undertaking was transferred by Act of Parliament to public water trustees, who undertook liability for the whole debts of the water company. In an action against the water trustees,—Held, that they were not in a position to maintain any defence which would not have been competent to the water company, and that the provisions of the Public Authorities Protection Act were inapplicable to that company, inasmuch as, though incorporated by statute, it was in fact a commercial company exercising its statutory powers for its own profit. Lanarkshire Upper Ward District Committee v. Airdrie, Coatbridge, and District Water Trustees, 8 F. 777—Ct. of Sess.

Action to Recover Expenses Occasioned by Extraordinary Traffic—Limitation of Time—Action against Public Authority.]—The Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, s. 1, limiting to six months the period within which an action must be brought, does not apply to an action against a public authority to recover the expenses of extraordinary traffic for which the public authority is liable under the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878, s. 23, as amended by section 12, sub-section 1 (c) of the Locomotives Act, 1893, where the damage has been done not by the public authority or their servants, but by contractors under a contract to deliver stone to the public authority within their borough in connection with an improvement scheme which is in course of execution by the public authority. Kent County Council v. Folkestone Corporation, 74 L. J. K.B. 352; [1905] 1 K.B. 620; 92 L. T. 309; 53 W. R. 871; 69 J. P. 125; 3 L. G. R. 438; 21 T. L. R. 269—C.A.

Pollution of Stream—Limitation of Time—Transfer of Metropolitan Water Undertakings to Metropolitan Water Board—Saving for Pending Causes of Action—Action against Metropolitan Water Board in respect of Acts of Metropolitan Water Company and Acts of Board Themselves.]—The saving for pending causes of action against the Metropolitan water companies contained in section 45 of the Metropolis Water Act, 1902, prevents the limitation of time contained in section 1 (a) of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, from applying to an action brought against the Metropolitan Water Board in respect of acts done by a Metropolitan water company before the transfer of their property and liabilities to the Board. English v. Metropolitan Water Board, 5 L. G. R. 384; 71 J. P. 313; 23 T. L. R. 313—Lord Alverstone, C.J.

That limitation of time, however, applies to an action in respect of the pollution of a stream caused by the discharge of oil from pumping engines of the board, and has the effect of preventing damages from being recovered in respect of pollution so caused more than six months before action brought, notwithstanding that the discharge of oil and consequent pollution continued up to the issue of the writ. Ib.

Erection of Public Library—Damage Done to Adjoining Premises.]—Walsh v. Southwark Borough Council, 72 J. P. 71.—Sutton, J.

3. COSTS.

Discretion of Court as to.]—Semble, per the LORD PRESIDENT and LORD KINNEAR: The Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, only fixes the scale on which costs are to be taxed; it does not affect the power of the Court to award them or not according to the justice of the case. Aird v. Tarbert School Board, [1907] S.C. 305—Ct. of Sess.

Failure on some Issues—Costs.]—Section 1 (b) of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, does not operate to affect—in the case of an action against a public authority—the ordinary form of order for costs in the Chancery Division where the plaintiff has substantially succeeded, although failing on several minor issues. In such an action the defendant's are not entitled by virtue of that sub-section to costs as between solicitor and client on the issues on which they have succeeded, as if the decisions on those issues were equivalent to so many separate judgments in their favour, but the plaintiff will be prima facie entitled to the general costs of the action except so far as they have been increased by the issues upon which he has failed, and the defendants will be entitled to their costs as between solicitor and client of the issues upon which the plaintiff has failed, there being a set-off. Leckhampton Quarries Co. v. Ballinger, 93 L. T. 93; 3 L. G. R. 72; 69 J. P. 54—Swinfen Eady, J. See s.c. in C.A., ante, Costs, col. 539.

Costs as Between Solicitor and Client—"Act done in intended execution of any Act of Parliament."]—The Tyne Improvement Commissioners, incorporated by Act of Parliament, who are the Conservators of the River Tyne, who have constructed and maintain certain railways, staiths, and shipping places under their private Acts and receive rates in respect thereof, who borrow money on interest, and who render their services without any idea of profit or private gain, are a "public authority" within the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893. Ib.

In an action against the Tyne Improvement Commissioners for negligence in the management of a certain staith and railway, the plaintiffs failed to prove negligence, and judgment was given for the defendants with costs. The defendants applied for costs as between solicitor and client under the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, s. 1, sub-s. (b). The plaintiffs opposed the application, among other reasons, on the ground that the staith and railway were not constructed in certain respects in accordance with a deposited plan referred to in the Tyne Improvement Act, 1867, and thereby contravened the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and that the defendants could have no statutory duty in respect of works which were thus unauthorised:—Held, that the staith and railway as constructed were authorised by the Tyne Improvement Acts; and that, even if this were not so, the provisions of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, with regard to such works, could only be taken advantage of by persons aggrieved by the improper construction, and not by the plaintiffs, who had availed themselves of the works in fact constructed. Ib.

Quære, whether the terms of section 1 of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, "any act done in . . . intended execution of any Act of Parliament," should be construed to protect a public authority with regard to works the construction of which has been specified by Act of Parliament, but which have not been constructed in certain respects in accordance with such specification. Jolliffe v. Wallasey Local Board (43 L. J. C.P. 41; L. R. 9 C.P. 62) considered. The Johannesburg, 76 L. J. P. 67; [1907] P. 65; 96 L. T. 464.—Gorell Barnes, J.

— An unsuccessful action brought against a rural council by an urban council to set aside a compromise of a claim for adjustment under section 62 of the Local Government Act, 1888—put forward bona fide, but not well founded in law—as being ultra vires is not an action brought for any act done by the defendants which will entitle the successful defendants to costs as between solicitor and client under the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, Holsworthy Urban Council v. Holsworthy Rural Council, 76 L. J. Ch. 889; [1907] 2 Ch. 62; 71 J. P. 330; 5 L. G. R. 791; 97 L. T. 634; 23 T. L. R. 452—Warrington, J. And see cols. 595–598.

Tort by Government Officials—Trespass against Crown or Executive.—An action for trespass committed or intended is not maintainable against officials of the Crown or Government sued in their official capacity or as an official body. Raleigh v. Goschen, 67 L. J. Ch. 59; [1898] 1 Ch. 73; 77 L. T. 429; 46 W. R. 90—Romer, J.

Such an action will, however, lie against such officials in respect of acts actually done or directed by them if sued in their individual capacity, even although such acts be done by the authority of the Government. Ib.

Superannuation.—Crown prosecutors in Victoria, who are paid by salary and are referred to in the Appropriation Acts of the colony as a distinct class from prosecuting barristers who are paid by fees, are entitled under the Public Service Act, 1890, s. 107, to superannuation, and are not excluded by section 3 of that Act, which provides that nothing therein shall apply to any prosecuting barrister. The fact that a Crown prosecutor holds his office during pleasure does not affect the claim for superannuation for the term during which he has held office. Smyth v. Reg., 67 L. J. Ogwen District Council*, 79 L. T. 208; 62 J. P. 691—D.

Obligation to Preserve Drainage of Lands—Limit of Time.]—The appellant company acquired lands for the purposes of their undertaking from the respondent's predecessor in title under a conveyance reciting a decree arbitral following on a statutory reference. The conveyance contained a declaration that "the said railway company shall be bound and obliged to preserve the effective drainage of the lands in so far as the same may be interfered with by the railway works"—Held, that this obligation was not of unlimited duration, but was subject to the limit of time prescribed by section 65 of the Railways Clauses (Scotland) Act, 1845, which was incorporated in the private Act of the company. Great North of Scotland Railway v. Fife (Duke), 82 L. T. 425—H.L. (Sc.)

4. TAKING LANDS.

Arbitration—Costs—Taxation by Master of Supreme Court—Persona Designata—Jurisdiction to Review Taxation.]—Notice to treat having been given with a view to the compulsory purchase of certain land under a provisional order which incorporated the Lands Clauses Acts (including the Lands Clauses (Taxation of Costs) Act, 1895), and was made under the Light Railways Act, 1896, the amount of compensation to be paid for the land was referred to arbitration under section 13 of the latter Act:—Held, that either party might require the costs of the arbitration to be taxed by a Master of the Supreme Court under section 1 of the Lands Clauses (Taxation of Costs) Act, 1895, in which case the Master would tax as a persona designata, and not in his official capacity, and there would be no jurisdiction in the Court to review the taxation. Cannings and Middlessex County Council, In re, 76 L. J. K.B. 44; [1907] 1 K.B. 51; 95 L. T. 766; 71 J. P. 46; 5 L. G. R. 442; 23 T. L. R. 43—C.A.

Semble, also, that the costs might, if both parties to the arbitration agreed, be taxed by the arbitrator in pursuance of Schedule I. (i) of the Arbitration Act, 1889, which, by section 13 of the Light Railways Act, 1896, is made applicable to an arbitration under that section. Id.

Conveyance Subject to Restrictive Covenant—Sale of Superfluous Land—Validity of Covenant—Ultra Vires.]—A railway company which is empowered by statute to buy land for certain purposes, and acquires the land by voluntary purchase, cannot validly enter into a covenant limiting the purposes for which the land may be used so as to preclude themselves and their successors from the exercise in respect of the land of all their statutory powers. Ayr Harbour Trustees v. Oswald (8 App. Cas. 623) followed. South-Eastern Railway and Wiffen's Contract, In re, 76 L. J. Ch. 481; [1907] 2 Ch. 366; 97 L. T. 576—Neville, J.

Tunnel—Superfluous Land—Discontinuance of Possession—Possession of Surface by Stranger—Telegraph-wires over Tunnel—Title to Surface and Space Above.]—A stranger may by exclusive possession for the statutory period acquire a title to the surface of land situate vertically over a tunnel forming part of a railway company's undertaking, even although not superfluous land, together with so much of what is beneath the surface as is necessary to the enjoyment of such surface, subject to the right of the railway company to the tunnel and to so much of the underlying and superincumbent strata as is necessary for its proper enjoyment as a railway tunnel. Midland Railway v. Wright, 70 L. J. Ch. 411; [1901] 1 Ch. 738; 84 L. T. 225; 49 W. R. 474—Byrne, J.

He may also acquire a title to the space above the surface by the exercise of rights of ownership in such space, such as leasing the right to the railway company to carry their telegraph-wires over the land, where it is not shewn that the occupation of the surface is necessary, although it may be convenient, for the purpose of carrying such wires. Id.

Lands Acquired for Specified Purpose—Right to Support.]—Where a grant of lands is made for a specified purpose, such as the construction and use of a railway, the grant, in the absence of any contrary intention appearing ex facie of it, carries with it by implication a right to reasonable and necessary support for the works to be made upon the lands by the subjacent strata or adjacent lands of the grantor, whether these strata or lands continue to belong to the grantor or are conveyed by him, subject to the date of the grant, to another person. North British Railway v. Turners, Lim., 6 F. 900—Ct. of Sess.

Mines and Minerals—Clay.]—The provisions of section 70 of the Railway Clauses Consolidated (Scotland) Act, 1845, excluding from conveyances of lands purchased under the Act (when not expressly included) "mines of coal, ironstone, slate, or other minerals under any lands purchased," do not apply to clay forming the subsoil of the lands purchased. Id. See MINERALS, infra.

Land Acquired for Statutory Purpose—Dedication to Public.]—See STATUTE.

5. MINERALS.

"Minerals"—Clay.]—Clay is not a "mineral" within the meaning of section 77 of the Railways Clauses Act, 1845, if it is, substantially, "the land" itself. Whether it is or not depends on the circumstances of each particular case. Great Western Railway v. Blades, 70 L. J. Ch. 847; [1901] 2 Ch. 624; 85 L. T. 308; 65 J. P. 791—Buckley, J.

Land was taken by a railway company under statutory powers. The strata were a thin top layer of a few inches only of ordinary surface soil, and merchantable clay, to a depth of several hundred feet, below:—Held, that the clay was not a "mineral" excepted out of the conveyance to the railway company under section 77 of the Railways Clauses Act, 1845. Glasgow Corporation v. Farie (58 L. J. P.C. 33; 13 App. Cas. 657) followed. Id.

— Clay, forming the surface or subsoil of land, is not a "mineral" within the meaning of sections 77, 78, or 79 of the Railways Clauses Act, 1845. Glasgow (Lord Provost) v. Farie (58 L. J. P.C. 33; 13 App. Cas. 657) followed. Todd and North-Eastern Railway, In re, 72 L. J. K.B. 337; [1903] 1 K.B. 603; 88 L. T. 366; 67 J. P. 105—C.A.

Minerals under Railway—Owner desiring to Work—Act under which Land Purchased Repealed by Later Act—Purchase of and Compensation for Minerals under Later Act—Mandamus to Company to take up Award.]—In 1839 the predecessors in title of the prosecutors conveyed to the L. and B. Railway Co. the fee-simple of land, upon which a railway was afterwards made, to hold the same according to the true intent or meaning of the company's Act (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. xxxvi.). By section 1 of 9 & 10 Vict. c. cciv., by which the London and North-Western Railway Co. was incorporated and the L. and B. Railway vested in it, the L. and B. and other railway companies were dissolved, and 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. xxxvi. was, together with other Acts, repealed, provided that the repealing of the Acts should not annul or in any way prejudice or affect any purchase, sale, conveyance, grant, contract, security, act, matter, or thing theretofore made, done, or executed under the Act; and by section 2 the Railways Clauses Act, 1845, was, so far as the same was applicable and not modified by the Act or inconsistent with the provisions thereof, to be held to apply to the company thereby incorporated, and to be read and construed as forming part of the Act to all intents and purposes as if the railway made under the powers and provisions of the repealed Act had been expressly or by reference authorised to be made, and made under the powers of the Railways Clauses Act, 1845. In 1894 the prosecutors gave notice to the company that they desired to work the minerals of the land conveyed in 1839 lying under or within forty yards of the railway, and proceeded to get the amount of compensation assessed by arbitration in accordance with the Railways Clauses Act, 1845, but the company after taking part in the arbitration under protest, and contending that the compensation should be assessed under the repealed 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. xxxvi., refused to take up the award as provided by section 35 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845:—Held (COLLINS, L.J., dissentiente), that, on the true construction of 9 & 10 Vict. c. cciv., the provisions of 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. xxxvi., as to the assessment of compensation for the minerals, were superseded by the provisions of the Railways Clauses Act, 1845, for that purpose, and that a mandamus must issue directing the company to take up the award. Reg. v. London and North-Western Railway, 63 L. J. Q.B. 685; [1899] 1 Q.B. 921; 80 L. T. 782—C.A. Overruled. See next case.

Per A. L. SMITH, L.J.—After an award has been made in such an arbitration the Court will not, upon the argument of a rule for a mandamus to compel the company to take it up, go into the question whether the award is well made or not. Ib.

— Saving by Later Act of Rights Accrued under Earlier Act.—When the surface of land has been sold under the provisions of a special Act which lays down certain terms with respect to the minerals and the purchase thereof, and that Act is repealed by a later statute which enacts a different set of conditions less favourable to the surface-owner in respect of the minerals, but also provides that the repeal is not to annul or prejudice any purchase, sale, conveyance, or the like made or executed under the earlier statute, the rights and obligations of the parties with respect to the sale of the minerals or compensation for the same are regulated by the earlier and not by the later legislation. Reg. v. London and North-Western Railway (63 L. J. Q.B. 685; [1899] 1 Q.B. 921) overruled. London and North-Western Railway v. Walker, 72 L. J. K.B. 578; [1903] A.C. 280; 88 L. T. 705—H.L. (E.)

Costs of Arbitration.—Where an award has been made assessing the compensation to be paid in such a case by a railway company, and the company has protested against the arbitration as wrongly constituted and established the justice of the protest, the company is entitled to the costs of the arbitration and award. Ib.

Notice not to Work.—"Compensation for such mines."—Where a railway company, under section 78 of the Railways Clauses Act, 1845, require the owner of minerals lying under or adjacent to the railway to leave the minerals unworked, the railway company must pay to the mineral owner, as "compensation for such mines," the value of the minerals which the owner is precluded from working, and not merely damages caused by reason of the interference with his working of the mine. Joicey v. North-Eastern Railway, 75 L. J. K.B. 57; [1906] 1 K.B. 195; 94 L. T. 143; 54 W. R. 332; 70 J. P. 75; 22 T. L. R. 105—Bigham, J. Reversed, 23 T. L. R. 163—C.A.

G. BRIDGES.

Bridge and Approaches—Liability of Company to Repair—Diversion.—A railway company empowered by their private Act to carry a certain old road across their line on a level, built a bridge across their line at a spot where no highway had previously been, and 347 yards distant from the place where the line crossed the old road. Upon land given by the owners the company made approaches to the bridge, connecting it with the roads lying on either side of the line. The old road was at the same time thrown into the adjoining fields, and the traffic which formerly had passed along the old road thenceforth passed over the bridge and its approaches. The company repaired the bridge from time to time, but did not repair the approaches. On one occasion an adjoining landowner repaired the approaches under an agreement with the highway authority. The highway authority applied to Justices under the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, for an order under section 46 directing the railway company to maintain the bridge and its approaches:—Held, that there being no evidence of any constructional necessity which alone would justify a diversion of the old road under section 16 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, the bridge and its approaches had not been made under section 46, and therefore the railway company were not bound to maintain them under that section. London and North-Western Railway v. Ogwen District Council, 80 L. T. 401; 63 J. P. 295—C.A.

Approaches—Liability to Widen.]—The special Act of a railway company, passed subsequently to the Railways Clauses Act, 1845, contained no provisions as to the width of the road on a bridge crossing the railway, although a former Act of the same company passed prior to the Railways Clauses Act had done so:—Held, that the railway company were bound under section 51 of the Railways Clauses Act, 1845, to increase the width of the road over the bridge to the width required by section 50 of that Act, as there was no special Act qualifying the provisions of that section; but that the railway company were not bound to widen the approaches to the bridge, as the company had not compulsory powers to acquire the land necessary for such purpose, and that under the Railways Clauses Act, 1845, the liability of the railway company was limited to the widening of the bridge proper. Rhondda Urban Council v. Taff Vale Railway, 76 L. J. K.B. 486; [1907] 1 K.B. 739; 96 L. T. 633; 71 J. P. 189; 5 L. G. R. 395.—Phillimore, J. Affirmed in C.A., 77 L. J. K.B. 424; [1908] 1 K.B. 239; 6 L. G. R. 201; 24 T. L. R. 165.

“Accommodation bridge”—Obligation to Form Approaches.]—A railway company acquired a piece of land under the burden that they should construct at their own expense “an accommodation bridge over or under the branch railway intended to be formed” on the land acquired, the “plans and sections of the bridge . . . and of the approaches to said bridge” to be submitted to the vendor’s engineers before the construction should be commenced:—Held, that the obligation on the company to construct the bridge included an obligation to form the approaches to the bridge. Addie’s Trustees v. Caledonian Railway, 8 F. 1047—Ct. of Sess.

Bridge over Canal—Obligation to Maintain at Specified Height—Subsidence.]—By the Rhymney Railway Act, 1882, s. 10, it was provided: “For the protection of the . . . canal company, the following provisions shall have effect: (a) The railways and works by this Act authorised shall not when completed interfere with the locks, waterway, or towing-path of the canal except by the bridge carrying the railway across the canal and towing-path, which bridge shall have a clear height of eight feet from the present level of the towing-path to the underside of the arch. (b) Neither during the construction of the bridge nor at any time shall the free passage of traffic along the canal or towing-path be impeded.” The bridge was duly constructed in accordance with the Act, but afterwards the ground subsided from causes beyond the control either of the railway company or the canal company, so that the bridge was at a much lower elevation above the towing-path and was an obstruction to the traffic:—Held, that the railway company were bound to maintain the bridge at the height above the towing-path prescribed by the Act. Rhymney Railway Co. v. Glamorganshire Canal Co., 91 L. T. 113; 20 T. L. R. 593—H.L. (E.)

Bridge Carrying Public Highway Over Railway—Maintenance—Conversion of County Roads into Public Streets.]—The words “public highway” in section 39 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845 [corresponding to section 46 of the Railways Clauses Act, 1845], include public streets in a burgh as well as county roads. A railway company is not relieved of the obligation to maintain the roadways on the bridges and approaches by means of which such roads are carried over a railway, on the transfer of the roads from the county to the burgh authorities; the company is under the same obligation to maintain such portions of the substituted roads as if they had been the original roads. Glasgow Corporation v. Caledonian Railway, 8 F. 755—Ct. of Sess. And see Rhondda Urban Council v. Taff Vale Railway (No. 1), 77 L. J. K.B. 424; [1908] 1 K.B. 239; 72 J. P. 25; 6 L. G. R. 201; 24 T. L. R. 165—C.A.

7. LEVEL CROSSINGS.

Trespass—Right of Way.]—A railway company when it is empowered to make a line for traffic must at all places where roads cross the line provide bridges or level crossings according to its undertaking under its application to Parliament. On the other hand, it is vested with a power to have trespassers on its line dealt with penally by fine in a way not open to the ordinary owner of property. This power is given in view of the public safety. If persons claim a right to cross at places where such provision is not made, they must take civil steps to have a crossing provided, which they can only do by proving their right; and if they trespass on the line by climbing over fences they cannot claim immunity from the statutory penalties; they are trespassers if they are not crossing at a place provided for that purpose. Caledonian Railway v. Walmsley, [1907] S.C. 1047—Ct. of Sess.

Public Footpath—Obligation to Build Bridge.]—Section 46 of the Railways Clauses Act, 1845, imposes no obligation on a railway company to carry a public footpath over the railway, or the railway over a footpath, by means of a bridge. Dartford Rural Council v. Beasley Heath Railway, 67 L. J. Q.B. 231; [1898] A.C. 210; 77 L. T. 601; 46 W. R. 235; 62 J. P. 227—H.L. (E.)

Breach of Statutory Provision—Injunction—Discretion—Application by Attorney-General—No Injury to Public Proved.]—In an action by the Attorney-General, on the relation of the road authority, for an injunction to restrain a railway company from infringing the provisions of section 48 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, which enacts that “Where the railway crosses any turnpike road on a level adjoining to a station, all trains on the railway shall be made to slacken their speed before arriving at such turnpike road, and shall not cross the same at any greater rate of speed than four miles an hour,” it is no answer by the railway company that it is less inconvenient to the public that the trains should cross the road at a greater rate of speed than four miles an hour. Att.-Gen. v. London and North-Western Railway, 69 L. J. Q.B. 26; [1900] 1 Q.B. 78; 63 J. P. 772—C.A. Affirming, 79 L. T. 412—Bruce, J.

Closing of Road—Substitution of New Road.]—A railway company, in the exercise of statutory powers, permanently interfered with a turnpike road and provided a substituted road, under the Railway Clauses Act. The operations resulted in part of the old road becoming a cul-de-sac, in which no one had an interest except the adjoining proprietors, the owners of the solum:—Held, that the provisions of the General Roads Acts as to the closing of a highway had no application, and that the road authority could not prevent the adjoining proprietors building on the disused road. Lanark County Council v. Caledonian Railway, 8 F. 1213—Ct. of Sess.

8. STATIONS.

Platform—"Railway"—Trespass.]—A railway station platform is not part of a railway in the sense of section 23 of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1868 (which prohibits trespassing on railways), and proceedings under that section in respect of trespass on the platform of a station are incompetent. Thomson v. Great North of Scotland Railway, 2 F. (Just. Cas.) 22—Ct. of Justy.

Right of Railway Servants to Remove Trespasser by Force.]—When a cabman in a railway station has concluded the business which brought him there and refuses to leave, and persists in refusing to leave, he becomes a trespasser, and the railway servants are at common law entitled to remove him by force if necessary. Wood v. North British Railway, 2 F. 1—Ct. of Sess.

9. SIDINGS.

Obligation to Make Communication between Railway and Private Siding—"Where the communication can be made with safety to the public and without injury to the railway and without inconvenience to the traffic thereon."—The right given by section 76 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, to the owner of lands adjoining a railway to lay down collateral branches of railway and to require the railway company to connect such collateral branches with their railway is not an absolute right apart from any question as to the mode of dealing with the connection, but only a right to require a connection to be made for the purpose of the use of the railway by the adjoining owner with his own locomotives and carriages, and therefore cannot be enforced unless such user can be effected, as provided by the section, "with safety to the public and without injury to the railway and without inconvenience to the traffic thereon." Lancashire Brick and Terra-Cotta Co. v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway, 71 L. J. K.B. 431; [1902] 1 K.B. 651; 86 L. T. 176; 11 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 138—C.A.

Siding Accommodation—Charge for—Coal Waggon Remaining on Sidings.]—The defendants, who were coal merchants, consigned coal from certain collieries by the plaintiffs' railway to the plaintiffs' sidings at Willesden Junction, there to await further orders as to the ultimate destination of the coal to the purchasers, and when the coal was sent on to the ultimate destination the plaintiffs charged a through rate from the colliery station to the station of the purchaser. The plaintiffs had previously given the defendants notice that they would charge siding rent at the rate of 6d. per waggon per day or part of a day on the "wait order" waggons after the first two clear days. In an action to recover the siding rent, the Judge found as a fact that two clear days afforded sufficient time to enable the defendants to furnish instructions as to the ultimate destination of the coal:—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover the siding rent, either—first, upon a common-law contract to pay, keeping the coal at Willesden after two days not being an incident of the contract to carry; or secondly, under the London and North-Western Railway Company (Rates and Charges) Order Confirmation Act, 1891, schedule, Part IV., as accommodation provided at the desire of the defendants for which no provision was made elsewhere in the schedule. London and North-Western Railway v. Crooke, 20 T. L. R. 506—D.

Branch Railway—Right to Communicate with Sidings of Railway Company—Specific Appropriation by Railway Company as Refuge Sidings.]

—The applicant's sidings had communicated with sidings on the respondents' railway for many years under a terminable agreement, which the railway company terminated; and he now applied under section 76 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, for an order enjoining the respondents to make, or permit to be made, such lines of rails as might be necessary for effecting a communication between the sidings of the applicant and of the respondents. The railway company refused to make such communication on the ground that their sidings were now set apart for a specific purpose, with which such communication would interfere. At the hearing of the case witnesses on behalf of the railway company proved that the alteration in the contemplated use of the siding was due to an alteration recently made in an adjoining tunnel. This had fallen in, and it had been found necessary to have only a single line of railway for a portion of its length. The consequent alteration in the working of traffic through the tunnel necessitated the exclusive appropriation of the sidings over which the applicant's traffic had formerly been worked to the purpose of providing refuge sidings for trains which met at the tunnel: Held, that the railway company had shewn to the satisfaction of the Court that their sidings had been bona fide appropriated for the specific purpose of use as refuge sidings, and that the use of them for the applicant's traffic would interfere with such use. Richard v. Great Western Railway, 11 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 133—Ry. Com.

Agreement to Maintain in Full Efficiency.]—

By an agreement between a railway company and a landowner, the railway company undertook, inter alia, "to maintain and uphold in full efficiency in all time coming" a siding of their railway for the accommodation of the landowner and his tenants:—Held, that, under the agreement, the obligation of the railway company was merely to maintain the structural efficiency of the siding and its necessary appurtenances, and not to provide things which were of the nature of mere conveniences or facilities in the use of the siding. Kennedy v. Glasgow and South-Western Railway, 8 F. 13—Ct. of Sess.

Semble, that the question whether proper facilities were provided at the siding—such facilities not being matter of contract—was a question for the determination of the Railway Commissioners. Ib.

Agreement—Effect of Subsequent Legislation—Services at Trader's Siding.]—In 1891 a trading company entered into an agreement with a railway company for the construction of a siding. Clause 10 of the agreement was as follows: "The railway company will make to the limited company an allowance of not less than 3*d.* per ton for loading and unloading waggons and sheeting the same, in respect of cotton and yarns and other goods usually handled by the company, received at or forwarded from the proposed sidings. And the railway company will not charge any terminal in respect of coal traffic from the same." Subsequently to the agreement the Railway Rates and Charges Order Confirmation Act, 1892, and the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1894, were passed. Upon an application by the trading company for a rebate under the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1894, and a cross-application by the railway company for an allowance under the Railway Rates and Charges Order Confirmation Act, 1892,—Held, that by the agreement the sidings in question were treated as a station, and the railway company were to charge as at a station less the special allowances. Held, also, that there was nothing in the subsequent legislation incompatible with the agreement, into which the parties had entered with the knowledge of impending legislation, and for perfectly good consideration, and by which they were bound. Crompton v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway, 11 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 285—C.A.

Siding of Railway Company not Constructed under Statutory Powers—Reasonable Rate.]—Coal consigned to Vickers, Sons & Maxim is conveyed to Barrow-in-Furness station, and on arrival, after being shunted into various sidings in the Barrow goods yard, goes on by rail, hauled by one of the railway company's engines, over a branch line belonging to the company, but not constructed under statutory powers, with which, at a distance of fifty-four chains from its commencement, Vickers, Sons & Maxim have connected their works by private sidings. For these services, partly in the goods yard and partly on the branch line, the railway company made a charge of 6*d.* per ton:—Held, that this was a reasonable sum, which the railway company was entitled to charge under section 5, sub-section 1 of the Railway Rates and Charges, No. 7 (Furness Railway &c.) Order Confirmation Act, 1892. Furness Railway v. Vickers, Sons & Maxim, 12 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 81; 20 T. L. R. 326—Ry. Com.

Siding "not belonging to the company."]—An ancient siding was situated on a railway company's land, and ran parallel to their main line upon the same embankment, and had been constructed by the railway company. The railway company conveyed land for building maltings to the applicants upon the terms (inter alia) that they should have "full and free right and liberty at all reasonable times and in all reasonable ways to use without charge the railway siding for the purpose of conveniently forwarding and receiving and conveying all goods and commodities," and undertook to place in a convenient part of the said siding all trucks destined for the applicants, and also on request to remove and forward them with all reasonable expedition; the railway company further undertook to maintain the siding in good repair:—Held, that the siding was a siding "belonging to the railway company." Girardot v. Great Eastern Railway, 11 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 244—Ry. Com.

Allowance—Date from which Recoverable.]—Where an allowance is granted by the Court under section 4 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1894, the allowance prima facie should begin from the date of the "application," and not from the date of the judgment, nor from a time anterior to the application. Where a siding owner does not require station accommodation, it does not necessarily follow that he ought to have an allowance in respect of not requiring it, since sidings may be a great burden to a railway company, and each case must stand on its merits. Where a railway company has no power to charge a station terminal, and yet the rate is shewn to include something for a station terminal, the Court is not necessarily bound to allow a rebate, since section 4 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1894, gives it a wide jurisdiction to do justice free from technicalities. In ascertaining the component parts of a rate the system, adopted in the case of Pidcock v. Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway (9 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 45), whereby the service charges were deemed to be in the same proportion to the rates actually charged as the maxima service charges would be to the sum of the maxima rates chargeable, cannot be taken as an absolute measure; since, in a case like the present, where it is proved that no charge is made for loading or unloading, too little would be attributed to the cost of conveyance and to the station terminal. Gilstrap, Earp & Co. v. Great Northern Railway, 11 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 265—Ry. Com.

Rate for Siding Services—Arbitrator—Jurisdiction of Railway and Canal Commissioners.]—In an application to the Railway and Canal Commissioners, under section 4 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1894, by a firm of traders for a rebate from the rates charged by a railway company for the conveyance of coal to a private siding belonging to the traders, on the ground that the rates exceeded the maximum charge for conveyance, and that the extra charge was for station accommodation, and that no station accommodation was provided, the Commissioners found that the extra charge complained of was made for services rendered at the traders' private siding, and that the charge was reasonable, and refused the application. The traders appealed, and maintained, inter alia, that the Commissioners had exceeded their jurisdiction in holding that the charge made by the railway company for their services at the siding was reasonable, in respect that that was a question which, under the schedule, section 5 of the Railway Rates and Charges No. 25 (North British Railway, &c.) Order Confirmation Act, 1892, fell to be determined exclusively by an arbitrator either antecedently to the rate being levied or, in any event, after a difference as to the rate had arisen between the traders and the company, and that such a difference had arisen here:—Held, first, that it is not a condition precedent to a railway company making a charge for services rendered at a siding not belonging to them that an arbitrator shall first have determined that the charge so proposed to be made is reasonable; and secondly, that the jurisdiction conferred upon the Commissioners by section 4 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act to settle a dispute as to what were just rebates to be allowed from a rate charged to traders necessarily included power to determine whether the charge made for siding services was reasonable or not. Cowan v. North British Railway, 4 F. 334—Ct. of Sess.

Station Accommodation—Comparable Rate—Appeal.—Traders had coal delivered to them by a railway company at a private siding belonging to the traders. The rates charged for the carriage of the coal were the same as the rates charged for the conveyance of coal from the same point of departure to a station at a short distance beyond the siding. The rates both to the siding and to the station were admittedly in excess of the maximum conveyance rate, and the excess was the same in both cases. The traders applied to the Railway Commissioners under section 4 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1894, to determine what were the reasonable or just rebates to be made by the railway company from the rates charged by them on the coal traffic to the traders' siding in respect that the railway company did not require to provide station accommodation or to perform terminal services. They alleged that the rates charged to them included a charge for station terminals. The Commissioners found that while the charges in excess of the maximum conveyance rates to the siding and station were identical, the siding rate did not include any charge for station accommodation, but only for services rendered to the trader at the siding, and that the charge so made was reasonable, and refused a rebate. The traders appealed. At the hearing the railway company maintained, inter alia, that as soon as they had proved that the charge complained of was not made in respect of station accommodation the application fell to be refused, and that the Commissioners had exceeded their jurisdiction in entertaining it further:—Held, that the company having undertaken to shew that the charge was not only made for station accommodation, but that it was made for siding services, it was open to the traders to challenge the new ground of charge and to shew that it was not reasonable. Ib.

— Special Services at Traders' Siding—Jurisdiction.—A trader is not prevented from complaining under the Traffic Acts of a rate for carriage of coal from a colliery to his siding by the fact that the rate is paid by the colliery owners, the trader himself having no account with the railway company, since the rate is included in the price paid for the coal by the trader, and the colliery owners, for the purpose of paying the rate, are the agents of the trader. In order to make a station coal rate comparable with a siding coal rate, the coal traffic at the station must bear some reasonable proportion to that at the siding, so that where 97 per cent. of the whole coal traffic went to the siding, and only 3 per cent. to the station, the explanation of the railway company that the station rate was merely a "paper" rate was accepted. A trader who received coal at a private siding applied to the Commissioners for a rebate from a siding-to-siding rate, upon the ground that the siding-to-siding rate exceeded the maximum rate for conveyance, and was the same in amount as the siding-to-station rate charged to a neighbouring station. The railway company stated in their answer that the siding-to-siding rate, in so far as it was in excess of the conveyance maximum, was not charged for station terminal services, but was a reasonable charge made for services rendered at both ends of the journey:—Held, first, that it was not a condition precedent to the railway company lawfully making such a charge at a private siding that its reasonableness should have been determined by an arbitrator in an application under the Railway Rates and Charges Order Confirmation Act; secondly, that the Commissioners had jurisdiction under the Traffic Act of 1894, for the purpose of determining whether the rebate claimed should be allowed, to determine whether the charge made by the railway company for services at the sidings was reasonable; and thirdly, that the determinations of the Commissioners upon the questions raised by the answer of the railway company were determinations upon questions of fact, and consequently not the subject of an appeal. Cowan v. North British Railway (No. 3), 11 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 271—Ct. of Sess.

Rebate on Sidings Rate—Sidings "not belonging to the company."—A siding was constructed by a railway company upon a plot of land adjacent to their railway, leased to them by a trader for a term of 996 years at a yearly rental of 1*l.* The trader himself was a lessee of the plot of land at a yearly rental of 7*l.* odd. The sublease contained covenants that the railway company would erect a warehouse and construct a siding upon the plot demised, with proper connections connecting their main line with the warehouse; keep the siding and warehouse in repair; haul from the neighbouring station (a distance of three-quarters of a mile) into the siding, free of charge, wagons consigned to the owners or occupiers of the said trader's mills; take away at their own expense all covering used for such traffic, and check the goods; and afford the owners or occupiers of the mills free use and enjoyment of the warehouse provided that, if they (the owners or occupiers) did not require the use of the whole warehouse, the railway company were to be entitled to use such parts as might not be from time to time required. The owners or occupiers of the mills were to move the wagons from the point on the siding where left by the railway company to the warehouse, and also to load and unload, and perform all necessary labour, at their own cost and risk:—Held, that the siding was a siding "belonging to the railway company," not only in the sense that they were lessees entitled to the possession of it, but also in the sense that they were entitled to the user of it, subject to the easement granted to the trader. Held, that the words "belonging to the company" in section 4 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1894, do not mean belonging, in a legal sense, as being owners of real property; and that it would be possible for a siding to be on the freehold of a railway company and yet not to belong to the company within the meaning of the section. Huntington v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway, 11 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 237—C.A.

10. ACCOMMODATION WORKS.

Damages for Failure to Provide "forthwith"—Farm Road—Level Crossing—Doubling of Railway.]—A railway company under their special Act acquired the solum of a portion of a farm road which connected the north part of the farm with the south, and laid their rails on the portion so acquired. Compensation was paid on the footing that a level crossing was to be provided at the point where the railway intersected the road, and a level crossing was provided accordingly. The railway as originally constructed was a single line with local traffic only, but under a subsequent Act the line was doubled and extended so as to form part of a main line with a large traffic. Before the doubled and extended line was opened for traffic the proprietor and tenant of the farm applied under section 60 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845 (which corresponds to section 63 of the English Act of 1845), for an accommodation bridge in lieu of the level crossing, on the ground that the increased traffic would make the level crossing useless for the purposes of the farm, and in July, 1897, the railway company were ordered to provide an accommodation bridge. The bridge was not provided till March, 1898, by which time the doubled and extended line had been opened for traffic, and the level crossing in consequence useless, for ten months. The tenant claimed damages against the railway company for the loss sustained by him through the want of means of communication between the two portions of his farm during these ten months:—Held, that the pursuer was entitled to damages in respect that the defenders had not fulfilled their statutory duty under section 60 of providing the accommodation bridge "forthwith" on the formation of their line. Pollock v. North British Railway, 3 F. 727—Ct. of Sess.

Easement—Level Crossing—Limits of Right of User.]—Where a level crossing for a tramroad has been made by a railway company for the accommodation of a landowner whose land is intersected by the railway, the landowner may make any use of the level crossing which may be taken to have been fairly within the contemplation of the parties when the works were executed, but may not use it so as to increase the burden of the easement to which the company is subject—as, for instance, for conveying goods on the tramroad from places not situate on the landowner's property and not served by the tramroad when the easement was first created. Great Western Railway v. Talbot, 71 L. J. Ch. 835; [1902] 2 Ch. 759; 87 L. T. 405; 51 W. R. 312—C.A.

Watercourse—Prescription—Water Flowing in Artificial Channel along Railway Company's Permanent Way.]—Prior to 1849 the plaintiff's predecessors had enjoyed the right to take water from a natural stream flowing near their holding. In 1849, the defendant railway company, in constructing their line, interfered with or tapped the subterranean courses of this stream, which ceased thenceforward to flow, the water that had supplied it finding its way to the surface at a cutting on the company's line. This water the company conveyed along and away from their line in a new artificial channel. The water of this new stream was not until 1898 used by nor was it of any use to the company. In 1898 the company commenced to make use of this water supply for their own purposes, and the plaintiff, who had been taking the water thereof since 1849 for domestic purposes, brought an action for disturbance of a prescriptive right. The jury found that the new stream was substituted for the old, and that the company had not constructed the new channel until they should require to use the water for their own purposes:—Held, that, this new artificial watercourse being made for the benefit of the company on the company's own land, no enjoyment of the water thereof while the water was of no use to the company could create a prescriptive right in the plaintiff; and, further, that the existence of such a right would be inconsistent with the purposes of the incorporation of the company and with the obligations of the company to provide for the security of their permanent way and the safety of the public; and that the new artificial stream not being the same as the stream formerly in existence, no contract in regard thereto, as an "accommodation work" within section 16 of the Railways Clauses Act, 1845, could be presumed. M'Evoy v. Great Northern Railway, [1900] 2 Ir. R. 325—C.A.

11. FACILITIES FOR TRAFFIC.

Due and Reasonable Facilities for Traffic—Amalgamation Act—Connecting Trains.]—By the Caledonian and Scottish North-Eastern Railways Amalgamation Act, 1866, the Caledonian company are to give to all traffic passing to or from the lines of the North British company from or to the lines of the Scottish North-Eastern company (now Caledonian company), "all such facilities as are usual or useful for the convenient working or development of railway traffic," including, among other things, "conveniently timed and arranged trains," and "to accommodate, manage and forward such traffic, and give such facilities, including ordinary waiting for trains, as effectually, regularly and expeditiously, as if it were their own proper traffic, or traffic which they were desirous of cultivating to the utmost":—Held, that the word "ordinary," as applied to waiting for trains, has no definite meaning in railway practice. North British Railway v. Caledonian Railway, 12 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 27—Ry. Com.

Held, further, first, that in the case of a local branch Caledonian train with which a North British train was timed to connect at Perth (in the sense that it was timed to arrive half an hour or less before the Caledonian train was timed to leave Perth), it should be detained for five minutes; and if the connecting train were then signalled from the signal box immediately outside Perth station, such further time as would enable passengers travelling by the train so signalled to join the Caledonian train; the North British company being bound to give notice five minutes before the time the Caledonian train was due to leave, if there were no possibility of such connection; secondly, that, in the case of a Caledonian west coast main line train legitimately competing with the North British company's East Coast service, with which a North British train was timed to connect at Perth, the Court, taking into consideration the relative number of passengers in the two connecting trains, would not order its detention for any definite time; but that the main line train should not be allowed to start from Perth, if the North British train should have been signalled from the signal box immediately outside Perth station, until the passengers had been duly transferred. Ib.

Passenger Station Accommodation—Rebuilding Bridge Carrying Street over Railway—Alterations applied for not within Railway Company's own Power.]—Section 16 of the Scotch Railways Clauses Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 83), gives power to a railway company (subject to restrictions in its special Act) to construct bridges over railroads, and from time to time to alter, repair, or discontinue them and substitute others in their stead, and to do all other acts necessary for making, maintaining, altering, or repairing, and using the railway. Upon a complaint by the Town Council of Arbroath of the want of facilities for passenger traffic at the station at Arbroath, it was admitted that the rebuilding of a bridge on which the booking offices were erected and which carried one of the town streets over the railway, was essential to any material alteration and improvement of the station. The bridge was originally constructed by the railway company under their special Act, but the street passing over the bridge was vested in the municipal authorities of Arbroath.—Held, that while section 16 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845, gives railway companies power to alter works of their own, it does not apply to works which have been dedicated to a purpose other than railway purposes—for example, a street which is vested in the municipal authorities. Arbroath Corporation v. Caledonian Railway, 10 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 252—Ry. Com.

Held, further, that as the accommodation works which the applicants asked for could not be carried out except with the consent or authority of some one other than the railway companies themselves, the works applied for were not within the railway companies' own powers, and that therefore the railway companies had not violated their statutory duty under section 2 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854. Ib.

Diversion of Traffic—Interim Injunction—Powers Granted under old Acts not Exercised—Circumstances Changed—Jurisdiction.]—Article 12 of an agreement made between the Great Northern Railway Co. and the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway Co., and dated January 30, 1892, and confirmed by the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway (Extension to London, &c.) Act, 1893, provided as follows: "On and from the passing of the Bill, and whether the running powers provided for by this agreement are exercised or not, there shall be a complete system of through booking and through rates and fares between the systems of the two companies by all reasonable and convenient routes . . . and each company shall conduct the through traffic of the other company in good faith and by through trains, and shall afford to the other company all such reasonable facilities and accommodation as regards traffic of all kinds as is usual between friendly railway companies for the convenient conduct and exchange of traffic passing or destined to pass between the respective systems of the two companies." The respondents having completed their line to London, certain fish traffic was handed to them at Grimsby for conveyance to London "via Great Northern Railway." This had hitherto been so forwarded, but the respondents now conveyed it by their own route to London and delivered it themselves. On an application for an interim injunction enjoining the Great Central Co. to desist from diverting from the Great Northern Co. the fish traffic from Grimsby to London which is consigned by the Great Northern Railway,—Held, that the route being prima facie a reasonable one, the Great Northern Railway Co. would have prima facie the right of requiring traffic to be carried by it on reasonable terms; there being also prima facie a contract to that effect, and as an interim injunction would not harm the respondents (provided accounts were kept), and the absence of it might seriously damage the applicants, an interim injunction should be granted. Great Northern Railway v. Great Central Railway, 10 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 266—Ry. Com.

The Great Northern Railway (Communication with the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway) Act, 1851, s. 14, enacted: "That the Great Northern Railway Co. shall have the right of access at all reasonable and proper times to, and accommodation at, the tidal basin at Great Grimsby for the fish traffic, and likewise access to and accommodation at the docks for the goods traffic, including the right to rent a piece of land for warehouses thereat, upon such sites and upon such terms and conditions, and subject to such regulations as may be agreed upon by the engineers of the two companies, and in the event of a difference between them as may be settled by arbitration in the manner hereinafter provided." Section 15 of the same Act provided for arbitration under the Companies Clauses Act, 1845. The West Riding and Grimsby Railway (Transfer) Act, 1866, s. 31, enacted that: "It shall be lawful for the Great Northern Railway Co. to run over and use with their engines, carriages, and servants the Sheffield, South Yorkshire, and Trent, Ancholme, and Grimsby Railways situate between Barnby Don and Grimsby, including the docks at Grimsby and the railways leading thereto and the works connected therewith, and to use in common with the said Sheffield and South Yorkshire, and Trent, Ancholme, and Grimsby Railway companies the several sidings, stations, turntables, docks, and other conveniences and appurtenances to the said several lines of railway appertaining or belonging." The applicants applied, under section 9 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888, for an order enforcing the performance of the obligations imposed by the above-mentioned sections; also for an order, under section 8 of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1873, for determining the sites, terms, conditions, and regulations upon which the rights conferred upon the applicants by section 14 of the Act of 1851 are to be exercised in lieu of arbitration. It was proved that the docks had been completely changed under powers given to the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway Co. by an Act of 1849, vesting the docks in them, and that the "tidal basin" no longer existed:—Held, that the Commissioners had jurisdiction to deal with the above-mentioned matters under section 9, sub-section (a) of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888; and, with regard to the warehouse site, under sub-section (c) of the same section, where the term "individual" means "any legal person not the general public." Ib.

Quære whether, as regards section 14 of the Act of 1851, it is a condition precedent to the Commissioners having jurisdiction that the engineers of the two companies should have considered the matter and disagreed. Ib.

Held, further, that it is not the function of the Court to make abstract declarations which they could not enforce in their entirety; and that before making an effective order, or granting an injunction under the Act of 1851, the applicants must put forward a definite scheme to be considered by the respondents. Ib.

That the Great Northern Railway Co. cannot now (1899) be considered in the same position as if they had asserted their rights immediately after the passing of the Act of 1851; and that they must now shew that their scheme is reasonable possible. Ib.

Held, further, that section 81 of the Act of 1866 gives the applicants the right to run over and use the whole of the railways in the docks and all the appurtenances thereto, as the term "docks" in that section cannot reasonably be considered merely a definition of the terminus ad quem, but that the applicants must first shew that the exercise of these powers of user can be so regulated as not to interfere with the convenient conduct of the business of the docks. Ib.

12. RUNNING POWERS.

Terms for Exercise of—Allowance for Working Expenses—General Rule.—The ordinary terms granted by the Railway Commissioners on which running powers may be exercised are 75 per cent. of the rate, after the deduction of terminals, to the owning company, and 25 per cent. of the rate to the company exercising the running powers. This now amounts to a rule, which will only be departed from under special circumstances. Caledonian Railway v. North British Railway, 10 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 259.

By an Act of Parliament the Caledonian Railway Co. were given running powers over a line of the North British Railway Co. to B., a distance of thirteen miles, on such terms and conditions as should be agreed upon between these railway companies (subject to a provision that the rates charged by the Caledonian Co. to B. should not exceed those charged by them for similar traffic from the same places to G.), or as, failing agreement, an arbiter might determine. Such arbiter was empowered, "in fixing such terms and conditions, to have regard to the obligations imposed on the Caledonian company with respect to rates." The Caledonian Co. proposed certain fixed tolls for the exercise of their running powers, namely—Passengers 2*d.* each, goods 4*d.* per ton, and minerals, including pig-iron, 3*d.* per ton; this being the arrangement between the two companies (by agreement) on the line to G., where the tolls in force for a distance of under three miles were in each case less by 1*d.* than the above-mentioned proposed tolls:—Held, that the proposed tolls were inadequate, and that the running powers should be exercised on the ordinary terms. Ib.

— By an agreement entered into between the North-Eastern and North British Railway Companies, scheduled to an Act of Parliament, it was provided that, for the purpose of maintaining and working in full efficiency in every respect the East Coast route by way of Berwick for all traffic between London and other places in England, and Edinburgh, Leith, Glasgow, and other places in Scotland, the North British company shall at all times hereafter permit the North-Eastern company, with their engines, &c., to run over and use the North British company's railway . . . between Berwick and Edinburgh . . . subject to the payment by the company to the North British company for such user of such tolls, rates . . . as have or has been, or shall from time to time be agreed upon by and between the said companies, or, in default of such agreement, as shall be fixed by arbitration." The North-Eastern Co. applied to the Commissioners, under section 8 of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1873, for an order allowing them, in the exercise of their running powers, to run between Edinburgh and Berwick the full number of passenger trains required for the conveyance of passenger traffic between England and Scotland by the East Coast route. The Commissioners decided that the North-Eastern Co. were entitled to run one-half of the through passenger trains (for the conveyance of traffic between England and Scotland) over the railway of the North British Co. between Berwick and Edinburgh on the terms of the North-Eastern Co. paying to the North British Co. 75*l.* per cent. of the gross receipts, and retaining 25*l.* per cent. for working expenses, and that the payment of such 75*l.* per cent. by the North-Eastern Co. should include the payment by way of rent for station accommodation and station services at Edinburgh under the agreement:—Held, that the fact that the North British Co. were the owners of the line between Berwick and Edinburgh did not of itself entitle them, as of right, to run some of the through trains in dispute, and did not preclude the Railway Commissioners from granting, if they saw fit, the application of the North-Eastern Co. North-Eastern Railway v. North British Railway, 10 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 82—Ct. of Sess.

13. AGREEMENTS.

Light Railway—Purchase by Corporation—Special Agreement—Construction—Basis of Valuation—Going Concern—Rolling Stock.—By an agreement made between a certain company (who were empowered under the Light Railways Act, 1896, to construct and work a certain light railway) and the corporation of the borough within which the light railway in question was to be made, the corporation were to be at liberty to purchase "the said railway No. 5," on certain conditions, "at a price" to be settled, in case of difference, by the Board of Trade. The agreement did not contain any stipulation or provision as to the principle upon which the price was to be arrived at. The interpretation clause, however, of the order under which the railway had been made gave different meanings to the terms "railway" and "undertaking," as used in that order respectively:—Held, on the true construction of the documents in question that the proper basis of valuation was that which regarded the railway as a railway fixed in position and capable of earning a profit, but not that which regarded the railway as an income-earning concern. Dudley Corporation v. Dudley, Stourbridge, and District Electric Traction Co., 97 L. T. 556; 5 L. G. R. 1077; 71 J. P. 481—H.L. (E.)

Joint Line Constructed by Two Companies—Wayleave—Agreement—Construction.—Two colliery companies in terms of an agreement constructed a joint railway, each paying half the cost. The renewal and maintenance of the line were to be paid for by the companies in proportion to the extent of traffic done by either of them. The line was to be open to the use of the public on payment of specified tolls. Power was given by the agreement to construct an extension line in connection with the joint line:—Held, that the owners of the extension line were not chargeable with tolls for goods carried from the extension over the joint line, their liability being limited to the proportion which fell to them of the renewal and maintenance of the joint line. Caledonian Coal Co. v. Seaham Colliery Co., 70 L. J. P.C. 105; [1901] A.C. 554; 84 L. T. 785—P.C.

Statutory Bargain for Protection of Private Individual—Subsequent Agreement by Company with Third Party Inconsistent with Statutory Obligation—Impossibility of Performance—Specific Performance—Damages.—A private Act of Parliament authorising the construction of a railway contained a clause whereby "for the protection of" an adjoining owner, his heirs and assigns, it was provided, "unless otherwise agreed" between him and the railway company, that the company should (inter alia) construct and maintain a station at a particular point on the proposed line. Some years afterwards the company's successors, through oversight and in good faith, entered into an agreement with the plaintiff, who was the proprietor of a building estate traversed by the line in question, to remove the station which had been built in pursuance of the statutory provision above mentioned to a spot more advantageous for the development of the building estate, but subsequently, on discovering their mistake, they refused to carry out this agreement. In an action by the plaintiff for specific performance or damages,—Held (ROMER, L.J., dissentiente), that it was ultra vires of the defendants to enter into the agreement with the plaintiff while the enactment contained in the Act of Parliament was still effective, that the agreement was therefore void, and no action lay by the plaintiff for breach of such agreement. Corbett v. South-Eastern and Chatham Railway, Statutory Agreement for Determination of Differences by Arbitration—Provision for Reference to Arbitrator Designated by Name or, him failing, to Arbitrator to be Appointed—Death of Named Arbitrator—Subsequent Difference—Jurisdiction of Railway Commissioners to Decide Difference.—Section 8 of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1873, provides that where any difference between railway companies is, under the provisions of any general or special Act required or authorised to be referred to arbitration, such difference shall at the instance of any company party to the difference, and with the consent of the Railway Commissioners, be referred to the Commissioners for their decision in lieu of being referred to arbitration: Provided that the power of compelling a reference to the Commissioners shall not apply to any case in which any arbitrator has in any general or special Act been designated by his name. By a provision in an agreement between two railway companies confirmed by a private Act (and therefore for the purposes of the above section to be deemed a provision of that private Act) it was provided that any question which might arise between the parties as to the construction or carrying into effect of the agreement should be referred to a person designated by name, or, him failing, an engineer to be appointed by the Board of Trade. After the death of the person designated as arbitrator a difference arose between the companies:—Held, that the case was one in which an arbitrator had been designated by name within the meaning of the proviso to the above section, and therefore that the difference could not be referred to the Commissioners under the section, but only to an engineer to be appointed by the Board of Trade under the agreement. Alexandra Docks and Taff Vale Railway, In re, 76 L. J. K.B. 803; [1907] 1 K.B. 356; 96 L. T. 380—C.A.

14. CARRIAGE OF GOODS.

Conveyance—Trader's Truck—Detention by Railway—Hire of Another Truck—Expense—Claim for "Demurrage"—Determination of Difference—Whether Within Jurisdiction of Arbitrator or Courts.—A claim by a trader for demurrage or damages for the detention of his truck by the Great Western Railway and cost of hire of another truck must be decided by an arbitrator appointed by the Board of Trade, as provided by section 6 of the company's special Act, 1891, and the ordinary Courts have no jurisdiction. Great Western Railway v. Phillips, 77 L. J. K.B. 306—H.L. (E.)

Decision of the COURT OF APPEAL, sub nom. Rex v. Marylebone County Court Judge and Great Western Railway; Phillips, Ex parte (76 L. J. K.B. 1003; [1907] 2 K.B. 664; 96 L. T. 802; 23 T. L. R. 541), reversed. Id.

— Demurrage—Reasonable Sum—Evidence—Onus of Proof.—Under section 6 of the London and North-Western Railway (Rates and Charges) Order Confirmation Act, 1891, certain traders claimed "a reasonable sum by way of demurrage for detention of their trucks beyond a reasonable time" on journeys between their sidings in the Midlands and in London. They proved that during twelve months the average time taken on the journey was two and a-half days; but that in thirty-three cases during the same twelve months trucks belonging to them had taken periods varying from four to seven days:—Held, first, that "demurrage" included a reasonable sum for detention in the course, as well as at the end, of the journey; secondly, that, though the applicants must prove their case, there existed a limit of detention after which the onus lay upon the railway company to explain or justify the delay; thirdly, that in the circumstances three days was the limit, and that, if unable to explain or justify delay beyond that limit, the railway company must pay a reasonable sum; and fourthly, that in the circumstances sixpence per ten-ton truck per day was a reasonable sum. Charrington, Sells, Dale & Co. v. London and North-Western Railway, 74 L. J. K.B. 835; [1905] 2 K.B. 437; 93 L. T. 215; 12 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 171; 21 T. L. R. 457—Ry. Com.

Dog—Condition Limiting Liability—"Just and reasonable"—Alternative Rates.]—The owner of a dog of the value of 300*l.* delivered it by his agent to a railway company for carriage from one station to another. The agent signed a note of a special contract of carriage which contained a condition that the company would not be liable in respect of a dog for a greater amount than 2*l.* unless a higher value were declared at the time of delivery and a percentage of 1½ per cent. paid upon the excess of the value so declared. The agent paid 4*s.* for the carriage of the dog, and did not make any declaration as to its value. By the negligence of the company's servants the dog was burnt to death. In an action by the owner to recover from the company the value of the dog,—Held, that the condition in the special contract was "just and reasonable" within the meaning of section 7 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854, and that the company were not liable for more than 2*l.* Williams v. Midland Railway, 77 L. J. K.B. 157; [1908] 1 K.B. 252; 98 L. T. 81; 24 T. L. R. 170—C.A.

Merchandise—Charge—Account Specifying how Charge is Made Up—Carriage from one Private Siding to Another—"Terminal services"—"Special services".]—Section 33, sub-section 3 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888, applies to a charge for the carriage of goods from one private siding to another private siding as well as to a charge for the carriage of goods between station and station. The expression "terminal charges" in the sub-section includes charges for such services as come under the denomination of "special services" in the schedule to the Railway Rates and Charges (Caledonian Railway &c.) Order Confirmation Act, 1892, as well as charges for such services as in that schedule are in the category of proper terminal services. Caledonian Railway v. Hamilton & Calder, 8 F. 918—Ct. of Sess.

Timber—Measurement of Timber—Most Accurate Mode.]—By section 18 of the schedule to the Great Western Railway Co. (Rates and Charges) Order Confirmation Act, 1891, it is enacted that "the cubic contents of timber consigned by measurement weight shall be ascertained by the most accurate mode of measurement in use for the time being":—Held, that the most accurate mode of measurement in use, of the cubic contents of round timber consigned by measurement weight, is measurement by string under bark, with a divisor of 113, with reasonable allowances for any irregularity or defect in the shape of the timber measured. The Court did not determine the question whether the railway company were entitled to make any charge in respect of the carriage of bark excluded from the measurement of timber as above provided. Great Western Railway v. Lowe, 11 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 152—Ry. Com.

Parcel Post—Delivery of Parcels.]—Under the provisions of the Post Office (Parcels) Act, 1882, any railway company named in schedule 1 of the Act is bound to accept from and to deliver to the postal authorities receptacles containing postal packets at any station where such receptacles are tendered or applied for, notwithstanding that such receptacles contain postal packets which are ultimately destined for stations other than that at which such receptacles were first delivered. The same station may be both an "outwards" and an "inwards" station within the meaning of sub-section 2 of section 3 of the Act in relation to a postal parcel received at one station for sorting purposes, and forwarded again from the same station to its ultimate destination. Reg. v. London and North-Western Railway and Great Western Railway, 65 L. J. Q.B. 516—D.

Order to Distinguish Charges other than for Conveyance of Goods on Railway—Non-compliance with Order.]—An order made against a railway company by the Railway Commissioners under section 14 of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1873, is not complied with unless the amounts charged in a rate for the conveyance by them of goods as regards each of the services performed by them other than conveyance on the railway are specified in the particulars given by the company. Colman v. Great Eastern Railway (4 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 108) and Pirchgrove Steel Co. v. Midland Railway (5 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 229) followed. Pickfords, Lim. v. London and North-Western Railway, 74 L. J. K.B. 634; [1905] 1 K.B. 752; 92 L. T. 607; 53 W. R. 468; 12 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 154; 21 T. L. R. 381—C.A.

Account in Writing of Goods Carried—Account to be Given "on demand"—False Account—Penalty.]—By section 98 of the Railways Clauses Act, 1845, the owner or person having the care of any carriage or goods passing or being upon a railway is bound on demand to give to the collector of tolls an exact account in writing of the goods conveyed by any such carriage. By section 99, if any such owner or person gives a false account with intent to avoid payment of tolls payable in respect of the goods he is liable to a penalty:—Held, first, that these sections apply to the case of a person sending goods for carriage in the railway company's carriages or trucks; secondly, that the goods need not be actually upon the railway at the time when the demand for an account is made or an account is given; thirdly, that there is a sufficient demand if, to the knowledge of the owner of the goods, the goods will not be accepted for carriage by the railway company unless an account of them is given, and the owner gives an account before any express demand is made; and fourthly, that "tolls" includes rates and charges for goods carried upon the railway. Moreing v. London and North-Western Railway, 74 L. J. K.B. 540; [1905] 2 K.B. 113; 92 L. T. 421; 53 W. R. 605; 69 J. P. 233; 21 T. L. R. 412—D.

Short Distance Clause—Where Traffic "Conveyed" on Two Railways, both to be Considered as One Contract for Entire Distance with One Company—Physical Carriage by both Companies.]

—A special Act of the A railway company and of the B railway company each contained a clause enacting that where merchandise was "conveyed" for an entire distance which did not exceed six miles, the railway company might make the charge authorised by the Act as for six miles; provided that where merchandise was "conveyed" by the company partly on its own railway and partly on the railway of another company, both railways should, for the purpose of reckoning such short distance, be considered as one railway. Pursuant to a contract between a colliery association and the A company, that company took consignments of coal from the colliery sidings to a station less than six miles off. The first part of the journey was over the line of the A company, and the remainder over that of the B company. For the first portion of the distance over the line of the A company the traffic was taken by the locomotives of that company, and for the latter portion of that distance, and the entire distance over the line of the B company, the traffic was taken by the locomotives of the B company:—Held, that the word "conveyed" in the clause meant actually carried, and not carried under a contract of carriage; and that therefore the traffic in question was not conveyed by the A company on both railways within the proviso, but only on its own railway, and that a separate charge for conveyance as for six miles might be made in respect of the distance for which the traffic was actually taken by each company. Lancashire and Cheshire Coal Association and London and North-Western Railway, In re, 75 L. J. K.B. 454; [1906] 1 K.B. 577; 95 L. T. 62—Ry. Com.

Special Contract — Owner's Risk — Common Carrier — Declaration of Value — Customs Declaration.]—Four bales of furs were consigned abroad for carriage to London by the defendants' steamer from Holland to Harwich and thence by their railway to London. The bales were carried at a reduced rate at owners' risk, subject to certain exceptions which were not material, under a special contract signed by the consignors. A declaration as to the nature and description of the goods was made under section 64 of the Customs Consolidation Act, 1876, treating the four bales as one parcel. On arrival at the railway station in London one of the bales was stolen. The learned Judge came to the conclusion upon the facts and documents that the bale was lost before the transit was at an end:—Held, that the defendants were protected from liability by the special contract. Semble, the fact that the goods were received by a common carrier under a special contract would not deprive him of the protection of section 1 of the Carriers Act, 1830, unless the terms of the contract were inconsistent with the goods having been received by him as a common carrier. Semble, also, the Customs declaration is not a declaration of the value of the goods to the common carrier within the meaning of section 1 of the Carriers Act, 1830. Hirschel & Meyer v. Great Eastern Railway, 22 T. L. R. 661—Kennedy, J.

Owner's Risk—Wilful Misconduct—Liability.]

—A railway company undertook to carry certain goods at a reduced rate upon terms that they should be excused from all liability for loss, damage, mis-delivery, delay, or detention, except upon proof that such loss &c. arose from wilful misconduct on the part of the company's servants. In an action brought by a trader to recover damages for injury to goods,—Held, upon the facts, that there had been no wilful misconduct. Held, further, that wilful misconduct in such a special condition means misconduct to which the will is partly as contra-distinguished from accidents, and is far beyond any negligence, even gross or culpable negligence, and involves that a person wilfully misconducts himself who knows and appreciates that it is wrong conduct on his part in the existing circumstances to do or to fail or omit to do (as the case may be) a particular thing, and yet intentionally does, or fails, or omits to do it, or persists in the act, failure, or omission regardless of consequences. Dictum of JOHNSON, J., in Graham v. Belfast and Northern Counties Railway ([1901] 2 Ir. R. 13) approved. Forder v. Great Western Railway, 74 L. J. K.B. 871; [1905] 2 K.B. 532; 93 L. T. 344; 53 W. R. 574; 21 T. L. R. 625—D.

Classification of Goods—Addition Thereto by Board of Trade — Article not Clearly within Description.—By section 20 of the Great Western Railway Co. (Rates and Charges) Order Confirmation Act, 1891, it is enacted that "In respect of any merchandise or article of any description which is not specified in the classification, the company may, unless or until such merchandise or article is duly added to this classification and schedule pursuant to sub-section 11 of section 24 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888, make the charges which are by this schedule authorised in respect of merchandise and things in Class 3." By an order made in pursuance of their powers under section 24, sub-section 11 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888, the Board of Trade added to class 5 of the classification the following: "Extracts and essences for human food." The railway company under this order claimed to charge for the carriage of "Virol" under class 5 as being an extract or essence for human food. The ingredients of "Virol" are as follows: Malt extract, lemon syrup, animal fat, eggs, glycerine, salt, and flavourings. Previous to the above order of the Board of Trade the railway company carried "Virol" under class 3 as an article not specified in the classification:—Held, that "Virol" was a mixture of different component parts rather than an extract or essence, and that, as it did not come clearly within the expression "Extracts and essences for human food," the railway company must continue to carry it under class 3 as being unclassified. Bovril, Lim. v. Great Western Railway, 12 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 151—Ry. Com.

Undue Preference—Shorter Competing Route.]—It is the duty of the Court, when undue preference is complained of, to take into consideration all the circumstances affecting the case. Of the circumstances upon which a railway company is entitled to rely, none is more convincing than the fact that there is a shorter competing route with which the company have to reckon. Abram Coal Co. v. Great Central Railway, 21 T. L. R. 264—Ry. Com. PASSENGERS' LUGGAGE, see infra, cols. 2025 and 192. And see CARRIER, col. 194.

15. CARRIAGE OF MAILS.

Measure of Remuneration to the Railway Company for Conveyance of Mails—Special Trains—Trains Timed by the Postmaster-General.]—Upon an application to determine the amount of the remuneration to be paid per annum by the Postmaster-General to the Waterford Railway Company for the conveyance of mails on their railway—first, by certain special or notice trains required to be run by notice from the Postmaster-General; secondly, by certain ordinary or agreed trains timed by agreement with the Postmaster-General.—Held, that the remuneration for carrying the mails ought not to include any sum directly representing the capital cost of providing the railway; and, further, that the definite sum to be paid should be of sufficient amount—first, to give the railway companies payment for the mails at their ordinary parcels rate less a rebate of one-third of it, in consideration of the usual terminal services in connection with parcels being done in the case of the mail parcels by the Postmaster-General; secondly, to make up to them, when required, the gross receipts of the notice trains to 5s. per train mile; thirdly, to compensate them for possible decrease of the receipts of agreed trains due to their times of running being partly fixed to meet postal requirements, the allowance under this head to be a “substantial” one (per WRIGHT, J.) and (per SIR F. FEE) equal to a guarantee of 3s. 6d. gross receipts per train mile, the cost of working either class of train being taken by agreement at 2s. 7d. per train mile. Held, also, that those conditions would be provided for by fixing the amount to be paid per annum at 8,000l. Waterford, Limerick, and Western Railway v. Postmaster-General, 11 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 77—Ry. Com.

Mails, Conveyance of—Measure of Remuneration to the Railway Company—Deductions from Parcel Rates—Charges for Travelling Sorters at Season Ticket Rates.]—Upon an application to determine the amount of the remuneration to be paid per annum by the Postmaster-General to the Great Western Railway Co. for the conveyance of mails on their railway, and for the services performed and accommodation provided by them in connection therewith.—Held, that to arrive at a “reasonable remuneration” to be paid to the railway company for the conveyance of mail bags, the railway company's ordinary scale of rates for parcels should be applied less certain deductions to counterbalance expenses incurred by the railway company in carrying parcels for the public, and not incurred in case of the mails—namely, 25 per cent. for terminal services, and 10 per cent. on account of the substantial difference between mail bags and parcels in the quantity of the bags, and the regularity with which they are supplied for conveyance. Great Western Railway v. Postmaster-General, 12 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 11—Ry. Com.

The railway company claimed to be paid full passenger fares for servants of the Post Office travelling in the sorting carriages. The Postmaster-General objected to make any payment for the space occupied by the sorters in the carriage, on the ground that, as the carriages are paid for, the sorters at work in them should travel free of charge:—Held, that the railway company should be paid for the conveyance of sorters and other servants of the Post Office at season ticket rates. Id.

The railway company claimed to charge for “rent” for sites of letter boxes at stations, and for conveyance of mails by omnibus:—Held, that such matters were outside the question of conveyance of mails by train; but charges were authorised for the use of the company's premises by the Post-Office staff, and for assistance in transferring mails rendered by the servants of the railway company. Id. And see POST OFFICE.

16. CARRIAGE OF PASSENGERS.

Ticket—Conditions Incorporated—Delay Caused to Passenger by Negligence of Company.]

—D travelled by an early workman's train, which arrived late and he consequently lost a day's wages:—Held, that the railway company were not liable to him, notwithstanding their admitted negligence, because the printed notice on the back of the ticket (to the effect that the departure or arrival of the trains at the times specified in the time-table was not guaranteed nor were the company under any circumstances to be held responsible for delay or detention, however occasioned, or any consequences arising therefrom) was a condition incorporated into the contract. Duckworth v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway, 84 L. T. 774; 49 W. R. 541; 65 J. P. 517—D.

— Conditions—Passenger—“Passengers' own risk”—Notice.]—The plaintiff was a passenger on one of the defendants' steamers for an evening cruise. The passengers took their tickets when on board, and on the face of the tickets were the words “at passengers' own risk,” and there were also conditions on the back. The plaintiff's hand was injured on board owing to the negligence of the defendants' servants; and in an action in the County Court to recover damages the Judge found that the plaintiff did not observe or read any notice upon the ticket, and that no reasonably sufficient notice was given to him that the ticket contained conditions. He accordingly gave judgment for the plaintiff:—Held, that the County Court Judge had put the proper questions to himself, that there was evidence to support his findings, and that therefore judgment was properly entered for the plaintiff. Hooper v. Furness Railway, 23 T. L. R. 451—D.

Continuance of Journey to More Distant Station—Fare for Whole Distance Greater than Sum of Fares to Intermediate Station—Quantum

Meruit—Amount.—The through fare by a railway from H. to M. was greater than the fares from H. to S., an intermediate station, and from S. to M. added together. The defendant, intending to travel from H. to M., took a ticket at H. for S. On arriving at S. he gave up his ticket, tendered the fare from S. to M., which was refused, and travelled on to M. by the same train without a ticket:—Held, that he was liable for the through fare for the entire journey, less the amount which he had already paid, and not merely for the fare from S. to M. London and North-Western Railway v. Hinchcliffe, 72 L. J. K.B. 530; [1903] 2 K.B. 32; 88 L. T. 800; 51 W. R. 556; 67 J. P. 205—D.

Right of Railway Passenger to Break his Journey—Determination of Contract.—The plaintiff took a return ticket from Chorley to Manchester on the defendants' railway. On her return journey she travelled by a train by which it was necessary for her to change at Bolton. Upon her arrival there she alighted, and was about to leave the station to visit a friend when a ticket-collector demanded her ticket, and she gave it up under protest. On resuming her journey to Chorley by a later train on the same day she was required to pay the fare from Bolton to Chorley, which she did under protest. In an action to recover back the amount so paid,—Held, that the contract of the company was to carry the plaintiff from Chorley to Manchester and back by two continuous journeys; that the plaintiff, by leaving the company's premises, released them from all contractual relations; and that she was not, therefore, entitled to recover. Ashton v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway, 73 L. J. K.B. 701; [1904] 2 K.B. 313; 91 L. T. 349; 52 W. R. 655; 20 T. L. R. 482—D.

By-law—Light Railway—Refusal to Pay Fare—No Intent to Defraud—Validity.—By a by-law made by a light railway company pursuant to a light railway order which incorporated section 109 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and to which light railway Parts 2 and 3 of the Tramways Act, 1870, was applied, "Each passenger shall upon demand pay to the conductor or other duly authorized officer of the company the fare legally demandable for the journey":—Held, that the by-law was good. Tuffley v. Tate, 96 L. T. 24; 21 Cox C.C. 337; 71 J. P. 21; 5 L. G. R. 448—D.

Passengers' Luggage—Commercial Travellers' Samples—Absence of Obligation to Carry by Passenger Train—Condition Exempting Carrier from Loss—No Special Contract Signed by Passenger—Liability of Carrier for Loss.—A notice in a railway company's time tables stated that commercial travellers were allowed to take with them free of charge by passenger train a certain amount of luggage per passenger, not being ordinary passengers' luggage, on the condition that the company were relieved from all liability for loss, damage, misdelivery, or delay. The plaintiffs, who were commercial travellers, and were travelling in the ordinary course of their business, took third-class and saloon ordinary return tickets from Huddersfield to Belfast, and gave into the custody of the company's servants a case containing trade samples. The case was dropped into the sea, and the samples lost, by the admitted negligence or default of the company's servants. The plaintiffs had not signed any special contract for the carriage of the samples. In an action to recover the value of the samples,—Held, that, in the absence of any special contract signed by the plaintiffs, the railway company were not entitled, having regard to the provisions of section 7 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854, to rely upon the condition as relieving them from liability for the loss sustained by the plaintiffs. Wilkinson v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway, 76 L. J. K.B. 801; [1907] 2 K.B. 222; 97 L. T. 35; 23 T. L. R. 509—C.A.

Dangerous Luggage—Fatal Explosion—Negligence—Onus Probandi.—Railway companies are bound to use reasonable care and diligence in the conveyance of passengers; but they are not common carriers of passengers, and are not under obligation to carry safely. East Indian Railway v. Kalidas Mukerjee, 70 L. J. P.C. 63; [1901] A.C. 396; 84 L. T. 210—P.C.

The appellant's son was killed by an explosion of bombs brought by passengers into a railway carriage. There was no evidence of the appearance or dimensions of the parcels, or that any servant of the company knew or had reason to suspect the character of the parcels, which were taken into the carriage according to a practice which prevails in India as well as in England:—Held, that the company was not liable, and was not under obligation to disprove that the parcels suggested danger, or to search every parcel carried by a passenger. Collett v. London and North-Western Railway (20 L. J. Q.B. 411; 16 Q.B. 984) explained. Id.

Jewellery and other Articles Exceeding 10*l.* in Value—Free Allowance of Ordinary Personal Luggage—Special Contract—Loss of Luggage—Liability.—The fact that a passenger by railway is, by virtue of a provision published in the railway company's time table, entitled to have a certain amount of personal luggage carried free of charge is not inconsistent with the right of the railway company under sections 1 and 2 of the Carriers Act, 1830, to be paid an increased charge in respect of articles included in such personal luggage which exceed 10*l.* in value and are of the kind enumerated in section 1 of that Act. Where, therefore, no declaration of the value and nature of such articles of the passenger's ordinary personal luggage is made to the railway company and an increased charge paid thereon, the company are, by virtue of section 1 of the Carriers Act, 1830, exempted from liability for their loss. Dictum in Macrow v. Great Western Railway (40 L. J. Q.B. 300; L. R. 6 Q.B. 612) followed. Casswell v. Cheshire Lines Committee, 76 L. J. K.B. 734; [1907] 2 K.B. 499; 97 L. T. 209; 23 T. L. R. 580—D. And see CARRIER.

Negligence, Evidence of—Closing Carriage Door—Personal Injuries.—It is not evidence of negligence on the part of servants of a railway company that they close railway carriage doors, left open by passengers who have quitted the train, without warning other passengers still seated in the carriages that they are about to do so; and a passenger, so left seated, who places his finger in the hinge of the open door of the carriage as it is being closed by the company's servant cannot recover damages for personal injuries. Drury v. North-Eastern Railway, 70 L. J. K.B. 830; [1901] 2 K.B. 322; 84 L. T. 658—D.

—Train in Motion—Shutting Door without Notice—Injury to Passenger.—B. being a passenger from D. to U., at L., some people getting into the carriage, he put his hand in the doorway. While the train was moving, the door was banged to by a servant of the defendant company without any notice or warning, and B.'s hand was injured:—Held, that there was no evidence of negligence on the part of the company. Benson v. Furness Railway, 88 L. T. 268—D. And see col. 2050.

Train Snowed up—Injury to Passenger.—In an action of damages for personal injury against a railway company, the pursuer averred that when she was travelling in one of the defendants' trains it became snowed up between two stations; that the windows of the compartment in which she travelled were covered with snow so that she could not see out; that she was unable to open the windows, which were rendered immovable by the frost; that the company's officials left her unattended during the stoppage, which lasted for more than an hour; that in consequence of the exposure to cold her health was seriously injured; that the exposure was due to the fault of the company; that the other passengers were forwarded to the next station by a special train, but that pursuer was not informed of this arrangement:—Held, that the pursuer had averred no relevant case. Mathieson v. Caledonian Railway, 5 F. 511—Ct. of Sess.

Accident to Passenger in Station, after Alighting from Train—Accident due to Intoxication.—A railway company is not liable in damages for failing to see an intoxicated passenger safely off the platform at which he arrives. M'Cormick v. Caledonian Railway, 6 F. 362—Ct. of Sess.

Carriage by Steamship—Negligent Navigation—Loss of Ship—Passenger Travelling with Free Pass—Loss of Luggage.—Section 31 of the Railways Clauses Act, 1863 (which extends the provisions of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854, to steam vessels), does not apply to a railway company whose special Acts were passed before the Act of 1863. The Stella (No. 2), 69 L. J. P. 70; [1900] P. 162; 82 L. T. 390; 9 Asp. M.C. 66—Gorell Barnes, J.

Section 14 of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1868, does not operate to prevent a railway company making conditions with a passenger travelling with a free pass which exempt the company from liability for the loss of such passenger's luggage, although no notice has been posted in the company's offices as required by that section. Ib.

Passenger Rates.—See col. 2032.

17. RATES.

(a) Generally.

Increase of.—Quære, whether under section 1 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1894, a railway company can be called upon to justify the increase of rates which have been lowered since December 31, 1892, but re-raised to a point not exceeding the level of 1892. Millom and Askam Hematite Iron Co. v. Furness Railway, 12 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 1—Ry. Com.

Increased Rates found Unreasonable by Railway Commissioners—Action for Recovery of Increased Rates Paid under Protest.—The Caledonian, North British, and Glasgow and South-Western Railways, in terms of a joint notice, made an increase in the rates charged for the carriage of coal on their systems. A steel company, whose works were connected with the lines of the Caledonian Railway, paid the increased rates under protest, and, as they alleged, upon the understanding that, if it should ultimately be found that the railway companies were not entitled to increase their charges the excess would be refunded to them. Thereafter, upon separate complaints made under the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1894, by seven coalmasters, the Railway and Canal Commissioners pronounced in each complaint an order finding that the railway companies had not proved that the increase was reasonable, and ordering them to discontinue the increased rates. The steel company obtained the necessary certificates from the Board of Trade, but did not lodge a complaint with the Railway and Canal Commissioners, relying, as they alleged, upon the representations of the railway companies that if the increase was found to be unreasonable the increased charges would be refunded. In an action by the steel company against the Caledonian Railway for repayment of the extra charges paid under protest,—Held—first, that there was no relevant averment of a contract binding the railway company to repay the extra charges in the event of the Commissioners holding that they were not reasonable; secondly, that the action was incompetent, exclusive jurisdiction to deal with the subject-matter of the action having been conferred upon the Railway and Canal Commissioners by the Railway and Canal Traffic Acts, 1888 and 1894; and thirdly, that, as the charges made were not illegal, though they might be unreasonable, there was no ground for the action on the footing that the increased charges had been paid on an illegal demand. Lanarkshire Steel Co. v. Caledonian Railway, 6 F. 47—Ct. of Sess.

Increase since December 31, 1892—Complaint as to Unreasonableness.—By section 1, sub-section 1 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1894, "where a railway company have, either alone or jointly with any other railway company or companies, since the last day of December, 1892, directly or indirectly increased, or hereafter increase directly or indirectly, any rate or charge, then if any complaint is made that the rate or charge is unreasonable, it shall lie on the company to prove that the increase of the rate or charge is reasonable":—Held, by the COURT OF APPEAL (KENNEDY, L.J., dissenting), reversing the decision of the Railway Commissioners, that the sub-section applies to every increase of rates or charges whether the result of such increase is or is not to raise rates or charges above the 1892 standard, and that, therefore, where a rate in existence on that date was, after the passing of the Act of 1894, lowered, but subsequently raised again to the same amount at which it stood on the last day of December, 1892, it had been "increased" within the meaning of the sub-section. North Staffordshire Colliery Owners' Association v. North Staffordshire Railway, 76 L. J. K.B. 602; [1907] 2 K.B. 191; 96 L. T. 893; 23 T. L. R. 418—C.A.

Increase — Reasonableness — Evidence.]—By section 1, sub-section 1 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1894, it is enacted that where a railway company have since December 31, 1892, increased, or thereafter increase, any rate, then, if any complaint is made that the rate is unreasonable, it shall lie on the company to prove that the increase of the rate is reasonable. The question whether an increase in a rate is reasonable depends upon the circumstances existing at the time the increase was made, including the charges before and after the increase with reference to the services rendered and to be rendered, the expenses of performance, and every other fact with relation thereto. North Staffordshire Colliery Owners' Association v. North Staffordshire Railway, 77 L. J. K.B. 448; [1908] 1 K.B. 771—Ry. Com.

The Act of 1894 does not confer any general jurisdiction upon the Court of the Railway and Canal Commission to investigate the reasonableness of rates. Ib.

Justification of Increase — Order of Court against Undue Preference—Bona Fide Obedience Thereto.]—Where a railway company can shew that, in complying with an order of the Court against undue preference, a levelling down of the rates at other similar places, proportionate to the amount of the rate complained of, would involve a great risk of serious loss, a levelling up or increase of such rate or charge complained of is reasonable:—Quare, whether section 1 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1894, applies to an increase made in bona fide obedience to an order of the Court against undue preference. Rishworth v. North-Eastern Railway, 12 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 34—Ry. Com.

Upon a complaint by millers, at Hull, under section 1 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1894, that the North-Eastern Railway Co. had, in August, 1901, directly and indirectly increased the rate for carriage of flour from Hull, by refusing to perform the service of cartage in Hull without extra charge, and by refusing to allow traders performing their own cartage the former rebate (which varied from 6d. to 1s. per ton), and that such increases were unreasonable,—Held, that the railway company having shewn that the increase was made in bona fide obedience to an order of the Court, to avoid a preference found undue, by levelling up the rate at Hull to that at Goole, and also having shewn that the levelling down of rates at other similar places to the Hull standard would risk an annual loss of 10,000l., the increases complained of were reasonable. Ib.

— Measure of Reasonableness.]—In justifying an increase of rates under section 1 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1894, it is not sufficient to shew an increase in the ratio of cost to receipts to an extent equalling or exceeding that of the advance in the rates. If it be shown, after all elements of cost and economy have been taken into consideration, that the necessary cost per ton carried will, under uniform conditions, be increased by any sum without any compensating circumstances, then it is prima facie reasonable to increase the charge by the same sum. In considering under this section whether an increase of rate is reasonable, the Court is not precluded from having regard to any circumstances which may tend either to justify the increase or to prove it unreasonable. Although the rates, as existing before 1893, are presumed by the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1894, to be sufficiently high, an advance shewn to be necessary to accommodate them to circumstances may be allowed even though the circumstances are of a date prior to 1893 (for example, circumstances existing since 1888), provided that the date is not too remote. Upon a complaint by Manchester oil refiners under section 1 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1894, that the London and North-Western and other railway companies had, in March, 1893, directly and unreasonably increased certain rates per ton in force on December 31, 1892, to the extent of some 5 per cent.,—Held, that the railway companies having shewn that the cost of goods traffic had grown proportionately between 1888 and 1892, an advance of rates in 1893 to the extent of 3 per cent. was justified, on the assumption that the rates in force down to the end of 1892 ought to be considered to have been not more than reasonable in 1888. Smith and Forrest v. London and North-Western Railway, 11 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 156—Ry. Com.

— of Coal Rates—Comparative Tables—Discovery of Documents—Documents to Shew Extent and Profits of Applicants' Business—Damages.]—Upon a complaint, under section 1, sub-section 1 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1894, by colliery owners, that the respondent railway companies had in December, 1899, increased the rates for the carriage of coal to an extent varying from the sum of 1d. per ton on rates not exceeding 2s. per ton to the sum of 3d. per ton on rates exceeding 5s. per ton, and that such increase was unreasonable, the railway companies alleged that the increase was reasonable on the ground that the cost of working their coal traffic had increased owing to shortening of hours of labour, increase of price of fuel, additional capital expenditure, and other causes:—Held, that the evidence given by the railway companies as to the cost of working did not prove that when the coal rates were raised at the end of 1899 the cost of carrying that traffic shewed such an advance upon the cost in previous years as to require or justify the raising of the rates. To justify a permanent increase of rate, changes affecting only temporarily cost of working (such as high price of locomotive coal) are not sufficient. The Commissioners ordered an enquiry to be taken before the Registrar as to the damages sustained by the applicants in consequence of their having been compelled to pay these increased rates since January 1, 1900, and held that on such enquiry it would be open to the railway company to shew, by any competent evidence, that damages had not been sustained by the applicants, and in particular that the increased rates had been, in whole or in part, truly borne by other persons:—Held, that the railway companies were not entitled to discovery of the business books and accounts of the applicants in order that extracts might be taken therefrom to shew the amount of coal sold by the applicants, the cost of working it, and the profits made. Black v. Caledonian Railway, 11 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 176—Ct. of Sess.

Special Contract — Owner's Risk — Common Carrier — Declaration of Value — Customs Declaration.—Four bales of furs were consigned abroad for carriage to London by the defendants' steamer from Holland to Harwich and thence by their railway to London. The bales were carried at a reduced rate at owners' risk, subject to certain exceptions which were not material, under a special contract signed by the consignors. A declaration as to the nature and description of the goods was made under section 64 of the Customs Consolidation Act, 1876, treating the four bales as one parcel. On arrival at the railway station in London one of the bales was stolen. The learned Judge came to the conclusion upon the facts and documents that the bale was lost before the transit was at an end.—Held, that the defendants were protected from liability by the special contract. Semble, the fact that the goods were received by a common carrier under a special contract would not deprive him of the protection of section 1 of the Carriers Act, 1830, unless the terms of the contract were inconsistent with the goods having been received by him as a common carrier. Semble, also, the Customs declaration is not a declaration of the value of the goods to the common carrier within the meaning of section 1 of the Carriers Act, 1830. Hirschel v. Great Eastern Railway, 96 L. T. 147; 12 Com. Cas. 11; 22 T. L. R. 661—Kennedy, J.

Refusing to Deliver at Private Siding—Undue Preference—Jurisdiction.—A railway company which had for twenty-eight years received and delivered coal and goods at a private siding belonging to a firm of traders informed the latter that, while they were willing to receive and deliver other goods as before, they would no longer deliver coal at the private siding. In an application by the traders, the Commissioners found—First, that the delivery of coal at the siding was a due and reasonable facility which the railway company were bound to afford, and made an order upon them accordingly; and secondly, that by delivering coal at the private sidings of competitive traders and refusing to deliver it at the applicants' siding the railway company were giving an undue preference to the former, and ordered them to desist from so doing. On an appeal by the railway company,—Held—first, that the Court of the Railway and Canal Commission had no jurisdiction to order a railway company to deliver traffic at a private siding, such sidings not being part of the "railway" within the meaning of section 2 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854, and that the right of the railway company to refuse to deliver traffic at such sidings was not affected by the fact that they had in the past voluntarily received and delivered traffic at the siding in question, or that they were still voluntarily receiving and delivering traffic there in the case of goods other than the particular kind of goods which they had refused to deliver; and secondly, that the Court of the Railway and Canal Commission had jurisdiction to make the second order appealed against. Cowan & Sons v. North British Railway (No. 2). 11 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 96—Ry. Com. and Ct. of Sess.

Benefit of Geographical Position — Group Rates—Cartage.—Upon a complaint by corn millers at Goole that the railway companies did not, in respect of flour traffic in four-ton lots consigned by the applicants from Goole, give the applicants the benefit of the geographical position of Goole as compared with the port of Hull, with regard to various inland towns, there being a saving of about one-fifth of the total distance to them from Hull in respect of Goole, whereas the rates charged were the same,—Held, that the railway company had failed to prove that if the same mileage rate per ton were applied to Goole as was applied to Hull any injustice would follow, or that the maintenance of the existing Goole rate was necessary to the maintenance of the Hull traffic; and therefore that the railway companies had given an undue preference to the traders in flour at Hull over the applicants by charging rates of the same amount as the rates at which they carried similar traffic from Goole for the applicants. Where no reason is shown to the contrary, the Court will act on the principle that similar charges should be made for similar services. Upon a further complaint by the applicants that the railway companies collected in Hull, free of charge, flour when consigned by their railways, or allowed rebates off the rates charged for conveyance when the cartage was performed by the consignors, but refused to collect the traffic of the applicants at Goole free of charge, or to allow the applicants when they did the collection a rebate as allowed to their competitors at Hull,—Held, that such distinctions, as regards collection or charges for the same between Hull and Goole, were an undue prejudice and disadvantage to the applicants at Goole as compared with their competitors in trade at Hull. Timm v. North-Eastern Railway, 11 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 214—Ry. Com.

Passenger Duty — Third-Class "Reserved" Accommodation — Supplementary Ticket.—A railway company, whose third-class fares did not exceed a penny a mile, and were therefore exempt from duty under section 2, sub-section 1 of the Cheap Trains Act, 1883, abolished their second-class fares, and in lieu thereof issued for an extra charge, to persons holding third-class tickets, "supplementary reserved" tickets entitling the holders thereof to reserved accommodation in certain third-class compartments having labels in the windows bearing the words "reserved tickets":—Held, that where the total sum received by the company from a person holding a third-class ticket and a supplementary reserved ticket exceeded a penny a mile they were liable to pay duty upon it. Att.-Gen. v. Furness Railway, 68 L. J. Q.B. 623; [1899] 2 Q.B. 267; 80 L. T. 710; 36 J. P. 326—D.

Short Distance Clause—Where Traffic "Conveyed" on Two Railways both to be Considered as One—Contract for Entire Distance with One Company — Physical Carriage by both Companies.]—A special Act of the A railway company and a similar Act of the B railway company each contained a clause enacting that where merchandise was “conveyed” for an entire distance which did not exceed six miles the railway company might make the charge authorised by the Act as for six miles; provided that where merchandise was “conveyed” by the company partly on its own railway and partly on the railway of another company both railways should, for the purpose of reckoning such short distance, be considered as one railway. Pursuant to a contract between a colliery association and the A company, that company took consignments of coal from the colliery sidings on their own line to a station on the line of the B company. In the case of two of these sidings the distance to that station was less than six miles; in the case of the third siding the distance to that station, and even to the junction between the lines of the two companies, was more than six miles. For the first portion of the distance over the line of the A company the traffic was taken by the locomotives of that company, and for the latter portion of that distance and the entire distance over the line of the B company the traffic was taken by the locomotives of the B company:—Held, by the COURT OF APPEAL (VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., and FLETCHER Moulton, L.J.; BUCKLEY, L.J., dissenting in part), that the word “conveyed” in the clause meant actually carried, and not carried under a contract of carriage; and that therefore the traffic in question was not “conveyed” by the A company on both railways within the proviso, but only on its own railway, and that a separate charge for conveyance might be made in respect of the distance for which the traffic was actually taken by each company. Lancashire and Cheshire Coal Association and London and North-Western Railway, In re, 76 L. J. K.B. 1020; [1907] 2 K.B. 902; 97 L. T. 569; 23 T. L. R. 645—C.A.

Proposed Reduction of Particular Rate — Whether Undue Preference or Justified by a Competitive Route — Benefit of Geographical Position — Jurisdiction.—The Merthyr Vale Colliery was equidistant from the main line of the Taff Vale Railway Co. (the applicants) and that of the Rhymney Railway Co., and was connected with each line by private sidings. The route from the colliery to Cardiff by the Taff Vale was shorter by eighteen chains than that by the Rhymney. The Taff Vale charged a uniform mileage rate of 575*d.* per ton over their system, while the Rhymney charged a similar rate of 551*d.*, with the result that the total rate from the colliery to Cardiff was 24*d.* per ton more by the Taff Vale route than by the Rhymney route, although the distance was shorter. By section 24 of the Taff Vale Railway Act, 1879, section 90 of the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, was incorporated, subject to the proviso “that the company (i.e. the applicants) shall not, in the exercise of the powers conferred by this section, give any undue advantages to traffic passing from or to any of the valleys traversed by the company’s present system of railways over traffic of the like description passing from or to any other of such valleys under the same circumstances.” Upon an application of the Taff

Vale Railway Co. under section 29, sub-section 3 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888, with a proposal to reduce their rates from Merthyr Vale Colliery to Cardiff to the same sum as charged by the Rhymney Railway Co., on the ground that while the geographical position of the colliery entitled the colliery owners to a competitive service by the two routes, and the applicants to a share of the traffic, the other collieries on the applicants’ line would not be thereby affected in any way,—Held, that there was not sufficient evidence to break in upon the uniform mileage system established over the applicants’ and neighbouring railways, taking into consideration section 24 of the Taff Vale Company’s Act, 1879, as well as the Railway and Canal Traffic Acts. Quare, whether any public advantage would be served by the proposed lowering of rate, as the coal would come to Cardiff in any event; and, quare, what public interest would be served by a particular colliery having an improved train service. Held, further, that in the exercise of jurisdiction under sub-section 3 of section 29 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888, no order should be made unless the Commissioners are of opinion that all the interests are before the Court, and then only on the fullest possible evidence. Taff Vale Railway, In re, 11 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 89—Ry. Com.

Inequality of Charge.—The plaintiff contracted with the M. railway company for the carriage of coke breeze from a station on the M. railway to a station on the defendants’ railway at a certain specified through rate per ton. The goods having been delivered, the plaintiff paid for the carriage at the agreed rate to the defendants as the collecting agents of the M. railway company. The plaintiff subsequently discovered that the M. railway company had in their published book of rates a through rate between the same stations charging a less sum per ton for coke breeze if used for fuel purposes. The coke breeze carried for the plaintiff was intended to be used for other than fuel purposes. The plaintiff sought to recover from the defendants the difference between the two rates, upon the ground that differential charges for the carriage of the same article according to the purposes for which it was used were a breach of the provisions of section 90 of the Railways Clauses Act, 1845, which requires “that all such tolls be at all times charged equally to all persons and after the same rate . . . in respect of all . . . goods . . . of the same description conveyed . . . over the same portion of the line of railway under the same circumstances.” There was no evidence that the M. railway company had in fact ever carried coke breeze for fuel purposes at the lower rate for any particular persons, but the lower rate had been in existence as a published rate for several years, including the whole period covered by the transactions with the plaintiff. The payments by the plaintiff to the defendants had been made voluntarily and without compulsion. Before any notice to the defendants of any claim by the plaintiff that he had been overcharged they had settled in account with the M. company in respect of the payments so received by them on the M. company’s behalf:—Held—First, that, assuming section 90 to apply to the case of carriage at a through rate over more than one railway, as to which the Court expressed no opinion, it was necessary, in order to establish an inequality of rates under that section, to shew that some persons had in fact been charged at the lower rate, and that of that the existence of the lower rate upon the rate book was no evidence. Taylor v. Metropolitan Railway, 75 L. J. K.B. 785; [1906] 2 K.B. 55; 95 L. T. 149; 22 T. L. R. 479—D.

Money Paid to Agent under Mistake of Fact—When Recoverable Back.—Secondly, that, even if there was a breach of that section, the money could not be recovered back from the defendants, who had received it as innocent agents and settled for it with their principals before any notice of the overcharge; and that this applied equally to that portion of the money received by them, which in the ordinary course, under their traffic arrangement with the M. company, they would be entitled to retain to their own use as representing their share of the through rate for the portion of the transit over their railway, the money having been paid by the plaintiff as a lump payment under a contract to which the defendants were not parties. Id.

Undue Preference—Ultra Vires—Action by Shareholder of Railway Company against Company and Third Party.—It is not ultra vires for a railway company having a fixed rate of charge for the conveyance of goods of a specified class to allow one of its customers to send goods of that class at a lower rate than the fixed rate. Such an act may entitle other customers to appeal to the Railway Commissioners, on the ground of undue preference, under section 2 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854, but it does not enable a shareholder of the company suing on behalf of himself and all other shareholders to maintain an action against the company and the preferred customer to recover from the latter the difference between the rate paid and that which ought to have been paid. Anderson v. Midland Railway, 71 L. J. Ch. 89; [1902] 1 Ch. 869; 85 L. T. 408; 50 W. R. 40—Buckley, J.

Canal Tolls—Rebate under Special Agreement—Considerations Affecting the Case.—The applicants, corn millers and merchants at York, in the course of their business brought cargoes of wheat up the river Ouse to York. They complained that the respondents (as trustees for improving the navigation of the river Ouse) charged Messrs. L., flour millers and corn merchants at York (competitors in trade with the applicants), a sum by way of toll for the use of the river Ouse navigation, within the jurisdiction of the respondents, which worked out to a payment of about 1½d. per ton on wheat brought up the river Ouse to Messrs. L.'s works at York, and charged the applicants for similar traffic brought up the river Ouse to the applicants' works at York tolls for the use of such navigation amounting to 6d. per ton. By an agreement dated October 1, 1888, and made between the respondents and Messrs. L., the respondents agreed to accept a maximum annual payment of 600l. from the said firm, in place of the tolls which would otherwise have been payable, for the whole of the wheat brought by them over that part of the river Ouse navigation which is within the respondents' jurisdiction, irrespective of the amount of the tonnage which might use the said navigation. The respondents sought to justify the agreement on the ground that at the date it was entered into Messrs. L. contemplated transferring their business to Hull, which would have seriously diminished the tolls and would even have imperilled the maintenance of the navigation, and that such a removal would also have caused a serious loss to the ratepayers of the city, and, moreover, that Messrs. L.'s business had increased to a far greater extent than was contemplated when the agreements were entered into:—Held, that, after taking into consideration these and other matters, the difference in the amount charged to Messrs. L. and to the applicants for the use of the river Ouse navigation in connection with the conveyance of wheat was an undue preference given to Messrs. L. over the applicants. Fairweather v. York Corporation, 11 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 201—Ry. Com.

Working Agreement in Perpetuity—Fair Development of Traffic—Working Company Unduly Preferring own Route—Sunday Trains—Group Rates—Through Rates.—The applicants were the owners of a railway which consisted of a single line about eight miles in length, and formed an alternative route to the main line of the defendants' railway between E. and N. The applicants entered into an agreement with the defendants whereby it was provided that the defendants were to work the said railway in perpetuity and in connection with their system of railways, and employ all the requisite staff, locomotive power, rolling stock, &c., so as "to fairly develop the traffic to be accommodated thereby." Upon a complaint by the applicants that the defendants had unduly preferred their own line to that of the applicants, and had not provided the necessary and proper facilities in working both the goods and passenger traffic in connection with the defendants' system required for the fair development of the applicants' railway and had not carried out the working agreement,—Held (inter alia), that the fact that the defendants' line was longer between two places than the new route owned by the applicants (the same rates being charged by both routes) did not compel the defendants to work the goods traffic along the new route where they could shew (as in this case) that their own route could be worked more cheaply; that the defendant working company was entitled to exercise its discretion as to the running of Sunday trains on the applicants' line. Exeter Railway v. Great Western Railway, 12 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 182—Ry. Com.

Upon a specific complaint by the applicants that, although with regard to all goods traffic coming from the applicants' line and from two local lines connected therewith, the defendant working company grouped the terminus station of the applicants at E. with their own station situated in the same town, yet with regard to the goods traffic from their (the defendants') own system they charged from 2d. to 8d. per ton (according to class) more for goods consigned to the applicants' terminus than for goods consigned to their own station, a difference of charge which was not based on any mileage calculation:—Held, that the difference in charge complained of fairly represented the additional cost in working traffic into the applicants' station, and that the defendants could not be compelled to group the two stations for all purposes. Ib.

Held, further, that the fact that the additional charge exceeded the statutory mileage rate for the very short distance between the two stations did not make it illegal (the total statutory charge for the transit of the whole distance not being exceeded), inasmuch as the rates for goods going to the defendants' station and those for goods going beyond the defendants' station to that of the applicants were for different journeys and to different termini, and might be fixed independently of each other, and were each a single sum; and where one journey cost as a whole more than the other, and the difference between the rates charged was only such as corresponded to the difference of cost, it was immaterial that the rates did not work out at the same sum per mile over such distances as were common to both journeys. Ib.

Under the working agreement between the parties the gross amount of all tolls was to be divided equally between the parties. The applicants contended that, after deducting the terminals, the amount charged in a through rate from a third line which represented the special tolls chargeable on their line ought to be retained by them in such division:—Held, that the applicants were only entitled to their terminal and the mileage proportion of the whole through rate, without considering how far the various portions of the route over which the journey was taken had contributed to earn the toll. Ib.

The agreement also provided for the division of receipts on interchanged traffic, which was further defined as traffic arising at or destined for places on the applicants' railway, and carried to or from places on the railway of the defendants, but exclusive of any proportion due to lines worked jointly or worked by the defendants:—Held, that the words "carried to or from places on the railway of the defendants" are applicable also to traffic which does not terminate or arise at such places, but is there handed to or received from another company. Ib.

— Group Rates—A railway company carried coke to certain ironworks, and grouped them. Upon complaint by the owners of one of such works that the group rate created an undue prejudice to them, and an undue preference to their competitors in the group, the Railway Commissioners held that the railway company had not created an undue preference. Subsequently the railway company took one of the ironworks out of such group. Upon complaint that the Railway Commissioners having declared the grouping of these various ironworks to be reasonable, the railway company were not justified in taking works out of the grouping in which they had been so included:—Held, that section 29 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888, did not prevent a railway company from grouping de novo, or dissolving a group, or taking one place out of it in the sense of leaving the others in, and not putting that one in. Millom and Askham Hematite Iron Co. v. Furness Railway, 12 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 1—Ry. Com.

— of Carriers—Special Agents—General Orders for Delivery given by Consignees—Special Services.—A railway company employed Messrs Wordie, a firm of carriers, under a contract, to deliver all goods carried by the railway company to Dublin at cartage rates, and not invoiced to be delivered by any particular firm of carriers. Ninety-five traders in Dublin sent to the railway company general orders to hand over to Messrs. Wallis (another firm of carriers in Dublin) for cartage all inwards traffic consigned to them. Such orders were in the following form:

"Dublin, 190 .

"To the Great Northern Railway Company (of Ireland).

"All goods and empties arriving at your station for (no matter how consigned or addressed), please hand to agents John Wallis & Sons, for delivery until further orders."

The railway company refused to recognise or act upon such general orders:—Held, that in view of the inconvenience which the recognition of such general orders would entail on the public and the railway company, and the small and irregular consignments of traffic carried for the traders giving such orders, the refusal to obey such general orders was not a denial of reasonable facilities for the delivery of traffic, nor an undue preference of Messrs Wordie. Parkinson v. Great Western Railway (40 L. J. C.P. 222; L. R. 6 C.P. 544) distinguished. Wallis v. Great Northern Railway (Ireland), 12 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 38—Ry. Com.

The railway company, under their contract with Messrs. Wordie, paid them 1s. 7d. per ton for the cartage of collected and delivered traffic in Dublin, but allowed Messrs. Wallis only 1s. 3d. per ton for similar services. The railway company alleged that the payments were really the same—namely, 1s. 3d. for cartage; and that the 4d. extra which Messrs. Wordie got was paid them for special services, in their capacity as agents, rendered to the railway company:—Held, that 4d. per ton was an excessive allowance for the special services, and that the payment thereof constituted an undue preference by the railway company of Messrs. Wordie to the prejudice of Messrs. Wallis. Ib.

— Shipment Rate and Works Rate—Works Rate for same Services Higher than Shipment Rate—Right of Trader to Apply for Reduction of Works Rate—Right to make Application where Trader does not Directly Pay Rate.—The mere fact that a railway company charge a higher rate for carriage of coal over the same length of line to traders' works—all traders being charged an equal rate—than they do for coal for shipment, is not of itself sufficient to give a trader a right to apply to the Court for reduction of the works rate, and such difference between the works rate and the shipment rate does not necessarily shew an undue preference or an undue prejudice within the meaning of the Railway and Canal Traffic Acts. Spillers & Bakers v. Taff Vale Railway, 90 L. T. 713; 12 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 70; 20 T. L. R. 101—Ry. Com.

A railway company carried from certain collieries to C. large quantities of coal, the greater proportion of which was for shipment from that port to places abroad and to ports in England, and the remaining part was for works in C., including the works of the applicants, who were large flour millers in C., and for home consumption. They carried the shipment coal at a low shipment rate, but all other coal, whether for works (including the applicants' works) or for home consumption, was charged a higher or works rate, the works rate being some 50 per cent. higher than the shipment rate, and being the same for all traders in C. It was proved that the low shipment rate was justified by necessity, and that owing to competition with other ports and to other causes it was practically impossible in the interests of the public for the company to raise the shipment rate; and further, that the works rate was a reasonable rate, and was in fact so low that it could not reasonably be made lower without reducing it to a non-paying rate, and though there was some slight competition, no real or substantial competition was proved between the two classes of coal. Upon a complaint by the applicants that the higher works rate charged for the carriage of their coal as compared with the low shipment rate was an undue preference and an undue prejudice within the meaning of the Railway and Canal Traffic Acts,—Held, that the mere difference in the two rates was not in itself sufficient to prove an undue preference or an undue prejudice, or to give the applicants a right to come to the Court for relief; that, under the circumstances, within the meaning of sub-section 2 of section 27 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888, not only was the lower charge for the shipment traffic "necessary for securing in the interests of the public the traffic in respect of which it is made," but also "the inequality could not be removed without unduly reducing the rates charged to the complainant," and that therefore the applicants were not entitled to a reduction in the works rate charged to them. Ib.

Semble, in such case, the fact that the rates are charged by the railway company to and paid by the colliery company, and not directly charged to or paid by a trader himself in the first instance, does not prevent the trader from applying to the Court under the Railway and Canal Traffic Acts, if in substance the charge is made so as to affect the trader's interest. Ib.

— Competing Wharfowners.—Any person who is directly prejudiced by the breach of the statutory duty imposed on a railway company to give similar treatment to all similar traffic can apply to the Railway and Canal Commission for an order to remedy the grievance. Hence a wharfinger, who has no interest in the goods carried, can complain of undue preference given to a competing wharfinger. Forwood v. Great Northern Railway, 12 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 89; 20 T. L. R. 320—Ry. Com.

Coal Traffic—Guarantee of Quantity.—The applicants, the owners of a colliery on the defendants' railway, consigned coal for shipment over the defendants' railway to the defendants' Alexandra Dock at Hull, a distance of fifty-one miles seven chains, and were charged 2s. 7d. per ton. The D. company also owned collieries on another branch of the defendants' railway, and competed with the applicants in sending coal for shipment to the Alexandra Dock at Hull, a distance of fifty-six miles twenty-four chains, and were charged—(a) For any quantity up to 200,000 tons a year, 2s. 5d. per ton; (b) from 200,000 to 300,000 tons a year, 2s. 4d. per ton; (c) for any quantity above 300,000 tons a year, 2s. 3d. per ton. These rates were charged to the D. company under a guarantee given to the railway company to send a minimum quantity of 200,000 tons of shipment coal per annum, which in practice came up to about 500,000 tons per annum during twenty-one years from 1891. It was proved that the applicants sent only some 60,000 tons of coal a year, and that in the case of shipment coal it was necessary that there should be a large and constant supply so that the railway company could make their shipment arrangements with certainty and regularity, and, further, that the railway company were willing to carry the applicants' coal at the same rates as the D. company's coal if the applicants would give a like guarantee as to quantity:—Held, that under the circumstances the difference of 2d. a ton up to 200,000 and the still greater difference for larger tonnage was justified, such difference being made by the railway company in good faith for the protection of their own interest, and in the belief that the guarantee was worth to them the difference. Hickleton Main Colliery Co. v. Hull, Barnsley, and West Riding Junction Railway, 12 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 63—Ry. Com.

Semble, that such difference of charge would not be justified if the applicants sent quantities of coal comparable to those which the D. company sent, and promised from month to month, without any guarantee, a sufficient continuance of supply to enable the railway company to make all necessary arrangements for shipment. Ib.

Under section 27 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888, the Court will take into consideration any circumstance which makes it better worth the while of the railway company to carry the traffic of one trader rather than the traffic of another. Ib.

— Rebate under Special Agreement—Damages Recoverable for Six Years only.—A railway company had, since the year 1889, under an agreement, allowed a rebate of from one to one and a-quarter per cent. upon the total annual carriage accounts paid by Messrs. Rickett, Smith in respect of the carriage of coal from collieries situated on the railway company's system of railways to all stations or places in the United Kingdom, other than stations on the Great Eastern Railway outside London. The applicants, who were competitors in trade with Messrs. Rickett, Smith, complained that the railway company had not allowed such rebate in respect of similar traffic carried by the railway company for the applicants and delivered in like manner. The applicants first became aware of the existence of the rebate in October, 1900:—Held, that the terms and conditions contained in the agreement with Messrs. Rickett, Smith did not afford a justification for the railway company making a difference between Messrs. Rickett, Smith and the applicants as regards any rebate on their annual carriage accounts of more than a quarter per cent. in favour of Messrs. Rickett, Smith. The Court, therefore, allowed to the applicants on their annual accounts with the railway company for the carriage of coal from collieries on the railway company's system of railways for six years before the termination of the agreement, damages equal to the allowance per cent. made by the railway company during that period to Messrs. Rickett, Smith on their annual carriage account with the railway company for carriage of similar traffic, less one-quarter per cent.; such damage to be in respect of the applicants' coal traffic to places (stations on the Great Eastern Railway outside London excepted) to which comparable and competitive coal contributing to their carriage account with the railway company had also been sent in substantial quantities within twelve months by Messrs. Rickett, Smith. Held, further, that the words "Rebates are allowed to coal merchants off their coal traffic accounts in certain cases and upon certain conditions, where the annual tonnage carried exceeds 25,000 tons; particulars of the conditions qualifying merchants to this allowance may be obtained on application to the general manager," inserted in the rate-books, were not sufficient to disclose the existence of the rebate in accordance with section 14 of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1873. Charrington, Sells, Dale & Co. v. Midland Railway, 11 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 222—Ry. Com.

— Lower Charge made for a Longer Distance — Geographical Competitive Position — Public Interest.—The applicants consigned coal from their collieries by way of the defendants' railway to the private siding at the works of Messrs. Brunner, Mond, at Winnington, a distance of thirty-one miles. Messrs. Evans & Co. also consigned coal from their collieries by way of the defendants' railway for delivery to the private siding at the works of Messrs. Brunner, Mond, a distance of thirty-three miles. The defendant railway company charged the applicants for the conveyance of the coal traffic between the two points 2s. 1d. a ton, and Messrs. Evans 1s. 9d. a ton. The applicants and Messrs. Evans were competitors, and sent precisely the same traffic to the same destination and over substantially the same route. There was an alternative railway route by the line of the London and North-Western Railway between the collieries of the applicants and Messrs. Evans, and the works of Messrs. Brunner, Mond, at Winnington. By such alternative route the distance between Messrs. Evans's collieries and the works of Messrs. Brunner, Mond, was twenty miles, and between the applicants' colliery and such works twenty-seven miles, and the rate of 1s. 9d. per ton was also the rate charged by the London and North-Western Railway to Messrs. Evans by such shorter route, and the defendant railway company contended that the existence of that shorter alternative route gave Messrs. Evans a geographical competitive position which justified the lower rate, and that to apply the mileage principle, where competitive routes exist, would shut up the longer route, which was not in the interests of the public.—Held, that the difference of 4d. per ton in favour of Messrs.

Evans in respect of a longer transit of their traffic over substantially the same route as the applicants' traffic was conveyed amounted to an undue preference, there not being sufficient public interest to justify so great a difference. Abram Coal Co. v. Great Central Railway, 12 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 125; 20 T. L. R. 264—Ry. Com.

Subsequently the defendant railway company reduced the rate charged to the applicants from 2s. 1d. per ton to 2s. per ton, leaving a difference of 3d. per ton in favour of Messrs. Evans & Co. instead of 4d. The applicants not being satisfied with such reduction, again brought the matter before the Court pursuant to the leave reserved:—Held, that the preference of 3d. per ton given to Messrs. Evans is neither undue nor unreasonable. Ib.

Seem, the Railway Commission Court would, in a proper case, order the railway company before it to have recourse to grouping, if by so doing they could remove a preference without undue injury to themselves, and without undue injury to third parties—per BIGHAM, J. Ib.

— Shipment Coal—Competitive Traffic.—A railway company carried shipment coal to certain sidings on a ship canal at a lower rate than they carried coal to a trader at the same sidings; such coal (which was in the form of slack) being then manufactured by the trader into patent fuel for shipment. Upon a complaint by the trader that the railway company were unduly preferring the shipment coal to his prejudice,—Held, that no competition existed between the coal carried for shipment and that carried for the trader; and that therefore the applicants had no locus standi. Lancashire Patent Fuel Co. v. London and North-Western Railway, 12 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 77—Ry. Com.

Held, further, that the fact that the trader manufactured the coal carried for him by the railway company into an article which might ultimately compete with the coal carried by the railway company for shipment was not bound to be taken into consideration by the railway company in regulating their charges. Ib.

Rebate — Cartage — Undue Preference.—In assessing a rebate off a rate for the carriage of goods in respect of the cartage having been performed by the trader,—Held, that the correct basis was to take the cost of the service rendered and the saving to the company when the trader performed his own carting. Pickfords v. London and North-Western Railway, 23 T. L. R. 535—Ry. Com. Affirmed, 24 T. L. R. 149—C.A.

Rebate for Station or Service Terminals—Jurisdiction of Commissioners — Sidings Provided by Trader.—The plaintiffs received from and delivered to the defendant company large quantities of merchandise at a siding belonging to the plaintiffs, in respect of which the company did not provide any station accommodation or perform any terminal services at that siding. They were charged the same rates as were charged to other traders for similar traffic, in respect of which the company did provide station accommodation and perform service terminals; and they claimed an allowance or rebate, under section 4 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1894. The Railway Commissioners decided that a rebate should be made. SIR FREDERICK PEEL decided upon the ground that the rebate could be ordered, whether any charge for station or service terminals was in fact included in the rate or not; and WRIGHT, J., expressed an opinion to the same effect. But WRIGHT, J., and LORD COBHAM both decided that a charge for station or service terminals was in fact included in the rate:—Held, that, as the majority of the Commissioners had decided that the rebate should be made upon the ground that a charge for station or service terminals was in fact included in the rate, the appeal would not lie. Vickers, Sons & Maxim v. Midland Railway, 87 L. T. 665; 11 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 249—C.A.

Rebate Given to Competitive Trader in Consideration of Services Performed for the Railway Company.—The applicants, millers and corn merchants at Limerick, complained that while the rate charged to the public on grain carried from Dublin to Limerick is 9s. a ton, the railway company allow to G., a miller at Kilrush, on grain they carry for him from Dublin to Limerick a rebate of 6s. G. is a shipowner as well as a miller, and a contract entered into with him by the railway company provides that he shall be their agent for the Lower Shannon district, and shall use every effort to develop a goods traffic from and to that district, and to and from London and North-Western stations via Dublin and Holyhead, and shall receive from the railway company on all such traffic carried partly by his steamers and partly by their railway a commission of 6s. per ton. The applicants import grain into Limerick for sale there and elsewhere, and for the carriage by rail to Limerick of grain bought in Dublin the railway company's rate of charge is 9s. a ton; but if the grain is carried on G.'s account, and if his steamer is used, the charge to him is reduced by the action of the rebate to a net 3s. a ton:—Held, that the differential charge on the railway amounted to an undue preference of G., and the Court ordered and enjoined the railway company not to give G. any rebate or allowance in the nature of a rebate for the carriage by the railway company on their line between Dublin and Limerick of any grain, &c., in excess of any rebate or allowance thereon given to the applicants; and not to make any payment to G. depending in any way upon the amount of grain &c. consigned to G. from Dublin to Limerick, and not to give any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to G. in the carrying for him of such grain, &c. Bannatyne v. Great Southern and Western Railway, 12 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 105—Ry. Com.

Carriage of Non-perishable Goods by Passenger Train—No Statutory Obligation to Carry—Charge Inclusive of Collection—Collection by Consignor—Right of Consignor to Rebate.—Where a railway company which is under no statutory obligation to do so carries non-perishable goods by passenger train, and charges a rate which includes collection and delivery, a consignor is not entitled to any rebate from the rate on the ground that he has himself done the work of collection, provided the rate is not charged unequally to different consignors. Stone v. Midland Railway, 72 L. J. K.B. 377; [1903] 1 K.B. 741; 88 L. T. 92—D.

(b) Through Rates.

Application for—Reasonable Facilities for Traffic—Dock Company's Lines—"Railway company."—A dock company applied for a through rate under section 25 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888, from the warehouses of one of its docks to certain places on the Great Eastern Railway. The lines of the dock company, in respect of which the application was made, were constructed under statutory powers which authorised the company to make and work a dock and to construct lines of rails and all appliances ancillary to the working of a dock, but did not incorporate the general provisions of the Railway Clauses Acts or contain any provisions purporting to treat the dock company as a railway company in respect of the lines ancillary to the working of the docks. The dock company was the owner of a railway in the United Kingdom constructed and carried on under the powers of an Act of Parliament within the meaning of section 3 of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1873, but this railway was not a part of the through route in respect of which the application was made:—Held, that the dock company were not entitled to apply for the through rate, since, having regard to the provisions of the company's Acts, the company did not own, or lease, or work a railway within the meaning of section 3 of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1873, which could be substantially treated as forming part of the through route in respect of which the application was made. London and India Docks Co. v. Great Eastern Railway, 71 L. J. K.B. 369; [1902] 1 K.B. 568; 86 L. T. 339; 50 W. R. 461; 11 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 57—C.A.

Under the powers of one of the dock company's Acts, a portion of a railway constructed under the powers of an Act of Parliament, and forming part of the Great Eastern Railway system, was replaced by a substituted line, and vested in the dock company, but the Great Eastern company retained the right to use it in special circumstances, and no charging powers were conferred upon the dock company in respect of it. This portion of railway formed a part of the route in respect of which the application was made:—Held, that the dock company were not a railway company owning a railway within the meaning of section 3 of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1873, in respect of the transferred portion, inasmuch as, having regard to the provisions of the Act, the dock company took it upon transfer divested of its special characteristics as a public railway, and held it in the same manner as they held their other dock lines. Ib.

Apportionment—Bonus Mileage—Particulars of Rates Necessary.—Upon an application under sections 25 and 26 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888, to the Railway and Canal Commissioners to fix the apportionment of "all agreed-on rates chargeable on traffic passing, via the Forth Bridge, between stations on the Great North of Scotland railway and on the Caledonian railway between Aberdeen and Kinnaber Junction, on the one hand, and stations on the south of the Forth Bridge on the other, as between the respondents and the applicants, on the footing that the applicants shall receive in every case from the said rates as the share belonging to the Forth Bridge company, such sum as they would be entitled to receive if the distance traversed by such traffic over the Forth Bridge railway were 19 miles more than it actually is,"—Held, that such a description of rates is too general and indefinite, and that full particulars are required of rates proposed for apportionment, which should include their amount, the termini for each rate, and the route between those termini, in order that no mistake may occur in the identification of the rates. Held, further, that, although by sections 104 and 106 of the Caledonian and Scottish North-Eastern Railways Amalgamation Act, 1866, the North British company were empowered to fix the rates and fares for Scottish east-coast traffic over their own and the Caledonian Co.'s lines, and it was further provided that, after the reduction of certain charges, including the proportion of any through rate payable to other companies, the residue of such rates and fares should be divided between the Caledonian Co. and the North British Co. according to the actual distance the traffic travelled over their respective railways, or in such proportions as might be agreed on between them, or in case of difference as should be settled by the arbitrator, yet the jurisdiction of the Court was not ousted by that of the arbitrator, because the application was not to apportion a through rate, or residue of a through rate, between the North British and Caledonian companies, but to apportion a through rate between all forwarding companies engaged in the east-coast traffic. Sub-section 1 of section 25 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888, which requires "written notice" of the proposed through rate to be given to each forwarding company, stating both the amount and the route proposed, and the proportion of the rate claimed by the company making the proposal, had been sufficiently complied with in this case, where each forwarding company, including the respondents, had after the opening of the Forth Bridge received the aforementioned particulars at meetings of the railway clearing-house, of which a written record was kept, although written notice had admittedly not been given to each forwarding company (per LORD TRAYNER). Since the effect of the application would not be confined to the two respondent companies, but would leave a less sum to be divided among all the other companies interested, rates with which other companies were concerned could not be considered without such companies being joined as respondents (per SIR FREDERICK PEEL). Forth Bridge Railway v. Great North of Scotland Railway (No. 1), 11 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 1—Ry. Com.

Notice—Jurisdiction—Railway.]—By section 25 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888, written notice must be given of a proposed through rate to each forwarding company stating the amount, rate, and apportionment. If no objection be made by any forwarding company within ten days, the rate comes into operation. Where the objection is only to the apportionment of the rate, the rate comes into operation and the decision of the Commissioners is to be retrospective. On January 14, 1890, a printed notice was addressed by the secretary of the clearing-house to the goods managers of the various companies requesting attendance at a meeting of the goods managers' conference, and appending a list of subjects for discussion, among which was the following: "Mr. Macdougall will intimate the probable opening of the Forth Bridge railway in March next, and give notice that, in terms of the Forth Bridge Railway Acts, 1878 and 1882, the North British company (as the working company) will claim in division of receipts on traffic conveyed via the Forth Bridge an allowance as for 19 miles in addition to the actual mileage of the bridge railway." Certain of the companies interested assented to the claim so made, but others objected, and the sums in dispute were held in suspense in the clearing-house. On October 19, 1898, the Forth Bridge Co. and the North British Co. served a notice upon all the companies interested in the Forth Bridge through route, which purported to be under section 25 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888, setting forth that the applicants proposed and required that the through rates and fares then in operation via the Forth Bridge, and particularly those set forth in a schedule to each notice, should be continued in operation, and that the apportionment among the applicants and the other companies of the said rates and fares should be made on the footing that the Forth Bridge Railway was nineteen miles longer than it actually is. In the schedule were set forth a selection of through rates then in operation via the Forth Bridge between certain stations of the company receiving the notice and certain other stations south of the Forth Bridge. Objections having been lodged to the allowance and apportionment, the Forth Bridge Co. and the North British Co. applied to the Railway Commissioners to apportion the scheduled rates and fares, and also all other agreed-on rates and fares via the Forth Bridge on the footing that the applicants should be credited with the said nineteen-mile bonus:—Held, first, that the notice of October 19, 1898, was a valid notice within the meaning of section 25, sub-section 1 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888, and therefore that the Railway Commissioners had jurisdiction to entertain the application; secondly, that the notice of January 14, 1890, was not a valid notice within the meaning of the said sub-section, and therefore the rates in operation were not agreed-on rates, but must be granted or disallowed in the application before the Commissioners; and, accordingly, as the objections before them were to the allowance as well as to the proposed apportionment, their order should not be retrospective. Held, that section 25, sub-section 9 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888, applies only to companies which, besides having part of a through route, work another route between the termini of the through route, and are in a position to make a legal charge for which traffic may be carried from end to end of it. Forth Bridge Railway v. Great North of Scotland Railway (No. 2), 11 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 14—Ct. of Sess.

Competing Routes—Diversion of Traffic—Transportation of Goods—Rebates.]—Certain through rates for traffic passing via Strabane, between the railway of the Great Northern Co. and the railway of the Donegal Co. west of Strabane, were in operation under a notice duly served on the Donegal Co. in accordance with the provision of section 25 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888. Each of the railway companies owned a railway between Strabane and Londonderry, and were competing for the traffic. Upon a complaint by the Great Northern Co.

—(1) of the unreasonable delay caused by the Donegal Co. to traffic forwarded from Londonderry via Strabane, partly on the line of the Great Northern Co. and partly on the line of the Donegal Co., and vice versa; (2) of improper diversion of traffic from the line of the Great Northern Co. to the line of the Donegal Co., and obstruction offered at stations on the Donegal Co.'s line west of Strabane to the use by the public of the route to Derry by the line of the Great Northern Co. as a through route; (3) of improper refusal of the Donegal Co. to recognise the through bookings of passengers by the Great Northern Co. from Londonderry via Strabane to stations on the Donegal Co.'s line west of Strabane; (4) of detention of the Great Northern Co.'s waggons at Strabane owing to the delays in transhipment of traffic by the Donegal Co.,—Held, that the Great Northern Co. were entitled on the facts proved to an order enjoining the Donegal Co. to afford all due and reasonable facilities for carrying out the through system of booking and rates over the Great Northern Co.'s and Donegal Co.'s railways for passengers and goods as required by the notice served by the Great Northern Co. on the Donegal Co., and in particular for transferring to and from the Great Northern Co.'s railway all goods and traffic carried at through rates partly over the railway of the Donegal Co. and partly over the railway of the Great Northern Co. The Donegal Co. applied for an order declaring that the through rates in force under the notice served on the Donegal Co. by the Great Northern Co. were not a reasonable facility or required in the interests of the public, and that the same should no longer be in force :—Held, that no case had been made for rescinding the through rates. Query, whether the Court has power to rescind through rates, which have become valid by a notice under section 25 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888. Upon complaint that the Great Northern Co. granted a rebate of 1s. per ton out of their portion of the through rates it was proved that the Great Northern Co. were not acting mala fide nor for the purpose of treating the Donegal Co. unfairly, but to secure a portion of the competitive traffic, and that without such rebate the Great Northern Co. would lose the traffic altogether owing to the delays caused by the Donegal Co. at Strabane :—Held, that no case had been made for prohibiting the Great Northern Co. from allowing the rebate. Great Northern Railway (Ireland) v. Donegal Railway, 11 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 47—Ry. Com.

(c) Subscription Tickets.

Reasonable Conditions — Carrying Merchandise as Personal Luggage.—A railway company issued monthly subscription tickets on certain conditions, amongst which are the following: No subscriber shall be entitled to carry free of charge any merchandise or articles of any kind for hire or profit, or for the use of any person or persons other than the subscriber. The directors reserve to themselves the right of declining to renew the subscription ticket of any person who refuses to comply with any of the regulations herein set forth :—Held, that such conditions are fair and reasonable, and that the railway company are entitled to decline to renew the subscription ticket of a subscriber who refuses to abide by the former of such conditions. Morrison v. Belfast and County Down Railway, 12 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 99—Ry. Com.

(d) Traders' Tickets.

Issue of, at Rates Varying according to Amount of Traffic.—A railway company issued season tickets to traders who sent or received traffic yielding annually 250l. or over at a cheaper rate than to ordinary passengers, the cost of such traders' season tickets being about one-third of the cost of an ordinary season ticket. To traders whose traffic yielded over 1,000l. the railway company gave a still greater reduction on the season-ticket rate. Upon a complaint that the railway company were unduly preferring traders who sent or received large quantities of traffic to those sending or receiving small amounts of traffic,—Held, that it was entirely a matter of fact whether the preference given was undue, and that where such a preference was given to all persons alike upon purely business considerations, there was a strong presumption that the preference was not undue; and that, on the facts proved, no undue preference existed. Inverness Chamber of Commerce v. Highland Railway, 11 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 218—Ry. Com.

18. WORKING EXPENSES.

Railway Companies Act, 1867, s. 4—"Other proper outgoings"—Costs of Defending Action.—The W., M., and C.'s Q. Railway Co. incurred costs in defending an action brought against it for large sums by the contractor for the line in respect of the balance of the contract price. A receivership order had been made against the company after the action was commenced; and the plaintiff had obtained leave to continue the proceedings in the action. At the same time leave was given to the company to attend the proceedings, but no order was made as to its costs. This was an application by the company that these costs might be paid to them at once by the receiver and manager of the railway out of the moneys received by him, upon the footing that the costs in question were "other proper outgoings" within the meaning of section 4 of the Railway Companies Act, 1867 :—Held, that as the line could have been carried on just as well and effectually, although the company had not resisted the claim made in the action, however proper it might have been for them to do so, these costs were not "proper outgoings" within the meaning of section 4, and the application failed. Wrexham, Mold, and Connah's Quay Railway (No. 2), In re, 80 L. T. 648—Byrne, J.

19. NEGLIGENCE.

Drunken Man Causing Injuries to Passenger—Liability of Railway Company.]—A drunken man, with a ticket, was admitted to the platform of the defendants' station and passed the barrier where the ticket-checker was stationed. The man was seen outside, obviously drunk, but there was no evidence that there was anything in his conduct to attract the ticket-checker's attention. The man attempted to enter a first-class carriage when the station-master ordered a porter to keep him back, and whilst the porter was leading him along the platform he suddenly swung up his arm and broke the window of the carriage in which a passenger was sitting. The passenger being injured by the broken glass sued the defendants for damages for negligence and want of care, and at the trial judgment was entered for the plaintiff:—Held (WALKER, L.J., dissenting), that there must be a new trial, as the case was left to the jury on the erroneous assumption that if the drunken man was "obviously drunk," either the neglect to notice that condition, or the admission of him in that condition as a passenger rendered the defendants absolutely responsible for all that he did. Adderley v. Great Northern Railway, [1905] 2 Ir. R. 378—C.A.

Obligation to Make Fence between Highway and Land taken for Purposes of Railway—Liability for Injury to Cattle Straying upon Highway.]—Where a highway adjoins lands taken for the purposes of a railway, a person whose cattle stray upon the highway, by the licence of the owner of the soil over which the highway passes, is not an owner or occupier of adjoining lands within the meaning of section 68 of the Railways Clauses Act, 1845. As between such person and the railway company there is no obligation upon the latter to make sufficient fences to prevent the cattle of the former straying upon the railway. Therefore if, under such circumstances, the cattle stray from the highway on to the railway and are consequently killed, the railway company is not liable to their owner for their loss. Luscombe v. Great Western Railway, 68 L. J. Q.B. 711; [1899] 2 Q.B. 313; 81 L. T. 183—D.

Injury to Passenger by Spark from Engine—Exit from Station—Omission to Take Reasonable Precautions to Protect from Sparks.]—The plaintiff, a passenger, while leaving the defendants' station by a path belonging to the defendants which ran alongside the railway and was an authorised means of exit, was injured by a spark from an engine on the railway. There was evidence that the attention of the defendants had been called to the danger of injury from sparks to passengers using the path, and that they had declined to protect the path by a screen or cover on the ground of expense; and that the path could have been protected at a reasonable cost and without interfering with the business of the railway. The engine was properly constructed to prevent the emission of sparks according to the latest and most improved methods, and there was no negligence in working the engine. In an action for damages for negligence, the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff:—Held, that there was evidence upon which the jury could properly find that the defendants were negligent in not taking reasonable precautions to protect passengers using the path from injury by sparks. Atherton v. London and North-Western Railway, 93 L. T. 464; 21 T. L. R. 671—C.A. And see col. 2026.

20. NUISANCE.

Locomotive Emitting Black Smoke.]—Certain locomotives belonging to the appellants emitted black smoke for three minutes on various occasions. Evidence was given that the coal used was smoky coal, and that it was unnecessary for a locomotive to emit smoke for longer than one minute, but no evidence was given that the locomotives were not constructed on the principle of consuming their own smoke:—Held, that an offence had been committed within section 114 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, as amended by section 19 of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1868. South-Eastern and Chatham Railway v. London County Council, 84 L. T. 632; 65 J. P. 568; 19 Cox C.C. 721—D.

— Engine Constructed to Consume its own Smoke—"As far as practicable."]—A locomotive steam-engine belonging to the respondents emitted smoke while passing through one of their stations. The engine was a properly constructed one, being constructed on the principle of consuming as far as practicable its own smoke. The coal used was a good hard steam coal, but the smoke emitted was of a darker colour and more in quantity than would have been the case if Welsh coal had been used:—Held, that the use of the coal that was in fact used upon the engine did not constitute an offence on the part of the respondents under section 114 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and section 19 of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1868. London County Council v. Great Eastern Railway, 75 L. J. K.B. 490; [1906] 2 K.B. 312; 94 L. T. 586; 54 W. R. 537; 70 J. P. 356; 4 L. G. R. 925; 21 Cox C.C. 171; 22 T. L. R. 513—D.

21. BREACH OF STATUTORY DUTY.

Injunction—Discretion—Application by Attorney-General—No Injury to Public Proved.]—In an action by the Attorney-General, on the relation of the road authority, for an injunction to restrain a railway company from infringing the provisions of section 48 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, which enacts that "Where the railway crosses any turnpike road on a level adjoining to a station, all trains on the railway shall be made to slacken their speed before arriving at such turnpike road, and shall not cross the same at any greater rate of speed than four miles an hour," it is no answer by the railway company that it is less inconvenient to the public that the trains should cross the road at a greater rate of speed than four miles an hour. Att.-Gen. v. London and North-Western Railway, 69 L. J. Q.B. 26; [1900] 1 Q.B. 78; 81 L. T. 649; 63 J. P. 772—C.A.

22. ABANDONMENT OF UNDERTAKING.

Parliamentary Deposit—Disposal of.]—A railway undertaking having been abandoned, an action was raised for the determination of the rights of parties to the parliamentary deposit, there being no other assets of the company. By the Act authorising the undertaking it was provided that if the undertaking was abandoned the parliamentary deposit should be "applied in the discretion of the Court as part of the assets of the company for the benefit of the creditors thereof, and subject to such application, shall be repaid or retransferred to the depositors," and that "all costs charges and expenses of and incident to the preparing for, obtaining, and passing of this Act, or otherwise in relation thereto, shall be paid by the company":—Held, first, that solicitors and engineers who had given their professional services in preparing and carrying through Parliament the bill for the creation of the railway company—the scheme being a bona fide one—were creditors of the company and entitled to payment out of the deposit fund, although they had given their services solely in the prospect of being remunerated by the company when formed; and secondly, that, in the exercise of its discretion in the distribution of the assets, the Court could give direct effect to the claims of professional persons who had given their services in the promotion of the company on the employment of the professional promoters. Muir v. Forman's Trustees, 5 F. 546—Ct. of Sess.

Agreement to Pay Lump Sum for Services in obtaining Special Act—Ultra Vires.—A special Act incorporating a company for the construction of a railway in Dundee connecting two railway systems there, authorised (inter alia) payment from the funds of the company of the cost of obtaining the Act. Shortly after its incorporation the company granted an acknowledgment of its indebtedness for 5,000*l.*, being 2 per cent. on its authorised capital, to M., the ex-manager of a railway company and an expert on railway matters, for services rendered by him in pursuance of an agreement which bore to be entered into between him and the promoters of the company, and under which he agreed to give his services in aiding the company to obtain its special Act and in negotiating with the neighbouring railways. He was to receive for these services a fee of fifty guineas if the bill did not pass; if it did pass he was to receive 2 per cent. on the authorised capital. The deed also acknowledged that these services had been rendered, and the special Act scheduled an agreement with the two railway companies. The undertaking having been abandoned, and proceedings raised for distribution of the company's assets among its creditors,—Held, that the agreement to pay a lump sum for the services in question, irrespective of their value, and not subject to official taxation or audit, was ultra vires of the company, and that M. was not entitled to claim as a creditor upon its funds. Mason's Trustees v. Poole & Robinson, 5 F. 789—Ct. of Sess.

"Non-meritorious creditors."—Semble, the cases in which professional promoters claiming a gift from a deposit fund forfeited to the Crown were regarded as non-meritorious creditors not entitled to a gift do not apply in a case where the deposit fund is not forfeited but falls to be treated as an asset of the company. Skegness and St. Leonards Tramways Co., — Parliamentary Deposit—Costs of Enquiries as to Claimants on Deposit—Priority.—The promoters of a railway undertaking who are entitled to a parliamentary deposit after the claims of creditors are satisfied cannot, in general, be allowed their costs of the prosecution of enquiries as to the persons entitled to the money deposited, until after the creditors establishing a claim on the fund have been paid in full. Wrexham, Mold, and Connah's Quay Railway (No. 2), In re (69 L. Debentures — Unsecured Creditors — Sale of Rolling Stock, &c. — Undertaking — Pro tanto Abandonment — Priorities.—A railway company, which had agreed to work the line of a second railway company on certain terms, became insolvent, and the original agreement between the two companies was cancelled. By a subsequent agreement it was arranged that the second railway company should take over the working of the two lines, and that the insolvent company should hand over to the second company for a certain sum of money the rolling stock belonging to the insolvent company that had hitherto been used for working the second company's line:—Held, that the sum thus paid was money coming to the receiver of the insolvent company within the meaning of section 4 of the Railway Companies Act, 1867, and that it was liable under section 23 of the same Act to be first applied in satisfaction of the debentures of the insolvent company in priority to the unsecured creditors. Liskeard and Caradon Railway, In re, 72 L. J. Ch. 754; [1903] 2 Ch. 681; 89 L. T. 437—Swinfen Eady, J.

23. RECEIVER AND MANAGER.

Railway not Completed.—Assuming that there is jurisdiction to appoint a receiver under the Railway Companies Act, 1867, s. 4, before the railway is opened for traffic, the Court will not exercise it in a case where the receiver if appointed would have no duties to perform. Knott End Railway, In re, 70 L. J. Ch. 463; [1901] 2 Ch. 8; 84 L. T. 433; 49 W. R. 469—C.A.

The Railway Companies Act, 1867, s. 4, discussed by RIGBY, L.J., and VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., and Manchester and Milford Railway, In re (49 L. J. Ch. 865; 14 Ch. D. 645), explained. Ib.

Working Expenses and other Proper Outgoings — Costs of Company in Defending Pending Proceedings.—The Court has jurisdiction to provide for the costs of all proceedings directed under the Railway Companies Act, 1867, s. 4, such as the costs of the receiver in resisting a creditor's claim; and where, after an order appointing a receiver and manager under section 4, an order was made in the proceedings that the company should continue to defend a pending action brought against the company by the contractors for the cost of constructing the line,—Held, that costs incurred by the company in defending the action since the date of the order appointing a receiver ought to be allowed in the same way as if they were costs of enquiries directed by the order appointing the receiver, in priority to the claims of debenture-holders, and creditors for whose benefit the action was defended, although such costs were not “proper outgoings in respect of the undertaking” within the meaning of section 4. Wrexham, Mold, and Connah's Quay Railway, In re (No. 2), 69 L. J. Ch. 291; [1900] 1 Ch. 261; 82 L. T. 33; 48 W. R. 311—C.A.

“Proper outgoings”—Breach of Implied Contract—Damages.]—Damages recovered for loss sustained through the neglect of a railway company to keep its premises in proper repair are not “other proper outgoings in respect of the undertaking” payable by the receiver and manager in priority to the other creditors of the company, under section 4 of the Railway Companies Act, 1867. Wrexham, Mold, and Connah's Quay Railway (No. 3), In re, 69 L. J. Ch. 671; [1900] 2 Ch. 436; 83 L. T. 49—Farwell, J.

24. ULTRA VIRES.

Omnibus Service—No Express Power—Undertaking to Modify Service.]—A railway company, in the absence of a special statutory power to that effect, is not entitled to carry on the business of omnibus proprietors except as strictly incidental to and consequential upon their railway undertaking. If special powers for the conduct of such a business are desired, it is for the railway company to apply to Parliament for that purpose. It is not for the Court to impose conditions on the company which shall restrict their business within the limits of their statutory powers. Att.-Gen. v. Mersey Railway, 76 L. J. Ch. 568; [1907] A.C. 415; 97 L. T. 524; 71 J. P. 449; 23 T. L. R. 634—H.L. (E.)

Amalgamation of Railway Company and Dock Company—Supply of Water by Railway Company to Dock.]—Where a dock company and a railway company were amalgamated under an Act which incorporated the Railways Clauses Act, 1863, and provided that the two undertakings should form one undertaking and be the undertaking of the railway company, but that no provision of Acts which related exclusively to one of the undertakings should apply to the other undertaking, and the railway company supplied their dock undertaking with water derived from land acquired for their railway undertaking, it was held that the railway company were not carrying on the business of a water company, and that, there being no statutory prohibition, they were not acting ultra vires in supplying the dock with water. Att.-Gen. v. North-Eastern Railway, 76 L. J. Ch. 5; [1906] 2 Ch. 675; 95 L. T. 512; 70 J. P. 473; 22 T. L. R. 695—C.A. Affirming, 54 W. R. 212—Joyce, J.

25. RAILWAY COMMISSIONERS.

Appeal from.]—Where the Railway Commissioners sit in lieu of arbitrators under the provisions of section 8 of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1873, they exercise a jurisdiction not depending on the consent of the parties, and an appeal will lie under section 17 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888, to a superior Court on a question of law. North-Eastern Railway v. North British Railway, 10 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 82—Ct. of Sess.

The Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888, s. 17, enacts that “no appeal shall lie from the Commissioners on a question of fact . . . save as otherwise provided by this Act, an appeal shall lie from the Commissioners to a superior Court of Appeal”—Held, that an appeal is competent against an order of the Commissioners, if it appears from the judgment of the Commissioners (although not in the order itself) that in arriving at the result expressed in the order they had first decided a question of law. Id.

Quare, whether the appeal from the Commissioners to a superior Court of Appeal allowed by section 17 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888, applies to cases arising under the Telegraph Acts. Postmaster-General v. Glasgow Corporation, 10 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 238—Ct. of Sess.

Whether the appeal provided by section 17 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888, applies to cases under the Telegraph Acts, quare. Glasgow Corporation v. Lord Advocate, 2 F. 506—Ct. of Sess.

Improvement of Lands.]—62 & 63 Vict. c. 46 is the Improvement of Land Act, 1899.

Limitation under Statute of Uses—Common-Law Reservation—Eviction from Part of Property by Title Paramount—Apportionment—Value.]—Where property is conveyed by feoffment reserving or limiting a rentcharge under the Statute of Uses, if the feoffee or his successors in title are evicted by title paramount from part of the property, the rentcharge will not remain payable, in full, but will be apportionable. Although, as stated in Co. Lit. p. 148b, in the case of a grant of a rentcharge the rent will continue payable in full, notwithstanding a defect in the grantor's title to part of the land, a further witnessing part in a feoffment by which a rentcharge was reserved, purporting to grant the rent already reserved or limited, will have no such operation. Hartley v. Maddocks, 68 L. J. Ch. 496; [1899] 2 Ch. 199; 80 L. T. 755; 47 W. R. 573—Cozens-Hardy, J.

The apportionment must be made not on the acreage, but on the respective values of the properties at the date of the eviction. Ib.

Term to Secure Amount—Arrears of Rentcharge—Whether Raisable by Sale of Inheritance.]—A legal rentcharge was by deed charged upon and payable out of land, and besides the usual power of distress and entry, a term was limited by the deed to the use of trustees upon the usual trusts if the rentcharge fell into arrear by mortgage or demise for all or part of the term, or by other reasonable means to raise the arrears:—Held (applying Hall v. Hurt, 2 Joh. & Hem. 76), that the limiting of the term negatived the right to have the arrears raised by a sale of the inheritance. Blackburne v. Hope Edwardes, 83 L. T. 370; 48 W. Release of Part of Hereditaments Charged—Concurrence of Owner of the other Part—Extinguishment—Apportionment.]—A wife was entitled to certain real property, out of which her husband was entitled to a rentcharge. Subsequently she made a voluntary settlement of a moiety of this property, and she and her husband concurred to "grant release dispose of and confirm" this moiety, "and all the estate right title interest property claim and demand whatsoever of them," the said husband and wife, "or either of them in to and out of the same premises":—Held, that this concurrence on the part of the husband operated to release the moiety granted from all liability in respect of the rentcharge, but had not the effect of conveying the whole rentcharge, or any part of it, to the grantees of the settlement. Drew v. Norbury (Lord) (9 Ir. Eq. 171) and Johnston v. Webster (24 L. J. Ch. 300; 4 De G. M. & G. 474) distinguished. Price v. John, 74 L. J. Ch. 469; [1905] 1 Ch. 744; 92 L. T. 768; 53 W. Held also, that the unsettled moiety remained liable for the whole of the rentcharge. Ib.

2. CORPORATION DUTY.

Cricket Ground—“Annual value”—Gate-money.—The appellant cricket club, an unincorporated body, were lessees of a cricket ground known as Kennington Oval. Parts of the property comprised in the lease were underlet by the club. The rest of the ground was in their possession, and they had also certain investments in stocks from which they derived income. The only other receipts were the subscriptions and entrance-fees paid by members, and gate-moneys and other payments received from the public for viewing the cricket matches played on the ground:—Held, that for the purposes of assessment to duty under section 11 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1885, the “annual value” of the real property of the club must be ascertained on the basis of assessments to income tax under Schedule A of the Income Tax Act, 1842, subject to deductions for ground-rent and repairs; and that the income of the club derived from stocks must be assessed under Schedule C of that Act. Surrey County Cricket Club, In re, 70 L. J. K.B. 823; [1901] 2 K.B. 400; 85 L. T. 213; 50 W. R. 173; 65 J. P. 488—D.

Exemption—Property Appropriated and Applied for Promotion of Science—Property Applied for Examination Purposes.—To entitle a corporation to exemption from payment of corporation duty under sub-section 3 of section 11 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1885, the property, or the income or profit thereof, sought to be exempted must be legally appropriated and in fact applied for the promotion of science. Royal College of Surgeons, In re, 68 L. J. Q.B. 613; [1899] 1 Q.B. 871; 80 L. T. 611; 47 W. R. 452—C.A.

The holding of examinations and granting of diplomas in surgery are not the “promotion of science” within the meaning of section 11, sub-section 3 of the Act of 1885. Ib.

A corporation whose functions are to promote the science of surgery and who hold examinations for the purpose of granting diplomas is not a body existing solely or mainly for the promotion of science so as to exempt the whole of its property from corporation duty, but only such parts of its property are exempt as are from time to time in fact applied for the promotion of surgery. Ib.

The following property of the Royal College of Surgeons—the museum containing the “Hunterian collection,” the conservator’s house, and the various laboratories used in connection with the science of surgery—is exempt from corporate duty under section 11, sub-section 3, but the library, examination hall, and general offices are not so exempt. Ib.

Watch Cases.—7 Edw. 7 c. 8 is the Assay of Imported Watch Cases (Existing Stocks Exemption) Act, 1907.

Carriage—Constructed or Adapted for Use in Trade or Husbandry.—A vehicle to come within the exemption in section 4, sub-section 3 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888, from the duty imposed upon carriages must be one that has been constructed or adapted for use for the conveyance of goods or burden in the course of trade or husbandry; it is not enough to shew that the vehicle is capable of being so used. Hanworth v. Williams, 67 J. P. 315—D.

Customs Officer—Search of Ship—Obstructing Officer—Right of Magistrate to Judge of Reasonableness of Search.—Where a person is summoned under section 12, sub-section 5 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1881, for obstructing a Customs officer in execution of his duty while on board a ship for the purpose of searching the same, the magistrate has no jurisdiction to enquire into the reasonableness or unreasonableness of the search, or to dismiss the information upon the ground that in his opinion the search was under the circumstances unreasonable, unless he finds that the search was a mere pretence for the purpose of justifying an interference or annoyance by the officer. The duty of deciding what search there shall be is by the Act imposed on the Customs officer, and not on the magistrate. Anderson v. Reid, 86 L. T. 713; 66 J. P. 564—D.

4. DEATH DUTIES.

(a) Probate Duty.

English or Foreign Asset—Foreign Land Devised upon Trust for Sale—Bequest of Share of Proceeds.—A legacy of a share of the proceeds of sale of real estate in Jamaica, payable to the representative of the legatee, who has died before the sale, is an English asset, and the representative is therefore liable to pay probate duty thereon. Sudeley (Baron) v. Att.-Gen. (66 L. J. Q.B. 21; [1897] A.C. 11) followed. Smyth, In re; Leach v. Leach, 67 L. J. Ch. 10; [1898] 1 Ch. 89; 77 L. T. 514; 46 W. R. 104—Romer, J.

Locality of Assets—Testator Resident in England—Business in Colony.—The share of a deceased partner in a business is situate where the business was carried on at the time of his death, and where the partner was resident in England and the business was in New South Wales probate duty is payable in New South Wales upon the value of his share of the business. *Commissioner of Stamp Duties v. Executor de son Tort—English Company—Foreign Shareholder—Death of Foreign Shareholder—Will Proved Abroad—No Probate or Administration in England—Transfer of Shares and Debentures to Foreign Executors—"Taking possession of and administering" Estate.—An English company in transferring shares and debentures of a deceased foreigner to foreign executors who decline to take out probate or administration in this country, takes possession thereby, and administers the estate in this country of such foreigner, and becomes an executor de son tort, and as such chargeable with probate duty and the statutory penalties. New York Breweries Co. v. Att.-Gen., 68 L. J. Q.B. 135; [1899] A.C. 62; 79 L. T. 568; 48 W. R. 32; 63 J. P. 179—H.L. (E.)

(b) Estate Duty.

(i.) Exemptions.

Exemption from Estate Duty—Settled Personal Property on which Probate Duty has been Paid—Investment in Real Property.—By section 21, sub-section 1 of the Finance Act, 1894, "estate duty shall not be payable on the death of a deceased person in respect of personal property settled by a will or disposition made by a person dying before the commencement of this part of this Act, in respect of which property" probate duty (amongst other duties) has been paid, unless the deceased was at the time of his death, or at any time since the will or disposition took effect had been, competent to dispose of the property. A testator by will bequeathed the residue of his personal property to trustees upon trust to invest it in real estate and settle it upon two persons in succession for life, with remainder to a third in tail male. The testator died in 1849, and probate duty was paid in respect of his personalty. The trustees invested the residue of the personalty in real estate, and settled it as directed by the will. In 1900 the second tenant for life, who was not and never had been competent to dispose of the property, died, and the Crown claimed estate duty on his death in respect of the real estate purchased with the residue of the personalty of the testator:—Held, that, notwithstanding that the property had been invested in real estate, the exemption in section 21, sub-section 1, applied, and estate duty was not payable upon it. Att.-Gen. v. Londesborough (Earl), 74 L. J. K.B. 81; [1905] 1 K.B. 98; 92 L. T. 39; 53 W. R. 147; 21 T. L. R. 36—C.A.

(ii.) Property Chargeable.

Value of Estate—Incumbrances "created bona fide"—"Full consideration in money or money's worth"—"Wholly for the deceased's own use and benefit."—By section 7, sub-section 1 of the Finance Act, 1894, "In determining the value of an estate for the purpose of estate duty . . . an allowance shall not be made (a) for debts incurred by the deceased, or incumbrances created by a disposition made by the deceased, unless such debts or incumbrances were incurred or created bona fide for full consideration in money or money's worth wholly for the deceased's own use and benefit and take effect out of his interest"—Held, that where a tenant for life of property in Scotland executed deeds barring the entail, under which he acquired the fee-simple and gave a charge on the property to the nearest heir, the deeds came within the above exemption, there being no secret or covinous arrangement between the parties, notwithstanding that the deeds were made with the object of defeating the claim of the Crown to estate duty upon the death of the tenant for life. Att.-Gen. v. Richmond (Duke) (No. 2), 77 L. J. K.B. 38; [1907] 2 K.B. 923; 23 T. L. R. 739; 97 L. T. 802—Bray, J.

In arriving at a conclusion as to whether such deeds are real deeds intended to have a real operation and creating real incumbrances, motive may be an element for consideration; but once it is found that they are real incumbrances, the motive which actuated the person creating them is immaterial. Ib.

Property Passing on Death.—A testator by his will devised and bequeathed all his real and personal estate to trustees upon trust for sale and collection and investment of the proceeds and for payment out of the income to arise therefrom of an annuity to his wife for life, and, subject to such annuity, to pay the income in equal shares between his eight children, and upon trust, after the decease of his wife as to 9,600*l.*, part of the trust fund, and if the same exceeded 9,600*l.*, then also as to eight-ninths of such excess, for his eight children in equal shares, and as to the remaining ninth part for the children of a deceased son equally:—Held, that the only property which passed under the will upon the death of the testator's widow was the one ninth share of the excess and the benefit which accrued to the children of the testator by the cesser of the annuity to his widow, and that estate duty was only payable upon such property. Townsend, In re, 70 L. J. K.B. 764; [1901] 2 K.B. 331; 84 L. T. 714; 49 W. R. 600; 65 J. P. 344—D.

— Property Deemed to Pass—Consideration in Money or Money's Worth—Mutual Obligations in Marriage Contract.—A father came under obligation in his own marriage contract and by a subsequent deed to provide 12,000*l.* to his younger children, over which he reserved a power of apportionment. There were six younger children. In 1899 he became a party to the ante-nuptial marriage contract of one of his younger children—a daughter—whereby he bound and obliged himself to pay to her an annuity during his life of 300*l.*, and on his death to provide to her trustees the sum of 15,000*l.*; but he reserved power to make payment of the whole or part of the 15,000*l.* during his lifetime, and in the event of 10,000*l.* being so prepaid the annuity was to cease. The daughter on her part discharged all her legal and conventional claims on her father's estate. In 1900 the father made payment to the daughter's trustees of 10,000*l.*, and died within six weeks thereafter. Estate duty and settlement estate duty being claimed on this 10,000*l.*,—Held—first, that the 10,000*l.* was property which must be “deemed” to pass on the father's death in terms of section 2, sub-section 1 (c) of the Finance Act, 1894; secondly, that it was not exempted by section 3 of that Act in whole or in part from the claim for estate duty, as there was no purchase and sale for full consideration in money or money's worth; and thirdly, that estate duty and settlement estate duty were consequently exigible. Per the LORD PRESIDENT: The effect of the amendment of section 38 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1881, by the omission of the word “voluntary” is that the word “gift” can no longer be taken in the strict sense of res donata, but must be held to include res data. Att.-Gen. v. Smyth ([1905] 2 Ir. R. 553) followed. Lord Advocate v. Heywood-Lonsdale, 8 F. 724—Ct. of Sess.

— Cesser of Annuity—Value of Benefit Accruing.—In the case of the cesser of an annuity payable out of heritable property, the value of the benefit accruing within the meaning of section 7 of the Finance Act, 1894, is to be determined by capitalising the amount of the annuity on the basis of the number of years' purchase applicable to the class of property out of which it was paid, and without taking into consideration the amount of the bonds by which the heritable property might be effected. Lord Advocate v. Henderson's Trustees, 7 F. 963—Ct. of Sess.

Property Passing on Death of Heir of Entail —“Competent to dispose”—Estate Duty Paid by Deceased Heir of Entail and not Charged on Entailed Estates.—An heir of entail who had paid estate duty on the death of his predecessor died without having taken any steps to charge the sum so paid on the entailed estate. The Crown having claimed from his executors estate duty on the sum so paid,—Held, first, that as the money was not recoverable by his executors it was not an asset in their hands liable to estate duty; and secondly, that it was not property of which the deceased was at the time of his death competent to dispose. Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Moray (Earl's) Trustees, 6 F. 347—Ct. of Sess.

Property “deemed” to Pass—Fund to be Invested in Entailed Land.—A testator, who died prior to the passing of the Finance Act, 1894, and on whose estate inventory duty was paid, directed his trustees to hold and accumulate the residue of his estate till the death of O. M., when it was to be invested in land which was to be entailed. O. M. died in 1902:—Held, that estate duty and settlement estate duty were payable on the value of the residue of the testator's estate. Lord Advocate v. Stewart, 8 F. 579—Ct. of Sess.

Property of which Deceased was at Time of Death Competent to Dispose.—Where a father devises property to a son who dies before his father, leaving issue any of whom survive the father, the son is by section 33 of the Wills Act, 1837, “at the time of his death competent to dispose” of the property within the meaning of section 2, sub-section 1 of the Finance Act, 1894. Such property is therefore “property which passes on the death” of the son within the meaning of section 1 of that Act, and is therefore liable to estate duty. Scott, In re, 70 L. J. K.B. 66; [1901] 1 K.B. 228; 83 L. T. 613; 49 W. R. 178; 65 J. P. 84—C.A.

Property Passing to Executor “as such.”—A fund appointed by will under a general power passes to the executor “as such” within the meaning of section 9, sub-section (1) of the Finance Act, 1894, and accordingly, in the absence of any direction to the contrary, the estate duty thereon is payable out of the appointor's residuary estate. Treasure, In re; Wild v. Stanham (69 L. J. Ch. 751; [1900] 2 Ch. 648), on this point considered and not followed. Moore, In re; Moore v. Moore, 70 L. J. Ch. 321; [1901] 1 Ch. 691; 49 W. R. 373—Buckley, J.

— Legal and Equitable Assets.—Property appointed under a general power of appointment by will does not pass to the executor "as such" within the Finance Act, 1894, s. 9, sub-s. 1, and consequently estate duty is, in the absence of any direction to the contrary, payable out of the appointed property, and not out of the residuary estate of the appointor. Treasure, In re; Wild v. Stanham (69 L. J. Ch. 751; [1900] 2 Ch. 648), and Maddock, In re; Llewellyn v. Washington (86 L. J. N.C. 307; W. N. (1901) p. 118), followed. Moore, In re; Moore v. Moore (supra), dissented from. Hoskin's Trusts, In re (46 L. J. Ch. 817; 6 Ch. D. 281), discussed. Power, In re; Stone, In re; Acworth v. Stone, 70 L. J. Ch. 778; [1901] 2 Ch. 659; 85 L. Foreign Bonds Payable to Bearer—Bonds Situate in England.—Foreign Government bonds payable to bearer and negotiable in this country are, where actually in England at the death of the deceased, liable to estate duty. Att.-Gen. v. Glendinning (92 L. T. 87) followed. Winans v. Reg., 23 T. L. R. 705—Bray, J.

Covenant by Testator to Pay Sum "without any deduction"—Settlement by Deed in Testator's Lifetime.]—Where a person covenants with trustees to pay to them a sum of money to be held on certain trusts, and then dies, any settlement estate duty payable on his death must, as a general rule, be borne by the settled fund, and not by his general estate. If, however, the covenant is to pay "without any deduction," the effect of those words is to throw the burden of the settlement estate duty on the general estate in exoneration of the settled fund, and the duty must then be borne by the general estate. Webber, In re; Gribble v. Webber (65 L. J. Ch. 544; [1896] 1 Ch. 914) disapproved. Maryon-Wilson, In re; Wilson v. Maryon-Wilson, 69 L. J. Ch. 310; [1900] 1 Ch. 565; 82 L. T. 171; 48 W. R. 338—C.A.

"Testamentary expenses"—Duty for Real Estate.]—The estate duty payable in respect of realty is not a "testamentary expense," and must be borne by the real estate and not by the personalty, notwithstanding that the will contains a bequest of the residue of personal estate "after payment thereof of all my just debts, funeral and testamentary expenses." Sharman, In re; Wright v. Sharman, 70 L. J. Ch. 671; [1901] 2 Ch. 280; 84 L. T. 859; 49 W. R. 555—Kekewich, J.

— Direction to Pay.—Under a direction by a testator to his executors to pay the "testamentary expenses" of his widow out of his residuary estate, which consisted of personalty, the executors are entitled to pay—first, the costs of, and incident to, and in connection with the administration of the estate of the widow, who died intestate; secondly, the costs of a probate action instituted by one of the next-of-kin of the widow, and incurred for the benefit of her estate; and thirdly, the estate duty payable on the death of the widow. Clemow, In re; Yeo v. Clemow, 69 L. J. Ch. 522; [1900] 2 Ch. 182; 82 L. T. 550; 48 W. R. 541—Kekewich, J.

The word "testamentary" is applicable to the administration of an estate, whether there is a testament or not. Id.

Direction to Set Apart a Fund—"To produce a clear yearly sum."—A testator directed his trustees to set apart and invest so much of his estate as would produce a clear yearly sum of 400*l.* and pay the income thereof to his wife during her widowhood:—Held, that the settlement estate duty must be paid out of residue. Dyet, In re; Morgan v. Dyet, 87 L. T. 744—Swinfen Eady, J.

Capital Sums Directed to be Set Aside to Produce Annuities.—A testatrix bequeathed to each of two persons an annuity for life, and directed that there should be set aside in the names of her trustees sufficient capital sums to produce the annuities, and that until such sums were set aside the annuities should be paid out of the income, or in default thereof out of the capital of her residuary estate, and subject as aforesaid she devised and bequeathed her residuary estate to her four sons as tenants in common,—Held, that so much of her residuary estate as was required and set aside to produce the annuities was "settled" property within section 5, sub-section 1 of the Finance Act, 1894, and consequently that settlement estate duty was leviable in respect thereof on the death of the testatrix. Att.-Gen. v. Owen. Att.-Gen. v. Coulson, 68 L. J. Q.B. 779; [1899] 2 Q.B. 253; 81 L. T. 121; 63 J. P. 611—D.

Capital Sums Directed to be Raised on Death of Life Rentrix and Annuitants.—A testator directed his trustees to stand possessed of his residuary estate upon trust to pay the income to his wife for life, and after her death to pay to his four daughters respectively annuities of 300*l.*, 300*l.*, 200*l.*, and 200*l.* for life, and after the death of his wife and the respective deaths of his four daughters to raise out of his residuary estate four several sums of 9,000*l.*, 9,000*l.*, 6,000*l.*, and 6,000*l.*, to be held on certain trusts in favour of the issue of his four daughters respectively; and he declared that on failure of the trusts declared concerning any of the said sums the same should fall into his residuary estate, and that his trustees should stand possessed of his residuary estate in trust for his son absolutely:—Held, that so much of his residuary estate as would be required to provide the said four sums was "settled" property within the above enactment, and consequently that settlement estate duty was leviable in respect thereof on the death of the testator. Id.

Trust for Conversion—Real Estate Abroad—Power to Postpone Sale—"Property situate out of the United Kingdom."—The testator, a domiciled Englishman, was at the date of his death in 1896 entitled to real estate in Assam, where he carried on the business of a tea planter. By his will, after bequeathing certain legacies, he left the residue of his property, including the estate in Assam, to trustees upon trust to sell the same; and he directed his trustees to apply the income of his residuary estate among eight named persons, or the survivor or survivors of them, in equal shares. He did not provide what was to happen to the corpus after the death of the last of the eight named persons. The testator authorised his trustees, until the sale of the estate in Assam, to carry on the business which he had carried on there, and for that purpose to employ and retain therein the capital which at his death should be employed therein, and such additional capital as they should think fit to advance from time to time out of his residuary estate; and he further empowered them to postpone the sale and conversion of any part of his estate for so long as they might think desirable, and in the meantime he declared that the annual produce arising from the unconverted part of his estate should be applied in the same manner as if it were income arising from the proceeds of the conversion of his estate. The will was proved in England, and the trustees, who were all resident in England, postponed the sale of the estate in Assam, and continued to carry on there the testator's business of a tea planter. On the death of two of the beneficiaries the Crown claimed estate duty and succession duty on the interests accruing to the survivors in respect of the estate in Assam or the proceeds thereof:—Held, that the interest in the property in Assam which passed on the death of the two beneficiaries was property not situate out of the United Kingdom within the meaning of section 2, sub-section 2 of the Finance Act, 1894, and therefore was liable both to estate duty and succession duty. Sudeley (Baron) v. Att.-Gen. (65 L. J. Q.B. 281; 66 L. J. Q.B. 21; [1896] 1 Q.B. 354; [1897] A.C. 11) and Smyth, In re; Leach v. Leach (67 L. J. Ch. 10; [1898] 1 Ch. 89), applied. Att.-Gen. v. Johnson, 76 L. J. Direction to Pay Legacies Free from Duty—Incidence—"Express provision to the contrary."

—A direction to pay legacies free from duty is "an express provision to the contrary" within the meaning of section 19, sub-section 1 of the Finance Act, 1896, and throws the burden of the settlement estate duty leviable in respect of a settled legacy upon the deceased's general estate. If the estate is deficient, the settlement estate duty must, like the legacy duty, be also treated as an additional legacy, and be added to the original legacy for the purposes of abatement. Turnbull, In re; Skipper v. Wade, 74 L. J. Ch. 438; [1905] 1 Ch. 726; 53 W. R. 440—Farwell, J.

Legacies Payable on Death of Annuitant—Gift of Residue.

—A testator died in 1869, having devised and bequeathed his residuary real and personal estate to trustees upon trust for conversion, payment of funeral and testamentary expenses, and investment, and out of the income to pay an annuity to his widow. He directed that after the death of his widow (who died in 1900) certain legacies, amounting to 2,000*l.*, should be paid and the residue be divided among certain persons named:—Held, that under the Finance Act, 1894, s. 8, sub-s. 4, the estate duty which became payable on the widow's death in respect of the legacies, so far as they represented real estate, must be borne by the legacies. Berry v. Gaukroger, 72 L. J. Ch. 435; [1903] 2 Ch. 116; 88 L. T. 521; 51 W. R. 449—C.A.

Per VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—Estate duty in a case in which property passes on the death of the deceased, and his executor is not accountable for estate duty, is not analogous to probate duty, but rather to succession duty. Ib.

Per ROMER, L.J.—The word "property" in section 8, sub-section 4, is used in an elastic sense, and each pecuniary legatee could, under section 8, sub-section 4, be made liable by the Crown only for the duty chargeable against his pecuniary legacy; but (semble) not only the trustees, but also the residuary legatees, could, at the instance of the Crown, have been made to pay the whole duty on the fund; but in that case there would have been a right of adjustment as between the pecuniary and residuary legatees; and (semble) the residuary legatees, paying the whole duty, would, under section 9, sub-section 6, be entitled to a charge for the proportion properly payable by the pecuniary legatees. Ib.

Determination of Annuity—Grant of Annuity for Full Consideration in Money or Money's Worth—Exemption from Duty.—The defendant charged his life interest in freehold estates in Dorsetshire, and policies of assurance on his life, with an annuity of 400*l.*, in consideration of the annuitant releasing from a rentcharge of the same annual value freehold estates in Lincolnshire which the defendant had sold subject to, and whose purchaser he was bound to indemnify against, the rent-charge:—Held, that this arrangement amounted only to the substitution of a new security for an existing annuity, and not to the grant of an annuity for full consideration in money or money's worth, paid to the grantor for his own use and benefit within section 3, sub-section 1 of the Finance Act, 1894, and consequently that the defendant was not exempted by that sub-section from payment of estate duty on the death of the annuitant. Att.-Gen. v. Smith-Marriott, 69 L. J. Q.B. 59; [1899] 2 Q.B. 595; 81 L. T. 359; 48 W. R. 12; 64 J. P. 54—D.

Residue Charged with Death Duties Payable on Testator's Death on Property of which he was Tenant for Life—Heirlooms of National Interest Exempted from Duty till Sold or in Possession of Person Competent to Dispose of them—Succession Duty on Proceeds of Sale of Timber Cut by Succeeding Tenant for Life.—By his will, made in 1900, a testator, who died in 1901, directed the general trustees thereof to pay out of the residuary proceeds of his estate—first, so much of the estate duty and other death duties which under or by virtue of the Finance Act, 1894, or any statute amending, extending, or modifying the same, should become payable upon or by reason of his death in respect of all the estates and property of which he should immediately before his death be tenant for life under or by virtue of or by reference to a certain will or re-settlement as the capital moneys and investments subject thereto should be insufficient to pay; and secondly, all such succession duty as should become payable upon his death in respect of the same estates and property. Under the re-settlement the testator was immediately before his death tenant for life of heirlooms of great value, as to which the Treasury had certified, under section 20 of the Finance Act, 1896, that they were of national interest, and which were settled so as to be enjoyed in kind in succession by different persons on the testator's death, and which were therefore exempt from estate duty, under the provisions of the section, till they were sold or in the possession of some person competent to dispose of them. The capital moneys and investments subject to the settlement were insufficient to pay the duties. Some of the timber on the settled estates had been cut by the succeeding tenant for life, who was chargeable under section 23 of the Succession Duty Act, 1853, with succession duty upon his interest in the net proceeds of sale thereof. Upon a summons taken out by the general trustees of the will for the determination of the question whether upon the true construction of the will they were bound to retain in their hands during the lifetime of the present tenant for life or for any other and what period a sufficient part of the residuary estate to meet (a) the estate duty which might become payable on the exempted heirlooms; and (b) the succession duty on the proceeds of sale of the timber:—Held, that they were bound, during the lifetime of the present tenant for life or until further order, to set aside a sufficient sum to pay the estate duty on the heirlooms, but that for the succession duty on the proceeds of sale of the timber they were not bound to make any provision. Leconfield, In re; Wyndham v. Leconfield, 89 L. T. 434—Joyce, J. See s.c. on appeal, col. 2069.

Interest in Expectancy—Option as to Time for Payment of Duty—Payment when Interest Falls into Possession—Increased Value of Interest—Amount upon which Duty Payable.—By section 7, sub-section 6 of the Finance Act, 1894, "Where an estate includes an interest in expectancy, estate duty in respect of that interest shall be paid, at the option of the person accountable for the duty, either with the duty in respect of the rest of the estate or when the interest falls into possession, and if the duty is not paid with the estate duty in respect of the rest of the estate, then—

"(a) for the purpose of determining the rate of estate duty in respect of the rest of the estate the value of the interest shall be its value at the date of the death of the deceased; and

"(b) the rate of estate duty in respect of the interest when it falls into possession shall be calculated according to its value when it falls into possession, together with the value of the rest of the estate as previously ascertained":—Held, that where, in the exercise of the option conferred by the above sub-section, the duty upon a reversionary interest is not paid with the estate duty in respect of the rest of the estate, it must be paid upon the value of such interest at the date when it falls into possession. Eyre (deceased), In re, 76 L. Letters Patent—Grant of Duty on Coal to a Man and Heirs of His Body—Annuity Substituted for Coal Duties—Annuity Redeemed and Estates Purchased—Estates Tail Limited by

Private Act of Parliament—Power of Tenant in Tail to Bar Entail—"Tenementa"—Reversion in Crown.—Certain coal duties, which had been granted by the burgesses of Newcastle-upon-Tyne to Queen Elizabeth and to her successors, and which had afterwards been validated by statute, were granted by Charles 2 by letters patent to his infant son the Duke of Richmond and the heirs of his body, with certain remainders. An Act of 30 Geo. 2, passed to vary these limitations, contained recitals that the coal duties were entailed and a direct enactment that they should be entailed, specifying the descent, and by a saving clause bound the King and all persons claiming through the first duke. In 1799 these coal duties were purchased and an annuity of 19,000*l.* charged upon the Consolidated Funds substituted for them. The Act of 39 Geo. 3, c. 84 contained a recital that the ultimate reversion in the duties was vested in his Majesty, and enacted that the annuity in lieu of the duties should be payable to the Duke of Richmond and the heirs male of his body, and after certain intermediate limitations to the heirs of the body of the first duke, and in default the annuity should revert to his Majesty and his successors, and it was also provided that the persons taking under these limitations should have the same and no larger estate and power of disposition in the annuity as they had in the coal duties. This annuity was afterwards redeemed and converted into Three per Cent. Bank Annuities, and it was provided that the trust funds should always be vested in the First Commissioner of the Treasury and four other trustees. The Act of 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. ciii., gave the trustees power to sell part of the annuity or stock and to lay out the money in the purchase of land, and directed that the land when purchased should be settled, conveyed, and assured to the use of such persons and for such estates as the annuity of 19,000*l.* would have stood limited if it had not been funded or redeemed. The Act also contained provisions in regard to leasing, liability for waste, and cutting timber, which were restrictions upon the usual powers of an ordinary tenant in tail. The Goodwood estates were purchased under the powers contained in this Act, and were conveyed to the predecessors of the present trustees. On the death of the sixth Duke of Richmond in 1903 the Attorney-General claimed that it might be declared that estate duty became payable upon the principal value of the estates to which the sixth duke was entitled as tenant in tail male in possession under the above limitations:—Held, that the coal duties granted by Charles 2 were tenementa within the Statute De Donis, and therefore entailable; and that the statute of 39 Geo. 3, c. 84 only substituted the annuity of 19,000*l.* for the coal duties, the annuity being entailable in the same way as the coal duties; and that the sixth Duke of Richmond was an actual tenant in tail of the Goodwood estates within the meaning of section 15 of the Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833, notwithstanding that the limitations were created by a special Act of Parliament, and therefore, as the case did not fall within any of the exceptions contained in section 18 of the Fines and Recoveries Act, he was entitled to bar the entail, including the reversion of the Crown, and therefore estate duty was payable on the principal value of the estates under section 1 of the Finance Act, 1894. Att.-Gen. v. Richmond (Duke) (No. 1), 76 L.J. K.B. 1049; [1907] 2 K.B. 940; 23 T. L. R. 742; 97 L. T. 791—Bray, J.

Will Charging Residue with Duties Payable on Testator's Death on Property of which he was Tenant for Life—Succession Duty on Proceeds of Sale of Timber Cut by Succeeding Tenant for Life—Heirlooms of National Interest.]—By his will, dated in 1900, a testator, who died in 1901, directed the trustees to pay out of the residuary proceeds of his estate—first, so much of the estate duty and other death duties which under the Finance Act, 1894, or any amending statute, should become payable upon or by reason of his death in respect of all the estates and property of which he should immediately before his death be tenant for life under a certain will or resettlement as the capital moneys and investments subject thereto should be insufficient to pay; and secondly, all such succession duty as should become payable upon his death in respect of the same estates and property:—Held, that, as to the duty in respect of the sale of certain timber, the provision of the will was applicable to duty payable in respect of a succession on the death of the testator, which duty was payable out of his residuary estate. Held, also, that as to certain heirlooms of national interest, the duty did not become payable upon the death of the testator, and would not until the happening of the event mentioned in section 20 of the Finance Act, 1896. Leconfield, In re; Wyndham v. Leconfield, 90 L. T. 399; 20 T. L. R. 347—C.A.

Husband and Wife Entitled to Property—Interest of Survivor—Right to Capital and Income—“Income.”—Where under a disposition which has taken effect before the commencement of the Finance Act, 1894, a husband or wife is entitled to the income of property settled by the other, and on his or her death the survivor becomes entitled to the capital as well as the income of such settled property, estate duty is payable in respect of the property passing on the death, and the case does not come within the exception in section 21, sub-section 5 of the Finance Act, 1894. The sub-section only applies to a case where the survivor becomes entitled to the income as distinguished from the capital of the settled property. Att.-Gen. v. Strange, 67 L. J. Q.B. 629; [1898] 2 Q.B. 39; 78 L. T. 516; 46 W. R. 663—C.A.

—Trust Fund Consisting of Husband's Property and Wife's Property—Annuity to Wife during Joint Lives—Income to Husband subject to Annuity—Income to Wife after Death of Husband—Trusts for Children—Contingent Interests—Property Passing on Death of Husband—Exemption from Duty—Corpus of Wife's Property Producing Annuity—Residue of Wife's Property—“Disposition of property”—“Interest created by disposition”—“Interest determining by reason of death”—“Subsequent limitation subsisting.”—Certain hereditaments described as “the husband's fortune” and other hereditaments, sums of money, and securities, described as “the wife's fortune,” were settled upon trustees in trust to sell and to invest the sale moneys, and out of the income arising therefrom to pay during the joint lives of the husband and wife an annuity of 400*l.* to the wife for her separate use without power of anticipation, and subject thereto to pay the residue of the income, and after the decease of the wife to pay the whole thereof, to the husband during his life, and after his decease then to pay the whole income to the wife during her life; and after the decease of the survivor to stand possessed of the trust property upon trust for such of the children and issue of the marriage as the husband and wife should by deed jointly or the survivor should by deed or will appoint, and in default of appointment upon trust for the children of the marriage who should attain the age of twenty-one years or being daughters should marry before that age, in equal shares as tenants in common; and failing issue that the trustees should, after the death of the husband and wife, stand possessed of the husband's fortune in trust for his executors &c., and of the wife's fortune upon trust, if she should survive her husband, for her executors &c. There was no issue of the marriage. The wife survived her husband:—Held, that as to so much of the wife's fortune as was properly applicable to the annuity of 400*l.* estate duty was not payable on the death of the husband, as his interest therein failed or determined by reason of his death before it became an interest in possession, and a subsequent limitation—namely, that to the wife, her executors &c.—continued to subsist, and therefore by section 5, sub-section 3 of the Finance Act, 1894, the property was not deemed to pass on his death; but held, that as to the residue of the wife's fortune estate duty was payable, notwithstanding section 15, sub-section 1 of the Finance Act, 1896, for that, assuming that there was a disposition of this property within the meaning of that enactment, another interest—namely, the contingent interest of the children of the marriage—was created by the said disposition. Att.-Gen. v. Wood (66 L. J. Q.B. 522; [1897] 2 Q.B. 102) considered. Att.-Gen. v. Glossop, 76 L. J. K.B. 199; [1907] 1 K.B. 163; 95 L. T. 823; 23 T. L. R. 103—C.A.

—Marriage Contract—Wife's After-acquired Property—Legacy to Wife.]—By post-nuptial marriage contract a wife assigned to trustees her whole estate then belonging to her or to which she might acquire right during the marriage, to be held by them for behoof of herself in life-tenant, and of the children of the marriage in fee. Thereafter her brother A, by will, left her a share of his property absolutely, which passed on his death under the after-acquired property clause in the marriage contract to the trustees of that contract. Estate duty was paid on the whole of his estate, including the legacy to his sister. On the wife's death the Crown claimed estate duty upon her estate. The marriage contract trustees claimed exemption under section 5 (2) of the Finance Act, 1894, as regards A's legacy, on the ground that it was property settled by the marriage contract on which estate duty had been paid subsequent to the date of the settlement:—Held, that the estate duty paid by A's estate was duty on an estate which vested in the legatees absolutely as unsettled estate, that no duty had been paid in respect of the wife's legacy as settled property, and that the Crown was entitled to the estate duty sued for. Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Harvey's Trustees, 4 F. 43—Ct. of Sess.

— Jointure—“Free from all taxes and deductions except property tax and legacy or succession duty.”—A testator, who died in October, 1857, by his will, dated in September, 1856, empowered any tenant for life to charge on the estates thereby settled a jointure, not exceeding 3,000*l.* a year, for his widow “free from all taxes and deductions except property tax and legacy or succession duty”:—Held, that this was an “express provision to the contrary” within the meaning of section 14, sub-section 1 of the Finance Act, 1894, the testator’s intention clearly being that the jointure should be paid to the widow of the tenant for life free from all taxes and deductions except those specified by him. Fitzhardinge (Lord), In re; Fitzhardinge (Lord) v. Jenkinson, 80 L. T. 376—C.A.

Mortgage of Expectancy—Duty Greater than Value of Equity of Redemption.—The person entitled in expectancy to certain property mortgaged his reversion, and when that fell into possession he sought, for the purpose of assessing the value of the property passing to him, to deduct the amount of mortgages under section 21, sub-section 3 of the Finance Act, 1894:—Held, that he was not entitled to make such deduction, even although the estate duty payable exceeded the value of the equity of redemption. Vernon, In re, 83 L. T. 535; 64 J. P. 804—D.

Lunatic—Committee—Estate Duty on Real Estate Paid out of Personal Estate—Charge on Real Estate—Surplus Rents—Discharge of Incumbrance—Next-of-Kin—Heir-at-Law—Incidence of Duty.—The committee of a lunatic absolutely entitled to residuary real and personal estate, paid the estate duty on the real estate out of the personal estate, the committee himself being the executor and devisee in trust of the real estate under the will. The surplus rents of the real estate, after providing rateably for the lunatic’s maintenance, would have been sufficient, if so applied during the lunatic’s life, to keep down the interest on and pay off the capital amount of the estate duty paid in respect of the real estate. On a petition by the lunatic’s next-of-kin for a declaration that they were entitled to a charge on his real estate in respect of the estate duty in question, the Court, assuming but without deciding, that the estate duty so paid became a charge on the real estate under section 9, sub-section 1 of the Finance Act, 1894,—Held, that the surplus rents of real estate ought to be treated as having been applied in discharging the incumbrance—in the first place by keeping down the interest, and then by paying off out of the accumulations the charge itself. LORD ST. LEONARDS’ decision in Leitrim (Lord) v. Enery (6 Ir. Eq. 357) adopted and followed. Hole, In re; Davies v. Witts, 74 L. J. Ch. 689; [1905] 2 Ch. 384; 93 L. T. 153; 54 W. R. 73—Farwell, J.

Policy of Life Insurance—Insurable Interest—Payment of Policy-money under Void Policy—Settlement—“Property”—“Interest provided by deceased in concert or by arrangement” with Another—Property Passing on Death.—A father effected with an insurance company a policy of insurance on the life of his son, and paid all the premiums due in respect of it. By a deed of settlement made in contemplation of the son’s marriage, the father, with the approbation of the son, assigned the policy to trustees upon trust to invest the policy-money when paid, and to pay the income thereof after the death of the son to the son’s intended wife for her life, and after her death as therein directed. It did not appear that the father had any insurable interest in the son’s life. On the death of the son, who survived his father, the insurance company paid the policy-money to the trustees, who invested it, and applied the income as directed by the settlement:—Held, that, even assuming that the policy as between the father and the insurance company was void for want of insurable interest under the Life Assurance Act, 1774, yet the policy-money, having in fact been paid to the trustees by the insurance company, was held by them on the trusts of the settlement, inasmuch as such payment must be treated as made in respect of the policy, and all the same consequences must follow as if the Act of 1774 had not been passed. Held, also, that a policy is plainly “property” within section 2 of the Finance Act, 1894, so as to be an “interest” within the meaning of sub-section 1 (d) of that section. Held, also, that, apart from the Life Assurance Act, 1774, this particular policy was the property of the father alone, inasmuch as it was “provided” not by the son, but by the father, and consequently the policy-money was not brought within section 2, sub-section 1 (d) of the Finance Act, 1894, as being an interest purchased or provided by the son in concert or by arrangement with the father, so as to be liable to estate duty under section 1 of the Act on the death of the son. Att.-Gen. v. Murray, 73 L. J. K.B. 66; [1904] 1 K.B. 165; 89 L. T. 710; 52 W. R. 258; 68 J. P. 89; 20 T. L. R. 137—C.A.

— “Interest purchased or provided by deceased.”—In 1885 an equitable tenant for life concurred with his son, the equitable tenant in tail, in disentailing the estates. As part of a family arrangement the father and son joined in mortgaging the estates. Shortly afterwards the estates were re-settled upon trusts for management, payment of annuities and other charges, and of the premiums on fifteen policies on the life of the father. The indenture provided also that an annuity should be paid to the son and that the premiums should still be paid to the son even if he should have surrendered any of the policies to the offices whence they were issued. The ultimate trusts were for the father for life with remainder to the son in fee-simple. On the same date the policies were assigned absolutely to the son. In 1898 the father, for valuable consideration, assigned his life interest to the son, the assignment being subject to the trusts for keeping the policies on foot so far as was necessary for the protection of the mortgagees. The son continued to pay the premiums which became due until his father’s death in November, 1902. In January, 1902, the son paid off the mortgage debts. The son, in concurring with his father in the mortgage, sustained considerable loss. The Crown claimed estate duty on the proceeds of the policies:—Held, that no duty was payable, as the policies were not an "interest purchased or provided for by the deceased by himself alone or in concert or by arrangement with any other person," under the Finance Act, 1894, s. 2, sub-s. 1 (d). Lethbridge v. Att.-Gen., 76 L. J. K.B. 84; [1907] A.C. 19; 95 L. T. 842; 23 T. L. R. 123—H.L. (E.)

Policy of Insurance in Favour of Wife of Deceased—Policy-moneys Received by Trustees.]

—A policy of insurance was effected by the deceased upon his own life in favour of his intended wife. By a post-nuptial settlement the policy was assigned to trustees, and it was declared that the moneys to be received under it should be held by the trustees upon trust for the wife of the deceased for life, and afterwards upon certain other trusts. The husband covenanted that he would keep up the policy and pay the premiums during his life, and he in fact did so. The trustees having received the policy-moneys on the death of the husband,—Held, that the estate duty was payable in respect of such moneys as being "property passing on the death of deceased" within the meaning of section 2, sub-section 1 (d) of the Finance Act, 1894. Att.-Gen. v. Dobree, 69 L. J. Q.B. 223; [1900] 1 Q.B. 442; 81 L. T. 607; 48 W. R. 413; 64 J. P. 24—D.

Policies of Insurance—No Part of Premiums Paid by Deceased—Property Passing at Death.]

—R., upon the occasion of his marriage in 1843, assigned four policies of insurance, and his wife assigned a sum of 3,500*l.* to trustees. Under the provisions of the settlement the policies were kept up, and the annual premiums paid exclusively out of the income of the moneys of the wife, until the death of R. in 1898, when the money secured by the policies became payable:—Held, that the moneys payable under the policies were liable to estate duty under section 2, sub-section (d) of the Finance Act, as being an "interest purchased or provided by the deceased, either by himself alone, or in concert or by arrangement with any other person, to the extent of the beneficial interest accruing or arising by survivorship or otherwise on the death of the deceased," and therefore property "deemed to pass" within the meaning of the section. Att.-Gen. v. Robinson, [1901] 2 Ir. R. 67—Q.B. D.

Settlement of Policy-moneys — Residue.]—Section 14 of the Finance Act, 1894, is not intended to provide for the incidence of estate duty. Wade v. Wade, 67 L. J. Ch. 527; [1898] 2 Ch. 276; 78 L. T. 808; 47 W. R. 43—Keke-wich, J.

Where, therefore, a settlor has assigned to the trustees of his marriage settlement a policy upon his life for 5,000*l.* upon trust, at his death, to raise 4,000*l.* out of the policy-moneys and hold the same upon certain trusts, and has then disposed of the residue to others, upon the death of the settlor the trustees must pay the estate duty in a lump sum out of the whole fund before setting apart the 4,000*l.* and handing over the residue to those entitled. Id.

Agricultural Property — Principal Value — Land in the Occupation of Tenant.]—In estimating, for the purpose of estate duty, the principal value of agricultural land in the occupation of a tenant, where no part of such principal value is due to the expectation of an increased income, the proviso to section 7, sub-section 5 of the Finance Act, 1894, applies, and the tenant is entitled to have the principal value limited, as therein provided, to "25 times the annual value, as assessed under schedule A of the Income Tax Acts, after making such deductions as have not been allowed under that assessment, and are allowed under the Succession Duty Act, 1853, and making a deduction for expenses of management, not exceeding 5 per cent. of the annual value so assessed." Att.-Gen. v. Robinson, [1901] 2 Ir. R. 67—Q.B. D.

Colonial Bond to Bearer containing Charge on Property in Colony—Bond Situate in England.]

—A colonial bond to bearer, even though containing a charge on property in such colony, if negotiable by the law of such colony, is also negotiable in the country where such bond is physically situated. Therefore, as the bailee of such bond must get a good discharge before he can deliver it up, where such bonds are actually in England at the death of the deceased estate duty is payable in respect of such bonds. Att.-Gen. v. Glendinning, 92 L. T. 87—Phillimore, J.

Shares—Restriction in Transfer—Principle of Valuation.]

—By the articles of association of a company it was provided that any member proposing to transfer a share should serve a notice upon the company of his intention, which notice constituted the company his agent for the sale of the share to any member at the "fair value thereof," the latter being defined as a sum of 100*l.*, or such other sum as should from time to time be fixed as the "fair value" by resolution of the company in general meeting. No share could, save as therein provided, be transferred to a non-member so long as any member was willing to purchase the same at the "fair value." Upon the company within twenty-eight days of the transfer notice finding a member willing to purchase, the retiring member was bound to transfer the share at the "fair value," and in default of doing so the company might receive the purchase-money and enter the name of the purchasing member in the register as the holder of the share. In the event of the company not finding a purchaser within twenty-eight days, the retiring member might within three months sell and transfer the share to any one, subject to the approval of the directors, and at any price. Upon the death of a testator holding shares in the company,—Held, that the principal value of the shares was to be estimated at the price which the same would, in the opinion of the Commissioners, fetch if sold in open market at the time of the testator's death, and that such principal value was not necessarily limited to the par or "fair value" of 100*l.* a share. Held, also, per BOYD, J., and KENNY, J. (PALLIS, C.B., dissenting), that in estimating the principal value, regard should be had to the special provisions in the articles of association with reference to alienation and transfer of shares, and to the "fair value" thereof. Att.-Gen. v. Jameson, [1904] 2 Ir. R. 644—K.B. D.

Sum Transferred by Father to Son as Condition of Settlement by Third Party on Son's Marriage—Death of Father within Twelve Months—"Gift."—In contemplation of the defendant's marriage, the father of his intended wife agreed to settle 20,000*l.* on the usual trusts of a wife's property, on condition that the defendant's father paid the defendant 10,000*l.* The defendant's father accordingly transferred 10,000*l.* to the defendant, and subsequently the settlement was made and the marriage took place. The defendant's father died within twelve months after making the transfer:—Held, that the transfer operated as a "gift" within the meaning of the provisions incorporated in section 2, sub-section 1 (c) of the Finance Act, 1894; and as it had not been made twelve months before the death of the deceased, pursuant to these provisions, estate duty under the Act became payable by virtue of that clause thereof upon the 10,000*l.* as property passing on the death of the defendant's father. Att.-Gen. v. Holden, 72 L. J. K.B. 420; [1908] 1 K.B. 882; 83 L. T. 729; 51 W. R. 685; 67 J. P. 135—Ridley, J.

Gift Inter Vivos—Death of Donor within Twelve Months—Release of Donor from Prior Covenant for Payment of Gift after Death—Liability of Gift to Estate Duty.—In 1892 a person covenanted with trustees that within three months after her death her executors should pay the sum of 5,000*l.*, free of all duties and deductions, to the trustees upon trust for a certain charity. Some eight years afterwards, the donor, with the object of giving the sum in her lifetime, executed another deed by which she covenanted to pay the 5,000*l.* at once, and by this deed she, her executors and estate, were relieved from payment of the 5,000*l.* under the former deed. The 5,000*l.* was paid over, and the owner died within twelve months from the execution of the deed and the payment. Upon her death the Crown claimed estate duty upon this sum of 5,000*l.*:—Held, that the payment of the 5,000*l.* was "an immediate gift inter vivos," within the meaning of section 38, sub-section 2 (a) of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1881; that it was none the less a gift because there was a release of the donor and her estate from the obligation under the prior deed, and that, as the donor died within twelve months from the making of the gift, estate duty was payable under section 2, sub-section 1 (c) of the Finance Act, 1894. Att.-Gen. v. Cobham (Viscount), 90 L. T. 816; 20 T. L. R. 337—Channell, J.

— Transfer of Possession.—A lady some years before her death granted a deed of gift of her whole movable estate in favour of her daughter and her daughter's husband. After her death it appeared that certain funds in the hands of a body of trustees having fallen to her under the Thellusson Act had really been in bonis of her estate during her lifetime, though that fact was unknown to her and also to the trustees. No formal intimation of the deed of gift had been made to the trustees, but the daughter's husband, who knew of the deed, and was a beneficiary under it, was one of the trustees, and the solicitors who prepared the deed were also the solicitors to the trust:—Held, that there was no such assumption of possession of these trust funds by the donees as to satisfy the provisions of section 2, subsection 1 (c) of the Finance Act, 1894, and that consequently estate duty was exigible on the value of the trust funds. Lord Advocate v. Heywood-Lonsdale, 8 F. 724—Ct. of Sess.

— Interest Retained by Settlor.—By a settlement dated September 4, 1902, C. conveyed to trustees a sum of 15,000*l.* invested on mortgage, upon trust to pay out of the income a sum of 575*l.* to his daughter Mrs. D. for life, and after her death, as to the said sum of 15,000*l.*, in trust for such child or children as Mrs. D. should appoint, and in default of appointment for the children equally who being sons should attain twenty-one, or being daughters should attain twenty-one or marry. There was a power to Mrs. D. to appoint to her husband an annuity of 300*l.* a year for his life in the event of his surviving his wife. If there should be no child who being a son should attain twenty-one, or a daughter attain that age or marry, the trustees were to hold the trust funds after the death of Mrs. D. (but subject to the annuity to the husband) in trust for C. absolutely. The trustees, during the life of Mrs. D., were to hold the balance of the income produced by the 15,000*l.* after payment of the annuity of 575*l.* to Mrs. D. (or the annuity to the husband) upon trust for C. absolutely. The mortgage on which the 15,000*l.* was invested produced 675*l.* per annum. C. died on September 11, 1904:—Held, that neither the trust for C. of the surplus income, after payment to Mrs. D. of the annuity of 575*l.*, nor the ultimate contingent trust for C. of the corpus of the fund, rendered the gift one "of which bona fide possession and enjoyment shall not have been assumed by the donee immediately upon the gift, and thenceforward retained to the entire exclusion of the donor, or of any benefit to him by contract or otherwise," within the meaning of clause (a) of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1881, s. 38, sub-s. 2, as amended by section 11 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1889, and the Finance Act, 1894, s. 2, clause (c), and that neither estate duty nor settlement estate duty was payable by the executors of C. in respect of such part of the 15,000*l.* as was settled on Mrs. D., her husband, and issue. Cochrane, In re, [1906] 2 Ir. R. 200—C.A.

Gift by Will within Twelve Months of Death—Ademption of Legacy—Account.—When there has been partial ademption of a legacy to a child of the testator by a gift to the legatee within a year of the testator's death, the amount to be brought into account by the legatee is the value of the property given at the date of the gift, less the estate duty which became a charge upon the property under section 9, sub-section 1 of the Finance Act, 1894. Beddington, In re; Micholls v. Samuel, 69 L. J. Ch. 374; [1900] 1 Ch. 771; 82 L. T. 557; 48 W. R. 552—Byrne, J.

Settled Property—Mortgage by Tenant for Life and Remaindermen—Mortgage for Benefit of Remaindermen—Indemnity of Life Tenant from another Source—Deduction of Mortgage Debt in Estimating Value.—Where the tenant for life and remaindermen of a settled estate join in mortgaging the fee for the exclusive benefit of the remaindermen, who out of another estate belonging to them create a rentcharge in favour of the tenant for life by way of indemnity against the mortgage debt and interest, and the tenant for life is in fact thereby kept indemnified, the whole property, without deduction of the mortgage debt, passes, or is deemed to pass, to the remaindermen, and duty is chargeable thereon accordingly. Att.-Gen. v. Montagu (Lord), 73 L. J. K.B. 707; [1904] A.C. 316; 90 L. T. 726; 53 W. R. 115; 20 T. L. R. 523—H.L. (E.)

— Husband's Life Interest.—By a marriage settlement a life interest in the settled funds was given to the husband, then a life interest to the wife, and after the death of the survivor the trustees were to hold the trust property and the income thereof, in the event, which happened, of there not being a child of the marriage who should attain the age of twenty-one years or be married, for such person or persons as the wife, notwithstanding coverture, might by deed or will appoint. The wife died a month before her husband, having by will exercised her power of appointment over the settled property. On the wife's death estate duty was paid on the principal value of the settled property after deduction of the estimated value of the husband's life interest. On the husband's death further duty was claimed on the full value of the property. The trustees of the settlement claimed return of this duty subject to deduction of duty on the value of the husband's life interest:—Held, that the trustees were entitled to the return of the duty which they claimed, as the duty had already been paid on the death of "a person competent to dispose of" the property under the Finance Act, 1894, s. 5, sub-s. 2. Held, further, that no duty was payable in respect of the husband's life interest, as full duty, in accordance with section 2, sub-section 1 (a), was on the wife's death paid on the then value of "property of which" she "was at the time of" her "death competent to dispose." Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Priestley, 70 L. J. P.C. 41; [1901] A.C. 208; 84 L. T. 700; 49 W. R. 657—H.L. (Ir.)

Dicta of RIGBY, L.J., in Att.-Gen. v. Dodington (66 L. J. Q.B. 684; [1897] 2 Q.B. 373) and of FALLES, C.B., in the Queen's Bench Division ([1900] 2 Ir. R. 281), and HOLMES, L.J., in the Court of Appeal below, approved. Ib.

— Wife's Reversionary Interest.—By a marriage settlement dated October 7, 1861, certain trust funds were settled upon trust for A, the husband, for life, with remainder to B, the wife, for life, and after the death of the survivor, then in the event, which happened, of there being no children of the marriage, upon trust as to the capital of the funds for such person or persons as the wife should appoint. The wife died on March 14, 1897, and on her death estate duty was claimed and paid on the value of her reversionary interest in the capital of the trust funds. The husband died on April 14, 1897, and duty was thereupon claimed on the entire funds comprised in the settlement:—Held, that the duty paid on the death of the wife was in respect of "settled property" within the meaning of section 5, sub-section 2 of the Finance Act, 1894, and that credit for it should be given as regards the duty which would otherwise have been payable on the death of the husband. Studdert, In re, [1900] 2 Ir. R. 400—C.A.

— Reservations in Favour of Grantor—Conditional Power of Revocation.—Where a conveyance of real estate contains a reservation to the grantor of an annual rentcharge out of the property, and provides that his debts to the time of his death shall be paid by the grantee, and contains also a power of revocation in certain events, estate duty is payable under the Finance Act, 1894, ss. 1 and 2, sub-s. 1 (c), upon the death of the grantor, upon the principal value of the whole property as being property passing on death. Grey (Earl) v. Att.-Gen., 69 L. J. Q.B. 308; [1900] A.C. 124; 82 L. T. 62; 48 W. R. 383—H.L. (E.)

Property Settled on Husband and Wife for Life—Annuity Settled on Wife Derived Partly from Husband's Fortune and Partly from Wife's Fortune—Property Passing on Death of Husband—Whether Estate Duty Payable at Husband's Death on Corpus Producing Annuity.—Certain property described as "the husband's fortune" and other property described as "the wife's fortune" were settled upon trustees on trust to sell and invest the sale moneys, and pay out of the income during the joint lives of the husband and wife an annuity of 400*l.* to the wife, and the residue of the income during the life of the wife to the husband; and after the death of the wife, if the husband survived, to pay the whole income to the husband for life; and after the death of the husband, if the wife survived, to pay the whole income to the wife for life; and after the death of the survivor upon certain trusts for children, and, failing children, that the trustees should, after the death of the husband and wife, stand possessed of the husband's fortune in trust for his executors &c., and of the wife's fortune upon trust, if she should survive her husband, for her executors &c. There was no issue of the marriage. The wife survived her husband. Estate duty under the Finance Act, 1894, was paid, on the death of the husband, on the property described as the husband's fortune, but not on the wife's fortune. An information having been filed by the Attorney-General praying that it might be declared that upon the death of the husband estate duty became payable upon the principal value to be ascertained of all the property settled by the wife and described in the deed of settlement as the wife's fortune,—Held, (following Att.-Gen. v. Penrhyn, 83 L. T. 103), that section 15, sub-section 1 of the Finance Act, 1896, afforded no defence to the claim of the Crown; that upon the death of her husband the wife became entitled not merely to the income, but also to the corpus of the settled property, and that therefore (following Att.-Gen. v. Strange, 67 L. J. Q.B. 629; [1898] 2 Q.B. 39) the case was not within section 21, sub-section 5 of the Finance Act, 1894, and that estate duty was payable on part of the wife's fortune. But held, that for the purposes of estate duty the husband's fortune might be separated from the wife's fortune; that so much of the wife's fortune as formed part of the capital which produced the income of 400*l.* a year did not pass on the husband's death; and that, having regard to section 5, sub-section 3 of the Finance Act, 1894, estate duty was not payable on that part for the ascertainment of which there must be an apportionment. Cowley (Earl) v. Inland Revenue Commissioners (68 L. J. Q.B. 435; [1899] A.C. 198) is no authority upon the construction of section 5, sub-section 3 of the Finance Act, 1894. Att.-Gen. v. Glossop, 75 L. J. K.B. 151; [1906] 1 K.B. 284; 94 L. T. 27; 54 W. R. 976; 22 T. L. R. 204—Walton, J. Affirmed, 23 T. L. R. 103—C.A.

— Death of Settlor within Twelve Months from Execution of Settlement.—Estate duty is payable upon the death of a settlor in respect of property included in an ante-nuptial settlement executed by him, within twelve months before his death, on the marriage of his son, for which settlement there was no consideration in money or money's worth, although no estate for his life, or for any period determinable by reference to his death, is reserved to the settlor by the settlement. Att.-Gen. v. Smyth, [1905] 2 Ir. R. 553—K.B. D.

— Interest in Possession—Conveyancing Form.—Where, under a settlement, H. took a vested legal estate as tenant in common in fee, with a limitation over on his dying under twenty-one, subject to a proviso that during his minority trustees were to enter into receipt of the rents, providing thereout for his maintenance, &c., and to accumulate the surplus upon trust, if he should attain age, for him; but, if he should die under age, for the persons who should ultimately become indefeasibly entitled, and H. dying under age, the defendants became indefeasibly entitled as tenants in common in fee of all the lands in the settlement including H.'s shares,—Held, that estate duty was not payable as on a property passing on H.'s death; that H.'s interest had not become a beneficial interest in possession in the lands at his death, and that, accordingly, section 5, sub-section 3 of the Finance Act, 1894, was applicable. Held also, that the real nature of the transaction must be considered, and not only the conveyancing form. Att.-Gen. v. Power, [1906] 2 Ir. R. 272—K.B. D.

Semble, that estate duty might be payable on the actual sums received by H. for maintenance upon the analogy of the provision with regard to legacy duty. Id.

— Surrender of Life Interest to Remainderman—Death of Tenant for Life Within Twelve Months.—Where a tenant for life of settled property, having released the life interest in favour of the remainderman, dies within twelve months from the date of the deed of release, estate duty does not become payable by the remainderman under section 2, sub-section 1 (c) of the Finance Act, 1894, in respect of the property as being property passing on the death of the tenant for life. Att.-Gen. v. De Preville, 69 L. J. Q.B. 288; [1900] 1 Q.B. 225; 81 L. T. 690; 48 W. R. 193—C.A.

— Death of Tenant for Life—Surrender by Tenant for Life of Life Interest to Remainderman more than Twelve Months before Death.—Estate duty is not payable under the Finance Act, 1894, upon the death of the tenant for life of settled property, where the tenant for life has, more than twelve months before the death, surrendered his life interest in the property to the remainderman so as to merge the life estate in the estate in remainder. Att.-Gen. v. Beech, 67 L. J. Q.B. 595; [1893] 2 Q.B. 147; 78 L. T. 584; 46 W. R. 435; 62 J. P. 371—C.A. Affirmed in H.L., December 6, 1898.

— Life Interest—No other Interest Created—Exemption.—By a settlement made on the marriage of C. J. V. and C. M. V., then C. M. S., certain property was assigned by C. M. V. to trustees, out of which they were to pay her 100l. a year and the residue to C. J. V. during his life, and after the decease of either, the whole income was to be paid to the survivor for life, and then to such children of the marriage as they should appoint, or, in default, to such as should attain twenty-one years, or, being daughters, marry. If there were no children who attained a vested interest, then it was to be held for C. M. V., her executors, &c. C. J. V. died during the lifetime of C. M. V., and there was no issue of the marriage:—Held, that the property that reverted to C. M. V. under the settlement by reason of the death of C. J. V. was not exempt from duty under section 15, sub-section 1 of the Finance Act, 1896. Att.-Gen. v. Penrhyn, 83 L. T. 103; 64 J. P. 552—D.

— Jointure—Estate Duty—Succession Duty.—By a private Act of Parliament passed in 1535 certain estates were settled upon two persons as tenants in tail, with a proviso that they should not alien, bargain, give, or sell the same, nor do anything to the hurt or disinheritation of their heirs, but only for the jointure of a wife. A tenant in tail of the estates, who died in 1902, by a codicil to his will appointed a life interest in his share of the estates to his widow by way of jointure:—Held, that the power of sale and exchange conferred by the Settled Land Acts did not make the tenant in tail capable of alienating the land in the sense in which that term was used in section 5, sub-section 5 of the Finance Act, 1894, and that consequently estate duty was payable out of the property or interest of the successor passing upon the death of the person in possession of the estate, such interest being valued as provided by that statute. Held, further, that no succession duty was payable by a widow in respect of a jointure appointed or granted to her by her husband as predecessor. Bolton Settled Estates, In re, 73 L. J. Ch. 688; [1904] 2 Ch. 289; 91 L. T. 259—Joyce, J.

— Scottish Entail—Limited Owner—Payment of Instalments of Duty by Heir of Entail—Charge upon the Estate.—The meaning of section 9, sub-section 6 of the Finance Act, 1894, by which a person having a limited interest in property who pays estate duty in respect thereof, "shall be entitled to the like charge as if the Estate Duty in respect of that property had been raised by means of a mortgage to him," is that he is in right of that charge, and not merely that he is in a position to do something which will create a charge. Thus, where an heir of entail in Scotland pays estate duty the money so paid becomes an asset of his estate, and on his death estate duty is chargeable thereon. Lord Advocate v. Moray (Countess), 74 L. J. P.C. 122; [1905] A.C. 531; 93 L. T. 569; 21 T. L. R. 715—H.L. (Sc.)

— Money Settled by Will—"Express provision to the contrary"—"Duties payable out of my estate."—Where a specified fund is settled by a will dated after the Finance Act, 1896, which directs that funeral and testamentary expenses, "including all duties payable out of my estate," shall be paid out of residue, those words do not amount to an "express provision to the contrary" within the meaning of the Finance Act, 1896, s. 19; and the settlement estate duty must be paid out of the settled fund. Lewis, In re; Lewis v. Smith, 69 L. J. Ch. 406; [1900] 2 Ch. 176; 82 L. T. 291; 48 W. R. 426—Kekewich, J.

— Property "passing" on Death—Surrender by Tenant for Life of Life Interest to Remainderman more than Twelve Months before Death.—Estate duty is not payable under the Finance Act, 1894, upon the death of the tenant for life of settled property, where the tenant for life has, more than twelve months before his death, surrendered his life interest in the property to the remainderman so as to merge the life estate in the estate in remainder. Att.-Gen. v. Beech, 68 L. J. Q.B. 130; [1899] A.C. 53; 79 L. T. 565; 47 W. R. 257; 63 J. P. 116—H.L. (E.)

— Reservation in Favour of Grantor—Conditional Power of Revocation.—Where a conveyance of real estate contains a reservation to the grantor of an annual rentcharge out of the property, and also a power of revocation in certain events, estate duty is payable under the provisions of section 1 and section 2, sub-section 1 (c) of the Finance Act, 1894, upon the death of the grantor, upon the principal value of the whole property as being property passing on his death. Att.-Gen. v. Grey (Earl), 67 L. J. Q.B. 947; [1898] 2 Q.B. 534; 79 L. T. 235; 47 W. R. 37—C.A.

Principal and Derivative Settlements—Death of Person "during the continuance of the settlement competent to dispose of" Property.—By indentures of 1855 and 1856, funds were settled upon trust for a lady for life, and after her death for her children in equal shares. By an indenture of 1888, one of her children, on his marriage, settled his share, reserving to himself only a life interest therein. On the death of the lady in 1894, estate duty under the Finance Act, 1894, was paid in respect of the funds. On the death of her son in 1897, Held, that estate duty was payable in respect of the share of the funds comprised in the indenture of 1888, he having been, within the meaning of section 5, sub-section 2 of the Act, "during the continuance of the settlement competent to dispose of such property." Att.-Gen. v. Hay, 68 L. J. Q.B. 557; [1899] 2 Q.B. 245; 80 L. T. 712—D.

Family Arrangement—Disentail—Mortgage of Fee for Benefit of Tenant for Life—Policies on Life of Tenant for Life brought into Settlement—Death of Tenant for Life—Liability of Policy-moneys to Duty.—A father and son were tenant for life and tenant in tail respectively of real and personal estate. Pursuant to a family arrangement between them they disentailed the estate, granting it to trustees to hold to such uses as they should jointly appoint, and subject to any appointment to the use of the father for life, with remainder to the son in fee, but with power to the son to appoint part of the personal estate as he should think fit; they raised a sum required for paying the father's debts as to 70,000*l.* by a mortgage in fee of the freehold estate and as to the balance by a sale of part of the personal estate; and the father assigned to trustees certain policies of insurance on his life for sums amounting to 69,500*l.* on trust to apply all moneys payable thereunder during his life towards the discharge of the mortgage debt, and subject to such trust to hold the policies, moneys, and accumulations in trust for the son, and conveyed to these trustees his life estate on trust to pay out of the income the interest on the mortgage and the premiums on the policies, and to pay the surplus income as to two-thirds to the father and as to one-third to the son. The father and son were on bad terms, and in carrying out the arrangement they dealt with each other at arm's length. On the death of the father in 1898 the Crown claimed from the son estate duty on the moneys received by him under the policies:—Held, that these moneys were property passing on the death of the deceased within section 2, sub-section (1) (d) of the Finance Act, 1894, but were not property passing on the death of the deceased by reason of a purchase within section 3, and consequently that the duty was payable. Att.-Gen. v. Hawkins, 70 L. J. K.B. 195; [1901] 1 K.B. 235; 83 L. T. 531; 49 W. R. 320; 64 J. P. 791—D.

Settlement Estate Duty.—The expression "the deceased" in section 19 of the Finance Act, 1896, means a person dying after July 1, 1896. Gibbs, In re; Thorne v. Gibbs, 67 L. J. Ch. 282; [1898] 1 Ch. 625; 78 L. T. 239; 46 W. R. 477—Stirling, J.

The incidence of settlement estate duty, in the case of settled pecuniary legacies or shares of residue of the personal estate of a testator dying prior to July 2, 1896, is governed by the rule established in Webber, In re; Gribble v. Webber (65 L. J. Ch. 544; [1896] 1 Ch. 914) and is upon the general residue and not upon the settled legacies or shares. Ib.

— Direction in Will to Pay "Testamentary expenses."—A settled fund must bear the settlement estate duty notwithstanding a provision in the will that the executors are to pay testamentary expenses out of residue. King, In re; Travers v. Kelly, 73 L. J. Ch. 210; [1904] 1 Ch. 363; 90 L. T. 281; 52 W. R. 230; 20 T. L. R. 187—Swinfen Eady, J.

— Will—Legacy of Specific Chattels—Direction to Pay "death duties" out of Specific Fund—Exoneration of Specific Chattels.—The bequest of a specific fund of money upon trust "to pay thereout . . . the death duties payable out of my estate" throws the burden of the payment of settlement estate duty, payable in respect of property specifically bequeathed, upon the specific fund in exoneration of the property specifically bequeathed. Lewis, In re; Lewis v. Smith (69 L. J. Ch. 406; [1900] 2 Ch. 176), distinguished; Pimm, In re; Sharpe v. Hodgson (73 L. J. Ch. 627; [1904] 2 Ch. 345), applied. Cayley, In re; Awdry v. Cayley, 74 L. J. — Estate Contingently Settled—Repayment of Duty.]—Trustees were directed to hold the residue of a trust estate for the truster's unmarried daughter in life, and her children in fee, it being provided that if she had no children the fee should go as she might direct by any writing under her hand, and, failing such direction, to certain third parties. On the truster's death in 1895, the trustees paid estate duty and settlement estate duty on the residue as a settled estate under the provisions of the Finance Act, 1894. The daughter died unmarried on January 11, 1898. On her death estate duty was claimed and paid on the residue as an unsettled estate. In an action by the trustees for repayment of the amount paid as settlement estate duty, on the ground that the estate was only contingently settled on the daughter leaving issue, and that this contingency had not arisen,—Held, that, as there was no enactment in the Finance Act, 1894, or otherwise entitling the trustees to repayment, they were not entitled to repayment. Watherston's Trustees v. Lord Advocate, 3 F. 429—Ct. of Sess.

—Contingent Settlement—Interpretation of Statutes.]—Whether the case of Att.-Gen. v. Fairley (66 L. J. Q.B. 454; [1897] 1 Q.B. 698) was or was not rightly decided in the first instance, the Legislature by the Finance Act, 1898, s. 14, has adopted and confirmed the construction put upon the Finance Act, 1894, s. 5, in that case, and the Court is equally bound to adopt that construction in the case of the will of a testator who died before the commencement of the Finance Act, 1898. Att.-Gen. v. Clarkson, 69 L. J. Q.B. 81; [1900] 1 Q.B. 156; 81 L. T. 617; 48 W. R. 216—C.A.

Testator, who died in 1895, gave his residue in trust for such of his children as should attain twenty-five years in equal shares, with provisions for maintenance and accumulation of income in the meantime, and directed each daughter's share to be held in trust for the daughter for life, and after her death for her children. Testator left two sons and four daughters, all under twenty-five:—Held, that settlement estate duty was leviable on the entire residue. Id.

Testator, who died in 1895, gave a legacy of 30,000*l.* to A, if and when he should attain twenty-five years, with interest in the meantime, and, in case A should die under that age leaving issue, directed the legacy to be held upon trusts in favour of A's children; and, in case A should die under that age without leaving issue, directed the legacy to fall into his residue. A was under twenty-five at the testator's death, but had since attained twenty-five:—Held, that settlement estate duty was leviable on the legacy. Id.

—Will—Legacy of Specific Chattels—Direction to Pay "death duties" out of Specific Fund—Exoneration of Specific Chattels.]—The bequest of a specific fund of money upon trust "to pay thereout . . . the death duties payable out of my estate" throws the burden of the payment of settlement estate duty, payable in respect of property specifically bequeathed, upon the specific fund in exoneration of the property specifically bequeathed. Lewis, In re; Lewis v. Smith (69 L. J. Ch. 406; [1900] 2 Ch.

176), distinguished; Pimm, In re; Sharpe v. Hodgson (73 L. J. Ch. 627; [1904] 2 Ch. 345), applied. Cayley, In re; Airdry v. Cayley, 70 L. J. Ch. 31; [1904] 2 Ch. 781; 91 L. T. 743; 53 W. R. 144, 260—Swinfen Eady, J.

—Settled Property—Succession—Fund Set Aside to Produce Sufficient Income to Pay Annuities.]—A testator by his will devised and bequeathed all his real and personal estate to trustees upon trust for sale and conversion, and, after the bequest of certain legacies, he directed his trustees to set aside a sufficient amount of his residuary estate upon trust to pay annuities to certain annuitants for their respective lives, and, subject thereto, to distribute the residue among the residuary legatees:—Held, that so much of the residuary estate as was set aside for the payment of the annuities was "settled" property within section 5, subsection 1 of the Finance Act, 1894, and consequently that settlement estate duty was leviable in respect thereof on the death of the testator. Att.-Gen. v. Owen (68 L. J. Q.B. 779; [1899] 2 Q.B. 253) approved. Campbell, In re; 71 L. J. K.B. 160; [1902] 1 K.B. 113; 85 L. T. 708—C.A.

—Precatory Trust—Letter with Wishes of Testator.]—N. C., by his will dated December 13, 1901, devised and bequeathed all his estate and effects of every description to his brother C. T. C. absolutely, and he appointed his said brother, H. J. M., and C. G. executors and trustees of his will. On January 11, 1902, N. C. signed a document or letter (which has not been admitted to probate) which was headed: "Instructions to my executors Crawford, Morgan, and Gasquet.—Dear Brother Crawford (I dictated this to Gasquet).—Like many others who have gone before me, I have failed to make provision for the distribution of my property amongst my relatives and friends before it became too late to do it with care. For this reason I have left all my estate to you in the fullest reliance that you will, as far as possible and to the utmost, carry out any wish that I may express in writing now or later, or which may be conveyed to you verbally by Gasquet or my good-hearted cousin Henry. I have made a settlement on P. D. which should suffice for him in the struggle of life which we all have to face. As regards our family, you will be the best judge how and when a suitable distribution should be made. I do not fetter your discretion in any way. You are an old man, and therefore do not delay the distribution." And then followed the directions as to the disposal of certain property and amounts to be paid to certain persons. The document concluded: "Finally, these are the instructions referred to in my will. They are not in any way to fetter Crawford, and may probably be added to if I am spared, or I may carry some out in my own lifetime." A copy of this document was sent to C. T. C., who, on January 14, 1902, wrote to C. G. a letter in which he said: "All I wish to say now is that every wish expressed by my brother shall be carried out to the very fullest extent so far as I am concerned, and as far as all we three executors are concerned, for his wishes are sacred, every word." The effect of this letter was communicated to N. C. N. C. died on February 18, 1902, and his will was proved by all the executors, and estate duty and legacy duty was paid on his estate, including sums given or settled by the testator within twelve months of his death. C. T. C. took possession as beneficial owner of the residuary personal estate and of the freehold and leasehold estate of N. C., and he made on May 13, 1902 (with twelve months next before his death), a settlement of 5,000*l.* on each of his four nephews and niece. C. T. C. also gave and paid other sums to various persons in accordance with the instructions in the letter of January 11, 1902. C. T. C. died on December 13, 1902:—Held, that no trust was created, and that the settlement of 5,000*l.* so made was a gift made by C. T. C. within twelve months of his death, and so estate duty and settlement estate duty were payable in respect thereof. Att.-Gen. v. Chamberlain, 90 L. T. 581; 20 T. L. R. 359—Channell, J.

— Entailed Estate—Money Directed to be Invested in Land to be Entailed.—A testator gave money in trust for the purpose of purchasing land in Scotland to be entailed in accordance with the directions of his will. By a codicil he authorised the trustees (if in their discretion they should think it desirable), in place of purchasing land in Scotland, to purchase land in England to be entailed according to English law:—Held, that so much of the money as remained uninvested in land was not “entailed estate,” and not liable to settlement estate duty within the meaning of the Finance Act, 1894. Lord Advocate v. Stewart, 71 L. J. P.C. 66; [1902] A.C. 344; 86 L. T. 603; 50 W. R. 673—H.L. (Sc.)

By LORD ROBERTSON.—Money directed to be laid out in the purchase of land in Scotland to be entailed is “entailed estate” within the Scottish Entail Acts, and therefore comes within section 23, sub-section 16 of the Finance Act, 1894. Ib.

— Incidence of Duties and of Arrears of Interest General Residue Insufficient—Liability of—Annuitants to Contribute.—A testator who died in the year 1895, by a bequest held to be specific, bequeathed “all my moneys invested in and upon any stocks or funds, whether in or out of the United Kingdom, and all my railway stocks, shares, debentures, and bonds, and generally all and every my securities for money,” to trustees upon trust during the life of his sister to pay three sums of 1,000*l.*, 500*l.*, and 500*l.* annually respectively, and the residue and the remainder thereof to his brother W. during his life. After the death of his sister the trustees were to hold the trust fund, as to two sums of 21,000*l.* and 18,000*l.*, upon certain trusts in favour of two of the testator’s brothers respectively and their issue, and were to stand possessed of the residue of the trust fund, including the 18,000*l.* in the event of his brother’s death without issue upon trust for W. for life, with remainders over. The testator bequeathed all the residue of his personal estate of whatever kind to W., subject to the payment of his funeral and testamentary expenses and debts and certain annuities. The residuary personalty was insufficient to pay the testator’s debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, so that a part of the estate duty had to be paid out of the trust fund:—Held, that the interest given to W. in each case was not a share of the fund, but an interest in the actual residue after payment respectively of the annuities and the two sums of 21,000*l.* and 18,000*l.*; and therefore the annuities and those two sums were not liable to diminution by reason of the estate duty having to be borne by the fund or on account of the settlement estate duty being payable in respect of the fund. De Quetteville v. De Quetteville, 93 L. T. 579—C.A.

— Will—Direction to Pay “my duties” out of Residue—Exoneration of Specific Property.—A residuary gift upon certain trusts, after payment of “my debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and duties,” throws the burden of the payment of estate duty and settlement estate duty, payable in respect of real estate specifically devised, on the residue, in exoneration of the specific property. Pimm, In re; Sharpe v. Hodgson, 73 L. J. Ch. 627; [1904] 2 Ch. 345; 91 L. T. 190; 52 W. R. 648—Farwell, J.

Estate Duty not Merely Stamp Duty.—See Kingdon & Wilson, In re, post, SOLICITOR.

Bequest of Sum to Pay Estate Duty.—See Mexborough, In re; Savile v. Mexborough, 88 L. T. 131, post, WILL.

(iii.) Incidence.

By Whom to be Borne—Estate Divisible among Children and Residuary Legatee.—Estate duty payable on death of tenant for life held to be borne rateably by the shares into which the estate became divisible and by the residuary legatee. Power, In re; Power v. Howell, 47 W. R. 183—Kekewich, J.

General Power of Appointment Exercised by Will—Appointed Fund—Residue—“Testamentary expenses”—Property Passing to Executor “as such.”—Testator, who died in 1900, was at the date of his will and of his death entitled to a general power of appointment by will over the husband’s trust fund settled by his marriage settlement. In the events which had happened the fund stood settled upon trust for the testator for life, and after his death for his wife for life, and after the death of the survivor as the testator should appoint. By his will the testator exercised the power and appointed that the trustees of the settlement should after his wife’s death hold the fund in trust as the wife should by will appoint, and in default of appointment upon trust to transfer the fund to the trustees of his will as part of his residuary estate; and he directed payment of his testamentary expenses out of the general estate:—Held, that the persons accountable for estate duty under section 8, sub-section 4 of the Finance Act, 1894, were the persons to whom the beneficial interest in the property passed, or the trustees in whom the fund was vested, and that the duty was therefore payable out of the corpus of the appointed fund. Held, also, that, inasmuch as the executors were not accountable for the duty, the duty was not a “testamentary expense.” Power, In re; Acworth v. Stone (70 L. J. Ch. 778; [1901] 2 Ch. 659), commented upon. Dixon, In re; Penfold v. Dixon, 71 L. J. Ch. 96; [1902] 1 Ch. 248; 85 L. T. 622; 50 W. R. 203—Buckley, J.

Appointment by Will.—The estate duty on a fund appointed by a will made in execution of a testamentary power of appointment must be borne by the appointed fund, and not by the residue. Treasure, In re; Wild v. Stanham (69 L. J. Ch. 751; [1900] 2 Ch. 648), followed in preference to Moore, In re; Moore v. Moore (infra). Maddock, In re; Llewellyn v. Washington, 70 L. J. Ch. 660; [1901] 2 Ch. 372; 85 L. T. 12; 50 W. R. 54—Kekewich, J. See also Orlebar, In re; Wynter v. Orlebar, 77 L. J. Ch. 54; [1908] 1 Ch. 136; 98 L. T. 19—Neville, J.

General Power of Appointment by Will—Exercise of Power—Property Passing to the Executor “as such.”—Property appointed under a general power of appointment by will does not pass to the executor “as such” within the Finance Act, 1894, s. 9, sub-s. 1, and consequently estate duty is, in the absence of any direction to the contrary, payable out of the appointed property and not out of the residuary estate of the appointor. Power, In re; Acworth v. Stone (70 L. J. Ch. 778; [1901] 2 Ch. 659), followed. Dodson, In re; Gibson v. Dodson, 76 L. J. Ch. 182; [1907] 1 Ch. 284; 96 L. T. 254—Warrington, J.

— Testamentary Expenses.—Where a testatrix has made a will in exercise of a general testamentary power of appointment over a fund, and has directed her “testamentary expenses” to be paid by her executors, although the appointed fund will not be deemed to pass to the executors “as such,” the estate duty payable in respect of it must be paid out of the residuary estate of the testatrix as a “testamentary expense,” and not be charged upon the appointed fund. Clemow, In re; Yeo v. Clemow (69 L. J. Ch. 522; [1900] 2 Ch. 182), followed. Treasure, In re; Wild v. Stanham, 69 L. J. Ch. 751; [1900] 2 Ch. 648; 83 L. T. 142; 48 W. R. 696—Kekewich, J.

Fund Appointed in Exercise of General Power—Residue—Property Passing to the Executor “as such.”—“Testamentary expense.”—Where an executor receives personal property appointed in pursuance of a general power, such property constitutes “assets which he has received as executor” within the meaning of section 8, sub-section 3 of the Finance Act, 1894, and cannot be said to be “property which does not pass to the executor as such” within the meaning of section 9, sub-section 1. Fearnside, In re; Baines v. Chadwick, 72 L. J. Ch. 200; [1903] 1 Ch. 250; 88 L. T. 57; 51 W. R. 186—Swinfen Eady, J.

Assets which a person rightly receives as executor are assets which pass to him as executor within the meaning of the Act, even although not strictly speaking assets to which he is entitled virtute officii. Ib.

Estate duty payable in respect of personal property appointed by a testator in pursuance of a general power is a “testamentary expense,” and therefore included in a direction to the executors to pay testamentary expenses. Ib.

Contingent Legacies and Annuities—Insufficiency of Personality—Charge on Realty—Residuary Personality Settled.—Where a testator by his will gave certain contingent legacies and annuities and directed that the same should be primarily payable out of his personality, and charged his real estate in aid but not in exoneration of his personality with the same if the personality should be insufficient, and after devising his real estate in strict settlement he declared that if his residuary personality should be insufficient for payment of funeral and testamentary expenses, debts, legacies, and annuities, the trustees might raise the deficiency by mortgage of the real estate, but so that the annuities should be paid out of rents and profits, and not by raising a capital sum to provide for the same, and he charged the residuary personality with the payment of the legacies and annuities and directed that the ultimate residue of the personality was to be invested and was to follow the limitations of the real estate, and the executors had paid settlement estate duty in respect of the contingent legacies and annuities, it was held, there being a probability that the personality would be insufficient to pay the funeral and testamentary expenses, legacies, and annuities, that the contingent legacies were to be treated as settled, and that the settlement estate duty must be borne by the legatees, in accordance with Maryon-Wilson, In re; Wilson v. Maryon-Wilson (69 L. J. Ch. 310; [1900] 1 Ch. 565), and that as regarded the annuities it must be taken that Att.-Gen. v. Owen (68 L. J. Q.B. 779; [1899] 2 Q.B. 253) applied to the personality, and consequently that the annuitants must bear the proper proportion of the settlement estate duty in accordance with the rule established in Parker-Jervis, In re; Salt v. Locker (67 L. J. Ch. 682; [1898] 2 Ch. 643). St. Albans (Duke), In re; Loder v. St. Albans (Duke), 69 L. J. Ch. 863; [1900] 2 Ch. 873; 49 W. R. 74—Stirling, J.

General Residue.—The term “estate duty” in the Finance Act, 1894, includes settlement estate duty. Where, therefore, the trustees of a will are directed to stand possessed of residuary personal estate upon trust to pay thereout the estate duty on the whole of the real and devised and personal estate bequeathed by the will, the settlement estate duty payable in respect of properties settled by the will must be paid out of the residuary personal estate and not out of the respective settled properties. Leveridge, In re; Spain v. Lejoindre, 71 L. J. Ch. 23; [1901] 2 Ch. 830; 85 L. T. 458; 50 W. R. 205—Joyce, J.

Money Charged on Real Estate in Favour of Trustees of Marriage Settlement—Will—Devise Subject to Charge.—The persons entitled to a sum of money charged by a testator upon his real estate during his life in favour of the trustees of his marriage settlement (being a charge which cannot, under section 7, sub-section 1 of the Finance Act, 1894, be deducted from such real estate before estimating its amount for the purposes of estate duty) must by section 14, sub-section 1, pay a proportionate amount of the duty which section 9, sub-section 1, makes a first charge upon the real estate in question. Hacket, In re; Hacket v. Gardiner, 76 L. J. Ch. 249; [1907] 1 Ch. 385; 96 L. T. 420—Joyce, J.

Marriage Settlement—Jointure—“Without any deduction whatsoever”—Mode of Assessing Duty—Limited Owner.—The scheme of the Finance Act, 1894, is that estate duty is to be borne by the inheritance as a whole. Parker-Jervis, In re; Salt v. Locker, 87 L. J. Ch. 682; [1898] 2 Ch. 643; 79 L. T. 403; 47 W. R. 147—Kekewich, J.

Upon the death of a settlor estate duty became payable on certain estates which passed as a whole. At the same time a jointure of 1,000*l.* a year became raisable in favour of A, to be paid to her "without any deduction whatsoever, except in respect of income tax," and another jointure of 500*l.* a year became raisable in favour of B, but without any such words of exemption:—Held, as to A's jointure, that the words "without any deduction &c." amounted to an "express" provision to the contrary, within the meaning of section 14, sub-section 1 of the Finance Act, 1894, and that A was not to be charged with any part of the estate duty, or interest thereon. Held, as to B's jointure, that she must be treated as tenant for life of a sum equivalent to the capitalised value of the jointure, to be ascertained at the same number of years' purchase as the whole estate was capitalised for the purpose of duty; and that she must pay interest on so much of the estate duty as was properly attributable to such capital sum at the rate actually paid in respect of the duty raised upon mortgage of the estate. Ib.

Real and Personal Estate—Residuary Legatee—Lunatic—Payment of Duty on Realty out of Personality—Surplus Rents—Next-of-kin—Heir-at-law.—The committee of a lunatic absolutely entitled to residuary real and personal estate under a will of which the committee was himself sole executor and trustee, paid the estate duty on the testatrix's death on the real estate out of the personal estate. An allowance had been ordered in lunacy for the lunatic's maintenance out of the income of the residuary estate without distinguishing between the real and personal estate, and the surplus rents of the real estate, after providing rateably for the lunatic's maintenance, would have been sufficient, if so applied during the lunatic's life, to keep down the interest on, and to repay to the personal estate, the capital amount of the estate duty paid in respect of the real estate. On the lunatic's death intestate his next-of-kin claimed to have a charge on the real estate in respect of the estate duty so paid. The charge was not required by the executor for the purposes of administration:—Held, that any charge created on the real estate under section 9 of the Finance Act, 1894, must under the circumstances be considered to have been merged or extinguished in the lunatic's lifetime, and that the next-of-kin had no equity as against the heir to require it to be raised. Hole, In re; Davies v. Writts, 75 L. J. Ch. 362; [1906] 1 Ch. 673; 94 L. T. 451—C.A.

Decision of FARWELL, J. (74 L. J. Ch. 639; [1905] 2 Ch. 384), affirmed, but his observations that the committee ought to be treated as a mortgagee in possession dissented from. Ib.

Payment by Instalments—Interest whether Raisable out of Inheritance.—A tenant for life, who under section 6, sub-section 8. of the Finance Act, 1894, elects to pay estate duty by instalments, is not under ordinary circumstances entitled by virtue of section 9, sub-section 5, to raise the interest on the instalments by sale or mortgage of the inheritance as between himself and the remaindermen, but must keep down the interest himself. Howe's (Earl) Settled Estates, In re; Howe v. Kingscote, 72 L. J. Ch. 461; [1903] 2 Ch. 69; 88 L. T. 438; 51 W. R. 468—C.A.

Per ROMER, L.J.—If a person were to advance money at the request of the tenant for life for the payment of such interest with notice of the rights of the remaindermen, he would not obtain a good title as against the remaindermen. Ib.

Gift of Annuity.—See ANNUITY.

(iv.) Deductions.

Marriage Settlement—Bona Fide Purchase—Partial Consideration in Money or Money's Worth.—By a settlement on the marriage of L. and D., L., the husband, in consideration partly of the transfer to him by D., the wife, of 600 Grand Canal shares, and partly of the marriage, granted certain lands in trust for himself for life, and after his death for D. absolutely. Upon L.'s death the lands, portion of which had in the meantime been sold, were represented by 8,119*l.* 4*s.* The Commissioners of Inland Revenue claimed estate duty upon the full sum of 8,119*l.* 4*s.*, as being the principal value of the property passing to D. upon the death of L., ascertained in accordance with the provisions of the Finance Act, 1894. They disputed D.'s right to a deduction of 6,600*l.*, being the value at the date of the settlement of the consideration in Grand Canal shares, upon the ground that the transaction embodied in the settlement was not one in which the 8,119*l.* 4*s.*, the value of the land, was to pass to her upon the death of L., by reason only of a bona fide purchase from him for partial consideration in money or money's worth, within the meaning of section 3, sub-section 2 of the Act:—Held, that the expression "partial consideration in money or money's worth," in section 3, sub-section 2, was intended to relate to contracts in which the consideration was partly money or money's worth and partly marriage, and that the sum in respect of which D. was liable to pay estate duty was to be ascertained by deducting 6,600*l.*, the value of the consideration in money or money's worth, from 8,119*l.* 4*s.*, the value of the property passing to her under the settlement upon the death of L. Lombard, In re, [1904] 2 Ir. R. 621—K.B. D.

Annuities and Mortgages Created by Owner of Interest in Expectancy.—The provisions of sub-section 3 of section 21 of the Finance Act, 1894, do not entitle the owner of an interest in expectancy, who has, before the commencement of the Act, and in the lifetime of the tenant for life, charged his interest with annuities and mortgages, to deduct, upon the death of the tenant for life, the capitalised value of the annuities and the sums secured by the mortgages from the principal value of the properties passing on death upon which estate duty is payable. Vernon, In re, 70 L. J. K.B.

— A father and son, who were respectively equitable tenant for life and equitable tenant in tail in remainder of settled estates, executed a disentailing assurance, and then, in the exercise of a joint power of appointment extending over the whole equitable interest, executed a mortgage of the equitable interest in fee to secure money advanced to father and son, which they jointly and severally covenanted to repay. The mortgage embodied transfers of pre-existing mortgages on the father's life estate, which life estate was kept alive for the purpose of protection against mesne incumbrances during the life of the tenant for life. Subsequently the estates were re-settled, and an annuity granted thereout to the son during his father's life:—Held, that on the death of the father the son was entitled to deduct from the principal value of the property chargeable with estate duty the amount due under the mortgage. Held also, that no deduction ought to be made for the capitalised value of the annuity. Cowley (Earl) v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 68 L. J. Q.B. 435; [1899] A.C. 198; 80 L. T. 361; 47 W. R. 525; 63 J. P. 436—H.L. (E.)

Deductions Allowable as Debts — Marriage Contract Provisions — Interim Alimony to Widow.—An obligation by a husband in a marriage contract to make certain payments to his marriage contract trustees for behoof of his wife and children, as the counterpart of similar obligations by his wife, cannot be regarded on his death as a debt incurred by him "for full consideration in money or money's worth wholly for the deceased's own use and benefit," in the sense of section 7, sub-section 1 (a) of the Finance Act, 1894, and does not form a proper deduction in determining the value of his estate for the purpose of estate duty. A similar obligation by a father in his son's marriage contract, as the counterpart of an obligation by the son's wife and her father, cannot be deducted as a debt. Inland Revenue v. Alexander's Trustees, 7 F. 367—Ct. of Sess.

Fund in Court—Payment Out.—See Taylor v. Poncia, ante, PRACTICE, col. 1926.

(v) Raising Duty.

Charge on Property.—Trustees, acting under a will, having paid the estate, settlement estate, and succession duties due on the death of the testator, applied to the Court for authority under section 9, sub-section 5 of the Finance Act, 1894, and section 44 of the Succession Duty Act, 1853, to grant a bond and disposition in security over the property for the amount of the duties so paid and the expenses of settling the same and of the application. The will contained no power to borrow, and it was stated that no person could be found willing to lend the amount on the security of the estate without the sanction of the Court:—Held, that the trustees were entitled to authority to charge the property for the duties paid and also for the expenses incurred in settling the duties, but not for the costs of the application. Harris's Trustees v. Harris, 6 F. 470—Ct. of Sess.

(c) Legacy Duty.

Gift of Legacies to Males and Females—Direction to Pay Legacies in Favour of Females Free of Legacy Duty—Gift of Residue to Males and Females as Tenants in Common.—After giving certain legacies to males and females, the testatrix declared that all legacies, devises, and bequests thereinbefore or thereafter given or made in favour of females should be free of legacy duty, the residue being given to three males and three females as tenants in common. —Held, that the legacy duty in respect of the shares of the females in the residue fell to be paid out of their respective shares. Dalrymple, In re; Bircham v. Springfield, 49 W. R. 627—Kekewich, J.

Incidence—Assignment of Part of Fund.—By a marriage settlement which recited the title of the settlor in reversion under a will to a mortgage for 15,000*l.*, and that it had been agreed to settle 10,000*l.*, part thereof, the settlor assigned to the trustees all that sum of 10,000*l.* part of the said mortgage debt or sum of 15,000*l.*, to which he was entitled in reversion, and the interest and income of the said sum of 10,000*l.*, to hold the said sum of 10,000*l.* and premises upon the trusts therein declared. The settlement contained a covenant for further assurance at the cost of the trust estate. And it was agreed and declared that, from and after the solemnisation of the marriage the trustees should stand possessed of the said sum of 10,000*l.*, and of the shares and interests thereinbefore expressed to be assigned, and of the interest, dividends, and income thereof respectively, upon trust to permit the whole or any part of the said sum of 10,000*l.*, when the same should have fallen into possession, to remain in its actual state of investment or with the consent or at the discretion therein mentioned to call in and compel payment of the said sum of 10,000*l.*; and after a trust for investment the settlement directed the trustees to pay the income of the said sum of 10,000*l.*, and of the stocks, funds, shares, and securities in or upon or into or for which the same sum, or any part thereof, might be invested, converted, or transposed as in the said settlement mentioned:—Held, that this was in effect an assignment of two-thirds of the mortgage debt and not an assignment of a sum of 10,000*l.*, and that the 10,000*l.* must bear its proportion of the legacy duty and costs under the testator's will. Repington, In re; Wodehouse v. Scobell, 73 L. J. Ch. 533; [1904] 1 Ch. 811; 90 L. T. 663; 52 W. R. 522—Farwell, J.

Heirlooms—Re-settlement of Estate and Heirlooms—Absolute Owner—Liability of Trustees.—The second Marquis of A. by will directed that certain chattels in or about his mansion should be annexed to the mansion as heirlooms to be enjoyed by the persons entitled, under the limitations of a settlement of 1837, to the mansion-house. Under the settlement the mansion-house was settled at the death of the second marquis on the third marquis for life with remainder to the first son of the testator's nephew in tail male, with remainders over. The second marquis having died, the third marquis and Viscount S. (afterwards fourth marquis) by deed re-settled the estate and appointed the defendants trustees of the settlement, assigning to them the chattels on trust to allow them to remain as heirlooms. The third marquis died in 1886, and the fourth marquis became bankrupt and died in 1894. The Crown thereupon claimed from the defendants legacy duty upon all the chattels settled by the will of the second marquis;—Held, that but for the re-settlement, the chattels would have become the absolute property of the fourth marquis, and that the defendants, as his assignees, became liable to pay the duty upon the death of the third marquis. Att.-Gen. v. Bruce, 70 L. J. K.B. 767; [1901] 2 K.B. 391; 85 L. T. 114; 49 W. R. 519; 65 J. P. 329—D.

Power of Appointment — Whether Power Exercised.]—A testator directed his trustees to hold half the residue of his estate for payment of the income thereof to his sister, so long as she remained unmarried, and on her death unmarried “to pay the capital of said half of my estate to the person or persons to whom she may bequeath the same by any will,” and, failing any direction by her, to pay it to certain specified legatees. The testator’s sister, who survived him and died unmarried, left a will which, after reciting the provisions of her brother’s will relating to this half of his estate, proceeded: “I now hereby declare that it is my wish and desire that the capital of the said half of the deceased’s whole estate shall be divided among the legatees appointed by him” under his will, and then, on the narrative that she now desired to “settle my own proper means and estate,” went on to dispose of her whole property to trustees for certain trust purposes. On the death of the sister the Crown claimed legacy duty on the half of the brother’s estate life-rented by her, on the plea that she exercised the power of appointment, and that the fund was a bequest by her to the appointees:—Held, that the sister had not exercised the power of appointment, and therefore that the legacy duty claimed was not payable. Lord Advocate v. Rountledge’s Trustees, [1907] S.C. 327—Ct. of Sess.

Power to Charge Profit-Costs—Administration—Solicitor-Trustee—Insolvent Estate.]—Where a solicitor is appointed executor and trustee of a will, and is empowered by his testator to make professional charges as solicitor to the estate, he will not be entitled to his profit-costs as against the creditors if the estate proves insolvent. The right to charge profit-costs is a legacy, and is liable to legacy duty. White, In re; Pennell v. Franklin, 67 L. J. Ch. 139; [1898] 1 Ch. 297; 77 L. T. 793; 46 W. Gift—Trust to Carry on Testator’s Business—Share of Profits Payable to Employees.]—A testator provided for his business being carried on after his death and eventually being acquired by certain selected employees. He gave his trustees control of the business to the extent of appointing managers, granting authority to sign the firm name, and deciding as to winding up; but he selected fifteen employees to carry on the business, and provided that the free profits of the business, after paying 3 per cent. interest on his capital, should be divided annually in certain shares among these selected employees, 10 per cent. of each share being paid to the employee entitled thereto, the remaining 90 per cent. being retained by the trustees in part payment of the price of the business. When the fund formed by the 90 per cent. so retained amounted to the capital value of the business, the trustees were to convey the whole business to the selected employees. The provisions in favour of each of the selected employees were only to remain in force so long as the employee remained in the business, and the trustees were given power to dismiss any employee. The employees were to continue to receive their salaries as well as the 10 per cent. of the profits. After the testator’s death the business was successfully carried on under this arrangement, and large sums having been paid to the employees under the 10 per cent. provision, the Inland Revenue claimed legacy duty on these sums:—Held, that these sums were gifts payable out of the personal or movable estate of the testator within section 4 of the Stamp Act, 1845, and were not remuneration for services, and that consequently legacy duty was due. Thorley, In re (60 L. J. Ch. 537; [1891] 2 Ch. 613), followed. Lord Advocate v. Dick’s Trustees, [1907] S.C. 880—Ct. of Sess.

Shares—Restriction in Transfer—Principle of Valuation.]—By the articles of association of a company it was provided that any member proposing to transfer a share should serve a notice upon the company of his intention, which notice constituted the company his agent for the sale of the share to any member at the “fair value thereof,” the latter being defined as a sum of 100%, or such other sum as should from time to time be fixed as the “fair value” by resolution of the company in general meeting. No share could, save as therein provided, be transferred to a non-member so long as any member was willing to purchase the same at the “fair value.” Upon the company within twenty-eight days of the transfer notice finding a member willing to purchase, the retiring member was bound to transfer the share at the “fair value,” and in default of doing so the company might receive the purchase-money and enter the name of the purchasing member in the register as the holder of the share. In the event of the company not finding a purchaser within twenty-eight days, the retiring member might within three months sell and transfer the share to any one, subject to the approval of the directors, and at any price. Upon the death of a testator holding shares in the company,—Held, that the principal value of the shares was to be estimated at the price which the same would, in the opinion of the Commissioners, fetch if sold in the open market on the terms that the purchaser should be entitled to be registered as the holder of the shares, and should take and hold them subject to the articles of association, including the articles relating to the alienation and transfer of the shares of the company. Att.-Gen. v. Jameson, [1905] 2 Ir. R. 218—C.A.

Payment—Direction to Pay “free from duty” —Insufficient Estate—Duties treated as Additional Legacies—Abatement.]—Where legacies are given “free from duty,” and the estate is insufficient to pay the legacies and the respective duties in full, the duty on each particular legacy is to be regarded as an additional legacy and added to the original legacy, and then both legacies must abate rateably. Turnbull, In re; Skipper v. Wade, 74 L. J. Ch. 438; [1905] 1 Ch. 726; 53 W. R. 440—Farwell, J.

(d) Succession Duty.

Tenant for Life—Tenant in Tail—Disentailing Deed—Conveyance to Purchaser in Fee—Death of Purchaser—Death of Tenant for Life—Double Duty—Alienation—Acceleration.]—A tenant for life in possession and the tenant in tail in remainder of certain land executed a disentailing deed whereby they limited the land to such uses as they should jointly appoint. They then appointed the fee-simple in possession to a purchaser. The purchaser devised the land and died in the lifetime of the appointors. The devisee devised the land to the defendant (appellant) and died also in the lifetime of the appointors. The defendant paid succession duty on this death. Subsequently the appointor who had been tenant for life died:—Held, that succession duty was payable upon this death also, and that it must be calculated upon the actuarial value of the interest of the defendant, and not upon the life of the person who before the disentailing deed was tenant in tail in remainder. Cooper and Harlech, In re (46 L. J. Ch. 133; 4 Ch. D. 802), overruled. Solicitor-Gen. v. Law Reversionary Interest Society (42 L. J. Ex. 146; L. R. 8 Ex. 233) approved. Northumberland (Duke) v. Att.-Gen., 74 L. J. K.B. 734; [1905] A.C. 406; 93 L. T. 88; 54 W. R. 31; 21 T. L. R. 639—H.L. (E.)

Full Enjoyment of Succession Deferred—Duty on Increased Value Accruing on Determination—"Successor."]—A testator devised real property let on lease, not purporting to be at a rack-rent, to a devisee in fee-simple. The devisee paid succession duty assessed on the rent reserved by the lease, and before the determination of the lease sold the property to the defendants subject to the lease. The annual value of the property at the determination of the lease was greater than the rent reserved by the lease. Upon an information on behalf of the Crown claiming succession duty from the defendants in respect of the increased value accruing to them on the determination of the lease as upon the value of an annuity equal to the amount of the increase of the annual value during the residue of their lives,—Held, that the succession to the property became fully vested in the devisee upon the death of the testator, and that the defendants, not being successors within the meaning of the Act, were only liable, under section 42 of the Act, as persons claiming in right of the successor, for duty as upon the value of an annuity equal to the amount of the increase of annual value for the residue of the life of the devisee. Att.-Gen. v. Mander, 65 L. J. Q.B. 246—D.

Annuity out of Rents of Real Estate—Trust for Accumulation of Surplus Rents—Annuitant Tenant for Life of Estate Subject to Trust.]—Testator, who died in 1876, by his will gave certain real estate to the use of trustees for a term of five hundred years, and subject thereto to uses in strict settlement, under which J. was tenant for life, with divers remainders over.

The trusts of the term were out of the rents and profits of the estates to raise and pay an annuity to the person for the time being entitled to the rents and profits subject to the term. Subject to that trust, the trustees were during twenty-one years from the testator's death to accumulate the rents and profits and invest them in land to be settled to the uses of the will, and, after the determination of the twenty-one years, to pay the rents and profits to the person for the time being entitled to the estates in reversion expectant upon the term:—Held (RIGBY, L.J., dissenting), that the duty payable in respect of the annuity was legacy duty and not succession duty. In re, De Hoghton; De Hoghton v. De Hoghton (No. 1), 65 L. J. Ch. 528; [1896] 1 Ch. 855—C.A.

Predecessor—Settlor—Marriage Portion.]—A step-daughter, who was contemplating marriage, was possessed of forty-five bank shares which had been presented to her by her step-father. These shares, at the request of the step-father, who told her that he had left her much more than their value, she handed over to her brother, and the step-father gave her a "marriage portion" of 5,000*l.*, which was put in settlement. The step-father died shortly after the marriage, and by his will, which was made some months before the marriage, he left the step-daughter a legacy of 5,000*l.* In a former suit the step-daughter and her husband had established that this legacy was not adeemed by the marriage portion of 5,000*l.*, and upon the death of her husband the Inland Revenue Commissioners claimed from the eldest son of the marriage, who was the successor, succession duty, under the Succession Duty Act, 1853, at the rate of 10 per cent. in respect of the 5,000*l.* put in settlement, upon the ground that the predecessor was the step-father, a stranger in blood. The eldest son contended that it was his mother who settled the 5,000*l.*, and that she was the predecessor:—Held, that before and at the time of the settlement the 5,000*l.* put in settlement belonged to the step-father and not to the step-daughter, and that he was the predecessor. Held also (per GIBSON, J., and KENNEDY, J.), that, notwithstanding the use of the word "portion" in the settlement, the step-father, and not the step-daughter, was to be deemed the settlor. Att.-Gen. v. Biggs, [1907] 2 Ir. R. 400—K.B.D.

Settlement by Father—Life Estate to Father—Remainder to Son subject to Defeasance on Predeceasing Father—Joint Power of Appointment to Father and Son—Appointment to Son in Fee in Lifetime of Father—Acceleration of Title—Extinction of Prior Interests.]—By an indenture made in 1833 a father, in view of the marriage of his son, conveyed an estate to trustees to hold the same on such trusts as the father and son should jointly appoint, and in default of and until such appointment to the use of the father for life, and after his decease to the use of the son in fee-simple in case he should survive the father, but if the son should die in the lifetime of the father, then if he should leave a son or sons who should have attained or should attain the age of twenty-one years, to the use of the son who should first or alone attain that age, but if he should leave no such son, then to the use of the father in fee-simple. By indenture made in September, 1894, the father and son in exercise of the power of appointment jointly appointed the estate to the son in fee. The father died in May, 1895:—Held, that the execution of the power defeated the succession of the son under the settlement, and gave him a new title under the power of appointment, and consequently did not accelerate the succession of the son by the surrender or extinction of prior interests within the meaning of section 15 of the Succession Duty Act, 1853, and that the son did not become liable on the death of the father for succession duty under that Act in respect of the estate. Att.-Gen. v. Selborne (Earl), 71 L. J. K.B. 289; [1902] 1 K.B. 338; 85 L. T. 714; 50 W. R. 210; 66 J. P. 132—C.A.

Power of Appointment—Stock Sufficient to Raise "net sum."—The donee of a power of appointment under a settlement appointed that "so much of the stocks, funds, shares, and securities" subject to the settlement "as shall be sufficient to raise the net sum of 2,000*l.*" should thenceforth belong to and be vested in E., an object of the power:—Held, that E. was entitled to have the succession duty on the sum appointed paid out of the funds remaining unappointed. Banks v. Braithwaite (32 L. J. Ch. 35) questioned. Saunders, In re; Saunders v. Gore, 67 L. J. Ch. 55; [1898] 1 Ch. 17; 77 L. T. 450; 46 W. R. 180—C.A.

Partnership Between Father and Son—Death of Father—Sale.—The father of the appellant, who had carried on a business for a long time, entered into partnership with his son, the appellant, for a term of years. The son brought no capital into the business, but, by the deed of partnership, it was agreed that one-third of the capital was to be deemed the son's, and that the profits were to be divided accordingly. It was also agreed that, if the partnership continued for the stipulated term, or was terminated by any other cause than the death of one partner, the son's share of the capital was to be one-half; and if the father died during the term, the son was to have the whole business and pay 10,000*l.* to the father's executors, and if the son died during the term, the father was to have back the whole business and pay 15,000*l.* to the son's executors. The father died during the term, and the Crown claimed succession duty from the son:—Held, that the partnership deed was of the nature of a family arrangement, and not a sale of the business to the son upon the footing of a commercial transaction, and that the duty was payable. Brown v. Att.-Gen., 79 L. T. 572—H.L. (E.)

Charitable Society—Money Paid to Society in Lieu of Legacy—Agreement by Society to Pay Annuity to Donor—Purchase—Bona fide Sale—Estate Duty.—A charitable society accepted from one of its directors a sum of 500*l.* in lieu of a legacy, subject to a contract on their part for the payment of an annuity of 25*l.* to the donor during his life, and after his death to his wife during her life, in case she should survive him. The funds were not charged with the payment of the annuity, but the annuity was paid by the directors as one of the ordinary outgoings of the society. The commercial value of the annuity was 210*l.* The donor died in 1895, and his widow in 1900:—Held, that as the transaction amounted to a gift of 500*l.* to the society, and not to a bona fide purchase of an annuity, estate duty became payable by the society, on the death of the donor, under section 2, sub-section 1 (c) of the Finance Act, 1894, upon the whole 500*l.*, and not merely upon 290*l.*—the difference between 500*l.* and 210*l.*, the value of the annuity. Held, further, that as there was a gift of the 500*l.* to the society, and not a disposition of property by bona fide sale within the exception in section 7 of the Succession Duty Act, 1853, the Crown was entitled to claim from the society succession duty upon the death of the widow in respect of the determination of the payment of the annuity. Att.-Gen. v. Johnson, 72 L. J. K.B. 323; [1903] 1 K.B. 617; 88 L. T. 445; 51 W. R. 487; 67 J. P. 113—C.A.

Annuity—Contract Inter Vivos—Alienation of Part of Succession.—A deed of arrangement was made between, first, the tenant for life of a residue—the widow of a testator who was a peer; secondly, five persons entitled in remainder to such residue contingently on their surviving the widow; and thirdly, the appellant, who, on failure of such survival, was entitled in remainder. By the deed the parties assigned their respective interests under the will to trustees, and an annuity was granted thereout during the widow's lifetime to the appellant, and after his death the said annuity was to be paid to the person for the time being holding the title. On the widow's death the five persons paid legacy duty on the whole residue:—Held, that the appellant's annuity, having been carved out of the succession of the five persons, was merely an alienation of part of that succession, and that the Crown was not entitled to duty thereon as upon a succession coming to the appellant from the testator's widow, or from the five persons, or from both; and by section 18 of the Succession Duty Act, 1853, the charge for succession duty was cleared by the payment of legacy duty. Cooper and Allen's Contract, In re (46 L. J. Ch. 133; 4 Ch. D. 802), disapproved. Wolverton (Baron) v. Att.-Gen., 67 L. J. Q.B. 829; [1898] A.C. 535; 79 L. T. 58; 47 W. R. 97; 62 J. P. 708—H.L. (E.)

Devise—Rentcharges—Payment without Deduction except for Legacy Duty—Will—Confirmation by Codicil.—A testator gave certain annuities charged on real estate, "to be paid without any deductions except for legacy duty and income tax," by a will dated August 10, 1882. On May 16, 1888, the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888, became law, by section 21, sub-section 2 of which "legacy duty" was abolished in the case of annuities charged on land, and a larger "succession duty" was substituted in its place. The testator confirmed his will by a codicil dated July 12, 1888:—Held, that the confirmation by codicil amounted to a republication of the will; that the reference to "legacy duty" must, under those circumstances, be construed as a falsa demonstratio for "succession duty"; and that the "succession duty" must, accordingly, be paid by the annuitants. Rayer, In re; Rayer v. Rayer, 72 L. J. Ch. 280; [1903] 1 Ch. 685; 87 L. T. 712; 51 W. R. 538—Farwell, J.

Policy of Life Insurance—Premiums—Marriage Settlement—Predecessor—Disposition.—In 1853 a policy of insurance for 4,000*l.* was effected on his own life by A in contemplation of his second marriage, and by a contemporaneous marriage settlement C (the mother of his first wife), who was entitled for her life to the interest upon certain securities representing 3,500*l.* late currency, and A, who was entitled to the interest on the same securities for his life from the death of C, joined in assigning their interest in these securities during the life of A to trustees upon trust during the life of A to pay out of the annual proceeds thereof the premiums on the said policy of insurance, which, by the settlement, was assigned by A to the same trustees upon the trusts of the settlement. The settlement also contained a personal covenant by A with the trustees to pay the annual premiums upon the policy. The premiums were (it was assumed) paid by the trustees out of the annual proceeds of the trust securities. A died in 1876, leaving a widow and children of the second marriage, and C died in 1880, a stranger in blood to these children:—Held, that C was not a “predecessor” within the meaning of section 2 of the Succession Duty Act, 1853, and that succession duty at the rate of 10*l.* per cent. in respect of a moiety of the proceeds of the said policy of insurance, as upon a succession from C, was not payable under sections 2 and 13 of the same Act. Att.-Gen. v. Riall, [1906] 2 Ir. R. 122—K.B. D.

Purchaser for Valuable Consideration—Trustees of Marriage Settlement—Statute of Limitations.]

—In 1857 on the death of A lands became the subject of succession duty. B, the successor, died in 1867, having by will made in 1863 charged the lands with 5,000*l.* in favour of C. In 1872 C, on his marriage, assigned the charge for 5,000*l.* to the trustees of his settlement, on the ordinary trusts of a marriage settlement. The lands were afterwards sold at the suit of an incumbrancer, and the Inland Revenue Commissioners claimed to have the succession duty which became payable in 1857 satisfied out of the proceeds of the sale in priority to the trustees of the marriage settlement of 1872:—Held, that the trustees of the marriage settlement were purchasers for valuable consideration within the meaning of section 12 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1889, that as against them the succession duty was barred after the lapse of twelve years, and that they were accordingly entitled to priority over the Inland Revenue Commissioners. Donelan's Estate, In re, [1902] 1 Ir. R. 109—C.A.

Acceleration of Interest.]—By settlement certain property was conveyed to trustees for such uses as the settlor and his son should, with the consent of the son's wife, appoint, and in default of appointment to the use of the settlor for life, and after his death to the settlor's son in fee. The settlor and his son with the consent of the son's wife appointed the property to the son, his heirs, and assigns for his absolute use and benefit:—Held (PHILLIMORE, J., dissenting), that succession duty was payable by the son on the death of his father, inasmuch as under section 15 of the Succession Duty Act, 1853, the former's interest had been accelerated. Att.-Gen. v. Selborne (Earl), 65 J. P. 342—D. Reversed, C.A. See col. 2097.

Property Situate Abroad—Gift by Foreigner to

English Company.]—By an indenture made between the owner of certain property situated abroad and the defendants, reciting that he had agreed to give and the defendants had agreed to accept the stocks, shares, bonds, and securities specified in the schedule on the terms therein-after expressed, it was witnessed that the defendants would, during the life of the donor, permit the donor or his agents to receive the income of the investments, and would after his death apply the stocks, shares, and securities for the benefit of the Russian Jews generally and principally for the promotion of their emigration and settlement in North and South America. The defendants were a company registered in England under the Companies Acts, and having a registered office in London where the register of members was kept. The annual general meetings of the company were held in England, but some of the business of the company was transacted at the donor's house in Paris. The defendants paid to the donor the income of the investments during his life. He died in 1896 domiciled in Austria:—Held, that the defendants were liable to pay estate duty under the Finance Act, 1894, and succession duty under the Succession Duty Act, 1853, in respect of the value of the stocks, shares, bonds, and securities specified in the schedule to the indenture. Att.-Gen. v. Jewish Colonisation Association, 70 L. J. K.B. 101; [1901] 1 K.B. 123; 83 L. T. 561; 49 W. R. 230; 65 J. P. 21—C.A.

Executor's Right of Retainer—Plene Administravit.]—A debt in respect of which an executor has exercised his right of retainer must be treated as a debt paid by him, and not as money remaining in his hands. Where therefore an executor has, without notice of any claim for succession duty, fully administered his testator's estate, retaining a portion of the assets in payment of a debt to himself, a subsequent claim for succession duty cannot be enforced against the portion of the assets so retained by the executor. Fludyer, In re; Wingfield v. Erskine, 67 L. J. Ch. 620; [1898] 2 Ch. 562; 79 L. T. 298; 47 W. R. 5—Romer, J.

5. EXCISE.

Auctioneer's Licence—“Same town or place.”]—The respondent, an auctioneer, as agent for T., sold certain wine at Sydenham, in the county of London. T. was duly licensed to sell intoxicating liquors in the City of London, in the same county:—Held, that Sydenham and the City of London are not “in the same town or place” within section 1 of the Revenue Act (No. 2), 1864. Casey v. Rose, 82 L. T. 616; 19 Cox C.C. 510—D.

Beer—Conditional Contract of Sale—Incidence of Tax.]—By section 20 of the Customs Consolidation Act, 1876, as applied by section 8 of the Finance Act, 1900, the new excise duty on beer imposed by the latter Act may be added to the contract price of the beer where the contract or agreement for the sale or delivery of the beer duty-paid was made before the passing of the Act. An agreement under which the purchaser is bound to buy his beer from a certain brewer, provided the latter is willing to sell it to him duty-paid, at a certain price, is not a contract for the sale or delivery of the beer within section 20. The contract for sale in such case is made only when the order for the delivery of beer is given to the brewer in pursuance of the conditional agreement, and if such order was given after the passing of the Finance Act, 1900, the brewer is not entitled under section 8 to add the new duty to the price payable by the purchaser though the conditional agreement was made before it. Newbridge Rhondda Brewery Co. v. Evans, 86 L. T. 453—D.

"Carriage"—Motor Bicycle.]—A motor bicycle is, within the meaning of section 4 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888, a "carriage" for which a licence is required, as being a carriage drawn or propelled upon a road by mechanical power. O'Donoghue v. Moon, 90 L. T. 843; 68 J. P. 349; 20 T. L. R. 495—D.

—Governess Cart—Vehicle "constructed or adapted for use" solely for Conveyance of Goods.]—Upon the hearing of an information charging the respondent with keeping a carriage without a licence, it was proved that he drove a pony attached to a governess cart. The respondent gave evidence that the vehicle was used solely for the purposes of his business of a wardrobe dealer, and that he never used it for pleasure, but only drove in it to private houses to call for and bring away goods after receiving orders:—Held, that the vehicle did not come within the exception to the definition of "carriage" in section 4, sub-section 3 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888, of "a waggon, cart, or other such vehicle, which is constructed or adapted for use, and is used, solely for the conveyance of any goods or burden in the course of trade or husbandry." Moore v. Lewis, 75 L. J. K.B. 89; [1906] 1 K.B. 27; 93 L. T. 812; 54 W. R. 194; 70 J. P. 26; 22 T. L. R. 51—D.

The word "solely" in that clause applies to the preceding words "constructed or adapted for use." Id.

A governess cart that was used for collecting debts and obtaining orders by a travelling upholsterer, and which was used for the conveyance of goods and solely in connection with the business, is not a vehicle "constructed or adapted for use and is used solely for the conveyance of any goods . . . in the course of trade," and so exempt from requiring a carriage licence. Whitham v. Morris, 93 L. T. 813; 70 J. P. 11; 21 Cox C.C. 64—D.

—Cars on Light Railway—"Railway"—General Enactment relating to Railways.]—A light railway constructed under a Light Railway Order made pursuant to the Light Railways Act, 1896, is a "railway," and therefore the cars running thereon are, by sub-section 3 of section 4 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888, exempt from the Excise duty on carriages. Wakefield and District Light Railway v. Wakefield Corporation (76 L. J. K.B. 634; [1907] 2 K.B. 256) applied. Att.-Gen. v. Yorkshire (Woollen) District Electric Tramways, 77 L. J. K.B. 33; [1907] 2 K.B. 991; 97 L. T. 343; 71 J. P. 506; 5 L. G. R. 1098; 23 T. L. R. 712; 5 L. G. R. 1098—Bray, J.

—Farm Cart Carrying Labourers.]—The

respondent, who was a farmer, owned a cart, which he was in the habit of using for the conveyance of farm produce, and also for occasionally driving his farm hands to and from their work. The cart was once used for conveying, among others, a person who was on a visit to the farmer, and who had during his visit assisted in the farm work. Upon an information charging the respondent with keeping a carriage without a licence, the quarter sessions held that farm labourers driven to and from their work were "burden in course of . . . husbandry" within the exception in section 4 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888, and dismissed the information:—Held, that, upon the facts, the quarter sessions were right in refusing to convict. Latchford v. Kelsey, 96 L. T. 620; 71 J. P. 225; 23 T. L. R. 416—D.

—Penalty—First Offence.]—Section 4 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, as far as reduction of fines is concerned, applies only to first offences. Fines for second and subsequent offences are regulated by 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 53, s. 78, under which such fines cannot be reduced below one-fourth of their full amount as imposed by statute. To constitute a second offence under 32 & 33 Vict. c. 14, s. 27, it is not necessary to be convicted twice in the same year of keeping a carriage without having a licence for that year. A conviction in one year of keeping a carriage without a licence for that year, following a conviction in a previous year for keeping a carriage without a licence for that year, is a second conviction for the same offence. Phillips v. Stephens, 79 L. T. 280; 62 J. P. 789; 19 Cox C.C. 172—D.

"Male Servant"—Apprentice not Included.]—An apprentice is not a male servant within the meaning of sections 18 and 19 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1869. Horan v. Hayhoe, 73 L. J. K.B. 133; [1904] 1 K. B. 288; 90 L. T. 12; 52 W. R. 281; 68 J. P. 102; 20 T. L. R. 118—D.

— "Gardener"—"Under-gardener"—Employed "in any capacity involving the duties" of Gardener or Under-gardener—Spade work in Garden.]—Whether a workman employed all his time in working in a garden is or is not a gardener or under-gardener or a person employed in any capacity involving the duties of a gardener or under-gardener, within 32 & 33 Vict. c. 14, ss. 18 and 19 (3), is a question of fact to be decided by the Justices on the evidence submitted to them. Dillon v. Bath (Marquis), 81 L. T. 186; 63 J. P. 597—D.

The mere employment in a garden of a man doing work which a single-handed gardener would have to do does not necessarily make the man a gardener, and Justices, in deciding the point, are entitled to consider whether or not the work done by him is work for the proper execution of which skill in gardening is required. Id.

—Steward of Working Men's Club.]—The respondents, the committee of a working men's club, had power to discharge the steward, who had to be a member of the club, and was paid by the committee 38s. a week. He served at a bar at a window, but did not leave the bar to wait on the members, but passed what was ordered through the window. Besides accounting for moneys he received, this was the only service rendered by him. No licence had been taken out by the defendants in respect of such steward:—Held, that he was a "male servant" within section 19, sub-section 3 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1869, and that the respondents should have taken out a licence in respect of him. Solomon v. Cropper, 79 L. T. 301; 62 J. P. 758—D.

— Waiter—Persons Employed at Shop—Carrying up Meals for Employees and Waiting on them.—The appellant company owned large premises where they carried on business, and they employed a large number of assistants. The assistants were served daily with meals on the premises, and the company employed a certain number of men, whose duty it was to carry the joints, vegetables, dishes, plates, &c., from the kitchen to the room where the meals were eaten, to wait on the assistants at the meals, to clear the table and lay it for the next meal, and to clean the knives and plates. These men did not sleep on the premises, but came early in the morning and left in the evening, and after leaving they were free from the company's control, and might engage in other employments. None of the directors, managers, or shareholders of the company resided on the premises:—Held, that these men were not "male servants" within section 18 of the Revenue Act, 1869, as defined by section 19, sub-section 3 of the Act. Whiteley v. Burns, 77 L. J. K.B. 467; [1908] 1 K.B. 705; 72 J. P. 127—D.

— "Manufacture"—Increasing the Sweetness of Saccharin—Chemical Process.—The appellants, who were dealers in saccharin, having purchased certain 330 saccharin, subjected it to a chemical process, the result of which was to convert it into 550 saccharin—an article possessing much greater sweetness than 330 saccharin. The appellants at the time they so treated the 330 saccharin had not in force an Excise licence for the manufacture of saccharin:—Held (RIDLEY, J., dissenting), that the appellants had not manufactured saccharin within the meaning of section 9 of the Finance Act, 1901, and section 2 of the Revenue Act, 1903, and that they were, therefore, not bound to take out an Excise licence. McNicol v. Pinch, 75 L. J. K.B. 741; [1906] 2 K. B. 352; 95 L. T. 530; 70 J. P. 438; 21 Cox C.C. 299; 22 T. L. R. 654—D.

— Plate—Duty on—Coupons Delivered with Packets of Tea—Prizes in Exchange for Coupons—"Trading in or selling" Plate.—The appellants, a firm of tea merchants, sold packets of tea, with which were delivered coupons entitling the purchasers, or other persons into whose hands the coupons might come, to participate in the chance of obtaining prizes offered by the appellants. Some of the prizes which were offered and awarded were gold watches:—Held, that this amounted to a "trading in or selling" of plate within the meaning of section 1 of the Revenue Act, 1867, and consequently that the appellants were liable to the penalty imposed by section 3 of that Act for dealing in plate without being licensed so to do. Scott v. Solomon, 74 L. J. K.B. 262; [1905] 1 K.B. 577; 92 L. T. 325; 53 W. R. 459; 69 J. P. 137; 21 T. L. R. 230—D.

— Public-house—Billiard Saloon in Flat above Public-house—No Internal Communication.—Immediately above, and in the same building with a public-house, was a flat which was let to the occupier of the public-house, and was occupied by him as a billiard saloon. The upper flat did not have internal communication with the public-house premises, but separate access was obtained thereto by means of an outside stair:—Held, that, in charging licence duty the Inland Revenue Commissioners were not entitled to aggregate the value of the billiard saloon with the value of the public-house premises. Paterson v. Lord Advocate, 8 F. 880—Ct. of Sess.

— Spirits in Bond—Licence for the Sale of—"Dealer in spirits."—The appellant, a ship store merchant, rented a Customs bond in which he kept a quantity of spirits. He sold twelve quart bottles of these spirits to the captain of a foreign vessel in an English port. The goods were conveyed to the ship in the ordinary course, and were there sealed up by a Customs official. The seal was not broken until the vessel was at sea outside territorial waters:—Held, that the appellant was a "dealer in spirits" within the meaning of section 2 of the Excise Licences Act, 1825, and must take out an excise licence. Tinwell v. Mayhew, 73 L. J. K.B. 699; [1904] 2 K.B. 790; 91 L. T. 145; 53 W. R. 14; 68 J. P. 350; 20 T. L. R. 488—D.

— Possession of Spirits Exuding from Wood of Empty Casks—When Offence Committed—Extraction of Spirits Absorbed in the Wood.—Section 4, sub-section 1 of the Finance Act, 1893, does not include as an offence the innocent possession of spirits which, having been absorbed, have afterwards exuded from the wood of empty casks without any active or permissive process to lead to the extraction of the spirits. For the purposes of the section "extraction" is the drawing-out of the spirit from the wood by some process natural or artificial, as distinguished from the natural exudation or sweating to which empty casks are liable. Robinson v. Dixon, 72 L. J. K.B. 717; [1903] 2 K.B. 701; 89 L. T. 132; 52 W. R. 8; 67 J. P. 386; 20 Cox C.C. 521—D.

— Soliciting Orders at Unlicensed House—Executing Orders at Licensed House—Penalty.—A grocer carried on business at two sets of premises, at one of which he was licensed to sell beer by retail, and at the other of which he was not so licensed. At the unlicensed premises he solicited orders which he executed at the licensed premises:—Held, that he was rightly convicted of soliciting orders without having in force a proper Excise licence authorising him so to do within the meaning of section 17 of the Revenue Act, 1867. Elhas v. Dunlop, 75 L. J. K.B. 168; [1906] 1 K.B. 266; 94 L. T. 164; 70 J. P. 103; 22 T. L. R. 162; 21 Cox C.C. 105—D.

6. INCOME TAX.

(a) Exemption.

— Crown—County and Municipal Buildings.—(1) A hall in the Sheriff Court buildings of Lanark used for purposes of county administration, and occasionally for the holding of police and magistrates' Courts; (2) offices in the same building occupied by the town clerk; and (3) offices occupied by the Procurator-Fiscal of the Sheriff Court, used by him for private as well as official business, were held assessable to income tax in respect that they were not used and occupied exclusively for the service of the Crown. Surveyor of Taxes v. Smith, 4 F. 31—Ct. of Sess.

Limited Company.—A limited company is not entitled to exemption from payment of income tax under section 163 of the Income Tax Act, 1842, and section 34 of the Finance Act, 1894, notwithstanding that the aggregate annual amount of its income does not exceed 160*l.* Myham v. Market Harborough Advertiser Co., 74 L. J. K.B. 205; [1905] 1 K.B. 708; 92 L. T. 94; 53 W. R. 478; 21 T. L. R. 201—Phillimore, J.

Society or Association.—The area of exemption under the Income Tax Acts is not co-extensive with the area of charge, but is confined to persons strictly so called. Thus the respondents, an unincorporated society, with an income of less than 160*l.*, were held not to be entitled to the exemption conferred by the Finance Act, 1894. Curtis v. Old Monkland Conservative Association, 75 L. J. P.C. 31; [1906] A.C. 86; 94 L. T. 7; 22 T. L. R. 177—H.L. (Sc.)

Unincorporated Society.—An unincorporated society whose aggregate annual income is less than 160*l.* is entitled to exemption from income tax. Inland Revenue v. Old Monkland Conservative Association, 7 F. 119—Ct. of Sess.

Untruly Declaring Income—Penalty.—A person found guilty under section 166 of the Income Tax Act, 1842, of untruly declaring his income is liable in the forfeiture mentioned in the section, although no exemption or abatement has in fact been allowed. The amount upon which the treble duty is to be calculated is the person's whole income, including income upon which duty has already been deducted or paid. Lord Advocate v. M'Laren, 7 F. 934—Ct. of Sess.

Per LORD KINNEAR.—To involve liability for the penalties specified in section 166 the declaration must be not merely inaccurate, but false and untruthful. Ib.

(b) What Property Liable to.

What is Income Tax.—Income tax is one tax, not a collection of taxes essentially distinct. There is no difference in kind between the duties assessed under Schedule D and those assessed under Schedule A or any of the other schedules. London County Council v. Att.-Gen., 70 L. J. K.B. 77; [1901] A.C. 26; 83 L. T. 605; 49 W. R. 686; 65 J.P. 227—H.L. (E.)

Interest on Money Borrowed—"Payable out of profits or gains brought into charge to such tax"—Rents—Interest on Money Lent.—By section 24, sub-section 3 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888, "upon payment of any interest of money or annuities charged with income tax under Schedule D, and not payable or wholly payable out of profits or gains brought into charge to such tax," the person paying such moneys is to deduct the tax and render an account to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue "of the amount so deducted or of the amount deducted out of so much of the interest or annuities as is not paid out of profits or gains brought into charge":—Held, that the words "charged with income tax under Schedule D" mean "charged under Schedule D with income tax," and the words "such tax" mean the tax which is called in the Act "income tax"; and that the appellants were entitled to the income tax deducted under Schedule A from the rents paid by their tenants on so much of the dividends on their Consolidated Stock as was paid out of the said rents, as well as to the tax deducted from interest paid under Schedule D. Ib.

"Person residing in the United Kingdom"—"Trade exercised within the United Kingdom"—Company—Incorporation and Registration Abroad—Head Office Abroad—General Meetings Abroad—Office in England—Directors' Meetings in England and Abroad—Control and Management in England.—A foreign company may be a "person residing in the United Kingdom" within the meaning of section 2, Schedule D, Income Tax Act, 1853, notwithstanding that its head office is situated abroad and its general meetings are held abroad. A company incorporated and registered abroad, which has an office in London and directors living in the United Kingdom, is resident here within the meaning of the Income Tax Act, 1853, s. 2, Sched. D, and liable to income tax in this country. De Beers Consolidated Mines, Lim. v. Howe, 75 L. J. K.B. 358; [1906] A.C. 455; 95 L. T. 221; 22 T. L. R. 756; 13 Manson, 394—H.L. (E.)

A company incorporated and registered in South Africa had its head office in Kimberley, in the Cape of Good Hope, and an office in London. The general meetings were held in Kimberley and the general accounts were kept there. Any member might name an address in South Africa to be registered as his address for service of notices, and if he did not do this he was deemed to have waived service. The company owned extensive diamond mines and property in South Africa. Its profits were made from the sale of diamonds to a syndicate of diamond merchants in London under contracts of sale, executed in London, which provided for the sale of diamonds with delivery at Kimberley, to the syndicate in specified amounts at specified prices with various options, and entitled the company to share in certain profits made by the syndicate on re-sale, and contained terms regulating the output of diamonds, the effect of which was to control the diamond trade of the world. The management of the company was entrusted to three life governors and sixteen ordinary directors, of whom four had to reside in England. Two of the life governors and nine of the ordinary directors resided in the United Kingdom; the chairman and six ordinary directors resided in the Cape Colony. Meetings of directors were held weekly in Kimberley and London with an exchange of minutes between the two places. The proceedings of the board of directors sitting in Kimberley and in London were regulated by by-laws, providing (1) that the course of business respecting the technical management of the company's work, payment of wages, &c., should be determined upon by the directors in Kimberley, they consulting the directors in London upon matters of exceptional importance; (2) that all other expenditure exceeding 25,000*l.* should be determined upon by the majority of all the directors, but the directors in Kimberley, with the sanction of the chairman, might in special circumstances incur an expenditure not exceeding at one time 50,000*l.* in addition, but that no further expenditure should be incurred unless the authority of the Kimberley directors was confirmed by the majority of all the directors; (3) that the policy of the board respecting the disposal of diamonds and other assets, the working or development of the mines, application of profits, and appointment of directors should be determined by the majority of all the directors; (5) that matters to be determined by the majority of all the directors should be determined by resolution to be submitted to meetings of directors in Kimberley and London, and that the ultimate decision should be in accordance with the vote of the majority thus ascertained; (6) that except as before provided the directors in Kimberley and the directors in London should have equal and concurrent authority. Matters under by-law 8 were always dealt with in London; as regards such matters and matters under by-law 5 the majority of directors voting was always in London. The directors in London, under powers conferred upon the directors generally, had appointed four committees in London to deal with various departments of the company's business:—Held, first, that the company was "a person residing in the United Kingdom"; and secondly, that it exercised its trade within the United Kingdom, so as on either ground to be chargeable with income tax under section 2, Schedule D of the Income Tax Act, 1853. Ib. S.C. in C.A., 74 L. J. K.B. 934; [1905] 2 K.B. 612; 93 L. T. 63; 54 W. R. 9; 21 T. L. R. 578.

Company — Incorporation and Registration Abroad—Head Office in England—General Meetings—Directors' Meetings—Company's Business.]—A company may be a "person residing in the United Kingdom" within the meaning of section 2, Schedule D of the Income Tax Act, 1853, notwithstanding that it is incorporated and registered abroad. Goers v. Bell, 73 L. J. K.B. 448; [1904] 2 K.B. 136; 90 L. T. 675; 53 W. R. 64; 20 T. L. R. 848—Channell, J.

A company was incorporated and registered abroad for the purpose of prospecting and developing mining properties abroad and of floating companies for working them and of making a market for the shares in those companies. The general meetings of the company were held abroad. The head office was in London. The directors had power to appoint agencies for managing the affairs of the company abroad. The meetings of the directors, some of whom resided abroad and some in the United Kingdom, were held in London. The accounts were made up and audited, the dividends were declared, and the books of the company were kept in London. The greater part of its capital was invested abroad. The greater part of its business was done in London:—Held, that the company was a "person residing in the United Kingdom" within the meaning of section 2, Schedule D of the Act. Ib.

Company Registered in England—Business Carried on and Profits Made Abroad—Profits Partly Transmitted to England.]—An English company, registered under the Companies Acts, and having its registered office in London, was formed for the purpose of acquiring the shares in an American brewery company, and for the purpose of carrying on a brewery business. The vendors of the American company sold to the English company all the shares except three in the American company, and all the personal property of the American company was transferred to the English company. In order to avoid any difficulties with regard to the American laws of real property, the American company was kept on foot. The English company found the capital for carrying on the brewery business, which was wholly carried on in America. All the profits were earned in America. The directors of the English company had the entire right of control of the affairs of the American company and of the staff and business in America, with full power to appoint or dismiss any of the managers or officials of the business in America. In fact, the directors of the English company delegated these powers to the managers of the brewery in America, who were also the directors of the American company, and appointed them managers of the business in America. A portion of the profits earned was transmitted to England for the expenses incurred in England and for distribution amongst the English shareholders. The rest of the profits remained in America, and were distributed among American shareholders:—Held, that the business was in fact partly carried on in England, and therefore the English company was liable to pay income tax upon the whole of the profits earned by the business, and not merely upon that part of the profits which was transmitted to England. San Paulo (Brazilian) Railway v. Carter (65 L. J. Q.B. 161; [1896] A.C. 31) followed. Apthorpe v. Peter Schoenhofen Brewing Co., 80 L. T. 395—C.A.

Company Resident in England—Business Carried On and Profits Made Abroad—Profits Partly Distributed Abroad and Partly in England to English Shareholders.]—An English company registered under the Companies Acts, and with a registered office in London, was formed to acquire the whole or any part of the capital stock of the St. L. B. A. in America, to carry on the business of brewers, and for other purposes. It acquired 50,872 shares out of 50,886 of the St. L. B. A. The brewing business upon which the whole of the profits depend is carried on exclusively at St. Louis in America under the immediate management of the directors of the American corporation. These directors in the printed reports of the English company are termed the "board of management in St. Louis." The banking account of the American corporation and all the books are kept at St. Louis. An English accountant is appointed by the appellant company, who proceeds to America at the end of each financial year and audits the accounts of the eighteen breweries at St. Louis. At the same time a balance-sheet of the American corporation and a profit and loss account are prepared shewing the result of the brewing business for the past year. A copy is forwarded by the American corporation to the appellant company, and the directors of the appellant company then consider the accounts and agree upon the rate of dividend which they consider should be declared. They communicate their decision to the American corporation, who then have always declared a dividend upon the shares of the American corporation at the rate mentioned. The directors of the American corporation having declared the dividend, the directors of the appellant company then declare a dividend upon the shares of the appellant company. No dividend warrant is issued by the American corporation. Each shareholder, upon production of his certificate, is entitled to be paid the amount due to him. The amount of dividend on the shares held by the appellant company is sent over in bulk by telegram, so far as it is required for the English shareholders and for the current expenses in England. Such portion of the dividend as is required for American shareholders is retained in America by the American company and distributed there direct:—Held, that this was a business carried on in America by the English company, and that they were therefore liable to pay income tax on the whole of the profits. St. Louis Breweries v. Apthorpe, 79 L. T. 551; 47 W. R. 334; 63 J. P. 135—D.

Company—Registration and Registered Office Abroad—Control and Direction in United Kingdom.—A shipping company was registered in New Zealand, and had its registered office in that country. Its head office in the United Kingdom controlled and directed the business of the company in the United Kingdom and elsewhere:—Held, that the company was rightly assessed to income tax under Schedule D as residing within the United Kingdom. New Zealand Shipping Co. v. Stephens, 96 L. T. 50; 23 T. L. R. 213—Bray, J. Affirmed in C.A., 24 T. L. R. 172.

Foreign Company—Shares held by English Company—Control by English Company—Liability of English Company to be Taxed on Profits of Foreign Company.—A company was incorporated in England, and registered under the Companies Acts, to acquire (inter alia) not less than 95 per cent., and did in fact acquire 98 per cent., of the share capital of a foreign company, the remaining 2 per cent. being held by shareholders abroad who were independent of the English company:—Held, that the right of the English company as regards the profits of the foreign company was a right to receive dividends only, that the English company was not the principal of the foreign company so as to make the latter their mere agent (the control of the English company over the business of the foreign company being a control as a shareholder only), or to make the business of the foreign company the business of the English company; and, consequently, that the latter could not be taxed on the profits made by the former. Kodak, Lim. v. Clark, 72 L. J. K.B. 369; [1903] 1 K.B. 505; 88 L. T. 155; 51 W. R. 459; 67 J. P. 213—C.A.

— Control by English Company—Part of Profits of Foreign Company Set Aside for Depreciation—Liability of English Company to be Taxed on the Profits of Foreign Company so Set Aside.—A company was incorporated in England and registered under the Companies Acts to acquire the business and assets of another English company which was largely interested in a German company. The new company, in fact, acquired all the shares in the German company, and nominated the officers of the German company. The English company in its report for the year ending June, 1901, included a sum of 79,348l., the profits of the German company, but of that amount 15,000l. was, in accordance with the regulations of the German company, transferred to a depreciation fund with reference to patents:—Held, that the business of the German company was not the business of the English company; that the English company was only entitled as a shareholder of the German company to the dividends which were declared; that the profits of the German company were not the profits of the English company, and that consequently the English company was not liable to pay income tax on the sum so set aside by the German company for the depreciation of patents. Gramophone and Typewriter, Lim. v. Stanley, 75 L. J. K.B. 1031; [1906] 2 K.B. 856; 95 L. T. 461—Walton, J. And see infra, FOREIGN SECURITIES.

Residence in United Kingdom.—A British merchant carried on business in Madras, and usually resided there, but his wife, with the children, lived for a number of years in the United Kingdom, occupying latterly a house belonging to her and purchased with his and her money, and he resided with them for months at a time when he came to the United Kingdom, as he did nearly every year. In the year of assessment ending April 5, 1903, he was never in the United Kingdom. In a question as to his liability to be assessed for income tax for that year,—Held, that he was not a person "residing in the United Kingdom" within the meaning of the Income Tax Act, 1853, and therefore not liable to assessment. Turnbull v. Inland Revenue, 7 F. 1—Ot. of Sess.

An American citizen, having his ordinary residence, and practising his profession, in New York, held for some years a lease of a furnished shooting-lodge and shootings in Scotland. He resided at the shooting-lodge for two months in each year, and the lodge was ready for his use at any time. His residence in New York was also kept open for his use at any time:—Held, that he was a person "residing in the United Kingdom" (within the meaning of section 2, Schedule D of the Income Tax Act, 1853, and was therefore liable to assessment for income tax, and that he did not fall within the exemption in section 39 of the Income Tax Act, 1842, of a person in Great Britain "for some temporary purpose only, and not with any view or intent of establishing his residence therein." Inland Revenue v. Cadwalader, 7 F. 146—Ot. of Sess.

Agent—Underwriting Transactions—Agent in Receipt of Profits Belonging to other Persons—List of Names and Addresses of Constituents and Profits of Each.—A firm acted as underwriters, both in their own name and for other persons, under a mandate, by which they were authorised, as agents for these persons, to underwrite in their names and for their account a sum not exceeding a certain amount on each risk, on such terms as the firm thought fit. The firm under their contract at the end of each year drew out a statement of the balance of profit and loss on the underwriting transactions on behalf of each of the persons for whom they underwrote, and, if there was a balance of profit, handed it over to him, under deduction of a commission and of a sum which, it was stipulated, should remain in their hands as security:—Held, on the construction of sections 42 and 51 of the Income Tax Act, 1842, that the firm were bound to deliver to the assessor of income tax a list of the persons for whom they conducted the business of underwriting, with the names and addresses of such persons, and to include in such list the amount of profit belonging to each person. Lord Advocate v. Gibb, 8 F. 887—Ct. of Sess.

— Foreign Principal—Sales through Agent in United Kingdom—Exercising Trade within United Kingdom.—Where goods are consigned by a foreign merchant to an agent in the United Kingdom merely for the purpose of sale, the foreign merchant exercises a trade within the United Kingdom within the meaning of section 2 of the Income Tax Act, 1853, and is chargeable with income tax in the name of such agent; and it makes no difference that the agent fixes the prices and sells the goods in his own name. Watson v. Sandie, 67 L. J. Q.B. 319; [1898] 1 Q.B. 326; 77 L. T. 528; 46 W. R. 202—D.

— "Almshouse"—Income Tax—Exemptions from Payment—Inhabited-house Duty—"House provided for the reception or relief of poor persons."—An institution was founded and endowed, and conveyed by the founder to trustees upon trust that it might at all times thereafter be used as a home for ladies in reduced circumstances. By the rules of the institution a person to be an inmate must be fifty years old or upwards, and must be possessed of a fixed yearly income of not less than 25*l.* or more than 55*l.* Each inmate was entitled to the use of the common room and to the exclusive use of one or two rooms, and to be supplied with coals, gas, and attendance free of cost, but was required to provide her own furniture, food, clothing, washing, and medical attendance:—Held, that the institution was an "almshouse" within the meaning of the Income Tax Act, 1842, s. 61, No. 6, clause 2, and a "house provided for the reception or relief of poor persons" within the meaning of the House Tax Act, 1808, Sched. B, Case IV., and was therefore exempt from property tax and inhabited-house duty under those enactments respectively. Mary Clark Home (Trustees) v. Anderson, 73 L. J. K.B. 806; [1904] 2 K.B. 645; 91 L. T. 457; 20 T. L. R. 626—Channell, J.

— "Annuity"—Purchase of Railway—Payment by an "Annuity" for a Term of Years—Capital and Income.—The Government of India, in exercise of powers contained in a contract made in 1849 between the East India Co. and the Great Indian Peninsular Railway Co., purchased the railway, the purchase-money to be paid by an "annuity" during the residue of the term limited in the contract, and the interest to be calculated at 2*l.* 17*s.* per cent.:—Held, that the word "annuity" was not used in the sense in which it is used in the Income Tax Acts, but constituted a form of payment, with interest on the amount from time to time outstanding, of an antecedent debt, and that income tax was only payable upon so much of the annuity as represented interest. Secretary of State in Council of India v. Scoble, 72 L. J. K.B. 617; [1903] A.C. 293; 89 L. T. 1; 51 W. R. 675—H.L. (E.)

— Purchase of Indian Railway—Annuity Consisting partly of Interest and partly of Sum to Produce Sinking Fund to Replace Capital.—The Secretary of State for India was empowered under certain contracts to purchase the plaintiff company's railways at the expiration of a specified number of years, either for a gross sum or for an annuity for a term of years. Before the period arrived at which the option to purchase was exercisable, negotiations were entered into between the parties for the purchase of the railways, and an agreement was arrived at, subsequently sanctioned by Parliament, by which the Secretary of State purchased the railways for an annuity terminable at the end of seventy-three years, and payable half-yearly to the plaintiffs, the annuity being 5*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* for each 100*l.* of capital stock commuted at a price of 125*l.* This annuity was calculated on the basis of 5*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*, part thereof, being interest at the rate of 4*l.* 6*s.* per cent. on the 125*l.*, and of a sum of 5*s.* other part thereof, being the amount required to be set aside and invested half-yearly at a like rate of interest in order to produce, by means of a sinking fund, the capital sum of 125*l.* at the end of the seventy-three years:—Held, first, that the annuity was partly a payment of capital by instalments and partly a payment of interest on the unpaid capital, and that income tax was payable only upon so much of it as represented interest on unpaid capital; and secondly, that in estimating in each half-yearly payment the amount on which income tax was payable, the proportion representing capital must be taken as continually increasing, and the proportion representing interest on unpaid capital as continually decreasing. Secretary of State of India v. Scoble (72 L. J. K.B. 617; [1903] A.C. 299) applied. East India Railway v. Secretary of State for India, 74 L. J. K.B. 779; [1905] 2 K.B. 413; 93 L. T. 220; 54 W. R. 4; 21 T. L. R. 606—C.A.

— Deduction of Tax by Person Liable.—Under a deed of separation a husband bound himself to make payment of a free yearly allowance of 1,000*l.* to his wife. The husband's whole income consisted of—first, an annuity of 3,000*l.* paid to him by his father in terms of the son's marriage contract, and secondly, sums voluntarily paid to him by his father. The husband having deducted income tax from his wife's annuity, she challenged his right to do so on the ground that her annuity had been taxed at its source, the father having paid the tax on his own income, but deducted nothing therefrom from the sums paid by him to his son, and the Crown having made no claim on the son for income tax:—Held, that the wife's annuity being payable as a personal debt or obligation in virtue of a contract, the husband was entitled to deduct the income tax therefrom, and that the question whether he was bound to account for it to the Crown was a question between him and the Crown, with which the wife had no concern. Dalrymple v. Dalrymple, 4 F. 545—Ct. of Sess.

Semble, the father was entitled to deduct income tax from the son's annuity, and that if he did not do so the amount was a gift to the son. Ib.

— Purchase of Property—Deduction from Purchase Price—Lump Sum.—The plaintiff, who was the owner of a term of years in a certain property, which was let for the whole term less twenty-one days at an annual gross rental of 1,925*l.*, entered into two contemporaneous deeds with the defendants, who were his sub-lessees. By the first deed he assigned to the defendants his reversion in the property in consideration of 1,000*l.* and the deed of covenant of even date. By the latter deed the defendants covenanted to pay the plaintiff the annual sum of 1,625*l.*, which was the net rent the plaintiff had previously received from the property. No gross sum was fixed upon as the purchase-price of the property. The defendants having in making these annual payments of 1,625*l.* deducted income tax therefrom, the plaintiff sought to recover the sums so deducted:—Held, that the defendants were right in deducting income tax from the annual payments as falling within section 40 of the Income Tax Act, 1853. Chadwick v. Pearl Life Assurance Co., 74 L. J. K.B. 671; [1905] 2 K.B. 507; 93 L. T. 25; 54 W. R. 78; 21 T. L. R. 456—Walton, J.

— Agreement for Payment of—“Clear of all deductions”—Right of Party Making Payment to Deduct Tax.—By an agreement for separation between husband and wife the husband undertook to make his wife, during their joint lives, an annual allowance payable quarterly in advance “clear of all deductions” and to secure the annuity on his estates:—Held, that the agreement came within sections 102 and 103 of the Income Tax Act, 1842, and that the husband was entitled, and bound to make, and the wife bound to allow, a deduction of income tax in respect of each future instalment of the annuity. Shrewsbury v. Shrewsbury, 22 T. L. R. 598—Kennedy, J.

Bank—Purchase of Business of Another Bank—Succession—Profits.—In 1899 the County of Stafford Bank, which carried on business at Wolverhampton only, sold as from December 31, 1895, the whole of its business, with its premises, furniture, fixtures, and the assets shewn in certain balance-sheets, for 225,000*l.* to the National Provincial Bank of England, which carried on business at a head office in London and numerous branches in England and Wales. The business of the purchased bank was carried on as usual, but for the benefit and at the expense of the purchasing bank, until the close of business on March 5, 1899. On March 6 the same premises were opened as their Wolverhampton branch by the purchasing bank, who had never previously carried on any business at Wolverhampton. The manager and the whole of the staff were taken over by and continued in the employ of the purchasing bank. From December 31, 1898, the profits, if any, earned at the Wolverhampton branch, merged in and formed part of the profits of the purchasing bank. For the year ending April 5, 1900, the purchasing bank was assessed for income tax on its own return based on the average profits of the bank for the three years preceding the year of assessment, in accordance with the first rule of the First Case of Schedule D, section 100 of the Income Tax Act, 1842. The profits of the purchased bank for the three years preceding the year of assessment were not included in the calculation on which the return was based. A further assessment was made on the purchasing bank based on the average of the profits of the purchased bank for the three preceding years, on the ground that the purchasing bank had succeeded to the business of the purchased bank within the meaning of the fourth rule applying to the First and Second Cases of Schedule D:—Held, that the purchasing bank had succeeded to the business of the purchased bank within the meaning of the rule, and that the further assessment based on the profits of the purchased bank for the three preceding years was rightly made on the purchasing bank. Bell v. National Provincial Bank of England, 73 L. J. K.B. 142; [1904] 1 K.B. 149; 90 L. T. 2; 52 W. R. 406; 68 J. P. 107; 20 T. L. R. 97—C.A.

Brewery Company—Balance of Profits and Gains—Repairs to “Tied” Houses let to Tenants.—The words “premises occupied for the purpose of such trade” in the Third Rule applying to the First Case under Schedule D in section 100 of the Income Tax Act, 1842, mean “premises occupied by the person assessed for the purpose of his trade.” Brickwood v. Reynolds, 67 L. J. Q.B. 26; [1898] 1 Q.B. 95; 77 L. T. 456; 46 W. R. 130; 62 J. P. 51—C.A.

A brewery company, upon being assessed under Schedule D in section 2 of the Income Tax Act, 1853, in respect of the profits of their trade, claimed to deduct from the amount of those profits a sum expended by them upon repairs to certain “tied” houses owned by them, and let to tenants upon the terms that the tenants should buy from the company all the ale, beer, &c., sold by them upon their premises. It was found as a fact that the profits of the company were materially increased by the maintenance of these “tied” houses:—Held, that the company were not entitled to the deduction claimed. Held, further, that the sum expended in repairs was expended principally for the purposes of the trade of the company's tenants, and only partly for the purposes of the company's own trade, and was not, therefore, “money wholly or exclusively laid out or expended for the purposes of” the company's trade within the meaning of the First Rule of the Rules applying both to the First and Second Cases under the above-named schedule, so as to entitle the company to the deduction claimed. Ib.

Brewery Company Owning and Occupying Inn—Damages for Personal Injury Recovered by Guest at Inn—Money Expended “wholly and exclusively” for Purposes of Trade.—Damages and costs recovered by a guest in an action against an innkeeper for injuries sustained in consequence of the innkeeper's negligence are not a proper deduction in the estimation of the “balance of the profits or gains” for the purposes of income tax. Strong & Co. of Romsey, Lim. v. Woodfield, 75 L. J. K.B. 864; [1906]

Semble, by the LORD CHANCELLOR, losses sustained by a railway company in compensating passengers for accidents in travelling might be deducted. Ib.

Chaplain's Stipend—Special Public Act—Salary Payable without Deduction.—Where a special public Act, incorporating a charity, passed previously to the Income Tax Act, 1842, provides for the payment of a salary to an official "without any deduction or abatement for taxes or otherwise howsoever," the official is not exonerated from income tax, but it must be deducted by the charity from his salary, as provided by the Income Tax Act, 1842. Lund v. Liverpool School for Indigent Blind, 67 L. J. Ch. 680; [1898] 2 Ch. 669; 79 L. T. 68; 47 W. R. 6; 62 J. P. 728—Byrne, J.

Charitable Institution—Restaurant—Profits.—The Y.M.C.A. is a philanthropic association having classes, gymnasium, and publication department. Its expenses are defrayed by charitable subscriptions, donations, and fees, the latter of which are not sufficient to cover the expenditure. It also carries on a restaurant on the usual commercial principles, which is open to the public.—Held, that the losses of the association on its other branches could not be set off against the profits of the restaurant. Grove v. Young Men's Christian Association, 88 L. T. 696; 67 J. P. 279—Ridley, J.

Collections in Church.—Portions of collections made in a church were paid to the incumbent. They were paid to him by reason of his being incumbent, but they would not have been paid to him if he had not been poor.—Held, that he was not assessable to income tax in respect of the amount so received. Turton v. Cooper, 92 L. T. 863; 21 T. L. R. 546—Channell, J.

Contingent and Defeasible Interest—Sums Placed to Credit.—By a deed of arrangement the owner of a manufacturing business, with a view to its continuance after his decease, provided that from and after his death certain of his employees should have a "prospective interest" in the profits of the business and the business itself "if acquired by them." It was provided—first, that the provisions in favour of the selected employees should not become vested interests until the whole of the grantor's capital had been paid out; secondly, that it should not be competent for any employee to sell or dispose of his interest; thirdly, that the whole net profits of the business, after paying interest on the grantor's capital, rent, and depreciation, should be divided among the selected employees, and that 10 per cent. thereof should be paid to them in cash, but that the remaining profits should not be drawn out by them, but merely credited to their accounts until the whole of the grantor's capital had been paid out; fourthly, that upon payment of the grantor's capital and a sum fixed as the price of the factory, and of the amount at the credit of deceased, bankrupt, or retired employees, the grantor's testamentary trustees should convey the business and the factory to the surviving employees; and fifthly, that the employees should at any time be entitled to purchase the business for the sum at the grantor's credit. The business was to be carried on by the employees, but the grantor's testamentary trustees were given power to appoint managers, to settle questions as to salaries and wages, and to determine what was to be left in the business as working capital and what should be paid out to account of the grantor's capital, sole power to grant authority to sign the firm's name, power to inspect the books, and to dismiss any of the selected employees for misconduct, and power, if the business could not be carried on at a profit, to wind it up. In a question as to abatement of income tax arising before the trustees had been paid out,—Held, that the share of the 90 per cent. of profits placed to the credit of one of the selected employees in the books of the business under the provisions of the deed was not to be reckoned as part of his income for the purposes of the Income Tax Acts. Hudson v. Gribble (72 L. J. K.B. 212; [1903] 1 K.B. 517) and Smyleth v. Stretton (90 L. T. 756) distinguished. Walker v. Keith, 8 F. 331—Ct. of Sess.

Easter Offerings—Personal Non-official Free-will Gift to Clergyman.—Sums which the incumbent of a parish receives as Easter offerings, although given voluntarily, are nevertheless received by him in his capacity as incumbent, and are therefore profits accruing to him by reason of his office within the meaning of section 146 of the Income Tax Act, 1842, and assessable to income tax. Cooper v. Blakiston, 76 L. J. K.B. 1041; [1907] 2 K.B. 638; 97 L. T. 531; 23 T. L. R. 663—C.A.

Foreign Securities—Interest Arising from—Receipt in United Kingdom—Entry in Yearly Accounts of Profit and Loss.—Under the Fourth Case of section 100, Schedule D of the Income Tax Act, 1842, "The duty to be charged in respect" of interest arising from foreign securities "shall be computed on a sum not less than the full amount of the sums (so far as the same can be computed) which have been or will be received in Great Britain in the current year without any deduction or abatement"—Held, that the tax was to be assessed only on the sums actually received in this country in respect of such interest, and not on the sums included as received, or constructively received, in yearly accounts of profit and loss. Gresham Life Assurance Society v. Bishop, 71 L. J. K.B. 618; [1902] A.C. 287; 86 L. T. 693; 50 W. R. 593; 66 J. P. 755—H.L. (E.)

Revenue Earned Abroad—Constructive Remittance.—Where interest derived from the foreign and colonial investments of a proprietary insurance company was not remitted home but retained in the countries where it was earned, and invested or otherwise applied there,—Held (LORD YOUNG dissenting), that by being entered in the company's accounts and taken into account in estimating the amount of profit to be divided by way of bonus, dividend, or otherwise, it was not constructively received in this country so as to be chargeable with duty under case iv. of Schedule D of section 100 of the Income Tax Act, 1842. Gresham Life Assurance Society v. Bishop (70 L. J. K.B. 298; [1901] 1 K.B. 153) disapproved. Standard Life Assurance Co. v. Allan, 3 F. 805—Ct. of Sess.

— Investment in and Remittances from

Colony—Capital or Income.]—Where money has been sent abroad for investment, and sums are sent home out of a bank account in which there are no separate statements of capital and income, and the whole amount left abroad after the remittances have been sent home is larger than the sums originally sent abroad, those remittances must be considered as representing interest or profits, and be held liable for income tax for the year in which they were sent home. Scottish Provident Institution v. Allan, 72 L. J. P.C. 70; [1903] A.C. 129; 88 L. T. 478; 67 J. P. 341—H.L. (Sc.)

Husband and Wife—Separation Deed—Covenant to Pay Annuity to Wife—Alimony—Deduction of Income Tax.]—Where a separation has taken place between a husband and wife, and in a deed carrying out the award of an arbitrator settling the allowance to be made to the wife the husband has covenanted to pay to trustees an annuity during the life of the wife by way of alimony or maintenance, he will be entitled to deduct income tax from the annuity payable by him. *Barry's Trusts, In re; Barry v. Life Assurance Society—Branches in Foreign Countries—Interest on Foreign Securities—Constructive Receipt of Interest on Foreign Securities in United Kingdom.]—Where a life assurance society whose registered office is in London has funds invested in foreign countries upon securities there, and re-invests the interest in those countries, or remits it direct to other foreign countries for investment, but includes such interest as money received in the revenue and consolidated revenue accounts of the society under the head of "Interest, Dividends, and Rents," and takes it into account in arriving at the amount of life insurance, endowment, and annuity funds in the valuation balance-sheet upon which surpluses or profits are ascertained, such interest is constructively received in the United Kingdom, and is assessable to income tax under Case 4, Schedule D of the Income Tax Act, 1842, s. 100. And the result is the same where the society carries on business by means of local agents or managers in foreign countries, and applies interest of foreign securities either in re-investment in those countries, in establishment or other expenses there, in remitting direct to other foreign countries for investment, or for the general purposes of the society abroad, so long as such interest is included in the society's accounts in the manner above mentioned, although never received in the United Kingdom in specifica forma. Gresham Life Assurance Society v. Bishop, 68 L. J. Q.B. 967; 81 L. T. 442; 64 J. P. 7—D.

Life Assurance Society—Indian Branches—Interest on Indian Securities—Constructive Receipt of Indian Interest in United Kingdom.]—Interest accruing upon Indian securities held by a life assurance society, established in the United Kingdom and transacting business through its branches in India, retained in India as a matter of commercial convenience, but treated as part of the divisible profits upon which dividends are declared and paid at the society's chief office—although never actually received—is constructively received in the United Kingdom, and is assessable to income tax under Case 4, Schedule D, section 100 of the Income Tax Act, 1842. Universal Life Assurance Society v. Bishop, 68 L. J. Q.B. 962; 81 L. T. 422; 64 J. P. 5—D.

—Surplus Premiums Returned to Policy-holders—Mutual Insurance—Annual Profits or Gains.]—Where the shareholders in an insurance company limit the interest they may receive on their capital in the company to a fixed rate per cent., and distribute the surplus arising from the payment of premiums by the policy-holders amongst such policy-holders, such surplus is, if the policy-holders are a body distinct from the company, profit in the hands of the company, which is liable to be assessed to income tax under Schedule D of the Income Tax Act, 1853, and its character is not altered by the fact of such repayment to the policy-holders. Last v. London Assurance Corporation (55 L. J. Q.B. 92; 10 App. Cas. 438) and New York Life Insurance Co. v. Styles (59 L. J. Q.B. 291; 14 App. Cas. 381) considered. Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States v. Bishop, 69 L. J. Q.B. 252; [1900] 1 Q.B. 177; 81 L. T. 693; 48 W. R. 341—C.A.

Land Used for Business—Depreciation or Wasting of Capital—Deduction.]—Where land is acquired for commercial purposes of which one stratum only is of any value, and that stratum is in process of exhaustion, such land is "capital" within the meaning of the First Case of Schedule D of the Income Tax Act, 1842, and no deduction can be allowed in respect of such exhaustion, which is a "diminution of capital" for which deduction is prohibited by section 159. Akmanza Co. v. Bell, 75 L. J. K.B. 44; [1906] A.C. 18; 93 L. T. 705; 54 W. R. 413; 22 T. L. R. 94—H.L. (E.)

Land Charged with Redemption of Stock—Owner Occupying—Payment of Income Tax on Annual Value of Land—Payment of Interest on Stock less Income Tax—Right to Retain out of Tax Deducted from Interest on Stock a Sum Equivalent to Tax Paid on Land.]—The London County Council borrowed large sums of money by the issue of stock which, together with the dividends thereon, was specifically charged on the lands, rents, rates, and all other property of the Council, and in paying dividends on the stock deducted income tax pursuant to section 24, sub-section 3 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888. The Council derived an income from rents and from interest on loans to local authorities, which they received less income tax. The Council also owned land, which they occupied for the purpose of their duties, and paid income tax under Schedule A upon its annual value. The interest on the stock issued was greater than the amount received from rents and interest on loans together with the annual value of the lands which they owned and occupied, and the Council raised the amount by which their income was insufficient to pay the interest on the stock by rates:—Held, that the Council were entitled to retain out of the income tax deducted from the dividends upon the stock a sum equivalent to the income tax paid under Schedule A on the lands which they owned and occupied, as well as the tax paid under Schedule A on the income they derived from rents and under Schedule D on the income they derived from interest on loans. Att.-Gen. v. London County Council, 74 L. J. K.B. 787; [1905] 2 K.B. 375; 93 L. T. 378; 53 W. R. 677; 3 L. G. R. 951; 69 J. P. 333; 21 T. L. R. 604—C.A.

Master at School—Provident Fund Scheme—Additional Allowance—Allowance to go to Fund.]—Under a provident fund scheme at D. College the following increases of salaries came into operation: (a) Assistant masters having not less than five, but less than fifteen years' service, an increase of 5 per cent.; (b) those having fifteen years and over, 7½ per cent.; (c) a further addition equal to those sums subject to certain conditions. The whole of these increases were not to be paid to the masters, but were to be accumulated at compound interest to form the fund. The conditions above referred to were that masters of less than ten years' service who resigned or ceased to belong to the college from any other cause than ill health were to be entitled to increase (a) and the accumulations thereof, but not to increase (c); if the master retired from ill health, the governors in addition to (a) might grant him (c); in the event of death both (a) and (c) were to be paid to his legal representative. Masters of over ten years' service were to receive on retirement before the age of sixty the total sum due under (a) or (b) and (c) with accumulations, and in the case of death the same was to be paid to his legal representative. Masters removed for misconduct or, having been guilty of misconduct, allowed to resign were not entitled to (c):—Held, that these increases of salary were sums really added to the salary, and were assessable to income tax under section 146, Schedule E of the Income Tax Act, 1842. Smyth v. Stretton, 90 L. T. 756; 53 W. R. 288; 20 T. L. R. 443—Channell, J.

Minister—Grant from Stipend Augmentation Fund—Annual Profits or Gains Arising or Accruing from any Profession or Vocation.]—The minister of a chapel received a grant from a fund called the "Ministers' Stipend Augmentation Fund," which was vested in trustees and managed by a committee, who were to apply the fund towards the augmentation of the stipends of the ministers of such congregations as they should select. Grants could only be made for the current year, and, in making such grants, regard was to be paid to the state and condition of the congregation and to their ability to make adequate provision for their minister. Consideration was also paid to the applicant's private income as well as the stipend received from his congregation, his age, training, and length of his services. The grants were payable half-yearly, and ceased at the recipient's death, resignation, or removal, and any portion of the grant then unpaid was not paid to him, nor was any part paid to him or to his successor:—Held, that the amount of the grant was part of the profits or gains of the minister in his profession or vocation, and that he was chargeable with income tax in respect thereof. Poynting v. Faulkner, 93 L. T. 367; 21 T. L. R. 560—C.A.

Mortgage—Interest Payable in Lump Sum at End of Period—"Yearly interest or other annual payment."]—By a mortgage which recited that the mortgagor was indebted to the mortgagee, and it had been agreed that payment of the debt should be postponed, the mortgagor covenanted to pay on the death of himself or his son, whichever should first happen, the amount of the debt with simple interest and if the aggregate amount of such sum and interest should not then be paid, the mortgagor should pay to the mortgagee interest for such aggregate sum by equal half-yearly payments, the first of such payments to become due six months after the death of the mortgagor or his son. The mortgagor died before his son, and the debt, with simple interest, became thereupon payable:—Held, that the mortgagor's legal personal representative, on payment of the debt and interest, might deduct income tax on the interest. Bebb v. Bunny (1 K. & J. 216) applied. Goslings & Sharpe v. Blake, (58 L. J. Q.B. 446; 23 Q.B. D. 324) distinguished. Craven's Mortgage, In re; Davies v. Craven, 76 L. J. Office—Profits Accruing by Reason of—Voluntary Grants from Charitable Fund to Augment the Stipends of Poor Benefices.]—Grants made from a charitable fund in augmentation of the income of benefices below a certain yearly value are "profits accruing to" the holder of the benefice "by reason of his office" within the meaning of section 146, Schedule E, rule 1 of the Income Tax Act, 1842, notwithstanding that the grants are purely voluntary and that the corporation distributing the fund cannot be legally compelled to make the payments. Turner v. Cuxson (58 L. J. Q.B. 181; 32 Q.B. D. 150) distinguished. Herbert v. McQuade, 71 L. J. K.B. 884; [1902] 2 K.B. 681; 87 L. T. 349; 66 J. P. 692—C.A.

Profits—Method of Ascertaining.]—A company, whose business consisted in buying and selling land and rights in land, bought a piece of vacant ground for 893*l.*, and after erecting houses upon it burdened each house with a feu duty; the feu duties in all amounted to 114*l.* per annum. The company then sold the feu duties for 3,135*l.*, but retained the land and houses. The Inland Revenue claimed income tax on the difference between 893*l.* and 3,135*l.* as profit earned by the company:—Held, that the claim could not be sustained, inasmuch as the price of 3,135*l.* could not have been obtained if the ground had remained vacant, but was partly due to the erection of houses by the company. Furtado v. Cardonald Fearing Co., [1907] S.C. 36—Ct. of Sess. And see DEDUCTIONS, infra.

Profits of Business—Assignment for Benefit of Creditors—Trustee Carrying on Part of Debtor's Business—Sub-lease of Motive-power—Profit on Sub-lease—Liability of Trustee.]—By an indenture of sub-lease a firm of worsted spinners demised a part of their business premises together with steam power to be generated by them. They subsequently executed a deed of assignment for the benefit of their creditors empowering the trustee, with the consent of the committee of inspection, to carry on the business. The trustee continued to occupy the portion of the premises which the debtors had occupied for the purpose of winding up their business, and continued to supply motive-power to the sub-lessee in accordance with the sub-lease and a fresh sub-lease afterwards granted, and the amount received by the trustee in respect of the power exceeded the cost of supplying it:—Held, that the difference between the cost of supplying the power and the payment received for it was a profit assessable under Schedule D, although the money was to be applied in payment of the creditors under the deed of assignment. Armitage v. Moore, 69 L. J. Q.B. 614; [1900] 2 Q.B. 363; 82 L. T. 618—D.

— Average of Three Years—Sale of Business—Two Businesses—Succession.—A person cannot be a successor within the meaning of rule 4 applying to the First and Second Cases of Schedule D of the Income Tax Act, 1842, of part of a concern, but if a company is carrying on two separate businesses and sells one the purchaser can be the successor of the separate business. Stockham v. Wallasey Urban Council, 95 L. T. 834; 5 L. G. R. 200; 71 J. P. 244—Bray, J.

Purchase and Re-sale of Property.—The C. company, with a capital of 28,000*l.*, expended 24,000*l.* in the purchase of a mining property and 4,000*l.* in its development. Thereafter it sold the property for 300,000*l.* to the F. company, the price to be payable by that company transferring 300,000 of its 400,000 l. shares, fully paid, to the C. company. The C. company having been assessed for income tax under Schedule D on profit arising from the transaction, the C. company appealed, contending that it had had no income, and that the sale was truly a transaction by which the company substituted for its capital in the form of land a capital in the form of shares:—Held, that, having regard to the various branches of business for which the C. company was formed, the transaction was a sale in the line of its business, resulting in a profit liable to income tax under Schedule D, and not a mere change in the mode of investment of its capital. Californian Copper Syndicate v. Harris, 6 F. 894—Ct. of Sess.

— Purchase of Railway—Payment of Annuity instead of Gross Sum—Liability of Annuity to Income Tax.—Where a contract for the purchase of a railway for the full amount of the value of all the shares or capital stock in the railway company contains a provision that it shall be lawful for the purchaser, instead of paying a gross sum of money in respect of the premises, to declare his option to pay an “annuity” from the time when the gross amount would be payable, and to continue the payment during a fixed term, the rate of interest used in calculating such “annuity” being ascertained by the average rate of interest during the preceding two years upon certain public obligations, income tax is payable upon the whole annual amount of the “annuity,” inasmuch as such annual amount is an annuity within the meaning of Schedule C of the Income Tax Act, 1853. Foley v. Fletcher (28 L. J. Ex. 100; 3 H. & N. 769) explained. Scoble v. Secretary of State for India in Council, 71 L. J. K.B. 727; [1902] 2 K.B. 419; 87 L. T. 896—Phillimore, J.

— Guaranteed Interest by South African Republic—Line Taken by British Government—Payment of Arrears.—On November 2, 1895, the South African Republic granted a concession for the construction of a railway, and guaranteed to a company which was formed to take over the railway interest at 4 per cent. on its share capital. On October 11, 1899, war having broken out, the line was seized and worked by the British military authorities until the end of the war. On February 18 the British Government gave notice to expropriate the railway under the terms of the concession. They recognised the validity of the concession, and admitted liability to pay all arrears of interest. They paid 97,506*l.* 16*s.* 11*d.* as “guaranteed interest on share capital at 4 per cent. per annum from the 1st Jan. 1899 to 14th Nov. 1903,” in addition to the other payments on the expropriation. Held, that the Crown was entitled to income tax on the sum of 97,506*l.* 16*s.* 11*d.* Pretoria-Pietersburg Railway v. Elwood, 95 L. T. 468—Walton, J.

— Succession to Trade, Adventure, or Concern.—The mere purchase of a trading vessel does not of itself constitute “succession to the adventure” or concern of the former owners in the sense of the Income Tax Act, 1842, s. 100, Schedule D, and accordingly the purchaser falls to be assessed for income tax as for a new adventure and without regard to the profits earned by the ship (in the same line of trading it may be) prior to his purchase. Watson v. Lothian, 4 F. 795—Ct. of Sess.

“Rent payable”—Landlord's Property Tax—Contribution to Compensation Fund under Licensing Act, 1904—Deduction of Amount from Rent.—By the Income Tax Act, 1842, s. 60, Schedule (A), No. IV. (Ninth), the defendant, as tenant, at a rent of 100*l.* per annum, of licensed premises, of which the plaintiffs were the landlords, was entitled to deduct from the “rent payable” to the landlords a sum in respect of landlord's property tax equal to 1*s.* in the pound on such rent. Under section 3, sub-section 3, and Schedule II. of the Licensing Act, 1904, he had previously deducted from the rent the sum of 14*l.*, part of a sum of 20*l.* paid by him, under sub-section 1, as contribution to the compensation fund created by that Act:—Held, that he was entitled in respect of his payment of landlord's property tax to deduct a sum based on the full rent of 100*l.*, and not on that rent less the sum of 14*l.* Hancock v. Gillard, 76 L. J. K.B. 20; [1907] 1 K.B. 47; 95 L. T. 680; 71 J. P. 9; 23 T. L. R. 12—Bigham, J.

Royalties—Tax not Deducted on Payment by Lessee to Proprietor—Right of Lessee to Recover Amount of Tax from Proprietor.—A lessee of a colliery who had paid to the Inland Revenue income tax on royalties due by him to the proprietor, and who had paid the royalties without deducting the income tax, was held entitled to recover it from the proprietor. Agnew v. Ferguson, 5 F. 879—Ct. of Sess.

Sewer—“Hereditament capable of actual occupation.”—A sewer of which a local authority has the use and control is chargeable to income tax on the basis of its “annual value” under section 60, Sched. A, No. I., and not under No. III. The word “drains” in No. III. is not applicable to a public sewer, but must be construed on the ejusdem generis principle by the context in which it occurs. Decision of the COURT OF APPEAL (76 L. J. K.B., p. 282; [1907] 1 K.B. 490) affirmed. Ystradgynodwg and Pontypridd Main Sewerage Board v. Bensted, 76 L. J. K.B. 876; [1907] A.C. 264; 97 L. T. 141; 71 J. P. 425; 5 L. G. R. 865; 23 T. L. R. 621—H.L. (E.)

Ship Owned by Company and other Persons—Two Assessments.]—The S. Steamship Co. owned the steamship B. and fifty-nine sixty-fourths of the steamship G., the remaining five sixty-fourths being owned by other persons:—Held, that the company was rightly assessed by two assessments—one in respect of the steamship B., and the other in respect of the steamship G. (as the latter was an adventure carried on by them jointly with other persons within the third rule—applying to both the first and second cases) to section 100 of the Income Tax Act, 1842. Farrell v. Sunderland Steamship Co., 88 L. T. 741; 67 J. P. 209; 9 Asp. M.C. 416—Ridley, J.

Slaughter-houses Self-supporting, but not Profit-earning.]—The public slaughter-houses of a city were owned and administered by the magistrates under a statute which provided that the dues and rents levied therefrom should be regulated triennially so as to render the concern self-supporting, but not profit-earning:—Held, that the slaughter-houses fell to be assessed for income-tax purposes under the General Rule No. I. of Schedule A of the Income Tax Act, 1842, at the rent "at which the same are worth to be let by the year," and not as a profit-earning concern under No. III. of that schedule. Inland Revenue v. Edinburgh Corporation, [1907] S.C. 1233—Ct. of Sess.

Waterworks—Profits of Trading in Water—Sale of Water Outside Compulsory Area—Application of Profits to Sinking Fund.]—The local authority of the burgh of Irvine, in the exercise of their statutory powers, entered into contracts to supply with water the parish of Stevenston and the burgh of Saltcoats, districts outside the compulsory area of Irvine. The contracts provided that a sum should be payable annually by Stevenston and Saltcoats respectively, the amount of which, subject to a deduction of 10 per cent., was to be the amount produced by a compulsory water rate upon all assessable subjects within these districts, leviable by their own local authorities. The rate of assessment was to be the same as that from time to time imposed within its compulsory area by the local authority of Irvine:—Held, first, that the sums payable by Stevenston and Saltcoats, although leviable in these districts as a compulsory rate, were, as regards Irvine, the price of water supplied outside its compulsory area, and that the surplus, so far as derivable from this source, was profit, and chargeable with income tax; and secondly, following Mersey Docks and Harbour Board v. Lucas (8 App. Cas. 891), that it was not a valid ground of exemption that profit so earned was appropriated to a sinking fund. Harris v. Irvine Corporation, 2 F. 1080—Ct. of Sess.

(c) Deductions.

"Annual payment payable out of such profits or gains."]—By an agreement between the plaintiffs and the defendants, the defendants had the exclusive right of selling and manufacturing articles by a secret process, and the defendants were to pay to the plaintiffs for forty years 8l. per cent. on the gross receipts of such sale. The plaintiffs resided abroad and were foreigners, and, before paying the amount payable to them under the agreement, the defendants deducted income tax payable in respect of the amount due under the agreement:—Held, that the income tax was rightly deducted. Deluge v. Nugget Polish Co., 92 L. T. 632; 21 T. L. R. 454—Phillimore, J.

Brewery Company Owning and Occupying Inn—Damages for Personal Injuries Paid to Guest at Inn—Money Laid Out Wholly for Purposes of Trade.]—A brewery company who, as part of their business, owned and occupied various inns, had to pay a sum in respect of damages and costs incurred in consequence of personal injuries sustained in consequence of their negligence by a guest at one of their inns:—Held, that this sum was not a proper deduction to be made in estimating the balance of profits for income-tax purposes. Strong & Co. of Romsey, Lim. v. Woodfield, 74 L. J. K.B. 702; [1905] 2 K.B. 350; 93 L. T. 361; 53 W. R. 625; 21 T. L. R. 550—C.A.

Brewery—Profits of—New Licences—Expenses of Applications.]—The respondents, a firm of brewers, submitted accounts shewing a certain sum for profits. In arriving at the amount they had deducted sums expended in connection with unsuccessful applications made by them to the licensing Justices for new licences to houses owned and leased by them, and also to houses not owned by them, but for which they conducted the application, for the purpose of increasing their trade:—Held, that the respondents were not entitled to make the deductions as the expenses were not "money wholly and exclusively laid out or expended for the purposes of" their trade, but were a capital expenditure within the meaning of Schedule D of the Income Tax Act, 1842. Southwell v. Savill, 70 L. J. K.B. 815; [1901] 2 K.B. 349; 85 L. T. 167; 49 W. R. 682; 65 J. P. 649—D.

Depreciation of Stock—Capital—Cost of Raw Material.]—Where a company has a registered office in England, and owns nitrate grounds abroad, upon which are deposits of caliche from which they manufacture and sell nitrates and iodine, and the process necessarily exhausts the caliche, the stock of caliche is part of the company's capital, and therefore for the purpose of assessment to income tax under the Income Tax Act, 1842, s. 100, Sched. D, no allowance can be made for the caliche exhausted. Alianza Co. v. Bell, 73 L. J. K.B. 755; [1904] 2 K.B. 666; 91 L. T. 463; 53 W. R. 23; 20 T. L. R. 624—Channell, J.

—Amount.]—The appellant company claimed under section 12 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1878, to be allowed a deduction of 253,893l. on the ground that the same was a just and reasonable allowance as representing the diminished value by reason of wear and tear during the year. They arrived at this figure as being 5 per cent. on the original cost of the ships in their fleet. The Commissioners found that the average duration of the service of ships in the fleet was seventeen years, though the average duration of life of the ships was twenty-eight years; and that an allowance at the rate of 6 per cent. on the diminished value of the fleet for the year of assessment, arrived at by taking the original cost of each vessel and writing it down year by year at the rate of 6 per cent. on the diminishing value, was a sufficient allowance to cover the diminished value by reason of wear and tear during the year, and they fixed the figure at 185,440*l.*:—Held, that the Commissioners had dealt with all that was properly before them, and that the questions were substantially questions of fact. Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Co. v. Lee, 79 L. T. 118—D.

Fire and Accident Insurance—Balance of Profit—Unexpired Risks.—In ascertaining for income-tax purposes the annual profits of a company carrying on the business of fire, sickness, accident, and guarantee insurance, no deduction can be made in respect of estimated losses on risks unexpired at the end of the year. General Accident Assurance Corporation v. McGowan, [1907] S.C. 1004—Ct. of Sess.

Shipowner's Business—Deduction to be Allowed for Depreciation of Ships—Right to Take into Account Former Allowances.—Income Tax Commissioners, in estimating the deduction to be allowed from the profits of a shipowner's business under section 12 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1878, in respect of the diminished value of the ships by reason of wear and tear, must consider what is a just and reasonable allowance to make for the depreciation in their value during the particular years of assessment, and are not entitled to take into account allowances in respect of depreciation which have been made in previous years. Hall & Co. v. Rickman, 75 L. J. K.B. 178; [1906] 1 K.B. 311; 94 L. T. 224; 54 W. R. 380; 22 T. L. R. 131—Walton, J.

A hulk, formerly a sailing ship, used as a floating warehouse for coal, is "plant" within the meaning of section 12 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1878. Ib.

Shipowner Partially Insuring Vessel—Accumulating Funds out of Profits to Meet Loss of Vessels.—A shipping company partially insured one of its ships with underwriters, and partially took on itself the risk of the loss of the ship, transferring annually from its revenue account to its "insurance fund" a sum equivalent to the premium that would have been payable to an underwriter for taking the risk which the company thus took on itself. No deduction from the annual profits of the company in calculating income tax was allowed on the sums thus transferred from the company's revenue account to its "insurance fund." On the loss of the ship the company claimed the right, in ascertaining the balance of profits for the year for the purposes of income tax, to deduct the amount which it had been necessary to transfer from the company's "insurance fund" to meet the loss incurred:—Held, that the company was not entitled to make the deduction claimed on the ground that the loss was a loss of capital. Inland Revenue Com- missioners v. Western Steamship Co., [1907] S.C. 1005—Ct. of Sess.

Money Wholly Expended for Purposes of Trade—Payment to Secure Controlling Interest in Rival Firm.—S. & L., a firm of tube manufacturers, entered into an agreement with W., another firm of tube manufacturers, whereby, in return for the right to nominate a majority of the directors of W., S. & L. undertook to pay to W. each half-year such sum as might be necessary to make up any deficit in the dividend on W.'s preference shares. In pursuance of this agreement, in the year 1904 S. & L. made payments to W. of sums amounting to 841*l.* In estimating their profits for that year for income-tax purposes, S. & L. claimed to deduct from the profits this sum of 841*l.* The Income Tax Commissioners held that S. & L. had expended this sum for the purposes of their trade and that they might sell their goods at a better price, and allowed the deduction:—Held, that the deduction had been rightly allowed. Moore v. Stewarts and Lloyds, 8 F. 1129—Ct. of Sess.

Wear and Tear.—The deduction which the Commissioners of Income Tax, in assessing the profits of any trade, manufacture, adventure, or concern in the nature of trade, chargeable under Schedule D, are by section 12 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1878, required to allow as representing the diminished value by reason of wear and tear during the year of machinery and plant, may be the diminished value by wear and tear during the year next preceding, and need not be the average diminished value of the three years next preceding the year of assessment. Cunard Steamship Co. v. Coulson, 68 L. J. Q.B. 554; [1899] 1 Q.B. 865; 80 L. T. 326—D.

Arrears of Annuity—Income Tax not Deducted at Time of Payment.—A husband and wife agreed to live separate, and the husband agreed to allow her 4,000*l.* a year to be paid quarterly, clear of all deductions. Subsequently it was agreed that the allowance should be reduced to 3,000*l.* a year. Disputes arose as to how long the reduced allowance was to continue, and the wife brought an action to recover arrears of the allowance, and a consent order was made that the wife was entitled to the 4,000*l.* a year as from a year before the action was commenced. No income tax had been deducted by the husband from any of the payments of the allowance. The husband claimed to deduct income tax in respect of all the payments made and from the arrears:—Held, on a Special Case stated for the opinion of the Court, that the husband might deduct income tax from the arrears, but not from the payments already made. Shrewsbury (Countess) v. Shrewsbury (Earl), 23 T. L. R. 100—Keke-wich, J. Appeal from this decision dismissed on the ground that no appeal lay, 23 T. L. R. 224—C.A.

Interest on Borrowed Money—Deduction of Tax from such Interest—Tax on Land in Occupation of Owner—Right to Retain out of Tax Paid on Interest a Sum Equivalent to Tax Paid on Land Occupied.—A public body, which issues stock on which it pays dividends after deducting tax, and also owns and occupies premises for its own purposes on which it pays tax under Schedule A of the Income Tax Act, 1842, is not entitled to recoup itself for this tax out of the tax deducted from the dividends on the stock. Att.-Gen. v. London County Council, 76 L. J. K.B. 454; [1907] A.C. 131; 96 L. T. 481; 71 J. P. 217; 5 L. G. R. 465; 23 T. L. R. 390—H.L. (E.)

Interest on Loan for less than a Year.]—A municipal corporation is bound by section 24 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888, to deduct income tax from the interest paid by it on loans for periods less than a year, and to render an account thereof to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue. Lord Advocate v. Edinburgh Corporation, 6 F. 1—Ct. of Sess.

Interest on Loans Borrowed by London County Council.]—The London County Council borrow loans part of which they lend again to local authorities. The fund out of which they pay interest on these loans is composed partly of interest received by them from such local authorities, less income tax already paid under Schedule D of the Income Tax Act, 1853, and partly of rents of their own properties, less income tax already paid under Schedule A:—Held, that the London County Council are entitled to deduct income tax already paid by the local authorities under Schedule D, but that they are not entitled to deduct income tax already paid by their tenants under Schedule A. Att.-Gen. v. London County Council, 63 L. J. Q.B. 823; [1899] 2 Q.B. 226; 80 L. T. 767—D.

Omission to Deduct—Liability to Crown.]—A municipal corporation, which was bound to deduct income tax from interest on loans, but had failed to do so, held, liable in payment to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue of the amount that should have been deducted. Lord Advocate v. Edinburgh Corporation, 7 F. 972—Ct. of Sess.

Land Situated Abroad—English Owner of—Manufacture from Deposit Thereon—Profits and Gains of Trade—Deduction for Depreciation of Value of Land—Sum Employed “as capital.”]—By rule 3 of the First Case of Schedule D of the Income Tax Act, 1842, in estimating the profits and gains of a trade chargeable under Schedule D, or for the purpose of assessing the duty thereon, no sum shall be set against or deducted from such profits and gains for any sum employed “as capital” in such trade. An English company acquired land in Chili, the upper stratum of which consisted of a substance called “caliche,” and carried on the trade of manufacturers of nitrates by loosening and removing the caliche, and extracting nitrates therefrom. The removal of the caliche rendered the land practically valueless:—Held, that in estimating the balance of the profits and gains of the trade for a particular year for the purpose of assessment to the income tax under Schedule D, the company were not entitled to deduct the cost price of the amount of caliche used in the year’s working, the original cost of the caliche being a sum employed “as capital” in the trade within the meaning of rule 3 of the First Case of Schedule D. Alianza Co. v. Bell, 74 L. J. K.B. 219; [1905] 1 K.B. 184; 92 L. T. 184; 53 W. R. 257;

Premium on Policy of Life Insurance—Premium Partly Paid with Money Borrowed from Insurer at Interest and Charged on Policy.]—Where under a policy of life insurance and an agreement between the parties thereto, the insured has paid only one-half of the premium in cash and the other half by means of a loan from the insurer repayable on demand and bearing interest (the principal and interest being charged upon the policy), he is only entitled under section 54 of the Income Tax Act, 1853, to deduct the amount paid by him in cash in respect of premium from his assessable income (LORD JAMES OF HEREFORD dissenting). Hunter v. Att.-Gen., 73 L. J. K.B. 381; [1904] A.C. 161; 90 L. T. 325; 52 W. R. 593; 20 T. L. R. 370—H.L. (E.)

Public Office—Sum Payable or Chargeable on Salary by Virtue of Act of Parliament.]—A compulsory annual contribution made under sections 12 and 13 of the Poor Law Officers’ Superannuation Act, 1896, by a clerk to a guardians assessment committee and school-attendance committee, is a duty or other sum payable or chargeable by virtue of an Act of Parliament within the meaning of the Income Tax Act, 1842, s. 146, Sched. E, Rule I., and ought to be deducted from the salary of the clerk in estimating the net sum upon which income tax is payable by him. Beaumont v. Bowers, 69 L. J. Q.B. 600; [1900] 2 Q.B. 204; 83 L. T. 126; 48 W. R. 557; 64 J. P. 552—D.

Removal to New Premises—Expenses of.]—A company, engaged in the buying and selling of granite, found it necessary to transfer its business to a larger yard:—Held, that the expenses incurred in removing stones and cranes from the old yard to the new yard and in re-erecting the cranes in the new yard did not form a proper deduction in estimating the company’s annual profits chargeable with income tax. Granite Supply Association v. Inland Revenue, 8 F. 55—Ct. of Sess.

Salary—Thrift Fund—Contribution—Scheme Authorised by Act of Parliament—Voluntary Participation—“Sums payable by virtue of any Act of Parliament”—Sums “really and bona fide paid and borne by the party to be charged.”]—A municipal corporation under powers conferred by Act of Parliament prepared a scheme for the establishment of a thrift fund for the benefit of their officers. The scheme provided that persons entering the service of the corporation after a specified date should contribute, and that the corporation might deduct, a certain proportion of their salaries. The money so contributed was held upon certain trusts in favour of the contributors. Persons in the service of the corporation on the specified date might on their own application in writing be admitted to the benefit of the fund upon the same terms, provided that no persons so admitted should cease to contribute while in the service of the corporation. A person who was in the service of the corporation on the date specified applied to be admitted to the benefits of the fund, and another person who had entered the service after the date specified thereafter made payments to the fund in accordance with the scheme:—Held, that these payments were not sums payable or chargeable on their salaries or wages "by virtue of any Act of Parliament" or sums really and bona fide paid and borne by the parties to be charged within the meaning of the Income Tax Act, 1842, s. 146, Schedule E, rule 1, and that these persons were rightly taxed in respect of them. Beaumont v. Bowers (69 L. J. Q.B. 600; [1900] 2 Q.B. 204) disapproved. Hudson v. Gribble, 72 L. J. K.B. 242; [1903] 1 K.B. 517; 88 L. T. 186; 51 W. R. 457; 67 J. P. 85; 1 L. G. R. 292—C.A.

Appointment of Collectors—Authority of Collectors to Distrain after Expiration of Year of Charge.—The collectors appointed in each year under the Taxes Management Act, 1880, to collect the duties payable for the year do not necessarily become functi officio at the expiration of the year of charge, nor does their authority to distrain by virtue of the warrant granted to them under the Act necessarily terminate at the expiration of the year. Their office is not at an end until their accounts for the year are closed in accordance with the provisions of the Act. Elliott v. Yates, 69 L. J. Q.B. 820; [1900] 2 Q.B. 370; 82 L. T. 812; 48 W. Taxation of—Case stated by Inland Revenue Commissioners—Party's Costs of Preparing Case before its Final Settlement.—"Necessary or proper for the attainment of justice."—Upon a taxation between party and party of the costs of a Case stated by the Inland Revenue Commissioners for the opinion of the High Court under section 59 of the Taxes Management Act, 1880, the Taxing Master has a discretion under Order LXV. rule 27 (29) to allow a party, to whom the Court has awarded costs, the costs of his solicitor and counsel in provisionally settling the draft Case proposed by the Commissioners before its final settlement. *Scottish Union and National Insurance Co. v. Claim for Repayment of Income Tax.—Sections 57 to 59 of the Taxes Management Act, 1880, only provide for appeals against assessment, and do not apply to a claim for repayment of income tax. Bruce v. Burton, 85 L. T. 227; 65 J. P. 440—D.

(g) Jurisdiction of Commissioners.

Assessing English Company on Profits of Foreign Company carrying on Trade Abroad—Prohibition or Appeal.—An English company incorporated under the Companies Acts and having its registered office in London was assessed to the income tax under Schedule D not only upon the profits and gains of its own trade, but upon the profits and gains of the trade of an American company incorporated and carrying on business in America. The English company were the holders of about 98 per cent. of the shares of the American company. Upon appeal to the General Commissioners of Taxes by the English company, who contended that they could not be assessed under Schedule D in respect of the profits and gains of a foreign corporation carrying on business wholly abroad, the Commissioners upon certain evidence before them proposed to find as facts that the business and profits of the American company were the business and profits of the English company, that the head and seat of the business was at the office of the English company in London, and that, even if the business in America and the profits made there were technically the business and profits of the American company, the American company were the agents of the English company, and the Commissioners proposed to confirm the assessment. Upon an application by the English company for a prohibition to the Commissioners,—Held, that the findings of fact by the Commissioners were not mere findings of facts preliminary to jurisdiction, but that the Commissioners had under the Income Tax Acts jurisdiction to ascertain what was in fact the trade carried on by the English company either wholly or partly in England, and consequently that prohibition would not lie, the remedy of the English company being by Special Case under the provisions of section 59 of the Taxes Management Act, 1880. Re v. Income Tax Commissioners, 70 L. J. K.B. 1010; [1901] 2 K.B. 879; 85 L. T. 503; 65 J. P. 724—C.A.

Loss in any Trade or Profession—Adjustment of Liability.—By section 23 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1890, "Where any person shall sustain a loss in any trade, manufacture, or concern, or profession, employment, or vocation . . . it shall be lawful for him . . . to apply to the Commissioners . . . for an adjustment of his liability by reference to the loss and to the aggregate amount of his income. . . ."—Held, that this does not apply to a particular loss in ascertaining the profits of a particular business which has occurred in the course of the business, but to a general loss resulting from the business—that is a loss as the total result of the business operations. The Commissioners under section 23 ought to consider the aggregate income of the person; then whether he has sustained a loss in any trade, manufacture, &c.; and if so, what is a proper adjustment of his liability to pay income tax by reference to that loss. Re v. Income Tax Commissioners, 91 L. T. 94—D.

Held, further, on the facts, that it was not shown that the Commissioners of Income Tax had acted outside their jurisdiction by considering a wrong question. If Commissioners of Income Tax purporting to act under section 23 of the Act of 1890 consider a wrong question altogether, then their decision can be dealt with by a writ of certiorari, but if they consider the right question the Court cannot interfere by certiorari, even although they may have gone wrong in point of fact or of law. Ib.

7. INHABITED HOUSE DUTY.

Artisans' Dwellings — Separate Occupations — Exemption.—The owner of houses originally built or adapted for artisans' dwellings, and used for the sole purpose of separate dwellings, is entitled to the exemption from inhabited house duty conferred by section 26, sub-section 2 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1890, as amended by section 4 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1891, notwithstanding the existence of a common front door, entrance hall, and staircase to, and the absence of complete structural division of, each separate set of rooms; and notwithstanding that all the doors of each set of rooms open to the common entrance hall or landing, and that the tenants have the use of a common wash-house on certain specified days. Seaman v. Lee, 68 L. J. Q.B. 593; 63 J. P. 499—D.

— "Separate dwellings" for the Working Classes.—A building erected by the appellants for the purpose of providing accommodation for men of the working-classes contained separate sleeping-rooms or cubicles arranged on three landings round a central hall, and on the ground-floor reading and dining rooms, scullery, lavatories, baths, and wash-house, and catering departments, which were used by the occupants in common, and also quarters for the superintendent and staff. Each cubicle provided separate accommodation for one man, and a charge of sixpence a night was made for the room and the use of the other apartments:—Held, that the cubicles were not "separate dwellings," but merely sleeping-places, and that the house did not therefore come within the exemption from inhabited house duty, as "separate dwellings" for the working classes, contained in section 26, sub-section 2 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1890, and section 11, sub-section 1 of the Revenue Act, 1903. London County Council v. Cook, 75 L. J. K.B. 187; [1906] 1 K.B. 278; 93 L. T. 836; 54 W. R. 403; 70 J. P. 105; 4 L. G. R. 153; 22 T. L. R. 125—Walton, J.

Bank Premises—Floors Let to Solicitors—Residence of Manager—Internal Communication.—A banking company was the owner of a building the basement and ground floor of which they themselves occupied for the purposes of a bank. The first and second floors they let to solicitors under a lease restricting to business purposes during business hours the use of the rooms so let. The third and fourth floors were occupied as residences by the bank manager and a caretaker employed by the company. There was a staircase having an entrance to the street, by which access was obtained to the first and upper floors. There was also a door leading from the part used as a bank on the ground floor to the staircase. This door was kept locked, but the manager was provided with a key so that at any time by day or night he could pass to and fro between his residence at the top and the bank premises without going outside the building:—Held, that the rooms let to solicitors did not come within the exemption of sub-section 1 of section 13 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1878, in favour of a house "divided into and let in different tenements." Held also, that, in view of the internal communication made for the use of the bank manager, the part of the house used for the purpose of a bank was not such a "tenement" within the meaning of sub-section 2 of the same section as to come within the exemption there created. Held, therefore, that the banking company were liable to be assessed to inhabited-house duty in respect of the whole building. London and Westminster Bank v. Smith, 87 L. T. 244; 67 J. P. 229—H.L. (E.)

Blocks of Shops—Buildings used Partly as Shops and Partly for Residence of Staff.—The appellants appealed against an assessment made upon certain blocks of buildings used by them partly as shops and partly for the residence of their staff:—Held, that the premises were assessable as a whole because the business part communicated with the residential part, and the fact that the communication was closed at night by iron doors made no difference. Maple v. Wilson, 85 L. T. 229; 49 W. R. 670; 65 J. P. 630—D.

Business Premises—"Profit"—"Solely occupied"—Mutual Insurance Society.—The Scottish Widows Fund and Life Assurance Society had no share capital and no shareholders. Its membership consisted exclusively of the holders of policies of life insurance effected with the society, and of the purchasers of annuities from it. The bulk of the members were the holders of "participating" policies—that is, members who were entitled to share in the surplus assets of the society as brought out at each septennial investigation of its affairs; but a small proportion of the policy-holders and all the annuity-holders (who also were proportionally few in number) had no such right of participating in the surplus assets. The society did not directly insure, or grant annuities to, persons who were not members of the society, but it re-insured the risks of other life insurance companies. Its accumulated funds, which were of very large amount, and from which it derived a large income, were invested in stocks, shares, and other securities, and it also to a small extent purchased reversions. The society having claimed exemption from inhabited-house duty in respect of premises which it occupied solely for the purposes of its business, the surveyor of taxes maintained that the exemption allowed by section 13, subsection 2 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1878, did not apply, inasmuch as the society, being a mutual insurance society, could make no trade or business profits, or at all events, if it did to some extent make trade or business profits, that it did not occupy the premises for the sole purpose of making such profits:—Held, that the premises fell within the exemption, as they were solely occupied by the society for the purposes of its business by which it sought to make a profit. The word “solely” in the sub-section qualifies the word “occupied” and not the words “any trade or business,” &c. New York Insurance Co. v. Styles (14 App. Cas. 381) distinguished. Scottish Widows Fund v. Inland Revenue, 3 F. 129—Ct. of Sess.

— Residential Accommodation—Building—Exemption.—Premises consisted of five floors and a basement. On the ground floor were four shops, A, B, C, and D, and a hall leading to the upper floors and basement, in which hall was a w.c. for the use of the tenants of the shops, of whom the tenants of B, C, and D had access to it internally through the hall. The tenant of A, however, could only reach it externally either through the street or the area. The basement contained a room under each shop, such room being let to the tenant of each shop, and two of the shops had rooms behind communicating with such shop. All the tenants of B, C, and D had keys of the front door leading into the hall, which hall gave access to the self-contained tenement dwellings let to separate tenants on the upper floor:—Held, on an assessment to inhabited-house duty, that these premises were not within section 13, sub-section 1 of the Act of 1878, as the whole of the house was not divided into different tenements—that is to say, tenements which were structurally separated—but that, so far as shop A was concerned, that was within section 13, sub-section 2 of that Act. Held, further, that neither section 4 of the Act of 1891 nor section 11 of the Act of 1903 applied. Hillman v. Ankersen, 95 L. T. 452—Walton, J.

Different Tenements Occupied Solely for Business.—A house of four storeys owned by a bank was occupied as follows: the first floor by a firm of writers to whom it was let, and the other three floors by the bank, the ground-floor being used as the offices of the bank, and the second floor as the official residence of the bank accountant. Access to all the floors from the street was by a door which opened into a vestibule. In the vestibule there was a door to the bank office, a front stair leading to the first floor, and a door to a passage leading to the bank agent's room and to a back stair, which was the access to the second floor. There was a door between the two stairs, which was kept locked. The first and second floors were each shut off from the staircase by outer doors on the landings. From the bank agent's house on the second floor there was a bolt in connection with the lock of the safe in the bank office. The whole house with the exception of the first floor having been assessed for inhabited-house duty, the bank appealed, and maintained that the ground-floor being occupied solely for the business of banking was entitled to exemption:—Held, that there were such means of internal communication and such structural connection between the bank offices and the house of the agent, and also such identity of occupation, that the bank premises could not be regarded as a separate tenement within section 13 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1878. Union Bank of Scotland v. Inland Revenue, 3 F. 771; 65 J. P. 824—Ct. of Sess.

Dwelling-house Occupied by Stud Groom—Real or Sham Agreement of Tenancy—Whole Premises Occupied for Common Purpose.—The appellant was the owner of a dwelling-house, the rear of which abutted upon the wall of a yard on the sides of which were loose boxes, sheds, &c., the whole, with land attached, all belonging to the appellant, being used principally for the purpose of breeding and rearing thoroughbred horses for sale. For several years the dwelling-house had been occupied by S., who was in the appellant's service as stud groom at a weekly wage, his service being determinable by a week's notice on either side. Prior to February 1, 1904, S.'s wages were 40s. a week, but after February 1, 1904, they were raised by 8s. a week. The assessment to house duty upon the premises in and prior to 1903 was upon the appellant, but S. then dwelt in the dwelling-house referred to by reason of his employment under a verbal arrangement and rent free. The dwelling-house and stud boxes and buildings were at that time rated to the appellant, who paid all the rates in respect thereof. On February 1, 1904, an agreement in writing was entered into between the appellant and S., purporting to be for the tenancy of the dwelling-house at a yearly rent of 18l. By the agreement, which was determinable by either party giving three calendar months' notice in writing, the tenant was to pay all rates, taxes, &c. (except land tax and landlord's property tax), and do the internal repairs. Thereafter S. was entered upon the rate book and paid rates as the occupier of the dwelling-house. The appellant having been assessed to house tax as the occupier of the whole premises, including the dwelling-house, appealed to the Commissioners, who found—first, that the whole of the premises, including the dwelling-house, were occupied for one common purpose—namely, for the breeding and rearing of thoroughbred horses, and not for the purpose of husbandry only; and secondly, that the agreement was made for the purpose of evading the house tax, and that S. dwelt in the dwelling-house as the stud groom of the appellant, and not otherwise:—Held, that the fact that the agreement was made with a view of avoiding the payment of duty did not make it a sham agreement; that there was nothing to shew that it was other than a real agreement; that as S. had the exclusive occupation of the house he was the occupier thereof; and that the fact that the premises were all used for one common purpose was not inconsistent with this. Cooper v. Rose, 97 L. T. 337; 71 J. P. 492; 23 T. L. R. 707—Bray, J.

Dwelling-house and Offices—Communication by Doors on Ground Floor—Tenements Occupied Solely for Business Purposes—House “divided and let in different tenements”—Stables.—The appellant was the owner of a block of buildings, consisting of a house, offices, and stables, the offices being divided perpendicularly from the residential portion by a wall pierced by two doorways on the ground floor. The appellant let the residential portion at a fixed annual rental to his sister, who, with her two servants, had the exclusive use of two separate entrances to the main street, but she did not use any portion of the offices. The part used as offices was verbally let to a firm of solicitors of which the appellant was a senior partner, and they had the exclusive use of a separate entrance from the main street by which the offices were entered, and the door of which was locked from the outside when all had left the offices. The stables in the yard at the rear were let to a separate tenant at a fixed annual rent, and they had a separate entrance from another street to which they fronted. The arrangement made between the appellant and the occupier of the residential portion was that the servants kept by her should clean the offices of the firm, and the servants were engaged to do that cleaning as well as their duties in the residential portion, and the firm paid to such occupier the wages of one of the servants. The only communication between the residential portion and the office portion was by two doors on the ground floor, and through these doors the servants passed and repassed to clean the offices. The occupier of the residential portion had the key of these doors, which she could lock and bolt from the inside, but not so as to prevent the servants from passing through to the offices, and she had the sole right to dismiss the servants, who lived and slept in the residential portion. The appellant himself did not occupy any part of the premises, which were separately rated to poor rate in the names of the three tenants:—Held, that the house was not separately “let in different tenements” within the meaning of section 13, sub-section 1 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1878; and that the building, consisting of the dwelling-house and the offices, formed one house chargeable in one cumulo sum to inhabited-house duty under the House Tax Act, 1808, but that the stables did not form part of the house and were exempt. Knight v. Manley, 92 L. T. 506; 21 T. L. R. 203—Phillimore, J.

Dwelling-house—Furnished and Habitable, but not Lived in.]—A dwelling-house furnished and ready for habitation is chargeable to inhabited-house duty under the House Tax Acts though no person has actually lived, dwelt, or slept in it during the year of assessment. Smith v. Danney, 73 L. J. K.B. 646; [1904] 2 K.B. 186; 90 L. T. 760; 53 W. R. 254; 20 T. L. R. 444—Channell, J.

Two Houses Connected so as to Form one Dwelling-house.]—A and B, two adjoining dwelling-houses belonging to different proprietors, were connected by an open doorway on the ground floor. The proprietor of A and his son, the tenant of B, occupied the two houses thus: The son, who was a physician, occupied the public rooms in B for his practice, one bedroom in B was occupied by himself, and another by a sister. The father and the other members of the family had bedrooms in A. The whole family took their meals in A. The only kitchen used was in A. There was only one servant:—Held, that there was such internal communication between the two houses that they could not be regarded as “different tenements” in the sense of Schedule B, rule 14 of the Inhabited-House Duty Act, 1808; that the two houses formed one dwelling-house in the joint occupation of father and son; and therefore that the father and son were jointly liable to inhabited-house duty for the whole premises. Murdoch v. Inland Revenue, 7 F. 111—Ct. of Sess.

Dwelling-house Partly Occupied by Solicitor's Office—Offices “therewith occupied.”—The respondent, a solicitor, occupied a dwelling-house fronting a street, and also a building in a yard at the back of the house used by him as an office for the purposes of his profession. There was a passage leading from the street to the yard. The front door into the house was in the passage, and at the end of the passage nearest the street was a door which was open all day, but which was locked at night, thereby shutting off all communication between the street and the whole of the premises, including the office. There was no internal communication between the office and the dwelling-house:—Held, that the office must be included in the valuation of the dwelling-house as being “therewith occupied” within the schedule to the House Tax Act, 1851, and not being so distinct and separate as to come within the exemption in section 13, sub-section 2 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1878, of a tenement “occupied solely for the purposes of . . . any profession . . . by which the occupier seeks a livelihood or profit.” Nichols v. Malim, 75 L. J. K.B. 140; [1906] 1 K.B. 272; 94 L. T. 161; 54 W. R. 404—Walton, J.

Business Premises on One Floor, Dwelling-House on Second Floor—Structural Separation.] Where of two floors in the same building one is occupied exclusively for business purposes and the other as a dwelling-house, and there is no internal communication, but there are separate entrances from the street, the business portion of the premises is, under the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1878, s. 13, sub-s. 2, entitled to exemption from inhabited house duty. Att.-Gen. v. Mutual Tontine Westminster Chambers Association (45 L. J. Ex. 886; 1 Ex. D. 469) considered. Grant v. Langston, 69 L. J. P.C. 66; [1900] A. C. 383; 82 L. T. 629; 64 J. P. 644—H.L. (Sc.)

Fire-station.]—A fire-station, owned and occupied by a town council, consisted of a fire-master's house, houses for firemen, engine-house, stables, gymnasium, duty-room, workshops, &c. There was intercommunication between the whole building:—Held, that the fire-station was subject to assessment for inhabited-house duty as a unum quid. Inland Revenue v. Edinburgh Corporation, 5 F. 875—Ct. of Sess.

A fire-station, owned and occupied by a town council, does not come under the exemption from inhabited-house duty of houses divided into and let in different tenements, and occupied solely for trade, contained in the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1878, s. 13. Ib.

Houses under 20l. of annual value provided for firemen in a fire-station, owned and occupied by a town council, do not come under the exemption from inhabited-house duty of houses under 20l. annual value contained in the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1890, s. 26, sub-s. 2, as amended by the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1891, s. 4, sub-s. 1. Id.

"Hall or office"—Hall of Inn of Court.—The provision in rule 5 of Schedule B of the House Tax Act, 1808, by which every hall or office whatever that may be lawfully charged with the payment of parish rates shall be subject to the duties thereby made payable "as inhabited houses" is to be construed as meaning "as inhabited dwelling-houses," and, as the House Tax Act, 1851, re-enacts Schedule B of the House Tax Act, 1808, with respect to the duties thereby granted, the hall and offices of the Middle Temple, although not within the ordinary meaning of the word "dwelling-house," are liable to the duty imposed by the House Tax Act, 1851, on inhabited dwelling-houses. Styles v. Middle Temple (Treasurer), 68 L. J. Q.B. 1046; 81 L. T. 426; 48 W. R. 164; 63 J. P. 725—C.A.

Library of Inn of Court.—The Middle Temple library is not liable to the duty, inasmuch as a library is essentially different from a "hall or office." A "hall or office" is generally used for some business purposes connected with the general objects of the society, company, or corporation which possesses it, whereas a library is a place devoted to books, reading, and study. Styles v. Middle Temple (Treasurer), 68 L. J. Q.B. 157; 79 L. T. 700; 47 W. R. 383; 63 J. P. 213—D. See preceding case.

Library—Master's Dwelling in Part of Building—Intercommunication between Master's Dwelling and Library—Liability in Respect of Whole Premises.—The Liverpool Athenæum was an institution founded and maintained as a library and news-room. The proprietors were the whole body of members, shareholders only being eligible as members. It was not conducted for profit, and it was maintained by the subscriptions of its members. The premises were all contained between four walls, and at one end of the building was the dwelling-house of the master or librarian, in which he resided, but no person slept in the library, which the master locked up at night and opened in the morning. There was complete internal communication between the different parts of the premises, and the master by passing through doors and a passage had access from his dwelling to the various parts of the library. The master was appointed master and librarian at a salary, "with use of house, coals, and gas." He was provided in his dwelling with free lighting and coal, there being a common light and coal supply for the whole premises, and his employment could be terminated by a month's notice on either side. Upon an assessment of the premises to inhabited-house duty, Held, that the proprietors and not the master were in occupation of the master's dwelling, and that the whole premises constituted one subject-matter for assessment, and, part being inhabited, the proprietors were liable to inhabited-house duty in respect of the whole premises which were properly included in one assessment. Foster v. Liverpool Athenæum, 97 L. T. 692—Bray, J.

Public-house—"Tied house"—Rent of Premises as "Free house."—The "annual value" according to which inhabited-house duty is made payable upon an inhabited dwelling-house by the House Tax Act, 1851, is the full and just yearly rent of the premises, and is not limited to their gross or rateable annual value as stated in the poor rate. Walker v. Brisley, 69 L. J. Q.B. 875; [1900] 2 Q.B. 735; 83 L. T. 347; 49 W. R. 23; 64 J. P. 709—D.

The owner of premises demised them to a firm of brewers for a term at a rent of 60*l.* a year, the brewers being bound to do all repairs. The brewers sublet the premises as a "tied house" to the appellant by an agreement which provided that the rent should be 14*l.* a year; that there should be a further rent of 10*l.* a year in any year in which the appellant should deal with any person other than the brewers for any beer, spirits, or aerated waters; that there should be a further rent of 10*l.* a year in any year in which the appellant should be indebted to the brewers in a sum exceeding 30*l.*; that all these rents should be paid without deduction except for land tax and landlord's property tax; and that the appellant should deal exclusively with the brewers for all beer, spirits, and aerated waters. The appellant occupied the premises under the agreement, and paid the rent of 14*l.* a year:—Held, that the annual value according to which duty was payable upon the premises under the above Act was the full and just yearly rent for which they could be let as a "free house"; that that rent was not necessarily so great as the rent of 60*l.* paid by the brewers to the owner; that it was greater than the rent of 14*l.* paid by the appellant to the brewers; and that on an appeal to the Commissioners of Inhabited House Duty against the assessment of the premises they were bound to receive evidence as to the amount of such full and just rent. Id.

School—Masters' Residences—School Buildings, &c.—Dividing Wall—Covered Passage.—A schoolmaster occupied certain land and buildings for the purposes of a school. The buildings consisted of the residences of the schoolmaster and assistant-masters and the dormitories and studies of the boys, and, separated from these by a wall but connected by a covered passage through a doorway and a door in the wall, five courts, changing-rooms, closets, a play-room with a gymnasium over it, class-rooms, a carpenter's shop with a store-room over it, and a room used as a chapel:—Held, that all these buildings should be valued together as one inhabited dwelling-house for the purposes of inhabited-house duty. Broune v. Furtado, 72 L. J. K.B. 296; [1903] 1 K.B. 723; 88 L. T. 309; 67 J. P. 161—C.A.

Stable Attached to Dwelling-house—Second Stable held under a Different Letting, and used by Occupier—Assessment of Second Stable.—An innkeeper was the occupier of and resided at licensed premises which, with the stables attached thereto, he rented from the owners at a yearly rent. These stables not being sufficient for the business of the inn, he also rented other stables under a different agreement and from a different owner, and both stables were occupied by him with the inn, and used solely for the business of the inn. The stables were separated from the inn by a private yard over which he had a right of way, and were some twenty and fifty feet respectively from the private yard of the inn. The whole having been assessed to inhabited-house duty with the dwelling-house under rule 2 of Schedule B of 48 Geo. 3, c. 55, the innkeeper objected to the assessment of the second stables on the ground that they were not attached to the inn and were held under a separate agreement and from a different owner:—Held, that the second stables “belonged to and were occupied with” the dwelling-house, within the meaning of rule 2, as much as the first stables, and were properly included in the assessment. Swain v. Fleming, 81 L. T. 202—D.

S. LAND TAX.

Hospital—Exemption—Payment.]—Lands which, prior to March 25, 1693, belonged to the hospitals named in section 25 of the Land Tax Act, 1797, c. 5, are exempt from land tax whether they be in the occupation of the hospitals or in the hands of tenants, notwithstanding the circumstance that the lands have been assessed to the land tax, and the tax paid in accordance with such assessment from the year 1780, with the exception of one year, till the present time. St. Thomas's Hospital v. Hudgell, 70 L. J. K.B. 115; [1901] 1 K.B. 364; 83 L. T. 677; 65 J. P. 149—Wills, J.

Redemption—Yearly Sum Charged on Land for Benefit of Person Redeeming—“Rent”—Action for Yearly Sum.]—The yearly sum with which land becomes chargeable under section 123 of the Land Tax Redemption Act, 1802, for the benefit of a person having an estate or interest other than an estate of inheritance in the land, who redeems the land tax thereon, is “rent” within the meaning of section 1 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, and an action to recover it can only be brought within the period of twelve years prescribed for the recovery of rent by the latter section. Skene v. Cook, 70 L. J. K.B. 556; [1901] 2 K.B. 7; 84 L. T. 684; 65 J. P. 533—D.

—Unopened Coal Mines under Redeemed Lands—Exemption.]—In a contract for the redemption of land tax the word “lands” is to be construed as having its natural meaning, and as including everything down to the centre of the earth, unless at the time of redemption there is in existence a separate and distinct hereditament liable to be separately assessed; and if there is such a separate hereditament, all the circumstances existing at the time of the redemption must be looked at in order to see whether the intention of the contract was that the surface only should be redeemed, or the land and everything beneath it. Newton, Chambers & Co. v. Hall, 76 L. J. K.B. 908; [1907] 2 K.B. 446; 96 L. T. 743; 71 J. P. 388; 23 T. L. R. 511—Bray, J.

Redemption of Land Tax by Lessee—Money Paid as Consideration—Annual Sum Payable by way of Interest—Sum of Money “charged upon” Land—“Rent.”]—A lessee for years of land under a lease which contained a covenant by the lessee to pay the land tax during the term, in 1874 redeemed the land tax thereon, and the land thereupon became chargeable under section 123 of the Land Tax Redemption Act, 1802, with the amount of the money paid as the consideration for the redemption, and with the payment of a yearly sum by way of interest thereon equal in amount to the land tax redeemed, for the benefit of such person, his executors, administrators, and assigns. In 1900 an assignee of the benefits arising under the certificate of redemption sued an assignee of the lease of the land, in whom the lease became vested in 1885, for one yearly sum payable in accordance with the section. No payment or acknowledgment in respect of the tax had been made or given by the defendant to the plaintiff or his predecessors in title:—Held, that either the yearly sum payable by way of interest on the consideration money was “rent” within the meaning of section 1 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, or the money paid as the consideration for the redemption of the tax was “charged upon” the land within the meaning of section 8 of that Act, and in either case the plaintiff's claim was barred. Skene v. Cook, 71 L. J. K.B. 446; [1902] 1 K.B. 682; 86 L. T. 319; 50 W. R. 503—C.A.

Public Conveniences Provided and Maintained by Sanitary Authority.]—Land tax is assessable in respect of public lavatories or sanitary conveniences under the public streets provided and maintained by a sanitary authority under the Public Health (London) Act, 1891. (i) In what Cases Stamp Duty Payable.

(a) Agreement.

Agreement Executed in England—Goodwill—Foreign Business—Property “situate locally out of the United Kingdom.”]—According to the true construction of the Stamp Act, 1891, an agreement is made in England if it is executed in England by a party thereto whose execution is required to make the instrument on the face of it complete and perfect. Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Muller & Co.'s Margarine, Lim., 70 L. J. K.B. 677; [1901] A.C. 217; 84 L. T. 729; 49 W. R. 603—H.L. (E.)

The goodwill of a business carried on abroad, all of whose customers are resident abroad, and on the sale whereof the vendor covenants not to trade in competition with it within a radius confined to foreign territory, is “property locally situate out of the United Kingdom,” and an agreement for the sale of such goodwill is not liable to ad valorem duty under section 59, sub-section 1 of the Stamp Act, 1891. Id.

“Property locally situate out of the United Kingdom"—Agreement for Sale of Benefit of Contract to Provide Land Suitable for Factory Abroad.]—By an agreement in writing made in England between a syndicate and a limited company the syndicate agreed for valuable consideration to sell to the company the benefit of a contract which they had acquired, made between one V. of Bucharest and one F. of London, for the transfer by V. to F. of a plot of land suitable for the erection of a sugar factory and situate within a specified area in Roumania:—Held, that the agreement was for the sale of an estate or interest in property within the meaning of section 59, sub-section 1 of the Stamp Act, 1891, and was chargeable with ad valorem conveyance duty thereunder, the property agreed to be sold not being "locally situate out of the United Kingdom" within the meaning of the exception in the sub-section. Danubian Sugar Factories v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 70 L. J. K.B. 211; [1901] 1 K.B. 245; 84 L. T. 101; 65 J. P. 212—C.A.

Agreement to Sell Book Debts—Guaranty of Payment before Completion—Consideration.]—A. Co., Lim., agreed to sell their entire undertaking, together with the book debts owing to them, to B. Co., Lim. By the agreement the book debts were to be taken as they were at the making up of the books of the A. Co. at the end of the preceding year, and the A. Co. gave a guaranty that they would be paid in full before the date fixed for the completion of the conveyance; and the A. Co. were to be taken as conducting the business as agents for the B. Co. since the end of the preceding year till completion. At the date of the agreement only a small part of the debts due at the end of the preceding year was still owing, and they were all in fact paid before completion of the conveyance:—Held, that the sale of book debts was a sale of property within section 59, sub-section 1 of the Stamp Act, 1891, and that consequently the B. Co. were liable to pay stamp duty on that part of the consideration appropriated as representing the consideration given for those debts. Measures v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 82 L. T. 689—D.

Agreement between County Council and Urban Authority as to Maintenance, Repair, and Improvement of Main Roads—Agreement or Contract Pursuant to Highway Acts.]—An agreement between a county council and an urban authority relating to the cost of maintenance, repair, and reasonable improvement connected with the maintenance and repair of main roads, made under section 11, sub-section 3 of the Local Government Act, 1888, is not an "agreement or contract made or entered into pursuant to the Highway Acts for or relating to the making, maintaining, or repairing of highways," within Schedule I. of the Stamp Act, 1891, and not being otherwise specifically dealt with in that Act it requires a 10s. stamp. Cumberland County Council v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 78 L. T. 679; 62 J. P. 407—D.

Agreement by County Council with District Council to Maintain Main Roads—Agreement made "pursuant to the Highway Acts"—"Deed of any kind not described in schedule."]—When a county council make an agreement under seal with a district council under section 11, sub-section 4 of the Local Government Act, 1888, for the repairing, maintaining, and keeping in repair main roads in their district, such an agreement is not an agreement "made or entered into pursuant to the Highway Acts for or relating to the making, maintaining, or repairing of highways," within the meaning of the Schedule to the Stamp Act, 1891, which would require a 6d. stamp, but comes within the heading in that schedule, "Deed of any kind whatsoever not described in this schedule," and therefore requires a 10s. stamp. Southampton County Council v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 92 L. T. 864; 69 J. P. 105; 3 L. G. R. 1060; 21 T. L. R. 199—Phillimore, J.

Agreement for Sale of Lands—Lands Situate out of the United Kingdom—Equitable Estate in Lands—Equity of Redemption in Lands in New South Wales.]—An equity of redemption of lands in New South Wales is an equitable estate or interest within the meaning of the Stamp Act, 1891, s. 59, notwithstanding the provisions of section 25 of the New South Wales Trust Property Act, 1862, which enacts, in effect, that all mortgages shall be deemed pledges of the property thereby mortgaged, and that nothing in any such mortgage shall prevent the title of any mortgagor from being deemed a good title in law as against all persons other than the mortgagee. Farmer v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 67 L. J. Q.B. 775; [1898] 2 Q.B. 141; 79 L. T. 32—D.

An agreement for the sale of an equitable interest in lands situate out of the United Kingdom is liable to ad valorem duty under section 59 of the Act of 1891. Ib.

(b) Bill of Exchange and Promissory Note.

Promissory Note—Payable at Sight.]—A promissory note of any kind, even although payable on demand or at sight, requires to be stamped with an ad valorem stamp under the First Schedule of the Stamp Act, 1891. Oettinger v. Cohn, 77 L. J. K.B. 299; [1903] 1 K.B. 532—Channell, J.

The plaintiffs, who were resident in Germany, received from the defendant a promissory note made by him and one B. in the following terms: "We, the undersigned, severally and collectively promise to pay to H. N. O. & Co., or order, at sight, the sum of two hundred and fifty pounds sterling, value received." The document, which was written by the defendant in England, had a penny stamp impressed upon it before being sent to the plaintiffs in Germany:—Held, that the document required to be stamped with an ad valorem stamp as a promissory note. Ib.

Quare, whether a promissory note payable on demand or at sight does not require to be stamped with a penny stamp under section 32 of the Stamp Act as a bill of exchange as well as to be stamped with the ad valorem stamp as a promissory note. Ib.

"Promissory note" or Agreement.]—The appellant sold a lease of a public-house to the respondent. The respondent having failed to obtain an order of Justices for a transfer to him of the licence, it was verbally agreed between the parties that the appellant should carry on the business under the licence till the next transfer day, and that the respondent should pay him 25*l.* for doing so. The appellant consented to allow payment of that sum to stand over till the transfer day if the respondent would give him an agreement in writing. The respondent thereupon signed the following document and handed it to the appellant: "On the day of the transfer of the licence I agree to pay you the sum of Twenty-five pounds":—Held, that this document was liable to stamp duty, not as an agreement, but as a promissory note within section 33 of the Stamp Act, 1891. Smith v. Dean, 69 L. J. Q.B. 331; 81 L. T. 755—D.

(c) Bond, Covenant, or Instrument.

Annuity Charged on Real Property—Will.]—A testator bequeathed to his trustee during the life of his wife an annuity of 1,200*l.* upon trust for his said wife, and he charged same on his real and leasehold property and residuary personal estate, and subject thereto he gave and devised all his real and personal estate to J. M. K. absolutely. Subsequently, by an indenture between the said J. M. K. and the trustee, certain property forming part of the testator's estate was released from the annuity and certain other property charged with the annuity in its place:—Held, that the indenture was a bond, covenant, or instrument within the First Schedule to the Stamp Act, 1891, for securing an annuity, and that a will was not an instrument creating a security. Kennedy v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 65 J. P. 9—D.

Agreement for Hire of Telephone Wire and Apparatus—"Bond covenant or instrument of any kind whatsoever"—"Only or principal or primary security for any annuity" for Indefinite Period.]—An agreement with a telephone company under which a person rents a private wire and telephonic apparatus for a specified yearly sum to be paid in advance, and which is terminable by either party on three months' notice, is within the words "Bond covenant or instrument of any kind whatsoever," "being the only or principal or primary security for any annuity" for an "indefinite period" in the first schedule of the Stamp Act, 1891, and chargeable with the ad valorem duty therein stated. National Telephone Co. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 69 L. J. Q.B. 43; [1900] A.C. 1; 81 L. T. 546; 48 W. R. 210; 64 J. P. 420—H.L. (E.)

Bond of Foreign Company—"Issue" "Offered for subscription" in United Kingdom.]—A scheme for the reorganisation of an American railway company was prepared, by which it was proposed that an executive committee should be formed in America to carry out the scheme, that a new company should be formed in America to take over the undertaking of the old company, and that the new company should issue new bonds in order to take the bonds of the old company and provide further capital for the new company. The English holders of bonds of the old company were invited by circular to accept the scheme and to deposit their bonds with named depositaries in London, in exchange for which they would subsequently receive bonds of the proposed new company. The scheme was carried out. The new company executed and delivered to the appointed trustee in America the stipulated number of new bearer bonds, which were duly certified by the trustee and then handed to the executive committee. The executive committee had full power to deal with any of the new bonds, by sale, pledge, or otherwise, for the purposes of the scheme and for the uses of the new company, in its discretion and without accountability to the new company. The new bonds in question were forwarded by the executive committee to the depositaries in London, by whom they were handed to the persons who had deposited bonds of the old company:—Held, that the new bonds given to the holders of old bonds in England were neither "issued" nor "offered for subscription" in England within the meaning of section 82, sub-section 1 (b) (i.) (ii.) of the Stamp Act, 1891. Brown v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 84 L. T. 71—C.A.

Consolidation and Conversion of Stocks—"Increase of the amount of nominal share capital"—"No Increase of Working Capital.]—Where a railway company under the provisions of a special Act extinguish various classes of stock, preferential and ordinary, and in lieu thereof issue other stocks of higher nominal value, but bearing a lower rate of interest, although nothing is added to the working capital of the company, yet there is an "increase of the amount of the nominal share capital" within the meaning of the Stamp Act, 1891, s. 118, and the ad valorem duty thereby imposed is payable on such increase. Midland Railway v. Att.-Gen., 71 L. J. K.B. 315; 86 L. T. 206; 50 W. R. 433—H.L. (E.)

Loan Capital—Date of Issue.]—By section 8, sub-section 1 of the Finance Act, 1899, "Where any . . . corporation . . . propose to issue any loan capital, they shall, before the issue thereof, deliver to the Commissioners a statement of the amount proposed to be secured by the issue." And by sub-section 2 every such statement is to be charged with an ad valorem stamp duty. The Act received the Royal assent on June 20, 1899. A corporation, under powers conferred upon them by certain local Acts, resolved to create corporation stock, and a prospectus was issued inviting tenders for the same and specifying the mode of payment. The date for payment of the final instalment was June 21, 1899. Tenders were received for the whole of the stock, and the full amount was allotted. When the amounts payable on allotment were paid, provisional receipts were issued to the respective allottees which were exchanged for scrip certificates to bearer prior to June 20, 1899. The certificates were dated April 24, 1899, but were not in fact issued till May 2, 1899:—Held, that there was an issue of the loan capital at all events when the scrip certificates were issued, and that as that took place before June 20, 1899, the Finance Act of 1899 had no application, and the corporation were not bound to deliver a stamped statement under the provisions of section 8. Att.-Gen. v. Liverpool Corporation, 71 L. J. K.B. 195; [1902] 1 K.B.

"Issue of loan capital"—Existing Debenture Stock—Amalgamation—Rights of Holders of Existing Stock Modified and Altered—Liability of Issue of New Stock to Duty.—A company, incorporated by special Act, had from time to time issued certain debenture stock, bearing interest at 4 per cent. By an amalgamation Act, which provided for a change of the name of the company, for the dissolution of the company and the transfer of its undertaking to the new company, it was provided that on and from the date of the amalgamation the then existing debenture stock was to be divided into debenture stock of two classes, the A and B debenture stock, each bearing interest at 3 per cent., and the amount of the A and B debenture stock was to be 61 per cent. and 39 per cent. respectively of the total amount of the then existing debenture stock. The rights of each holder of existing debenture stock were to be modified so that his holding was to consist of 61 per cent. of A debenture stock and 39 per cent. of B debenture stock, bearing interest at 3 per cent., and each holder was to be entitled to a further amount of B debenture stock equal to one-third of the amount of existing debenture stock held by him. There was no provision in the Act that the existing debenture stock was to be cancelled or extinguished, but each holder of existing stock was to deliver up the certificates of the stock held by him and was to receive proper certificates in exchange, and he was to be no longer entitled to register the existing stock. The operation carried out under the Act did not involve the raising or obtaining from the public any additional capital. The Crown claimed that the company were bound under section 8 of the Finance Act, 1899, to deliver a duly stamped statement of the aggregate amount of the A and B debenture stock:—Held (on the authority of Att.-Gen. v. Regent's Canal and Dock Co., 73 L. J. K.B. 50; [1904] 1 K.B. 263), that under the operation carried out by the amalgamation Act the issue of the A and B debenture stock was an "issue of loan capital" within the meaning of section 8, sub-section 1 of the Finance Act, 1899, and that the company were bound, under sub-section 2, to deliver a duly stamped statement of the total aggregate of such A and B debenture stock. Att.-Gen. v. London and India Docks Co., 95 L. T. 536—Walton, J. And see DEBENTURE, infra, col. 2152.

(e) Conveyance on Sale.

Agreement for Sale of Equitable Interest—Leasehold Premises—In the Event of Landlord's Consent not being Obtained, Seller, at Purchaser's Option, to Execute Declaration of Trust—"Property except lands"—Goodwill of Public-house.—A contract for the sale of leasehold premises contained a proviso that in the event of the consent of the landlord to the assignment of the lease not being obtained the vendor should, at the option of the purchaser, execute a declaration of trust of the lease in his favour. Two days afterwards a declaration of trust was executed, by which the equitable interest in the premises vested in the purchaser:—Held (Rigby, L.J., dissenting), that the contract being one for the sale of a legal estate, and there being no obligation on the purchaser to accept a declaration of trust, it was not a contract for the sale of an equitable estate or interest in property within the meaning of section 59, sub-section 1 of the Stamp Act, 1891. West London Syndicate v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 67 L. J. Q.B. 956; [1898] 2 Q.B. 507; 79 L. T. 289; 47 W. R. 125—C.A.

Per Rigby, L.J.—The true inference from the documents and facts outside the documents was that the real bargain between the parties was for the sale of an equitable interest only. Ib.

The goodwill of a public-house is not necessarily a mere enhancement of the value of the licensed premises, and so attached to the possession of the premises as to constitute "land" within the meaning of section 59, sub-section 1 of the Stamp Act, 1891. It may, therefore, be "property except lands" within the meaning of the section; and upon an agreement for the sale of the lease and goodwill of a public-house the instrument may be chargeable with ad valorem duty:—So held (Vaughan Williams, L.J., dissenting), reversing the judgment of the Queen's Bench Division. Ib.

Sale by one Company to Another—Consideration—Annual Payments out of Profits—Amount Varying with Paid-up Capital—"Money payable periodically"—Contingency—Ad Valorem Duty.—By a conveyance on sale a company sold its undertaking to another company. Part of the consideration for the sale consisted of annual sums payable by the purchasing company out of its annual profits. These annual sums were to be equal to 3 per cent. on the amount for the time being paid up on so much of the ordinary share capital of the purchasing company as should for the time being have been issued by it, and were only payable after a dividend of 5 per cent. upon the same amount had been paid to the shareholders of the purchasing company. At the date of the conveyance the whole of the purchasing company's share capital had been issued, and a certain amount had been paid up thereon:—Held, that ad valorem stamp duty was payable on the conveyance under section 56, sub-section 2 of the Stamp Act, 1891, inasmuch as—first, there was an ascertained amount—namely, that paid up on the ordinary share capital of the purchasing company at the date of the conveyance—upon which the dividend of 3 per cent., when earned, would have to be paid, which was thus a basis for assessing the duty; and secondly, the words "money payable" in sub-section 2 include money payable contingently. Underground Electric Railways Co. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 74 L. J. K.B. 200; [1905] 1 K.B. 174; 92 L. T. 6; 53 W. R. 325; 21 T. L. R. 109—C.A.

Transfer of Property Situate Abroad—Instrument Executed Abroad—Consideration—Issue and Delivery of Shares in England—"Thing done or to be done in the United Kingdom."—By an instrument in French called an "acte d'apport," executed in France, an English company transferred certain property in France to another English company in consideration of the allotment by the latter to the former of a certain number of its shares in the former:—Held, that the instrument related to "property situate" and to a "matter or thing done or to be done" in the United Kingdom within the meaning of section 14, sub-section 4 of the Stamp Act, 1891, and was a "conveyance on sale" within section 54 of that Act. Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Maple & Co., 77 L. J. K.B. 55; 24 T. L. R. 140; [1908] A.C. 22; 14 Manson, 302; 24 T. L. R. 140—H.L. (E.) Reversing, [1906] 2 K.B. 334; 95 L. T. 687; 22 T. L. R. 829—C.A.

Undertaking by Mine Owner to Leave Coal Unworked under Railway in Consideration of Compensation—Sale—Estate or Interest in Property—Right not before in Existence.—By section 1 and Schedule I. of the Stamp Act, 1891, a conveyance on sale of any property, where the amount of the consideration exceeds 300*l.*, is chargeable with a stamp duty of 5*s.* for every 50*l.*; and a release or renunciation of any right or interest in property upon a sale is chargeable with the same duty. By section 54 conveyance on sale includes any instrument whereby any property or any estate or interest in property, upon the sale thereof, is transferred to or vested in a purchaser. . . . By section 60, where upon the sale of any right not before in existence such right is secured by bond . . . covenant, contract, or otherwise, the bond or other instrument is to be charged with the same duty as a conveyance. An instrument was executed by a limited company, who were mine owners, acknowledging the receipt of a sum of money payable under section 78 of the Railways Clauses Act, 1845, by a railway company, as compensation to the mine owners for leaving mines unworked, and containing an undertaking by the mine owners to leave such mines unworked.—Held, that the instrument was not an instrument securing a right not before in existence within section 60 of the Stamp Act, 1891. Held, also, per COLLINS, L.J., and STIRLING, L.J.,—first, that no estate or interest in property was vested in a purchaser, and therefore the instrument was not a conveyance on sale within section 54 of the Act; and secondly, that the restriction placed on the mine owners was not the subject of a grant, and that there was therefore no sale within the meaning of section 60, or of section 54, or section 1, Schedule I. of the Act. Great Northern Railway v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 70 L. J. K.B. 336; [1901] 1 K.B. 416; 84 L. T. 188; 49 W. R. 261; 65 J. P. 275—C.A.

Exchange of Shares—Agreement to Hold Shares in Trust—Contract for Sale of "equitable interest."—By an agreement made between seven persons, described as members of a certain brewery company (thereinafter called the "old company"), and the appellant company, it was agreed that the seven members of the old company should exchange their shares in that company for such number of fully paid-up ordinary and preference shares and debenture stock in the appellant company as were respectively set opposite their names in the schedule, and that the appellant company should also pay to each of the seven persons 100*l.* in cash. It was further agreed that when the agreement had been filed pursuant to section 25 of the Companies Act, 1867, the appellant company should allot to each of the seven persons the shares and debenture stock to which they respectively were to be entitled, and that thenceforth those persons should hold their respective shares in the old company "in trust for the new company":—Held, that the transaction was in substance a sale to the new company of an equitable interest in the shares of the old company, and that the instrument was therefore chargeable with conveyance duty under the provisions of section 54 and section 59, sub-section 1 of the Stamp Act, 1891. Chesterfield Brewery Co. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 68 L. J. Q.B. 204; [1899] 2 Q.B. 7; 79 L. T. 559; 47 W. R. 320—D.

Purchase of Property under Authority of Statute—Conveyance—Property Including both Realty and Chattels—Duty on Personal Property.—The ad valorem duty imposed by section 12 of the Finance Act, 1895, on "any property" purchased under statutory authority of which a duly stamped instrument of conveyance is required, is payable in respect of the whole property, personal as well as real, and is not confined to property which can only be transferred in writing. Eastbourne Corporation v. At.-Gen., 73 L. J. K.B. 259; [1904] A.C. 155; 90 L. T. 99; 52 W. R. 577; 68 J. P. 393; 2 L. G. R. 789; 20 T. L. R. 252—H.L. (E.)

Extract of Decree.—An extract of decree under section 8 of the Heritable Securities (Scotland) Act, 1894, whereby the lands of a debtor become vested irredeemably in the creditor, is a "conveyance on sale" within the meaning of section 54 of the Stamp Act, 1891, and chargeable with ad valorem duty. Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Tod, 67 L. J. P.C. 42; [1898] A.C. 399; 78 L. T. 571—H.L. (Sc.)

Conveyance in Consideration of Debt—Bad Debt.—Under an agreement confirmed by Act of Parliament the North British Railway Co. acquired the undertaking of the Bo'ness Harbour Commissioners. The agreement set forth that "as the consideration for such sale and transfer the Company shall undertake as from the date of entry, and shall free and relieve the Harbour Commissioners of the whole debts, liabilities, contracts and obligations and engagements of the Harbour Commissioners. . . ." Prior to the date of entry the company had become creditors of the Commissioners in terms of a guarantee, under which they had made large advances, amounting to 303,376*l.* 1*s.*, for a series of years, to meet the interest due on the harbour debentures. This debt was set forth in the preamble of the special Act as one of the debts due by the Harbour Commissioners at the date of the transfer:—Held, first, that the debt due to the company was included in the debts from which the company undertook to free and relieve the Harbour Commissioners as part of the consideration for the transfer of the undertaking; and secondly, that ad valorem conveyance duty was chargeable on its whole amount, irrespective of whether it was or was not a bad debt which could not have been recovered from the Harbour Commissioners. Inland Revenue Commissioners v. North British Railway, 4 F. 27—Ct. of Sess.

Gas Company Dissolved and Reconstituted by Statute—Property of Old Company Vested in New Company—"Vested by way of sale."—A special Act of Parliament provided that a certain gas company should be dissolved and re-incorporated with further powers, that all the property of the old company should be vested in the new company, that the new company should assume all the liabilities of the old company, and that the preference and ordinary stock of the old company should form part of the capital of the new company, the holders of stock in the old company becoming holders of stock in the new company to a like amount:—Held, that the copy of the Act was chargeable, under section 12 of the Finance Act, 1895, with ad valorem duty as on a conveyance on sale on the amount of the liabilities of the old company assumed by the new company, and on the value at the date of the passing of the Act of the stock of the new company issued in exchange to the holders of stock in the old company. Att.-Gen. v. Felixstowe Gas Light Co., 76 L. J. K.B. 1107; [1907] 2 K.B. 984; 97 L. T. 340; 14 Manson, 291—Bray, J.

The fact that the two companies did not co-exist at the same time did not prevent the duty being payable, as under the Act of Parliament the transfer was treated as if it were a transfer from one company to the other, and duty is payable on transfers "by way of sale." Ib.

Assent of Executor to Devise of Real Estate.]

—An assent in writing under the hand, but not under the seal, of an executor to a devise of real estate made in pursuance of section 3 of the Land Transfer Act, 1897, is not an "instrument whereby any property . . . is transferred to or vested in any person" within the meaning of section 62 of the Stamp Act, 1891, and need not therefore be stamped as a conveyance or transfer. Kemp v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 74 L. J. K.B. 112; [1905] 1 K.B. 581; 92 L. T. 92; 53 W. R. 479; 21 T. L. R. 168—Phillimore, J.

The words "every instrument, and every decree or order of any Court . . . whereby any property . . . is transferred to or vested in any person" are to be construed reddendo singula singulis. Ib.

Transfer of Stock by Executor to Legatee.]

Where a legatee under a will agrees with the executor to take payment or part payment of the legacy in stock or securities of the testator, the transfer deed executed in pursuance of the agreement is a "conveyance or transfer on sale" within the meaning of the Stamp Act, 1891, and is chargeable with ad valorem duty to be assessed in accordance with the provisions of that Act. Dawson v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, [1905] 2 Ir. R. 69—K.B. D.

Agreement Stamp.]—On June 13, 1904, M. verbally agreed to sell an ice-cream business to F. for 150*l.*, and F. thereupon entered into possession of the shop and business. M. having begun another ice-cream business in the same town, F. sued him for 150*l.*, alleging that the defender had, as part of the agreement, undertaken not to compete with the pursuer in business in the same town under a penalty of 150*l.* The pursuer produced a document, dated August 26, 1904, signed by the parties, which the pursuer alleged set forth the terms of the agreement. This document bore a six-penny agreement stamp. The defender pleaded that the document, being a conveyance on sale within section 54 of the Stamp Act, 1891, required an ad valorem stamp:—Held, that, having regard to the fact that there was a prior verbal agreement to sell, followed by possession, the document was not so clearly a conveyance on sale as to make it the duty of the Court under section 14 of the Stamp Act, 1891, to require the document to be stamped with an ad valorem stamp before allowing it to be admitted in evidence. Don Francesco v. De Meo, [1908] S.C. 7—Ct. of Sess.

Family Arrangement—Liability to Duty.]

The appellant, who was absolutely entitled to certain freeholds and copyholds subject to a mortgage, and also to certain personal chattels, executed three deeds embodying a family arrangement with H. The first exonerated the appellant from payment of the mortgage debt and contained a covenant by H. with the mortgagees for payment. The second was a conveyance by the appellant of his unsettled estates to H. subject to the mortgage. The third deed was a conveyance by the appellant to H. of the chattels, and contained a family arrangement as to the estates, a debt of 123,800*l.* from the appellant to H. being extinguished and power given to the parties to cancel the arrangement by a deed signed by both of them:—Held, that the second and third deeds were "conveyance on sale" and were chargeable with ad valorem duty under the Stamp Act, 1891. Bristol (Marquess) v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 70 L. J. K.B. 759; [1901] 2 K.B. 336; 84 L. T. 659; 49 W. R. 718; 65 J. P. 360—D.

Part of Consideration Payable on Contingency.]

—Where part of the consideration on a sale consists of money payable periodically on a contingency for a term exceeding twenty years, or in perpetuity, or for an indefinite period, ad valorem stamp duty must under section 56, sub-section 2 of the Stamp Act, 1891, be paid on twenty years' purchase of such annual payment. Underground Electric Railways Co. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 75 L. J. K.B. 117; [1906] A.C. 21; 93 L. T. 819; 54 W. R. 381; 22 T. L. R. 160—H.L. (E.)

Release or Renunciation of Property or of Right or Interest in Property—Undertaking by Mine-owner to Leave Coal under Railway Unworked and Abandon Claims thereto in Consideration of Compensation—"Release"—"Renunciation"—Release "upon a sale."]—An instrument by which a colliery company acknowledges receipt of a sum paid as compensation by a railway company in respect of coal which the latter company has, pursuant to section 78 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, required to be left unworked, and in consideration thereof undertakes to leave the coal unworked and to do all things necessary for vesting the same in the latter company whenever required, and acknowledges that the sum includes compensation for all claims, which, but for the instrument, might have been maintained against the latter company in respect of the coal, does not come within the words in the First Schedule to the Stamp Act, 1891—"Release . . . of any property or of any right or interest in any property—Upon a sale," and consequently is not chargeable with ad valorem stamp duty as a conveyance on sale, but comes within the words "Release . . . of any property or of any right or interest in any property—In any other case," and consequently is chargeable with a stamp duty of 10s. Great Northern Railway v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 68 L. J. Q.B. 978; [1899] 2 Q.B. 652; 81 L. T. 385; 48 W. R. 170; 64 J. P. 21—D.

The word "renunciation" occurring in the schedule in connection with these words is a term not of English but of Scots law. Ib.

Partnership—Dissolution—Transfer of Property—Record of Transfer—"Conveyance on sale"—"Release on renunciation."—J. F. G. and J. W. G. being in partnership, the same was determined under the articles by notice. Two instruments were executed to give effect to the dissolution, by the first of which the real estate of the partnership was released by J. F. G. and transferred to the appellant, J. W. G. That deed was stamped with an ad valorem duty, and no question arose thereon. By the other deed, after reciting that 41,752l. 4s. 7d. was the amount standing to the credit of J. F. G., and that by the above indenture the real estate had been conveyed to J. W. G., and that the chattel property of the partnership was in the possession of the appellant, J. W. G., and that the appellant had given J. F. G. his promissory note for 41,752l. 4s. 7d., both J. F. G. and J. W. G. declared the partnership dissolved, and J. F. G. declared that the delivery of the note to him was accepted by him in full discharge of all claims against J. W. G. in respect of the share of him, J. F. G., in the partnership, and he further covenanted with J. W. G. that he would not carry on business in the firm name, and entered into other covenants:—Held, that this deed also was liable to ad valorem duty under the Stamp Act, 1891. Garnett v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 81 L. T. 633; 48 W. R. 303—D.

Land Sold for Lump Sum and Annual Payment—Annual Payment made by Purchaser in Consideration of Vendor Paying Tithe—Whether Annual Payment is "part of the consideration for conveyance on sale."—The owners in fee-simple of a certain piece of land offered the land for sale in lots as a building estate, and by an indenture which recited that the vendors had agreed with the purchaser for the sale to him of a certain lot or piece of the land for the sum of 50l., the vendors granted the lot to the purchaser in fee-simple in consideration of the sum of 50l. then paid by the purchaser (amongst other conditions), subject to and charged with the payment to the vendors and their assigns of the annual sum of 1s., in accordance with a stipulation providing that the piece of land thereby conveyed was in consideration of the vendors paying the whole of the tithe in respect of the land of which the plot formed part, subjected to and charged with the payment to the vendors of the perpetual sum of 1s. per annum; and the purchaser for himself and his assigns covenanted to make this annual payment of 1s. to the vendors and to perform the other stipulations of the agreement. The payment of the 1s. was in consideration of the vendors paying the whole of the tithe. In assessing the stamp duty upon the indenture,—Held, that the annual payment of 1s. per annum was part of the consideration for the sale; that the consideration for the sale was therefore the 50l. plus the annual sum of 1s., and that, having regard to section 56, subsection 2 of the Stamp Act, 1891, the whole consideration for the sale was 50l. plus 1s. multiplied by twenty—namely, 51l.—and that the indenture was to be stamped as a conveyance on sale for a consideration of 51l.—namely, with a stamp of 7s. 6d.; but that even if the annual payment was not part of the consideration, the stipulation to pay it would be a separate collateral covenant which would require to be stamped as such. Martin v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 91 L. T. 453—Channell, J.

Covenant to Redeem after Happening of Contingency.—Where by a debenture which is a "marketable security" within the meaning of the first schedule of the Stamp Act, 1891, the obligor covenants that when the debenture becomes payable, in accordance with the conditions indorsed thereon, he will pay to the registered holder a specified sum, and by a condition indorsed on the debenture the obligor may at any time after a specified date redeem the debenture at a higher price than the specified sum, on giving a specified notice to the registered holder, and "upon the expiration of such notice" the higher price "shall become payable as if the same was the amount of the principal moneys hereby secured, and shall thereupon cease to carry interest," the debenture is liable to stamp duty not upon the higher, but only on the lower price, inasmuch as such lower price is the "money thereby secured" by a "marketable security" not transferable by delivery within the meaning of the schedule. Knights Deep v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 69 L. J. Q.B. 66; [1900] 1 Q.B. 217; 81 L. T. 625; 48 W. R. 198—C.A.

Cancellation of Existing Debenture Stock—Creation of New Debenture Stock—Substitution of New Stock for Stock Extinguished—"Issue" of Loan Capital.—The defendants, under powers conferred upon them by a special Act of Parliament, issued certain debenture stocks at different rates of interest. By a subsequent Act those stocks were cancelled, and it was provided that there should be, by virtue of the Act, created, in lieu of the stocks so extinguished, certain new debenture stock, at a uniform rate of interest, and that every holder of the existing stock should be entitled to receive such nominal amount of the new stock as would yield to the holder in cash the same amount of interest previously received by him in respect of the existing stock, and that the new stock was to be held upon the same terms as those upon which the existing stock was held immediately before the substitution:—Held, that, the existing debenture stocks having been extinguished by the special Act, and new stock substituted therefor, whereby the indebtedness of the company was largely increased, the new stock was loan capital, and the defendants had proposed "to issue any loan capital" within the meaning of section 8, subsection 1 of the Finance Act, 1899, and were therefore bound to deliver to the Inland Revenue Commissioners, for the purposes of stamp duty, a statement of the amount proposed to be secured by the new debenture stock. Att.-Gen. v. Regent's Canal and Dock Co., 73 L. J. K.B. 50; [1904] 1 K.B. 263; 89 L. T. 599; 52 W. R. 211; 68 J. P. 105; 20 T. L. R. 92—C.A.

Mortgage to Secure Debentures—Substituted Security.—By a trust deed made between a joint-stock company and trustees for the debenture-holders, the former, stipulating that they might redeem the debenture stock after giving certain notice, covenanted that after giving such notice they would redeem at nominal value, plus 10 per cent. By further clauses of the deed certain freeholds and leaseholds were assured to the trustees to secure payment of all principal moneys, bonuses, and interest which might become payable in respect of the debenture stock, and a floating charge on all the company's property was created for the same purpose. There was a clause giving the company power to withdraw any of the freeholds or leaseholds assured to the trustees and substitute other property of equal value. By a subsequent indenture a small part of the leaseholds so assured was withdrawn and other leaseholds belonging to the company assured to the trustees to be held on the trusts of the earlier indenture. This second indenture contained no covenant for payment of the debenture principal money or interest, and no express declaration of the trusts on which the property assured was to be held:—Held, that the second indenture was a "mortgage" within section 86, sub-section 1 of the Stamp Act, 1871, and a "substituted security" within schedule 1 and heading "Mortgage, Bond, Debenture, Covenant" of that Act, and that therefore the Commissioners were right in holding that the stamp duty was to be calculated at the rate of sixpence per 100*l.* on the whole principal money of the debenture stock. Gartside's Brookside Brewery v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 82 L. T. 686—D.

Supplemental Deeds to carry out Provisions of Trust Deed—"Collateral or auxiliary or additional or substituted security."—To carry out the provisions of a trust deed (by which a joint-stock company secured 750,000*l.* debenture stock and interest) sixteen deeds were executed by the company conveying different parts of the property of the company to the trustees for the debenture-holders:—Held, that each of these sixteen deeds was liable to stamp duty at the rate of sixpence per 100*l.* on the whole principal money of the debenture stock—namely, 750,000*l.* Gartside's Brookside Brewery v. Inland Revenue Commissioners (82 L. T. 686) followed. British Oil and Cake Mills v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 66 J. P. 438—Phillimore, J. Affirmed C.A. 72 L. J. K.B. 312; [1903] 1 K.B. 689; 88 L. T. 526. But see now Revenue Act, 1903, s. 7.

Conversion of Stock of Company—Creation of New Preference Stock—Liability of New Stock to Stamp Duty—Increase of "nominal share capital."—By a special Act passed in 1897 certain stock of the defendant company was extinguished, and new stock, preferred and deferred, of greater face value was created by way of substitution. There was, however, no increase of dividend by reason of the re-arrangement:—Held, that the creation of the new stock was an increase of the amount of the "nominal share capital" within the meaning of section 113 of the Stamp Act, 1891, and that the defendants were therefore bound to deliver a statement of the amount of such increase to the Inland Revenue Commissioners in accordance with that section. Att.-Gen. v. Midland Railway, 69 L. J. Q.B. 669; [1900] 2 Q.B. 353; 82 L. T. 716; 49 W. R. 138—D. And see MARKETABLE SECURITY, infra.

(g) Lease.

Rents—Covenants Relating to Matter of Lease.—By a lease the corporation of C. demised to the appellants the right of user of certain tramways at a certain yearly rent. The lease also contained a provision that the appellants should pay, as from the date when a Board of Trade certificate authorising electric traction should be obtained, the sum of 100*l.* per annum per mile of road along which the tramways were laid in lieu of maintaining roads and repairing tramways, which sum amounted altogether to 900*l.* per annum; and a further provision that the appellants should, as from the date of such Board of Trade certificate, pay to the corporation an amount in respect of electric energy supplied, such sum to be of the minimum amount yearly of 4,000*l.*:—Held, by KENNEDY, J. (PHILLIMORE, J., dissenting), that the provisions as to the payment of 900*l.* and 4,000*l.* were covenants relating to the matter of the lease, and were not chargeable with ad valorem duty as additional rents. British Electric Traction Co. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 64 J. P. 805—D.

Lease of Tramways—Lessors to Maintain Roads—Annual Payment by Lessees in Lieu of Repairing—Purchase of Electrical Energy from Lessors by Lessees—"Covenant relating to the matter of the lease"—Rent—"Lease or tack"—"Bond, covenant or other instrument."—By a lease made pursuant to the Tramways Act, 1870, a corporation demised certain tramways to a company at a rent of 3,250*l.* By clause 4 of the lease the lessees were required to pay a certain additional sum per annum, not less than 900*l.*, to the lessors in lieu of repairing and maintaining the roads along which the tramways were laid. By clause 27 the lessees were obliged to purchase all electrical energy for working the tramways from the lessors, and by clause 30 a minimum sum of 4,000*l.* was payable in respect of this. The lease gave the lessors a right to distrain for all sums payable under the lease except the sum payable for the supply of electrical energy:—Held, first, that the sum of 900*l.* payable under clause 4 was rent, and consequently stamp duty was payable in respect of it on that footing; and secondly, that the covenant to purchase electrical energy was a "covenant relating to the matter of the lease" within section 77, sub-section 2 of the Stamp Act, 1891, and that therefore no stamp duty was assessable in respect of the 4,000*l.* payable under clause 30. British Electric Traction Co. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 71 L. J. K.B. 92; [1902] 1 K.B. 441; 85 L. T. 663; 50 W. R. 280; 66 J. P. 83—C.A.

Assignment of Leaseholds—Consideration—Premium—Apportioned Rent to be Paid by Assignee.—By an indenture of assignment the assignor assigned and conveyed to the assignee leasehold premises held by the assignor under a prior indenture of lease for the residue of the assignor's term in consideration of 503*l.* and subject to the payment by the assignee of an apportioned yearly rent, part of the yearly rent reserved by the prior indenture. The assignee covenanted to pay such apportioned yearly rent, and the assignor covenanted to pay the balance of the rent:—Held, that the indenture was not a conveyance to the assignee of property subject to the payment of money within the meaning of section 57 of the Stamp Act, 1891, and that the apportioned yearly rent was not therefore to be deemed part of the consideration in respect whereof the instrument was chargeable with ad valorem duty. Swayne v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 69 L. J. Q.B. 63; [1900] 1 Q.B. 172; 81 L. T. 623; 48 W. R. 197—C.A.

(h) Marketable Security.

Bonds of Foreign Company—“Made or issued in the United Kingdom.”—Bonds of a foreign company which for the first time acquired validity on the doing of certain acts, which acts were done in the United Kingdom, held to be “marketable securities . . . made or issued in the United Kingdom” within the meaning of section 82, sub-section 1 (b) of the Stamp Act, 1891. Revelstoke (Lord) v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 67 L. J. Q.B. 855; [1898] A.C. 565; 79 L. T. 227; 47 W. R. 210; 62 J. P. 740—H.L. (E.)

Note of Foreign Government—“Promissory note”—“Marketable security.”—Where an instrument is liable to duty under two or more categories of taxation, the Crown has an option to decide under which category it is to be assessed. Speyer v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 77 L. J. K.B. 302—H.L. (E.)

A gold Coupon Treasury note of a foreign Government, in which there was an acknowledgment of indebtedness for the sum mentioned therein and a promise to pay the same to bearer on the date specified, or before that date on notice given, together with interest thereon,—Held, to be not only a promissory note, but also a marketable security within the meaning of the Stamp Act, 1891, and liable therefore to the higher rate of duty payable on a marketable security. Ib.

Debenture given by English Company—Foreign Company—“Given in substitution for a like security.”—An Australian company purchased and assumed the undertaking and liabilities, including the liability to its debenture-holders, of an English Company. In pursuance of an agreement in that behalf, the holders of debentures in the English company surrendered their debentures and accepted in lieu of them debentures to an equivalent amount in the Australian company:—Held, that the debentures so accepted were not “given in substitution for a like security” within the meaning of Schedule I. tit. “Marketable Security” (4) of the Stamp Act, 1891. Mount Lyell Mining Co. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 74 L. J. K.B. 4; [1905] 1 K.B. 161; 92 L. T. 134; 53 W. R. 225; 21 T. L. R. 112—C.A.

“Instrument to bearer . . . by means of which stock” is transferred.]—A certificate for 4 per cent. debenture stock of a foreign railway certified that the appellant was the owner of a certain amount of such stock, and there was indorsed on such certificate a form of transfer signed by the appellant, the name of the transferee being left in blank. It was admitted that such certificates with the transfer in blank therein were by usage treated as sufficient for the purpose of effecting the sale in the stock markets of the United Kingdom of the stock referred to therein; but such stock was really transferable only in the books of the railway company upon production of such certificate. The debenture stock was share capital of the railway company, enabling the holder to vote at the election of directors, but it was secured or preferred under a trust deed which enabled the holders of the debenture stock, if the interest on their stock was not duly paid, to take the management of the railway out of the hands of the directors, and vest it in a finance committee elected by themselves:—Held, that the certificate as indorsed was a marketable security within section 4 (1) of the Finance Act, 1899. Noakes v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 83 L. T. 714—D.

(i) Mortgage.

Legal Mortgage—Foreclosure Order before 1898—Ad Valorem Duty—Retrospective Character of Legislation.—An order for foreclosure absolute of a legal mortgage made after the Stamp Act, 1891, but before the Finance Act, 1898, came into force, must be stamped with ad valorem duty as being an order of the Court whereby an estate or interest in property “upon the sale thereof is transferred to or vested in a purchaser.” Lovell and Collard's Contract, In re, 76 L. J. Ch. 246; [1897] 1 Ch. 249; 96 L. T. 382—Swinfen Eady, J.

The provisions of section 6 of the Finance Act, 1898, are retrospective, and the construction provided by that section must be read into section 54 of the Stamp Act, 1891. Att.-Gen. v. Theobald (24 Q.B. D. 557) followed. Harling v. Commissioners of Stamps for Queensland (67 L. J. P.C. 144; [1898] A.C. 769) distinguished. Ib.

Semble that, upon the construction of the Stamp Act, 1891, s. 54, apart from the Finance Act, 1898, ad valorem duty was payable on an order foreclosing a legal mortgage. Ib.

Substituted Security—Trust Deed for Securing Debentures—Redemption of Old Debenture Stock by Further Issue of Debenture Stock.—A limited company, who had issued Four per Cent. Debenture Stock for 500,000*l.* constituted and secured by a deed made between themselves and two trustees, being desirous of issuing further debenture stock to be called Irredeemable Three and a-Half per Cent. Debenture Stock ranking after the former issue, executed a deed made between themselves and the trustees of the former deed, by which the company acknowledged themselves indebted to the trustees in the sum of 300,000*l.* carrying interest at 3½ per cent. per annum, and it was provided that the stock to be issued in the first instance was limited to 300,000*l.* The deed also provided that the company were to be at liberty to issue further Irredeemable Three and a-Half per Cent. Debenture Stock not exceeding 540,000*l.*, making with the 300,000*l.* stock a total of 840,000*l.*, but such further stock was only to be issued for the purpose of paying off the Four per Cent. Debenture Stock of 500,000*l.* on the basis of 108*l.* of the new stock for every 100*l.* of the old; and it was provided that before such further stock was issued or offered for subscription the company must execute an acknowledgment of indebtedness to the trustees for the amount of the further proposed issue. By the deed certain freehold and leasehold properties were conveyed by way of mortgage to the trustees subject to the Four per Cent. Debenture Stock, and subject to a proviso for reconveyance in certain specified events contained in the deed; and the company gave the trustees a charge upon their assets present and future for the payment of all moneys for the time being owing on the security of the deed. None of the proposed further issue of 540,000*l.* Four per Cent. Debenture Stock was issued, nor was any acknowledgment of indebtedness in respect thereof executed by the company:—Held, that by virtue of section 88, sub-section 1 of the Stamp Act, 1891, the deed was chargeable with stamp duty under the Act upon the total amount of 840,000*l.* Per A. L. SMITH, L.J., and COLLINS, L.J. (RIGBY, L.J., doubting), on the ground that the deed was a "mortgage" within the meaning of section 86, sub-section 1 of the Act. Per RIGBY, L.J., on the ground that the deed was a "debenture" within Schedule I. of the Act, heading "Mortgage, Bond, Debenture, &c." City of London Brewery Co. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 68 L. J. Q.B. 62; [1899] 1 Q.B. 121; 79 L. T. 648; 47 W. R. 216—C.A.

Held, further, that as regards the proposed issue of new stock the deed was not, as to 500,000*l.* thereof, a "substituted security" within the meaning of clause 2, but was the only or principal or primary security within clause 1 of Schedule I. of the Act, heading "Mortgage, Bond, Debenture, &c.," and therefore was chargeable with the full duty of 2*s.* 6*d.*, and not the reduced duty of 6*d.*, for every 100*l.* Ib.

Held, also, that the deed was not "a transfer of a duly stamped security" or "a security by way of further charge" within section 87, sub-section 3 of the Act. Ib.

Mortgage given by Company—Debenture Stock—Trust Deed—Supplemental Deed—"Collateral or auxiliary security"—"Security by way of further assurance."—By a trust deed a company, after acknowledging its indebtedness in a sum of 750,000*l.* to certain trustees for debenture stockholders, charged certain property, and covenanted to convey other property to and in favour of the trustees. The deed contained provisions for redemption of the stock by the company at a premium of 10 per cent. after notice to the stockholders, powers to the trustees to enforce the security, and a covenant by them to reconvey the property on repayment of the debt. In pursuance of this deed the company by a supplemental deed conveyed the other property to the trustees upon the terms of the trust deed. The trust deed had been stamped as a mortgage or primary security under section 86 and schedule 1 (tit. "Mortgage, Bond," &c.), sub-section 1 of the Stamp Act, 1891:—Held, that, the trust deed being rightly stamped as a mortgage or primary security, the supplemental deed was liable to be stamped as a collateral or auxiliary security or as a security by way of further assurance under schedule 1, sub-section 2, to the same Act. British Oil and Cake Mills v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 72 L. J. K.B. 312; [1903] 1 K.B. 689; 88 L. T. 526; 51 W. R. 388; 67 J. P. 145—C.A.; but see now Revenue Act, 1903, s. 7.

Instrument Creating Present Charge—"Mortgage"—"Covenant."—By an instrument under seal, in consideration of a sum of money advanced by a building society to a firm of contractors, the latter agreed, whenever called upon by the society, to execute a mortgage or charge of all their interest in certain premises in such form as the society should request, to secure the repayment of the sum advanced and interest, and a receiver of the rents and profits of the premises was appointed for so long as any money should remain due to the society, with a proviso that he should not enter into possession of such rents and profits until default should have been made in payment of the principal and interest for fourteen days after the same should have been demanded. At the date of the execution of the instrument there were two mortgages upon the property—one legal and the other equitable—and the title-deeds of the property were held by the first mortgagee:—Held, that the instrument was chargeable with stamp duty under the heading "Mortgage, Bond, Debenture, Covenant," in Schedule I. of the Stamp Act, 1891—per WILLS, J., on the ground that the instrument was intended to give a present charge, and came therefore under the description both of "mortgage" and of "covenant"; and per BRUCE, J., on the ground that the instrument was a "covenant," being a security for the repayment of money. United Realisation Co. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 68 L. J. Q.B. 218; [1899] 1 Q.B. 361; 79 L. T. 556; 47 W. R. 381—D.

Part of Mortgage Debt Paid Off—Assignment or Transfer of Balance Due on Mortgage—Release.—By an indenture—after reciting an indenture of mortgage whereby certain land was mortgaged to secure a sum of 1,100*l.* with interest thereon, and that 100*l.* part of the 1,100*l.* had been paid off by the mortgagor, and that 1,000*l.* and no more then remained due on the mortgage—the balance of 1,000*l.* then remaining due on the mortgage was, at the request of the mortgagor and in pursuance of an agreement for that purpose, assigned by the mortgagees to certain transferees, the consideration for such assignment being the payment by the transferees of the 1,000*l.* to the mortgagees; and the mortgagees and mortgagor thereby assigned the mortgaged property to such transferees free from all right or equity of redemption in the original indenture of mortgage, and with a new proviso of redemption substituted therefor. The Commissioners of Inland Revenue having assessed the indenture to the double stamp duty on the 1,100*l.* transferred, and also on the 1,100*l.*, the amount of the original mortgage debt, as being a "release" of that amount.—Held, on the authority of Wale v. Inland Revenue Commissioners (4 Ex. D. 270), that the indenture was a "transfer" of the mortgage debt for 1,000*l.* within the meaning of the schedule to the Stamp Act, 1891, and was liable only to the duty on such transfer, but was not a "release" of the 1,100*l.*, the amount secured by the original mortgage, and was therefore not liable to the second duty assessed upon it as such release. Humphreys v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 81 L. T. 199—D.

(j) Policy.

"Policy of life insurance"—Contract to Pay Fixed Sum if Assured Attains Certain Age, and Smaller Sum if he should Die before that Age—"Mortgage, Bond, Debenture, Covenant."—An instrument by which an insurance company, in consideration of a premium, agrees to pay a certain sum in the event of the assured attaining a certain age—the intention being to make provision for old age—and a smaller sum in the event of his dying before reaching that age, is a "policy of life insurance" within the meaning of section 93, sub-section 1 of the Stamp Act, 1891. Accordingly, such an instrument is chargeable with stamp duty as a policy of life insurance, and not under the heading, "Mortgage, Bond, Debenture, Covenant." Prudential Assurance Co. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 73 L. J. K.B. 734; [1904] 2 K.B. 658; 91 L. T. 520; 53 W. R. 103; 20 T. L. R. 621—Channell, J.

Employers' Liability Policy—Agreement to Pay Sum Employer Liable to Pay—Indemnity.]

—An insurance company by an instrument under seal called an "Employers' Liability Policy" agreed to pay, "for and on behalf of the employer," such sums as the employer should become liable to pay under or by virtue of the Employers' Liability Act, 1880, or the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, or under or by virtue of the common law, in respect of personal injury caused in the business to any workman in the employ of the employer:—Held, that the instrument was not "a policy or insurance against accident" within the meaning of section 93 of the Stamp Act, 1891, but was a contract of indemnity and therefore liable to duty as a deed. Lancashire Insurance Co. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 68 L. J. Q.B. 143; [1899] 1 Q.B. 353; 79 L. T. 731; 47 W. R. 396; 63 J. P. 21—D.

Policy of Insurance against Accident and Illness—Stipulation for Return of Premiums on Death or Attainment of Certain Age.]—A policy of insurance which stated that in respect of the payment by the assured of 2*s.* 6*d.* per month the company issuing the policy would pay to the assured or to his representatives a monthly allowance of 4*l.* in the event of his illness, a monthly allowance of 4*l.* in the event of accident, and 100*l.* in the event of death, or loss of limbs or sight by accident, contained a stipulation for the return to the assured or his representatives of half of all the premiums paid under the policy, as soon as the assured reached the age of 65, or in the event of his previous death, if the policy remained in force:

—Held, first, that the instrument was in its nature primarily a policy of insurance against accident; secondly, that the stipulation for the return of half the premiums in the event of the death of the assured or on his reaching a certain age was merely incidental, and would be meaningless as a contract of life insurance if it were read apart from the other provisions of the policy; and accordingly, thirdly, that the instrument fell to be assessed and charged only as an accident insurance policy. General Accident Assurance Corporation v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 8 F. 477—Ct. of Sess.

Re-insurance Contract—Slip, Covering Note, or Open-cover Slip—Policy.]—The plaintiffs, a marine insurance company, sued the defendant, an underwriter, on an open cover or slip issued at Lloyd's for the re-insurance of excess of insurance on goods over certain amounts by certain lines of steamships. The sum of 4,000*l.* was specified as being the limit of excess taken on any ship. And the sum of 400*l.* was initialled by the defendant as being his proportion of that limit:—Held, that the plaintiffs could not maintain an action on such document; for it was a contract of sea insurance, and therefore was not valid unless it was in the form of a policy; and it was not a valid policy, because it did not specify the sum or sums insured, as required by section 93, sub-section 3 of the Stamp Act, 1891. Home Marine Insurance Co. v. Smith, 67 L. J. Q.B. 777; [1898] 2 Q.B. 351; 78 L. T. 734; 46 W. R. 661; 8 Asp. M.C. 408—C.A.

(l) Receipt.

Counsel's Signature to Fee—"Receipt."]—Counsel's initials or signature placed against the fee marked on a brief or statement of fees, and thus indicating payment thereof by the solicitor instructing him, makes these documents liable to stamp duty as receipts within the meaning of the Stamp Act, 1891. General Council of the Bar v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 76 L. J. K.B. 212; [1907] 1 K.B. 462; 96 L. T. 267; 71 J. P. 117; 23 T. L. R. 192—Bray, J.

Receipt on Scrip Certificate for Instalment Due Thereon.]—A receipt upon a duly stamped scrip certificate for a sum of stock acknowledging an instalment due thereon is within exemption (11) under tit. "Receipt" in the First Schedule to the Stamp Act, 1891, and is therefore not liable to stamp duty. London and Westminster Bank v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 69 L. J. Q.B. 102; [1900] 1 Q.B. 166; 81 L. T. 630; 48 W. R. 195—C.A.

Discharge—Company—Debenture Stock—Redemption—Acknowledgment by Trustees Indorsed on Debenture Deed.]—Upon the redemption of certain debenture stock in a company the trustees for the debenture-holders indorsed upon the debenture trust deed an acknowledgment under their hands that all the debenture stock secured by the deed and all interest thereon had been redeemed, paid off, and satisfied:—Held, that this acknowledgment was not a “discharge” within the meaning of sub-heading (5) of the heading “Mortgage” in Schedule I. to the Stamp Act, 1891, but was a “receipt” within the meaning of section 101 of the Act. Firth v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 73 L. J. K.B. 632; [1904] 2 K.B. 205; 91 L. T. 138; 52 W. R. 622; 20 T. L. R. 447—Channell, J.

Building Society—Reconveyance—Stamp—Exemption.—A reconveyance by a building society executed by trustees appointed for a special purpose under an instrument of dissolution of the society, indorsed upon a mortgage, is under section 41 of the Building Societies Act, 1874, exempt from stamp duty in the same way that the statutory form of receipt provided by section 42 is exempt under section 41. Old Battersea Building Society v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 67 L. J. Q.B. 696; [1893] 2 Q.B. 294; 78 L. T. 746—D.

Partnership—Memorandum as to Money Paid by One Partner to Another on Document belonging to Both.—William Day and Andrew Glaister entered into a contract with a county council for the construction of waterworks. The contract was joint, but Day executed part of the work, and Glaister the remainder. The instalments of the contract price were paid by the county council to Glaister, who granted stamped receipts therefor to the council, and paid over to Day his share of each instalment. Neither Day nor Glaister kept any business books setting forth this division of the instalments, but on the back of a copy of the specification for the contract there were writings in the following form: “Received to account the sum of” an amount specified and always over 2*l.*, with a date and the signature “William Day” or “Andrew Glaister” as the case might be. These indorsements were not stamped. This copy of the specification was sometimes in the possession of Day, and sometimes of Glaister:—Held, that such indorsements were not receipts within the meaning of section 101 of the Stamp Act, 1891, and therefore were admissible in evidence, although not stamped, in an action in respect of the contract by Day against Glaister. Day v. Glaister, 2 F. 963—Ct. of Sess.

Release or Renunciation of Property or of Right or Interest in Property—Undertaking by Mine-owner to Leave Coal under Railway Unworked and Abandon Claims thereto in Consideration of Compensation—“Release”—“Renunciation”—Release “upon a sale.”—An instrument by which a colliery company acknowledges receipt of a sum paid as compensation by a railway company in respect of coal which the latter company has, pursuant to section 78 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, required to be left unworked, and in consideration thereof undertakes to leave the coal unworked and to do all things necessary for vesting the same in the latter company whenever required, and acknowledges that the sum includes compensation for all claims which, but for the instrument, might have been maintained against the latter company in respect of the coal, does not come within the words in the First Schedule to the Stamp Act, 1891—“Release . . . of any property or of any right or interest in any property—Upon a sale,” and consequently is not chargeable with ad valorem stamp duty as a conveyance on sale, but comes within the words “Release . . . of any property or of any right or interest in any property—In any other case,” and consequently is chargeable with a stamp duty of 10*s.* Great Northern Railway v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 68 L. J. Q.B. 978; [1899] 2 Q.B. 652; 81 L. T. 385; 48 W. R. 170; 64 J. P. 21—D.

The word “renunciation” occurring in the schedule in connection with these words is a term not of English but of Scots law. Ib.

Discharge of Agent by Principal for Amounts Received.—By an agreement in writing the defendants appointed their solicitor to be an officer of the bank at a fixed salary, to recover debts due to the bank and to advise them. When he received moneys on account of the bank he paid them over to the secretary or to the cashier of the bank, who initialled the amount paid over in a book kept by the solicitor for that purpose. In some cases the word “received” or “settled” was added:—Held, that each of these entries constituted an acquittance or discharge to the solicitor as against the defendants in respect of the moneys so paid over, and that the entries were therefore “receipts” within the meaning of section 101 of the Stamp Act, 1891, and required to be stamped. Att.-Gen. v. Carlton Bank, 68 L. J. Q.B. 788; [1899] 2 Q.B. 158; 81 L. T. 115; 47 W. R. 650; 63 J. P. 629—Lord Russell of Killowen, C.J.

(m) Separation Deed.

Agreement in Consideration of Fixed Weekly Payments.—A deed of separation entered into by the appellant and his wife contained a clause to the effect that the appellant would and should during the joint lives of himself and his wife, if his wife should continue to perform and observe the stipulations therein contained and on her part to be performed and observed, pay to his wife “the clear weekly sum of 1*l.*,” and in the event of the wife surviving the appellant, and not having forfeited payment during his lifetime, the sum should continue to be paid to her by her husband’s representatives:—Held, that the agreement was a security for an indefinite period for a sum of money at weekly periods, and not for an annuity or yearly sum payable by weekly instalments, and was therefore only liable to ad valorem duty upon the sum agreed to be paid weekly, and not upon the total amount of such weekly payments for a year. Clifford v. Inland Revenue Commissioners (65 L. J. Q.B. 582; [1896] 2 Q.B. 187) followed. Jackson v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 87 L. T. 269; 50 W. R. 666; 66 J. P. 630—Phillimore, J.

Annuity Payable Quarterly—“Bond, covenant, or instrument.”—A deed of separation between a husband and wife under which the former covenants to pay to the latter during her life, if she shall so long observe the stipulations therein contained, a sum of 62*5*l. every three months by quarterly payments on the usual quarter-days in every year, creates an annuity of 2,500*l.* for the term of life or other indefinite period, to which the provision as to "bond, covenant, or instrument" in Schedule I. of the Stamp Act, 1891, applies, so that ad valorem duty is payable at the rate of 2*s.* 6*d.* for every 5*l.* of such 2,500*l.* Lewis v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 67 L. J. Q.B. 694; [1898] 2 Q.B. 290; 78 L. T. 745—D.

(n) Settlement.

Several Instruments—Instrument of Appointment—Exemption.—By a settlement made in 1895 certain funds were transferred to trustees on trust for the settlor's children, and power was given to the trustees at the request of any of the children either in contemplation of marriage or subsequently to marriage to revoke the trusts thereby declared concerning such child's share, and by way of re-settlement to declare new trusts concerning the same in favour of a class of persons thereby specially described. By a deed of revocation and re-settlement executed in 1899 at the request of one of the children in view of his intended marriage, it was declared that from and after the marriage his share of the settled funds should be held upon trust to pay the income thereof to him during his life, and after his decease to transfer the capital to the trustees of the marriage settlement, which was described as being then engrossed and bearing even date, upon trusts which were within the power of re-settlement conferred by the settlement of 1895. The trustees of the settlement of 1895 were not parties to the marriage settlement. The settlement of 1895 was stamped with ad valorem duty in accordance with the Stamp Act, 1891, First Schedule, "Settlement." Upon appeal from the opinion of the Inland Revenue Commissioners as to the duty chargeable upon the marriage settlement of 1899,—Held, that the marriage settlement was not exempt from being stamped with ad valorem duty as a "settlement" under the Stamp Act, 1891, First Schedule, as being, within the exemption there, an "instrument of appointment relating to any property in favour of persons specially named or described as the objects of a power of appointment." Hamilton-Russell v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 71 L. J. K.B. 201; [1902] 1 K.B. 142; 85 L. T. 738; 50 W. R. 193; 66 J. P. 228—C.A.

Held, also, that the case did not fall within section 106, sub-section 1 of the Act, which provides that "where several instruments are executed for effecting the settlement of the same property, and the ad valorem duty chargeable in respect of the settlement of the property exceeds 10*s.*, one only of the instruments is to be charged with the ad valorem duty." Ib.

(o) Transfer.

Instrument by which Shares or Stocks are "assigned, transferred, or in any manner negotiated."—For carrying out the reconstruction of an American railway company and for the convenience of shareholders therein, the certificates for shares in the reconstructed company were given to and registered in the name of the London agents of the company, or their nominees, by whom they were transferred to those beneficially entitled to them on request. On obtaining such a certificate a shareholder could dispose of it upon the market, and by filling in his name as transferee and the name of some agent in America as his attorney he could obtain registration of the shares in his own name.—Held, that the assignment by such agents or their nominees of the legal title to the shares and appropriation of same to the various beneficial owners was an assignment or transfer of same within the meaning of section 4, sub-section 2 of the Finance Act, 1899, and that consequently the stamp duty imposed on such assignments or transfers by that sub-section was payable in respect of the transaction in question. Speyer v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 66 J. P. 551—Phillimore, J.

(p) Trustee, Appointment of New.

Sale of Lands Included in the Settlement—Reinvestment of Proceeds in Stock.—A portion of certain lands, subject to the trusts of a marriage settlement executed in 1870, was, in exercise of a power contained in the settlement, sold and the proceeds invested in the purchase of stock.—Held, that a deed appointing a new trustee of the settlement, and vesting in the new and continuing trustee the property, subject to the trusts of the settlement, including therein the stock above mentioned, is not a "settlement" within the meaning of the word in the schedule to the Stamp Act, 1891. *Masereene (Viscount) v. RIOT.

Injury to Property—Compensation—"Persons riotously and tumultuously assembled together."—In order to constitute a riot the following elements must be present—first, a number of persons, three at least; secondly, a common purpose; thirdly, the execution or inception of the common purpose; fourthly, an intent to help one another by force if necessary against any person who may oppose them in the execution of their common purpose; and fifthly, force or violence not merely used in demolishing a building, but displayed in such a manner as to alarm at least one person of reasonable firmness and courage. If any of these elements are absent, compensation cannot be recovered under the Riot (Damages) Act, 1886, for injury done to property by a number of persons. *Field v. 1. GENERALLY.

See Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71).

Sale or Security.—The tenants of premises used for wood-turning granted a receipt to their landlord for 79l., which stated that it was the price "of the plant purchased by him from us, and let on hire by him to us," "as per minute of agreement between him and us at this date." By the agreement the tenants acknowledged that the landlord had purchased from them the turning plant belonging to them in the premises, and that they had hired it thereafter from him for a yearly sum (which amounted to 4½ per cent. on 79l.); and they bound themselves to take over the plant when required by the landlord at the price of 79l., in addition to such hire as might still be owing, at the same time reserving to themselves the right at any time to take it over on the same terms. Throughout the transaction the tenants remained in possession of the premises and the plant, and no form of delivery of the latter to the landlord was gone through. For two years subsequently the tenants made half-yearly payments in terms of the agreement, and the landlord granted receipts therefor bearing to be "for half-year's interest on loan at 4½ per cent." The tenants having thereafter granted a trust deed for behoof of creditors, the trustee sued the landlord for declarator that the plant in the premises belonged to him as trustee. The landlord maintained that by the agreement the tenant had validly sold it to him. From the evidence it appeared that the landlord's object in the transaction was to obtain security for an advance of 79l. to the tenants. He maintained that as the plant was on his premises there was constructive delivery to him:—Held (LORD YOUNG dissenting), that the terms of the deeds and the whole circumstances shewed that the parties intended the transaction to operate as a security in the sense of section 61, sub-section 4 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, and not as a sale; that there had been no delivery, and consequently that the property in the plant did not pass to the landlord, nor was any valid security constituted over it, and that therefore the trustee's claim must be sustained. Rennet v. Mathieson, 5 F. 591—Ct. of Sess.

Sale or Hire.—The pursuers, a firm of piano dealers, were in the practice of disposing of their pianos in one of three ways—first, in sales for cash; secondly, in hire-purchase agreements; and thirdly, in letting them on hire. They made a verbal offer to the defender of a piano “at the value of 26*l.*, payable 15*s.* per month.” The defender accepted the offer and paid certain instalments, but having subsequently failed to continue these payments the pursuers sued him for re-delivery of the piano, alleging that it had been let on hire:—Held, that the defender was entitled from the terms of the pursuers’ offer to understand, and that he did in fact understand, that the transaction was an immediate sale for a price payable by instalments, and that a contract of sale had been completed by the defender’s acceptance of the piano. Muirhead & Turnbull v. Dickson, 7 F. 686—Ct. of Sess.

2. THE CONTRACT.

(a) Parties not ad idem.

Sale of Hermaphrodite Animal—Fraud.—The defendant sent three head of cattle to a fair for sale—a bullock, a heifer, and an animal which from one point of view appeared to be a bullock, and from another a heifer, and which was, in fact, a hermaphrodite. The three animals were bought at 10*l.* 5*s.* each by the plaintiff, a cattle dealer. No warranty was given, and nothing was said as to the sex of the animals; but the plaintiff bought under the belief that he was buying either a bullock and two heifers or a heifer and two bullocks. The defendant knew of the malformation of the hermaphrodite, and knew that the plaintiff would not have purchased it had he known of the malformation. By a careful and skilled examination the defect could have been discovered by the plaintiff; but in fact it was not discovered by him until after the sale. The animal afterwards died, the death being the direct consequence of the malformation:—Held, that the case came within the principles laid down by Blackburn, J., and Hannen, J., in Smith v. Hughes (40 L. J. Q.B. 221; L. R. 6 Q.B. 597), that there was no binding contract for the sale of the animals in question, the parties never having been ad idem, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the price paid. Held also (MADDERN, J., dissentiente), that there was evidence of misrepresentation sufficient to sustain an action. Gill v. McDowell, [1903] 2 Ir. R. 463—K.B. D.

(b) Note or Memorandum in Writing.

Applicability to Arbitrations.—On September 21 H. & Co. offered verbally to C. & Co. 3,000 bales of jute, and on the same day C. & Co. accepted the offer verbally and agreed to buy. On September 22 two documents purporting to be contracts, one for 1,000 bales and the other for 2,000 bales, were sent by H. & Co. to C. & Co. They bore the words “Bought for account of C. & Co. of Messrs. S. Brothers,” and they were signed “H. & Co. per C. P.” C. & Co. objected to these contracts by reason of the words importing that S. Brothers were the sellers, and they returned them mutilated. C. & Co. then sent H. & Co. other contracts omitting all reference to S. Brothers, which were returned with the words “Sellers Messrs. S. Brothers” on the attached receipts. C. & Co. refused to accept these:—Held, that there was no sufficient memorandum to satisfy section 4 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, and that the statute applied to an arbitration. Cox v. Hoare, 95 L. T. 121—Bray, J. Affirmed, 96 L. T. 719—C.A.

Acceptance of Goods.—Where, after receiving the goods, the buyer tries to re-sell them, using for the purpose a sample obtained from the sellers, and keeps the goods for a month, there is an acceptance by him of the goods within the meaning of section 4, sub-section 3 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, although he does not inspect the goods or take a sample from the bulk. Taylor v. Smith (61 L. J. Q.B. 331; [1893] 2 Q.B. 65) declares no principle of law, and is of no general application. Taylor v. Great Eastern Railway, 70 L. J. K.B. 499; [1901] 1 K.B. 774—Bigham, J.

Absence of Memorandum in Writing.—Semble, the absence of a memorandum in writing and of the other conditions mentioned in section 4, sub-section 1 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, does not make the contract void or voidable. The only effect is that it is unenforceable. The contract being good, all the legal consequences of a contract follow, so that if the contract is for the sale of specific goods the property in them passes to the buyer. If the buyer after making the purchase refuses to fulfil any of the statutory conditions, the seller may call upon the buyer to pay for the goods, and if he fails to comply may treat the contract as rescinded. Nicholson v. Bower (28 L. J. Q.B. 97; 1 E. & E. 172) seems to have been decided upon the ground that the vendor and vendee had rescinded the contract, so that the property had re-vested in the former. Ib.

Part Payment—Value above Ten Pounds—Agreement to Appropriate Sum in Hands of Seller.—By an oral contract for the sale of goods for a price of upwards of ten pounds the buyer agreed that the seller should appropriate a sum of money in his hands belonging to the buyer in part payment of the price. In an action to recover the price of the goods,—Held, that there was no “part payment” to satisfy section 4 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893. Walker v. Nussey (16 L. J. Ex. 120; 16 M. & W. 302) followed. Norton v. Davison, 68 L. J. Q.B. 265; [1899] 1 Q.B. 401; 80 L. T. 189; 47 W. R. 275—C.A.

(c) Construction.

Sale of Wheat for Shipment in United States—“Clearance not later than May 31”—Certificate of Clearance given before Completion of Loading—Meaning of “Clearance.”—Wheat was sold for shipment at Galveston in the United States, by a specified vessel for Havre, "clearance" to be not later than May 31. A certificate of clearance was obtained on May 28. Part only of the cargo was then on board, the rest being alongside ready to be loaded. The loading was not completed until June 2, when the vessel sailed. By the statute of the United States the master must furnish a manifest of the cargo "on board, whereupon the collector shall grant a clearance." It was, however, customary to grant a clearance before the completion of loading, and such a clearance was valid and effective for all purposes, and entitled the vessel to sail immediately:—Held, that the vessel had obtained a "clearance" within the meaning of the contract, when the certificate of clearance was granted. Thalman v. Texas Star Flour Mills, 82 L. T. 833; 5 Com. Cas. 321; 9 Asp. M.C. 87—C.A.

Sale of "about" Specified Weight of Coal—Coal to be delivered in Monthly Instalments—Short Delivery—Option to Vendor up to 5 per cent. in either Direction—Custom.]—The defendants sold to the plaintiffs "about" 18,500 tons of Northumberland coal under two contracts, deliveries to be in as nearly equal monthly instalments as possible over a given period. The defendants having so far made the deliveries in approximately equal quantities, delivered as their last monthly instalment a shipment of 455 tons short. In an action by the purchasers for damages for short delivery,—Held, affirming the decision of MATHEW, J., that there is a custom of the Newcastle coal trade that the word "about" gives to the vendors an option up to 5 per cent. in either direction, and that, the custom being proved, the defendants had made no default in fulfilling their contracts, inasmuch as the word "about" referred to the total amounts to be delivered under each contract respectively, and not merely to the "last instalment." Société Anonyme l'Industrielle Russo-Belge v. Scholefield, 7 Com. Cas. 114—C.A.

(d) Trade Custom.

Goods Delivered on Memorandum or Approval—Liability for Loss of Goods by Burglary.]—There is a custom in the fur trade that a party ordering goods to be delivered on memorandum or approval is liable to the party of whom he orders them for any loss of or injury occurring to the same while in the hands of the party so ordering them before he may have signified his approval of the same. Semble, the price stated in the invoice fixes the measure of liability. Bevington v. Dale, 7 Com. Cas. 112—Kennedy, J.

Sale by Sample—Variation between Sample and Bulk—Variation only Affecting Price—Custom not to Reject—Validity.]—A trade custom which imports into a contract for the sale of goods by sample, containing an arbitration clause, a term that the purchaser shall not be entitled to reject the goods on account of variation between the sample and the bulk, provided the variation is such that it can reasonably be remedied by an abatement of the price, and does not affect the purpose for which the goods were purchased,—Held, a good custom. Walkers v. Shaw, 73 L. J. K.B. 325; [1904] 2 K.B. 152; 90 L. T. 454; 53 W. R. 79; 9 Com. Cas. 174; 20 T. L. R. 274—Channell, J.

(e) Time for Completion.

Agreement to Build a Steamship—Allowance for Delay—"Circumstances beyond builders' control"—Delay due to Non-completion of another Vessel.]—A contract dated July 6, 1898, provided for the building of a steamship by shipbuilders, to be delivered to a shipowner not later than June 30, 1899, due allowance being made for delays through certain specified causes "or other circumstances beyond builders' control." A suitable berth for the building of the steamship at the shipbuilders' yard did not become vacant, and the work was not begun, until March, 1899, up to which time the berth in question was occupied by another vessel in course of building at the date of the contract, the completion of which was delayed by causes of the same nature as those specified in the contract. The delivery of the steamship was delayed beyond the contract date. An arbitrator having found that the parties contemplated that the steamship was to be built at the shipbuilders' yard as soon as a suitable berth became vacant, and that the berth in question was the first suitable vacant berth,—Held, that in fixing the time for the completion of the steamer allowance must be made for delays during the building of the previous vessel. Lockie and Craggs, In re, 86 L. T. 388; 9 Asp. M.C. 296; 7 Com. Cas. 7—Wright, J.

Contract to Make and Deliver Chattel by Certain Date—Buyer to Provide Ship to Receive—Concurrent Obligations—Delay in Making Chattel—Obligation of Buyer to Provide Ship.]—The plaintiffs agreed to construct and deliver, f.o.b. at the Port of London, for the defendants, a steam-launch by a fixed date. The launch was not in fact ready to be delivered until three months after the agreed date; but the defendants did not during that time notify to the plaintiffs that there was any vessel at the Port of London on board of which they required the launch to be delivered:—Held, that, as the defendants were not ready and willing to take delivery before the plaintiffs were ready and willing to deliver, the defendants were not entitled to deduct from the price the agreed damages for delay in delivery. Forrest v. Aramayo, 83 L. T. 335; 9 Asp. M.C. 134—C.A.

(f) Condition.

Condition Precedent in Contract—Specification to be given "in the beginning of May"—Effect of Delay—Repudiation of Contract.]—In determining whether a stipulation in a contract is a condition precedent, the non-performance of which by one party entitles the other to repudiate the contract, the Court must ascertain the intention of the parties to be collected from the instrument, and the circumstances legally admissible in evidence with reference to which it is to be construed. The defendants, who were manufacturers, agreed to deliver to the plaintiffs 1,000 tons of a certain description of iron on the following terms contained in the sale note: "Delivered . . . cost and freight Japan, direct port specification to be given in the beginning of May. Time of shipping May and June from Antwerp." The plaintiffs and defendants knew that the specification had to be sent from Japan to Antwerp. The whole quantity of iron could be produced by the defendants at their works in less than eight days, and the opportunities of shipment from Antwerp to Japan during the months of May and June were known to be frequent:—Held, that the stipulation that the specification was to be given "in the beginning of May" was not a condition precedent, the non-fulfilment of which entitled the defendants to declare the contract at an end. Semble, a delivery of the specification in several parts between May 12 and 15 was a compliance with the stipulation that the specification should be given "in the beginning of May." Kidston v. Monceau Iron-works, 86 L. T. 556; 7 Com. Cas. 82—Kennedy, J.

Tender of Documents of Title—Erasures and Alterations.]—A contract for the sale of wheat to be shipped from New Orleans to Hamburg provided that payment should be net cash against surrender of documents, which were to consist of the bill of lading, certificate of inspection, and policy of insurance. On September 3, 1898, the sellers appropriated to the sale a quantity of wheat on board a certain vessel, and on September 8 tendered to the purchasers the three documents, two of which were altered and one of which was unaltered. The purchasers refused to accept and pay for the documents by reason of the erasures and alterations therein, and, on a formal tender being made on September 12, they again refused to accept them. As tendered, the bill of lading contained a marginal note reading "stored in holds 3 and 4." The figures 3 and 4 had been substituted for the figures 2 and 3, which had been erased; the certificate of inspection stated that the wheat was in holds 3 and 4; the figures "and 4" had been added after the figure 3, and the figure "2 and," which had been in the certificate before the figure 3, were struck through; and the certificate of insurance was unaltered and stated the wheat to be in holds 3 and 4, which was the fact, so that as tendered all three documents agreed and were in accordance with the facts. The mistake arose through an error, and, having been discovered, was corrected as above described in the bill of lading and the certificate of inspection before those documents were executed. The certificate of insurance was correct from the first and was unaltered. The ship arrived in Hamburg on September 14, and on September 16 the documents were again tendered, together with two confirmatory documents shewing that the alterations were made before the execution of the documents, and were proper alterations as agreeing with the facts:—Held, that the tenders on September 8 and 12 were good tenders of the documents, and ought to have been accepted by the purchasers, as, upon such tenders, the purchasers were put upon enquiry and were bound to look at all the documents, and, as one of the documents was unaltered and the altered documents agreed with the unaltered one, they ought to have come to the conclusion that the altered documents were altered before execution, and were perfect documents in the sense that they absolutely agreed with the facts. Salomon and Naudszus, In re, 81 L. T. 325; 8 Asp. M.C. 599—D.

Contract of Manufacturers with Wholesale Dealers—Minimum Retail Prices—Successive Purchasers—No Contractual Privity—Invalid Restriction.]—The plaintiffs, who were tobacco manufacturers, sold their tobaccos subject to certain printed conditions which were inclosed in every box of tobacco and appeared in their price lists and catalogues, and which provided (inter alia) that the tobaccos were sold upon the express condition that retail dealers should not sell the tobacco below certain fixed minimum prices, and that in case of a purchase by a retail dealer through a wholesale dealer the latter should be deemed the agent of the manufacturer. The defendants, who were retail tobacconists, bought some of the plaintiffs' tobaccos from a wholesale dealer who had purchased it from the plaintiffs and re-sold it for his own profit. In an action by the plaintiffs to restrain the defendants from retailing the tobaccos at less than the minimum retail price fixed by the manufacturers,—Held, that the wholesale dealer was in no sense an agent for sale of the plaintiffs so as to create any contract between the plaintiffs and defendants; and further, that the condition against retailing under a certain price did not run with the goods at law, and could not be imposed upon chattels so as to bind successive purchasers. Taddy v. Sterious, 73 L. J. Ch. 191; [1904] 1 Ch. 354; 89 L. T. 628; 52 W. R. 152; 20 T. L. R. 102—Swinfen Eady, J.

Minimum Retail Prices Imposed—Successive Purchasers—Privity.]—Conditions cannot be imposed on a sale of goods so as to run with the goods and be enforceable against subsequent purchasers by the original vendor, even though the subsequent purchasers had notice of them at the time of their purchase. McGruther v. Pitcher, 73 L. J. Ch. 653; [1904] 2 Ch. 306; 91 L. T. 673; 53 W. R. 138; 20 T. L. R. 652—C.A.

The plaintiffs, who were manufacturers of rubber heel pads, sold them in boxes inside the lids of which were fixed certain printed conditions providing that the pads were not to be retailed at less than certain minimum prices, or re-sold except subject to the conditions as a term of the sale; and that the acceptance of the goods by any purchaser would be deemed to be an acknowledgment that they were sold to him on those conditions, and that he agreed with the vendors as agents of the plaintiffs in that respect to be bound by them. The defendant bought some of these pads from H., one of the plaintiffs' factors, and was re-selling them, as the plaintiffs alleged, at less than the minimum prices:—Held, that the defendant had entered into no contract with the plaintiffs, and the plaintiffs had no cause of action against him. Taddy v. Sterious (73 L. J. Ch. 191; [1904] 1 Ch. 354) approved and followed. Id.

Sale Subject to Inspection and Approval—Bona Fide Exercise of Judgment—Reasonableness of Ground of Disapproval.]—An agreement for the sale of a steamer provided that the price should be "paid as follows: 10 per cent. on approval of the steamer as far as can be seen without opening up . . .," and on the purchaser so approving and paying deposit, "the vendors agree to open up engines, boilers, water-ballast tanks for purchaser's inspection and approval. . . . If steamer not approved of deposit to be returned immediately." On approval of engines, boilers, etc., the vendors were to dry-dock the vessel for inspection of ship's bottom, etc. The purchaser's inspectors inspected that portion of the vessel which did not require opening up, paid the deposit, and subsequently inspected the opened-up portions and disapproved of her:—Held, that a bona fide exercise of judgment on inspection entitled the purchaser to disapprove, and that the deposit was recoverable back by him, whether the disapproval of his inspectors was based upon reasonable grounds or not. Haegerstrand v. Anne Thomas Steamship Co., 10 Com. Cas. 67—C.A.

Purchase—"All our requirements estimated at"—Breach.—H., being about to erect a factory for the purpose of carrying on the business of manufacturing explosives under the name of the defendant company, appointed a manager to have sole charge of the business. The manager's office was used as the office of the company. The manager, without express authority from H., entered into a contract for the purchase by the company from the plaintiffs of all the company's "requirements" of nitric and sulphuric acid, estimated at 500 and 750 tons respectively, during twelve months from the date of the contract. Subsequently the manager gave notice to the plaintiffs to deliver fifteen tons under the contract. The company never started business, and the undertaking was abandoned by H. within the twelve months. The acceptance of the fifteen tons was refused. In an action by the plaintiffs against the company for breach of contract to purchase 500 and 750 tons,—Held, that the manager had been held out by H. as having authority to enter into the contract, and that the contract was binding on H., but that by the contract the company had only agreed to buy such acid as might be required, and that, none having been in fact required, there had been no breach, except as to the fifteen tons, for which H. was liable to pay. Berk v. International Explosives Co., 7 Com. Cas. 20—Walton, J.

(g) Sale by Description.

Specific Goods not Seen by Buyer.—Where there is a contract for the sale of specific or ascertained goods which the buyer has not seen, and he relies upon the description given to him of them by the seller, the contract is one for the sale of goods by description within the meaning of section 13 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, and there is an implied condition that the goods shall correspond with the description. Varley v. Whipp, 69 L. J. Q.B. 333; [1900] 1 Q.B. 513; 48 W. R. 363—D.

(h) Sale by Sample.

Payment to be made in Cash on Arrival against Shipping or Railway Documents—Obligation of Buyer—Right to Inspect and Reject Goods.—Upon a sale of goods by sample, "payment to be made in cash in London on the arrival of the" goods "against shipping or railway documents," the buyer is not entitled to insist on the provisions of section 15, sub-section 2 (b) of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, and to have an opportunity of comparing the bulk with the sample before paying the price. The right to reject if the goods do not correspond with the sample is not impaired by the payment being made. Polenghi v. Dried Milk Co., 92 L. T. 64; 53 W. R. 318; 10 Com. Cas. 42; 21 T. L. R. 118—Kennedy, J.

(i) Misrepresentation.

By Advertisement.—Misrepresentation which does not itself, and is merely incidental to some lawful act which does, cause damage, is not actionable. Ajello v. Worsley, 67 L. J. Ch. 172; [1898] 1 Ch. 274; 77 L. T. 783; 46 W. R. 245—Stirling, J.

Where a trader, acting bona fide, causes injury to the trade of another by advertising or otherwise offering for sale, at less than the ordinary retail price, goods of the other's manufacture, not having in stock at the time the goods so advertised, but only an expectation of acquiring them, the misrepresentation of fact implied in the advertisement—that is, that he has the goods in stock—is not such a misrepresentation, to which the damage to the other's trade can be attributed, as will support an action by the other for an injunction to restrain the issue of the advertisement, and damages. Richardson v. Silvester (43 L. J. Q.B. 1; L. R. 9 Q.B. 34) and Radcliffe v. Evans (61 L. J. Q.B. 535; [1892] 2 Q.B. 524) distinguished. Ib. And see FRAUD AND MISREPRESENTATION.

3. PERFORMANCE—DELIVERY AND PAYMENT.

Delivery "on sale or return"—"On sale for cash only or return"—Passing of Property.—The plaintiff, the manufacturer and owner of goods, delivered them to a retail dealer on the terms of a special approbation note which had the following printed heading: "On approbation. On sale for cash only or return. . . . Goods had on approbation or on sale or return remain the property of" the plaintiff "until such goods are settled for or charged." The retail dealer delivered the goods to a second dealer on terms that the latter should pay cash or return the goods in a day or two. The second dealer fraudulently pledged the goods with the defendants, who took without notice of any defect in his title:—Held, that the goods had not been delivered by the plaintiff "on sale or return" or other similar terms "within the meaning of section 18 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893; that the intention of the parties was that no property in the goods should pass till the goods were either paid for or the plaintiff agreed to debit the retail dealer with their price; and that, as the retail dealer had not satisfied either one or other of these conditions, the property in the goods had not passed from the plaintiff, who was therefore entitled to recover them from the defendants. Weimer v. Gill; Weimer v. Smith, 75 L. J. K.B. 916; [1906] 2 K.B. 574; 95 L. T. 438; 11 Com. Cas. 240; 22 T. L. R. 699—C.A.

Contract for Delivery in Instalments—Payment on Due Date—Condition Precedent—Default in Payment—Right to Cancel Contract.]—By a contract for the sale of steel tinplate bars to be delivered over a period of three months, payment to be made in cash in fourteen days after delivery, it was provided that all payments should be made on due date as a condition precedent to future deliveries. The purchasers having made default in payment on due date, —Held, that the vendors were justified in unconditionally refusing to make any further deliveries. Ebbw Vale Steel, Iron, and Coal Co. v. Blaenau Iron Co., 6 Com. Cas. 33—C.A.

“Sale for cash only or return”—Approbation Note—Property in Goods—Estoppel—Pawn-brokers.]—The plaintiff handed goods to H. under the following terms of an approbation note: “On sale for cash only or return. . . Goods had on approbation or on sale or return remain the property of W. [the plaintiff] until such goods are settled for or charged.” H. had the option of buying at a fixed price. H. handed the goods to L. on the terms that he should pay immediate cash or return the goods in a day or two. L. obtained the goods by representing that he had a particular customer who wished to buy them. Such representation was false. L. pledged the goods with the defendants (pawnbrokers), the latter believing that L. was acting in good faith:—Held, that the plaintiff could recover the goods from the defendants. The property had not passed from the plaintiff, and there was no such conduct as to estop the plaintiff from saying that the property had not passed. Mere parting with possession is not sufficient to amount to an estoppel. Weiner v. Smith, 74 L. J. K.B. 845; [1905] 2 K.B. 172; 92 L. T. 843; 53 W. R. 553; 10 Com. Cas. 213; 21 T. L. R. 478—Bray, J.

Condition—Tender of Documents of Title—Erasures and Alterations.]—A contract for the sale of wheat to be shipped from New Orleans to Hamburg provided that payment should be net cash against surrender of documents, which were to consist of the bill of lading, certificate of inspection, and policy of insurance. On September 3, 1898, the sellers appropriated to the sale a quantity of wheat on board a certain vessel, and on September 8 tendered to the purchasers the three documents, two of which were altered and one of which was unaltered. The purchasers refused to accept and pay for the documents by reason of the erasures and alterations therein, and, on a formal tender being made on September 12, they again refused to accept them. As tendered, the bill of lading contained a marginal note reading “stored in holds 3 and 4.” The figures 3 and 4 had been substituted for the figures 2 and 3, which had been erased; the certificate of inspection stated that the wheat was in holds 3 and 4; the figures “and 4” had been added after the figure 3, and the figures “2 and,” which had been in the certificate before the figure 3, were struck through; and the certificate of insurance was unaltered and stated the wheat to be in holds 3 and 4, which was the fact, so that as tendered all three documents agreed and were in accordance with the facts. The mistake arose through an error, and, having been discovered, was corrected as above described in the bill of lading and the certificate of inspection before those documents were executed. The certificate of insurance was correct from the first and was unaltered. The ship arrived in Hamburg on September 14, and on September 16 the documents were again tendered, together with two confirmatory documents shewing that the alterations were made before the execution of the documents, and were proper alterations as agreeing with the facts:—Held, that the tenders on September 8 and 12 were good tenders of the documents and ought to have been accepted by the purchasers, as, upon such tenders, the purchasers were put upon enquiry and were bound to look at all the documents, and, as one of the documents was unaltered and the altered documents agreed with the unaltered one, they ought to have come to the conclusion that the altered documents were altered before execution, and were perfect documents in the sense that they absolutely agreed with the facts. Salomon and Naudszus, In re, 81 L. T. 325—D.

Passing of Property—Goods of “about the specification stated below”—Provision for Reference to Arbitration of any Dispute Arising under Contract—Right of Rejection by Buyer of Goods not within Specification.]—Where a contract of sale of goods of “about the specification stated below” contains provisions that the property in the goods is to be deemed to have passed when the goods are put on board a ship provided by the buyer, and that if any dispute arises under the contract the buyer is not to reject the goods, but the dispute is to be referred to arbitrators, the provisions do not operate so as to pass on shipment the property in goods neither within nor about the specification nor commercially within its meaning, nor can the buyer be compelled to take them; and the receipt of the goods by the captain of the ship is not an acceptance of them as a delivery under the contract. The captain is an agent to receive the goods for the purpose of carriage, not to accept delivery of them. Tigers v. Sanderson, 70 L. J. K.B. 383; [1901] 1 K.B. 608; 84 L. T. 464; 49 W. —Appropriation of Goods to Contract—Bankruptcy of Manufacturer—Right of Trustee to Articles in Course of Manufacture—Ship.]—A firm of shipbuilders contracted to build a ship for a firm of shipowners, to be classed 100 A1 at Lloyd's and to be constructed under the superintendence of the shipowners. The contract contained this clause: “(4.) The vessel as she is constructed, and all her engines, boilers, and machinery, and all materials from time to time intended for her or them, whether in the building-yard, workshop, river, or elsewhere, shall immediately as the same proceeds become the property of the purchasers, and shall not be within the ownership, control, or disposition of the builders, but the builders shall at all times have a lien thereon for their unpaid purchase-money.” Before the ship was completed the shipbuilders became bankrupt. At the date of the bankruptcy there were lying at railway stations a quantity of iron and steel plates at the orders of the shipbuilders. These plates were claimed by the trustee in the shipbuilders' sequestration, and also by the shipowners. The plates had been passed by Lloyd's surveyor at the makers' works, and they were each numbered by the makers with the number of the vessel and with marks shewing the position which each plate was to occupy in the vessel:—Held, that the contract was for the purchase of a "complete ship," and the materials in question could not be regarded as appropriated to the contract or sold under the Sale of Goods Act. Seath v. Moore (55 L. J. P.C. 54; 11 App. Cas. 350) followed. Reid v. Macbeth, 73 L. J. P.C. 57; [1904] A.C. 223; 90 L. T. 422; 20 T. L. R. 316—H.L. (Sc.)

— Consignment—Alleged Specific Appropriation—Claim for Lien—Bills Drawn against Particular Shipments—Contemporaneous Letter of Advice—Non-acceptance of Bills.—The defendants carried on business in London, and their practice was to sell in their own names goods shipped to them by P. & Co., who carried on business abroad. P. & Co. used to specify in advising drafts against what particular shipments the same were drawn, so as to enable the defendants to tell whether the particular shipments consigned to them did in fact cover the then outstanding drafts, but not to affect their right to treat all shipping documents as cover for the whole account between them and P. & Co. P. & Co. used likewise to draw upon the plaintiffs, who also carried on business in London, against shipments of goods, bills which the plaintiffs accepted, P. & Co. afterwards forwarding to them, as security, before the bills reached maturity, bills drawn by P. & Co. on first-class firms (among them being the defendants), accompanied by the shipping documents of the goods shipped by them to such firms, and on such firms accepting the bills the plaintiffs would hand over to them the shipping documents which otherwise would have been retained. The defendants having received instructions from P. & Co. to sell certain goods at a specified price, entered into contracts for the sale thereof. Subsequently P. & Co. wrote to the defendants that they had drawn upon them against the goods, and the bills were specified. The bills were drawn to the order of the plaintiffs by P. & Co. upon the defendants for various sums, and were together intended to provide for part of the credit or advances made by the plaintiffs to P. & Co. Bills of lading for the goods, indorsed in favour of the defendants, were afterwards forwarded to them by P. & Co. The defendants took possession of the bills of lading, and applied them in satisfying, so far as they would go, the contracts into which they had entered; but becoming doubtful as to the financial position of P. & Co.'s firm, they declined to accept the bills of exchange, and claimed to treat the proceeds of sale of the goods as available for payment of the general balance of account between themselves and P. & Co.:—Held, that there was no specific appropriation of the goods in favour of the plaintiffs; that the defendants were not compellable to accept the bills; and that nothing had been done to defeat the primary right of the defendants, in whose custody the goods were, to deal with them for their own purposes and irrespective of any rights of the plaintiffs. König v. Brandt, 84 L. T. 748; 9 Asp. M.C. 199—C.A.

— Ship in Building—Trial.—Where it appears to be the intention of the parties to a contract for the building of a ship that the vessel is not to be delivered and finally accepted until after an official trial off a foreign coast, and until after conditions of the contract have been fulfilled as to speed, consumption of coal, capacity, &c., the property in the ship does not pass to the purchaser while the vessel remains uncompleted, although the contract contains stipulations for the price to be paid by instalments at certain periods of construction. Laing v. Barclay, [1908] A.C. 35; 97 L. T. 816—H.L. (Sc.)

— Possession of Bill of Lading with Seller's Consent.—Where the seller of goods transmits to the person who has agreed to buy them the bill of lading, together with a bill of exchange for the price, and the latter, without accepting or intending to accept the bill of exchange, indorses the bill of lading, he is not in possession of the bill of lading with the consent of the seller within the meaning of section 25, subsection 2 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, and cannot give to the indorsee of the bill of lading a good title to the goods as against the seller. Cahn v. Pockett's Bristol Channel Steam Packet Co., 67 L. J. Q.B. 625; [1898] 2 Q.B. 61; 79 L. T. 55—Mathew, J.

C.i.f. Contract—Shipping Documents—Sufficiency of Tender.—A parcel of meal was sold to a London firm at 5l. 8s. 9d. per ton c.i.f., London, under a contract which provided for dispatch of the meal from the mills in the interior of America to an American port, thence to be shipped per steamer; "all other conditions as per the American maize germ meal contract." The meal was forwarded from a town in Illinois under two through bills of lading issued in the customary form by the Illinois Central Railway Co., which provided that the meal should be carried to the port of New Orleans and thence by Leyland Line to London, and further that the property covered by them was subject to all conditions expressed in the regular forms of bills of lading in use by the steamship company at time of shipment. The Leyland Line is a well-known line trading between New Orleans to London, having a regular form of bill of lading upon which all goods by that line are shipped. By that form of bill of lading the Leyland Line reserved liberty to proceed to the port stated in the bill of lading, "via any other port or ports in any order or rotation, outwards or forwards, whether in or out of or in a contrary direction to or beyond the customary or advertised route," and likewise reserved power to tranship the goods at any port into any other steamer or sailing vessel. Under the American maize germ meal contract the sellers were to give policies and (or) certificates of insurance in respect of the meal in question, and certificates in the customary form were in fact given which took the place of a policy which was duly issued and which contained the following clause: "In event of deviation or of change of voyage held covered at a premium to be fixed by insurers." The steamship in which the meal was carried having deviated to Bremen before reaching London, thus causing delay, the buyers refused to accept delivery, and the question as to their right to do so was submitted to the trade tribunal, which decided against them, finding that all the documents relating to the carriage of the meal were usual and customary and were in forms well known in the trade, and constantly received, and hitherto without objection, in fulfilment of similar contracts for sale:—Held, upon these findings of fact, that the adoption by the sellers under the through bills of lading of the method of sea carriage in question was not necessarily inconsistent with the terms of the contract of sale, and therefore that the buyers were not justified in refusing to accept delivery. Held, further, that, as the certificate of insurance was in the usual form and covered deviation, it satisfied the requirements of the c.i.f. contract. Burstall v. Grimsdale, 11 Com. Cas. 280—Kennedy, J.

Ship to be Constructed—Property in Materials intended for Ship—Bankruptcy of Shipbuilders.]

—A contract for the building of a ship, which was to be constructed under the superintendence of the shipowners, contained this clause: "The vessel as she is constructed, and all her engines, boilers, and machinery, and all materials from time to time intended for her or them, whether in the shipbuilding yard, workshop, river, or elsewhere, shall, immediately, as the same proceeds, become the property of the purchasers, and shall not be within the ownership, control, or disposition of the builders; but the builders shall at all times have a lien thereon for their unpaid purchase money." The contract further provided that in the event of the shipbuilders making default in delivery, it should be competent for the shipowners to take possession of the vessel and of all materials intended for her, and to complete the vessel. No delivery was to be considered complete until after a trial by the shipowners' surveyors. During the construction of the vessel the shipbuilders became bankrupt. At the date of the bankruptcy there was in the shipbuilding yard a quantity of steel plates which the shipbuilders intended to use in the construction of the vessel. These plates were claimed by the trustee in bankruptcy, and also by the shipowners. The plates had been passed by Lloyd's surveyor at the maker's works, and they were each marked by the makers (in accordance with the shipbuilders' instructions) with the number of the vessel and with marks showing the position which each plate was to occupy in the vessel. Members of the shipowner's firm had from time to time visited the shipbuilding yard and had seen the plates so marked, but they had not inspected them with a view to determine whether they were conformable to contract. By agreement the shipowners got possession of the plates in order to complete the vessel. The trustee in bankruptcy then sued the shipowners for payment of a sum agreed on as the value of the plates. It was admitted that the shipbuilders were liable to the defenders for a sum exceeding the value of the plates as damages for breach of contract in failing to complete the vessel:—Held, that the defenders were entitled to judgment on the ground (per the LORD JUSTICE-CLERK and LORD TRAYNER) that the property in the plates had passed to the defenders in respect that they were ascertained goods within the meaning of section 17, sub-section 1 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, and that it was the intention of the parties that the property should so pass; (per LORD YOUNG) that under the above quoted clause of the contract the defenders had a right of property in the materials as a security against any breach of contract by the shipbuilders, and were entitled to retain the materials in satisfaction pro tanto of the damages due to them; and (per LORD MONCREIFF) that the property in the plates had passed to the defenders as being within the meaning of section 18, rule 5 (1) of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, "unascertained goods" which had been unconditionally appropriated to the contract with the assent of both parties thereto. Carmichael, Maclean & Co.'s Trustee v. Macbeth & Gray, 4 F. 345—Ct. of Sess.

Payment—Agreement for Credit—Agreement to give Bills—Refusal to give Bills—Action for Price of Goods.]—If there is an agreement on the sale of goods that credit should be given, and as a security an agreement by the purchaser to give an acceptance, even although the purchaser refuses to give such acceptance, the period of credit still stands. Semble, there may be an action for refusing to accept the bill if damage can be proved. Rabe v. Otto, 89 L. T. 562; 20 T. L. R. 27—Kennedy, J.

Payment to be made in Cash against Shipping Documents — Perishable Articles — Re-sale of Goods in Default of Payment.]—Where by a contract for the sale of perishable articles it is provided that payment is to be made "by cash . . . in exchange for" shipping documents, the buyer is under an obligation to pay within a reasonable time after the shipping documents are tendered to him, and if he does not do so the seller is entitled to sell the goods against him, and to claim the loss which he has suffered. Ryan v. Ridley, 8 Com. Cas. 105—Kennedy, J.

Payment after Inspection immediately on Arrival — Failure to Inspect — Goods not in Accordance with Contract—Right of Buyer to Damages.]—Where goods are sold "Payment net cash after inspections of goods immediately on arrival of steamer," the buyer has a right to claim damages if the goods are not in accordance with the contract, even though he does not inspect the goods, or, by mistake, does not on inspection discover the defect in them. Khan v. Duché, 10 Com. Cas. 87—Bigham, J.

Bankruptcy of Seller before Performance—Right of Buyer to Rescind.]—A mere declaration of insolvency by one party to a contract does not entitle the other party to put an end to the contract; but if the declaration is made in such circumstances as to shew that the insolvent either cannot, or does not intend to, carry out the contract, it is open to the solvent contractor to rescind the contract. Mess v. Diffus, 6 Com. Cas. 165—Bigham, J.

4. CHARGES ON GOODS.

Coal to be Delivered f.o.b.—Coal for Export—Export Duty.]—Under a contract for the sale of coal it was provided that the coal was to be delivered free on board at certain Scottish ports and "that the quantity of coal herein named is for bona fide exportation by the purchaser, and not for sale to other export merchants." After the contract had been entered into, but before the coal had been delivered, the Finance Act, 1901, came into operation:—Held (Lord Young dissentiente), that the export duty on coal imposed by that statute fell to be paid by the seller. Bowhill Coal Co. v. Tobias, 5 F. 262—Ct. of Sess.

Export Duty on Coal—Sale f.o.b.—Contract made Before April 19, 1901—Coal not Applied by Purchaser for Fulfilling a Contract for Sale at a Specified Price—Liability of Seller to Pay Duty in First Instance.]—PHILLIMORE, J., having expressed the opinion (22 T. L. R. 844) that where coal is sold to a purchaser free on board for export in pursuance of a contract made before April 19, 1901, and the coal is not applied by the purchaser for the purpose of fulfilling a contract made by him before the above date for its sale at a specified price, the seller is liable in the first instance under the f.o.b. contract to pay the export coal duty imposed by section 3 of the Finance Act, 1901, and in the absence of an agreement to the contrary he can recover it back from the purchaser—gave judgment for the seller. The COURT OF APPEAL affirmed the judgment. Insole v. Gueret, 23 T. L. R. 294—C.A.

"Cost, freight, and insurance to buyers' wharf"—Obligation of Seller to Deliver at Buyers' Wharf—Payment of London Charges.]—Goods were sold "cost, freight, and insurance to buyers' wharf, Victoria Docks, London." The goods were discharged in London elsewhere than at buyers' wharf, and under the "London clause" in the bill of lading certain charges were paid:—Held, that these London charges fell upon the seller, and not upon the buyer. Acme Wood-flooring Co. v. Sutherland Innes Co., 9 Com. Cas. 170—Bruce, J.

5. BREACH OF CONTRACT—MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

Delivery by Instalments—Wrongful Repudiation of Contract by Buyer—Subsequent Tender of Instalments—Refusal on same Wrongful Ground—Action by Seller for Breach—Plea that Instalment not according to Contract—Validity of Plea—Measure of Damages.]—The defendants contracted to buy from the plaintiff a quantity of Honduras rosewood to be shipped by instalments, cash against bills of lading. The plaintiff shipped the wood in two consignments, and while the first consignment was on the voyage the defendants repudiated all obligation to take any wood under the contract upon a ground which was afterwards found to be wrongful. Upon the arrival of the bill of lading of the first consignment it was tendered to and refused by the defendants upon the same ground, and the plaintiff at once sold the wood in the market at the best price obtainable. Upon the arrival of the bill of lading of the second consignment it was tendered and refused on the same ground, and the plaintiff at once sold the wood in the same way. In an action for breach of the contract the defendants, having discovered that a considerable percentage of the first consignment did not conform to the conditions of the contract, pleaded (inter alia) that they were entitled to repudiate the contract with respect to that consignment upon the ground that the wood was materially different from that which the plaintiff had contracted to deliver:—Held, that the defendants by the repudiation of the contract, which the plaintiff accepted by at once selling the first consignment, absolved the plaintiff from the performance of the conditions precedent to the enforcement of the contract against them, and therefore could not rely upon the defence pleaded, and that the true measure of damages was upon the footing that the first consignment was in accordance with the conditions of the contract. Braithwaite v. Foreign Hardwood Co., 74 L. J. K.B. 688; [1905] 2 K.B. 543; 92 L. T. 637; 10 Com. Cas. 189; 10 Asp. M.C. 52; 21 T. L. R. 413—C.A.

Contract to Make and Lading with Steel by Certain Date—Buyer to Goods to Receive—Concurrent Obligation to buy the taking Chattel—Obligation of Buyer to supply exclusive.]—The plaintiffs agreed to co-^{quantity} deliver, f.o.b. at the Port of London, for the defendants, a steam launch by a fixed date. The launch was not in fact ready to be delivered until three months after the agreed ^{provide} date. The defendants did not during that time ^{and} ^{date} the plaintiffs that there was any vessel at the Port of London on board of which they ^{and} the launch to be delivered:—Held, that, as the defendants were not ready and willing to take delivery before the plaintiffs were ready and willing to deliver, the defendants were not entitled to deduct from the price the agreed damages for delay in delivery. Forrest v. Aramayo, 83 L. T. 335—C.A.

Contract for Sale of Cattle on c.i.f. Terms—Insurance to be against "all risks"—Policy Containing f.c. and s. Clause—Cattle not Landed in Consequence of Government Prohibition.]—The plaintiffs purchased cattle from the defendant on c.i.f. terms, the terms as to insurance in the contract being that it was to be "against all risks." The defendant delivered to the plaintiffs a policy which had clauses attached, headed "All Risks' Live Stock Clauses," containing the following: "To cover mortality, jettison, washing overboard, and risks of every kind from time of arrival at wharf and until delivered to consignees, but free of all claim for particular average and depreciation in respect of animals which walk ashore," &c. The policy contained the clause "warranted free of capture, seizure, and detention, and the consequences thereof":—Held, that as the policy contained the free of capture, seizure, and detention clause (although as between an insurance broker and underwriters its insertion was usual in an "all risks" policy), it did not comply with the terms of the contract of sale, which entitled the plaintiffs to be covered against so obvious a risk as that of the cattle being prevented from being landed owing to a Government prohibition, and therefore that the defendant was liable for loss occurring to the plaintiffs in consequence of the cattle not being allowed to be landed by reason of such a prohibition. Yuill v. Scott-Robson, 76 L. J. K.B. 469; [1907] 1 K.B. 685; 96 L. T. 842; 12 Com. Cas. 196; 23 T. L. R. 247—Channell, J. Affirmed in C.A., 77 L. J. K.B. 259; [1908] 1 K.B. 270; 24 T. L. R. 180.

Sale by Description—Breach of Implied Condition—Agreement to Supply Pure Commercial Sulphuric Acid—Supply of Poisonous Acid—Loss of other Goods by Mixing—Loss of Business—Damages Claimed by Third Persons.]—The defendants, who were under a contract to supply the plaintiffs with pure commercial sulphuric acid, in breach of the contract supplied them with sulphuric acid containing arsenic. The plaintiffs, in ignorance of this, used the acid for making invert and glucose, which they supplied to brewers for making beer, with the result that a number of persons who consumed the beer became ill, and some of them died. The plaintiffs were in consequence unable to carry on their business, and brought an action against the defendants for negligently and wrongfully supplying them with sulphuric acid containing arsenic and not in accordance with the contract:—Held, that the damages which the plaintiffs were entitled to recover included—first, the price paid by them for the impure acid; and secondly, the value of the goods spoiled by being mixed with the acid. But held, that the plaintiffs could not recover damages in respect of the loss of the goodwill of their business, as it was not a loss directly and naturally resulting from the breach of warranty, and that they were also not entitled to recover the sums which the brewers to whom they sold the glucose and invert made from the poisonous acid were entitled to recover against them. Bostock v. Nicholson, 73 L. J. K.B. 524; [1904] 1 K.B. 725; 91 L. T. 626; 53 W. R. 155; 9 Com. Cas. 200; 20 T. L. R. 342—Bruce, J.

“Cost, freight, insurance”—Shipment of Less than Stipulated Quantity—Breach—Insurance by Vendor for more than Invoice Price—Right of Purchaser to Surplus.]—By a “c.f.i.” contract the defendants sold to the plaintiffs 500 loads of timber for shipment at Quebec for Belfast. The defendants shipped 470 loads instead of 500. The ship and cargo were lost on the voyage. The defendants had a floating policy open with underwriters under which they were entitled to declare 92 per cent. of their risks (being their own insurers as to 8 per cent.), and a further 20 per cent. for “profit.” They declared under the policy the invoice price of the shipment as the value, and 20 per cent. of that for the “profit.”—Held, that the shipment of 470 loads was not a fulfilment of the contract, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to damages for breach of contract. Semble, if there had been a fulfilment of the contract the plaintiffs could only have recovered the amount of the insurance of the invoice price and not of the “profit.” Harland and Wolff v. Burstall, 84 L. T. 324; 6 Com. Cas. 113; 9 Asp. M.C. 184—Biglam, J.

Measure of Damages—Contract to Supply Sugar for Brewing—Sugar Contaminated with Poisonous Matter—Beer Destroyed.]—The measure of damages, apart from special circumstances, which the manufacturer of an article that has had to be destroyed by the fault of another is entitled to recover, is the price which he could have sold it for on the day that it had to be destroyed:—Held, therefore, that, although the plaintiffs were brewers, they were entitled to recover the full selling value of the beer in their cellars which had by the fault of the defendants to be thrown away, and not merely such a sum as they themselves must have expended in order to brew an equal amount of beer of the same quality to replace it. Holden v. Bostock, 50 W. R. 323—C.A.

—Sale of Orchid—Breach of Warranty.]—The plaintiff purchased an orchid from the defendant at an auction for twenty guineas with the warranty that it was “Cattleya Acklandiae alba, only known plant.” After two years it flowered, and produced not a white but a purple flower. The value of such a plant is 7s. 6d. In an action for breach of warranty the County Court Judge found as a fact that if the orchid had been an actual alba, it was at the time of sale worth 50l.; but that until it shewed its real nature there was no probability that an orchid grower would give more than twenty guineas for it:—Held, upon this finding, that judgment must be entered for the plaintiff for 50l. Ashworth v. Wells, 78 L. T. 136—C.A.

6. FITNESS AND MERCHANTABLE QUALITY—WARRANTIES.

Disconformity to Contract—Right to Reject—Rejection in Time.]—In November, 1900, a firm of printers ordered from a firm of engineers a Marinoni printing machine. By the contract the sellers undertook to fit the machine in the buyers’ works, and leave it in thorough good working condition. The machine was fitted in March, 1901, and, by instalments in the following April and August, the price, with the exception of 1l., was paid. The buyers used the machine until July, 1902, when they intimated rejection of it. During the period from March, 1901, to July, 1902, they had frequently intimated their dissatisfaction with the working of the machine, and requested the sellers to put it into proper working order, which the latter had unsuccessfully attempted to do. The buyers had made some unimportant alterations in the machine before rejecting it. In an action by the buyers against the sellers, concluding for warrant to remove the machine from their premises, and for repayment of the price so far as paid by them, it was proved that the machine had failed to work properly, and that this was due to its inherent defects, and not to any negligence on the part of the buyers or their workmen:—Held, that the sellers had failed to fulfil their contract, and that the buyers had timeously exercised their right of rejection. Aird & Coghill v. Pullan & Adams, 7 F. 258—Ct. of Sess.

Disclaimer of Responsibility for Bad Workmanship—Costs of Action by Sub-Vendee against Purchaser Reasonably Defended—Damages, Measure of.]—The plaintiffs having undertaken the repairs of a steamship for the owners, employed the defendants, an engineering company, to construct a new crank shaft. The defendants agreed to do so, upon the terms of their not being responsible for failure of material or workmanship beyond the replacement of faulty work supplied by them. In an action by the plaintiffs against the shipowners to recover the price of the shaft which had been supplied by the defendants, the shipowners counterclaimed for damages for breach of contract in consequence of the shaft having broken down on a voyage. The plaintiffs, after communicating with the defendants, who thereupon repudiated all responsibility, defended the counterclaim. The shipowners succeeded on their counterclaim, the shaft being found to have been of faulty workmanship. In an action by the plaintiffs to recover from the defendants the cost of the shipowners' counterclaim, as damages resulting from the defendants' breach of contract.—Held, that the terms on which the defendants had supplied the shaft did not relieve them from paying these costs; and that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover the costs of the counterclaim except so far as they were increased by any issue other than the faultiness of the material or workmanship of the shaft. Prince of Wales Dry Dock Co. v. Fownes Forge and Engineering Co., 90 L. T. 527; 9 Asp. M.C. 555—C.A.

Right to Reject—Stipulation against Rejection.—A contract for the sale of teak logs to be shipped and to be of "fair merchantable quality, conversion and condition," provided that if any dispute arose under the contract the buyers were nevertheless to take delivery and pay the price, but the dispute was to be referred to arbitration. On arrival of the shipment the buyers refused to take delivery or pay the price on the ground that the logs were not of "fair merchantable quality, conversion and condition":—Held, that the buyers were bound to pay the price, reserving all claims competent to them in respect of the goods in the arbitration. Leary v. Briggs, 6 F. 857—Ct. of Sess.

Express Warranty—Advertisement—Implied Warranty—Article Sold under Patent or Trade Name.—In March, 1897, the plaintiffs, who were the sole licensees and makers of an apparatus known in the trade as "Patterson's Smoke-Prevention Suction Draught for Land and Marine Boilers," wrote to the defendant corporation's engineer calling his attention to their apparatus as a means of both increasing boiler capacity and largely reducing or entirely preventing smoke; and also enclosing a circular, in which it was stated that "the smoke-prevention is absolute, and is attained by a proper arrangement of," &c. In March, 1898, the defendants, by letter, accepted a written offer by the plaintiffs to instal their apparatus at a price stated. Neither the offer nor the acceptance contained any reference to the circular. The apparatus having been erected, and the defendants having thereafter rejected it as not conforming to the contract, the plaintiffs sued for the price:—Held—first, that the defendants were not entitled to reply upon the circular as containing an express warranty, as it was not referred to in the contract; and secondly, that in view of the proviso in section 14, sub-section 1 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, there was no implied warranty, the apparatus in question being a specified article sold under its trade name. Paul v. Glasgow Corporation, 3 F. 119—Ct. of Sess.

Food Sold with Warranty of Soundness Condemned in Hands of Purchaser—Purchaser's Rights against Vendor—Measure of Damages—Fine and Costs on Prosecution.—The plaintiff bought of the defendants certain tins of fish warranted to be sound, but in fact unsound. He had no knowledge of their unsoundness. The fish was seized, condemned, and destroyed under the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, and the plaintiff was convicted under section 47 of that Act as the person on whose premises the fish was found, and fined 20*l.* and ten guineas costs, and he paid seven guineas costs in his defence at the police Court:—Held, that he was entitled to recover from the defendants as damages, in addition to the full value of the fish, the ten guineas costs imposed by the magistrate and the seven guineas paid in his defence, as these two payments flowed from the defendants' breach of warranty; but that the fine of 20*l.* could not be recovered in the absence of anything to shew what considerations influenced the magistrate when he imposed it. Crage v. Fry, 67 J. P. 240; 1 L. G. R. 253—Kennedy, J.

Implied Warranty—Sale by Description—Beer in Tied House—Latent Defect.—In an action to recover damages for breach of an implied warranty upon the sale of beer, it was proved that the plaintiff had suffered damage from illness caused by arsenical poisoning by beer purchased and drunk by him at a beerhouse kept by the defendant. The plaintiff's custom was to go to the house and ask for ale, with which he was served in the usual way, but he knew that the house was a tied house, at which all the beer sold came from the brewery of the owners of the house, and he went to the house because he preferred their beer:—Held, that the beer was bought by description from a seller who dealt in goods of that description within the meaning of section 14, sub-section 2 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, and that under that section an implied condition arose upon the sale that the goods should be of merchantable quality, for the breach of which the plaintiff was entitled to recover. Wren v. Holt, 72 L. J. K.B. 340; [1903] 1 K.B. 610; 88 L. T. 282; 51 W. R. 435; 67 J. P. 191—C.A.

— Fitness for Particular Purpose—Supply of Milk for Family Use—Latent Defect.—"So as to show that the buyer relies on the seller's skill."—A company, whose business it was to sell milk, supplied milk to a householder for his family consumption by delivery at his house in the ordinary way. The pass-book supplied to him by the company for the purpose of keeping the milk account contained numerous advertisements of the precautions taken by the company to insure by inspection and analysis that only pure milk, free from all germs of disease, was supplied. In an action by the householder against the company to recover damages sustained by him by reason of the death of his wife by typhoid fever contracted from milk supplied by the company, —Held, that in these circumstances the plaintiff had made known to the company that the milk was required for the particular purpose of household consumption so as to show that the plaintiff relied on the company's skill and judgment, and that thereupon an implied warranty arose under section 14, sub-section 1 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, that the milk was fit for household consumption; and that the fact that it is impossible to test milk intended for household consumption for typhoid germs, by reason of the length of time necessary for the process, afforded no defence, since the warranty was not limited so as not to apply to latent undiscoverable defects. Frost v. Aylesbury Dairy Co., 74 L. J. K.B. 386; [1905] 1 K.B. 608; 92 L. T. 527; 53 W. R. 354; 21 T. L. R. 300—C.A.

— — — Crabs—Reliance on Seller's Skill or Judgment.—The plaintiff asked the defendant, a fishmonger, for "two nice fresh crabs which she wanted for her tea." The defendant said he had no live crabs, but that he could give her boiled ones. He then selected for her two crabs which he said were nice and fresh. The plaintiff pointed to another crab and asked if he did not think it better, but the defendant on feeling it said it was by the weight one should judge and not by the size, and put it away. The plaintiff took and paid for the two crabs selected by the defendant, who bona fide believed that they were fresh and fit for human food:—Held, that the crabs were bought for a particular purpose, made known to the seller, within section 14, sub-section 1 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, so as to shew that the buyer relied on the seller's skill and judgment, and that the defendant was liable in damages to the plaintiff, who became seriously ill through eating the crabs, which were not in fact fresh and reasonably fit for human food. Wallis v. Russell, [1902] 2 Ir. R. 585—C.A.

— "Makes known to the seller the particular purpose"—Sale of Article by Ordinary Description.]—Where an article which is prima facie applicable to one purpose only is sold by its ordinary recognised description, then, inasmuch as there is a sale for a particular purpose which is understood by both the buyer and the seller, the fact that the buyer does not make known to the seller the particular purpose for which the article is required, otherwise than by the ordinary description of the article, does not exclude the contract of sale from the operation of section 14, sub-section 1 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, and prevent the implication of a warranty that the article is reasonably fit for the purpose in question. Freist v. Last, 72 L. J. K.B. 657; [1903] 2 K.B. 145; 89 L. T. 33; 51 W. R. 678—C.A.

A draper who had no special knowledge of hot-water bottles went to the shop of a chemist in the course of whose business it was to sell them, and asked for a hot-water bottle, the circumstances shewing that as a fact he relied on the skill and judgment of the seller. An article having been sold to him as a hot-water bottle,—Held, that the case came within section 14, sub-section 1 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, and that it was an implied condition of the contract of sale that the seller should supply a bottle reasonably fit for the particular purpose of holding hot water in circumstances in which hot-water bottles are ordinarily used. Ib.

— Condenser Tubes—Implied Condition that Goods of Merchantable Quality.]—The pursuer, the owner of a Clyde steamer which required new condenser-tubes, was shewn by the defenders, who were contractors for ship machinery, a specimen of a new kind of brass condenser-tube, manufactured by the B. Copper Co. The defenders told the pursuer that these tubes were in use on certain Clyde tug-steamers. Afterwards the defenders wrote to the pursuer offering to supply the tubes at a specified price, inclosing a copy of a report by the B. Copper Co., in which the tubes were referred to as "giving good results in the Clyde tug-steamers." The pursuer ordered from the defenders 750 of "your special condenser-tubes" for this steamer. The B. Copper Co.'s tubes were supplied by the defenders to the pursuer, and were fitted into his steamer. After four months' use they were found to be useless from corrosion, and had to be replaced by others:—Held (LORD TRAYNER dissentiente), that the defenders were liable in damages for breach of contract on the ground (per the LORD JUSTICE-CLERK) that under section 14, sub-section 2 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, it was an implied condition of the contract that the tubes should be of merchantable quality, and that they were not of such quality, and on the ground (per LORD YOUNG and LORD KINCARNEY) that the buyer had made known to the seller the particular purpose for which the tubes were required, and had shewn that he relied on the seller's skill as a trader in such goods, and therefore that under section 14, sub-section 1 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, it was an implied condition that the tubes should be reasonably fit for such purpose, and that they were not reasonably fit for that purpose in fact. Williamson v. Macpherson & Co., 6 F. 863—Ct. of Sess.

— Limestone—Iron-smelting.]—The plaintiffs, who were the owners of limestone quarries, had for some years before December, 1881, supplied limestone to the defendants, who owned iron-smelting works, from a certain quarry. This quarry was known to be a second-grade quarry in which were beds of limestone of varying quality. In December, 1881, the defendants agreed to obtain from the said quarry, and from no other place, so long as the plaintiffs should supply the same, all the limestone they should from time to time require for the smelting and other purposes of their works, and the plaintiffs agreed to supply from the said quarry all the limestone so required by the defendants:—Held, that the plaintiffs were bound to supply limestone reasonably fit for use in the defendants' works, which were known to be iron-smelting works, and that in determining what was reasonable fitness the fact that the limestone was to come from a particular quarry, which was known to be a second-grade quarry, and from which the defendants had for some years before the date of the contract taken limestone, must be taken into consideration. Strongitharm v. North Lonsdale Iron and Steel Co., 21 T. L. R. 357—C.A.

Dangerous Goods—Danger not Obvious to Buyer Known to Seller—Duty of Seller to Warn Buyer—Negligence—Sale for Particular Purpose—Condition that no Warranty Given—Implied Warranty of Fitness.]—Independently of any warranty, there arises out of a sale of goods possessing a dangerous quality, which the seller knows and the buyer presumably does not know, a relation between the seller and the buyer which imposes on the seller the duty of warning the buyer of that dangerous quality. Clarke v. Army and Navy Co-operative Society, 72 L. J. K.B. 153; [1903] 1 K.B. 155; 88 L. T. 1—C.A.

A co-operative society sold to a purchaser a tin of chlorinated lime from a consignment, of which other tins had to the knowledge of the manager of the society caused injury to the persons opening them. No warning was given to the purchaser, who on opening the tin was injured by the lime flying into her eyes:—Held, that as the danger was one of which it was not to be expected that the purchaser would be aware, there was, independently of any warranty, a duty upon the society to warn the purchaser of the danger, and that the society was liable in respect of the injury resulting from that breach of duty. Ib.

Semble, that a rule of the society that "no warranties are given with the goods sold by the society, except on the written authority of one of the managing directors or the assistant manager," did not exclude from the contract of sale the implied warranty arising under section 14, sub-section 1 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, that goods sold for a particular purpose are reasonably fit for such purpose. Ib.

Receipt on Pictures—"By" Certain Artist.]—Semble, receipts given by a seller for the price of pictures in which the pictures are described as "by" certain artists named, do not by themselves amount to a warranty that the pictures were the work of these artists. Hyslop v. Shir-law, 7 F. 875—Ct. of Sess.

6. STOPPAGE IN TRANSITU.

Right of.]—Where an agreement has been arrived at between the buyer of goods consigned by carrier to await his orders and the carrier, that the goods are to remain in the possession of the carrier as warehouse-keeper for the buyer, the seller is not entitled to stop the goods as still being in transitu. Taylor v. Great Eastern Railway, 70 L. J. K.B. 499; [1901] 1 K.B. 774; 84 L. T. 770; 49 W. R. 431; 6 Com. Cas. 121—Bigham, J.

Duration of Transit—Port of Delivery.]—By a c.i.f. contract J. B. S. & Co., of Miramichi, New Brunswick, sold a quantity of timber to a firm in Glasgow, at certain prices "including freight and insurance to Glasgow." The contract stated, "The goods are deliverable in the usual and customary manner at Miramichi with all reasonable despatch, according to the season of the year, and agreeably to the custom of the port during the shipping season, 1903," and "Should the vessel or vessels fixed for this contract be lost previous to loading, and after the name being declared to the buyer then sellers to have the option of substituting another vessel or vessels, or cancelling the contract." The timber was shipped at Miramichi by the sellers, and the bill of lading taken in their own name. The bill of lading bore that the cargo was to be delivered in Glasgow to their order or assigns. On the ship's arrival at Glasgow the sellers stopped the goods in transitu:—Held, that the port of delivery was Glasgow and not Miramichi, and that the goods were in transitu when stopped. M'Dowall and Neilson's Trustee v. Snowball Co., 7 F. 35—Ct. of Sess.

Payment by "approved acceptance."]—A contract of sale provided for payment by "approved acceptance." The seller on September 18 took the buyer's acceptance. On September 25 the seller stopped the goods in transitu. The buyer was insolvent on October 1:—Held, that the acceptance did not operate as payment so as to deprive the seller of his right to stop the goods in transitu. Ib.

Agent to Take Delivery.]—The plaintiff sold to the defendants, who carried on business at Hamburg, ten tons of waggon brass ex-York stores, to be forwarded to the Co-operative Wholesale Society at Goole. The defendants at the same time wrote to the Co-operative Society, who were shipping agents, informing them that they would receive the brass, and directing them to forward it by steamer to Hamburg. The plaintiff, who knew that the goods were going to be forwarded by steamer, but had received no instructions where they were to be sent after arrival at Goole, forwarded them to the Co-operative Society at Goole, who received them and sent them on to Hamburg. When the brass arrived at Hamburg the plaintiff, who had not been paid, telegraphed to the Co-operative Society's branch there not to deliver it:—Held, that, as the plaintiff had only received instructions to send the goods to the Co-operative Society at Goole, the goods were received there by the society as agents in that behalf for the defendants, and fresh instructions to the society as to the further destination of the goods were necessary; that therefore the transit was at an end at Goole, and the notice to stop was too late. Jobson v. Eppenheim, 21 T. L. R. 468—Channell, J.

Document of Title, Possession of—Consent of Seller—Draft, Failure to Accept—Transfer of Bill of Lading to Sub-Vendee.]—In fulfilment of a contract for the sale of a certain quantity of copper, the sellers forwarded to the buyer a bill of lading indorsed in blank for copper shipped on the defendants' ship, together with a draft for the price of the copper for acceptance. The buyer, who was insolvent, did not accept the draft, and delivered the bill of lading to the plaintiffs in fulfilment of a contract which he had previously to obtaining possession of the bill of lading made for the sale to them of the copper. The plaintiffs took the bill of lading in good faith and without notice of the rights of the original sellers in respect of the copper. The sellers stopped the copper in transitu. In an action by the plaintiffs against the defendants for non-delivery of the copper,—Held, that the buyer, having obtained possession of the bill of lading with the consent of the sellers, the transfer of it by him to the plaintiffs gave them a good title to the copper under section 25, sub-section 2 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, and that the sellers had no right to stop it in transitu. Cahn v. Pockett's Bristol Channel Steam Packet Co., 68 L. J. Q.B. 515; [1899] 1 Q.B. 643; 80 L. T. 269; 47 W. R. 422; 8 Asp. M.C. 516—C.A.

8. GOODS STOLEN OR PAWNED.

Goods Stolen by Servant—Title of Purchaser—Conduct of Master Alleged as Cause of Fraud—Estoppel.]—The appellants gave a written authority to a dock company to honour transfer or delivery orders of timber signed by their confidential clerk. The clerk assumed a false name, took an office, and obtained transfers of timber to himself under the assumed name. This timber he sold to the respondents, representing himself as the agent of another firm. In an action by the appellants for the value of the timber,—Held, that as the timber was stolen the respondents had no better title than the thief from whom they bought, and the appellants were not estopped from recovering the value on the ground that the clerk was invested with the powers of an owner, as there had been no representation made to the respondents by or on behalf of the appellants, the respondents never having dealt with the clerk in his own name and having no knowledge of the appellants' connection with the transactions. Farquharson v. King, 71 L. J. K.B. 667; [1902] A.C. 325; 86 L. T. 810; 51 W. R. 94—H.L. (E.)

— Goods Pawned by Retail Dealer—Sale on Appropriation—Title of Pawnbroker—Loss Arising by Fraud on Two Innocent Parties.—Ehrmann, a wholesale jeweller, was in the habit of sending goods to Anderson, a retail jeweller, with the wholesale prices marked, with power to sell and deliver on his own account and for his own profit any articles he might sell, Anderson being liable only for the wholesale price. At the same time Ehrmann sent a printed notice headed "Appropriation note," stating that the goods were to remain the property of the sender till invoiced by him to Anderson. Anderson having retained a diamond necklace for several months, Ehrmann in April, 1903, urged Anderson to purchase the necklace himself, and offered to take bills for the price. Anderson agreed to do so, and the necklace was invoiced to him, and the bills were granted by him. Anderson having subsequently become bankrupt, Bryce, a pawnbroker, with whom Anderson had in December, 1902, without Ehrmann's knowledge, pledged the necklace, raised an action of multiple poinding to determine the right thereto. Claims were lodged by Ehrmann, by Bryce, and by Anderson's trustee, but the claim by the last was not insisted in:—Held—first, that as in December, 1902, Anderson had been put by Ehrmann in a position to give a good title to a purchaser, he could validly pledge the necklace, and had validly pledged it to Bryce; secondly, that as Anderson's trustee did not insist upon his claim Ehrmann was entitled to delivery of the necklace after satisfying Bryce's claim. Bryce v. Ehrmann, 7 F. 5—Ct. of Sess.

9. SALE OF BREAD.

Exercise of Ordinary Calling on the Lord's Day—Prosecution—Consent of Justices.—By the Sunday Observance Act, 1677, s. 1: No tradesman shall exercise any worldly labour of his ordinary calling upon the Lord's Day (works of necessity and charity only excepted). By the Sunday Observation Prosecution Act, 1871, s. 1: No proceeding shall be instituted against any person for any offence committed under the Sunday Observance Act, 1677, except with the consent in writing of the authorities named in the later Act. By the Bread Act, 1822, s. 16: No master or other person exercised or employed in the business of a baker shall on the Lord's Day . . . exercise the trade or calling of a baker save as therein excepted:—Held, that in order to institute a prosecution under the last mentioned Act it is not necessary to obtain the consent in writing of the authorities named in the Sunday Observation Prosecution Act, 1871. Rea v. Mead, 71 L. J. K.B. 871; [1902] 2 K.B. 212; 87 L. T. 136; 50 W. R. 589; 66 J. P. 676; 20 Cox C.C. 337—D.

Sale of Bread otherwise than by Weight.—It is no answer to a charge under section 4 of 3 Geo. 4, c. cvi., of selling bread otherwise than by weight, that the purchaser asked for a loaf at a specified price, and not for one of any particular weight. London County Council v. Read, 69 L. J. Q.B. 39; [1900] 1 Q.B. 288; 81 L. T. 452; 48 W. R. 393; 63 J. P. 775; 19 Cox C.C. 415—D.

The respondent, a baker, sold a loaf of bread, of the size and appearance of a 2-lb. loaf, to a purchaser, for 3d. When weighed the loaf was found to be half an ounce short of 2 lbs. in weight. It was the practice of the respondent to weigh loaves, after baking them, three at a time, and it was proved that the loaf in question had been weighed that morning with two others, and that the three together had weighed 6 lb.; but that the loaf had not been weighed separately:—Held, that the respondent had sold bread otherwise than by weight within the meaning of section 4 of the Bread Act, 1836. Welch v. Cutler, 92 L. T. 239; 69 J. P. 149; 3 L. G. R. 282; 20 Cox C.C. 809—D.

— Weight of Bread not Ascertained.—In order that the requirements of section 4 of the London Bread Act, 1822 (which imposes upon sellers of bread the obligation of selling the same by weight), may be complied with, the weight of the bread sold must be ascertained. Cox v. Bleines, 71 L. J. K.B. 437; [1902] 1 K.B. 670; 86 L. T. 563; 50 W. R. 392; 66 J. P. 407; 20 Cox C.C. 188—D.

A person entered a baker's shop and asked to be supplied with a half-quarter loaf. Such a loaf ought to weigh two pounds. The respondent's shopwoman placed a loaf and two rolls in one pan of the shop scales—a two-pound weight being in the other pan—but the loaf and rolls did not move the beam of the scales, and when they were handed to the customer their weight had not been ascertained, except that it was evident that they weighed less than two pounds. It was subsequently found that they weighed five ounces less than two pounds:—Held, that the bread had not been sold by weight as required by the section. Id.

— Ascertainment of Weight.—It is a sufficient compliance with the requirements of the London Bread Act, 1822, to ascertain by weighing that the weight of the loaf sold is above the weight professed to be sold without ascertaining its exact weight in pounds, ounces, and grains. Bridge v. Passman, 68 J. P. 129—D.

— Weighing.—To satisfy the requirements of the Bread Act (which requires bread, with certain exceptions, to be sold by weight only) the bread must be actually weighed as bread before or at the time of sale. It is not sufficient to shew that the dough was cut by a machine into pieces calculated, when baked, to weigh a certain number of pounds. Slater v. Brewsters, [1905] 2 Ir. R. 258—K.B. D.

10. SALE BY AUCTION.

Personal Liability of Auctioneer—Implied Authority to Sell without Reserve—Limitation of Authority not Communicated to Buyer—Liability of Principal.]—The defendant, an auctioneer, was instructed by the owner of a pony to sell it at a public auction with a reserve price of 25*l*. When the pony was put up at the sale the name of the vendor was disclosed; but the defendant inadvertently stated that the sale was without reserve. The pony was knocked down to the plaintiff for fifteen guineas. The defendant immediately afterwards discovered his error, and thereupon put the pony up for sale again, when it was bought in for seventeen guineas. No note or memorandum of the sale to the plaintiff was made. The plaintiff brought an action against the defendant claiming—first, delivery of the pony, or damages for its detention; secondly, alternatively, damages for breach of warranty of authority by the defendant:—Held, as to (1), that the action failed by reason of the absence of a written memorandum of the sale. Held, as to (2), that an auctioneer has an implied authority to sell without reserve, and, if he does so, the vendor cannot set up as against the buyer a limitation of that authority not made known to the buyer. There was, therefore, in the circumstances a contract binding on the vendor on which he could (but for the absence of a written memorandum) have been successfully sued by the plaintiff; and there had been no breach of warranty of authority by the defendant. Warlow v. Harrison (29 L. J. Q.B. 14; 1 E. & E. 309) distinguished. Rainbow v. Howkins, 73 L. J. K.B. 641; [1904] 2 K.B. 322; 91 L. T. 149; 53 W. R. 46; 20 T. L. R. 508—D.

Quære, whether the plaintiff had a cause of action against the defendant for failing to make a written memorandum of the sale. Ib.

Woolfe v. Horne (46 L. J. Q.B. 534; 2 Q.B. D. 355) is an authority that an action for wrongful refusal to deliver a chattel sold at public auction may in some circumstances be brought against the auctioneer, although the principal's name has been disclosed to the buyer at the time of the sale. Ib.

— Sale Subject to Reserve Price—Acceptance of Bid Less than Reserve Price—Action by Bidder—Breach of Duty—Breach of Warranty of Authority.]—At an auction, where by the conditions of sale each lot was to be offered subject to a reserve price, the plaintiff bid for a lot a sum which was less than the reserve price. The auctioneer, thinking by mistake that the reserve price had been reached, knocked down the lot to the plaintiff. He immediately discovered his mistake and withdrew the lot, and refused, though requested by the plaintiff, to make and sign a memorandum of contract of sale:—Held, that inasmuch as both the bid and the acceptance of the bid at the auction were conditional on the reserve price being reached or exceeded, the plaintiff was not entitled to maintain an action against the auctioneer either for breach of duty or for breach of warranty of authority. McManus v. Fortescue, 76 L. J.

Sale of Horse—Horse Entered in Catalogue and Sold as Owned by Particular Person—Sale by Private Treaty before Auction—Statement by Auctioneer that Horse was put up "as described in the catalogue"—Auctioneer Acting as Owner's Agent—Estoppel—Rescission of Contract on Ground of Misrepresentation.]—A horse was sent to be sold, and was entered in the catalogue as the property of a particular person. Before the sale the owner sold the horse by private treaty, and the auctioneer was informed of this, but was requested to go on with the sale by auction, the original owner acquiescing in this being done, and the sale by auction did take place in his presence, the auctioneer putting up the horse "as described in the catalogue." There was evidence that the fact of the horse being entered in the catalogue as the property of the person there named, who was well known, might fetch a higher price than a horse sold by a person who was not known. The purchaser at the sale by auction having learned of the previous sale by private treaty brought an action against the original owner of the horse for the rescission of the contract:—Held, that the statement in the catalogue was a material representation as it was to a certain extent a guarantee as to the character of the sale, that the defendant had held out the auctioneer as being his agent and allowed the plaintiff to act on the faith of it, and that the plaintiff was entitled to rescind the contract. Whurr v. Devenish, 20 T. L. R. 385—Lord Alverstone, C.J.

Right of Exposer to Withdraw Subject.]—As section 53, sub-section 2 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, entitles a bidder to withdraw his bid at any time before the fall of the hammer, the exposer must be held to be equally free to withdraw his offer to sell. Fenwick v. Macdonald, Fraser & Co., 6 F. 550—Ct. of Sess.

Auctioneer Acting for Disclosed Seller—Agent and Principal.]—PER LORD KYLLACHY: An auctioneer, acting for a disclosed exposer, and in accordance with his instructions, incurs no liability to a person claiming to be a purchaser for implement and damages. Ib.

Cheque—Payment to Vendor—Representations Falsely made by Vendor—Right of Auctioneer to Recover on Cheque.]—The defendant purchased at auction certain pictures, the property of B., which were represented by B. to be examples by or attributed to several well-known artists. The jury found that such representation by B. was fraudulently made. After the auction on June 26 the defendant gave his cheque for the amount of the purchases to the plaintiff, the auctioneer, and on June 28 the plaintiff paid B., at that time having no intimation that there was anything wrong. Subsequently the defendant stopped the cheque. The jury found that the representations had not been fraudulently made by the plaintiff:—Held, that the defendant was liable to the plaintiff on the cheque. Hindle v. Brown, 98 L. 2. EDUCATIONAL AUTHORITY.

(a) Generally.

Local Education Authority—Education Committee—Scheme—Provision Empowering Local Education Authority to Determine Order of Retirement of Members—Resolution Determining Order—Subsequent Resolution Varying Order—Validity.—An urban district council, as the local education authority under section 1 of the Education Act, 1902, made a scheme for the establishment of an education committee under section 17, sub-section 1 of the Act, which was duly approved by the Board of Education. The scheme provided (inter alia) that the council should determine the order of retirement of the members of the committee. The council passed a resolution determining the order, and subsequently passed a second resolution by which it purported to vary the order of retirement:—Held, that the council, having by the first resolution determined the order of retirement, was functus officio, and that the subsequent resolution purporting to alter that order was therefore ultra vires and invalid. Milward v. Barry Urban Council, 73 L. J. Ch. 804; [1904] 2 Ch. 481; 91 L. T. 290; 53 W. R. 21; 68 J. P. 569; 2 L. G. R. 1222; 20 T. L. R. 705—Buckley, J.

—The time table of a non-provided school provided that religious observance and religious instruction should be from 9 A.M., when the school opened, till 9.55 A.M.; that at 9.55 A.M. the registers should be marked; and that secular instruction should commence at 10 A.M., and continue till noon. A footnote, approved by his Majesty's inspector, provided that on saints' days and holy days the registers should be marked at 9 A.M., the object being that the children might be taken, as the custom was, to church at 11 A.M. The defendants, the local education authority under the Education Act, 1902, issued a direction that secular instruction in all schools within their district should commence not later than 9.45 A.M., and continue through the school hours. The plaintiffs, the managers, did not comply with the direction, and continued to take the children to church on saints' days and holy days at 11 A.M., and took no step to alter the time table. The local education authority thereupon refused to continue to maintain the school. The Board of Education confirmed the action of the local education authority. The managers brought an action against the local education authority, claiming a declaration that the local education authority was bound to continue to maintain the school:—Held, that the direction given by the local education authority was a direction, not as to religious, but as to secular instruction within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 1 (a) of the Education Act, 1902, and that the issue, therefore, between the managers and the local education authority arose under section 7, and was a question to be determined by the Board of Education under sub-section 3 of section 1, and that the Court had no jurisdiction to determine it. Blencowe v. Northamptonshire County Council, 76 L. J. Ch. 276; [1907] 1 Ch. 504; 96 L. T. 385; 71 J. P. 258; 5 L. G. R. 551; 23 T. L. R. 319—Warrington, J.

Managers appointed under the Education Act, 1902, of a non-provided school have not such possession of the school building, in the absence of a special arrangement with the owner, as will support an action of trespass. Ib.

The local education authority having ceased to maintain a non-provided school, sent their inspector, who informed the teachers and the children that the school would be closed, and told the children that they were to go to another school, and offered to the teachers employment, which they accepted, in other schools; and he wrote in the log book, "School closed, teachers transferred." The managers brought an action against the local education authority claiming damages for trespass and illegal acts in closing the school and inducing the teachers to leave the service of the managers without due justification:—Held, that the managers, not having pleaded or proved any special arrangement with the owner of the school building giving them possession in a legal sense, could not maintain the action. Ib.

Held, also, upon the facts, that the offer of other employment by the local education authority to the teachers was justified, and that the defendants had not induced the teachers to break their contracts with the plaintiffs without justification. Ib.

Duty of Local Education Authority to Maintain Voluntary School.]—See Wilford v. Yorkshire (West Riding) County Council, 77 L. J. K.B. 436; [1908] 1 K.B. 685; 6 L. G. R. 244.

Conditions of Maintenance—Effect of Non-compliance—Dismissal of Teacher without Consent of Authority—"Exclusive power" of Managers.]—Clauses (a) to (e) of section 7, sub-section 1 of the Education Act, 1902, are not affirmative statutory provisions independent of the enactment that the local education authority shall maintain non-provided schools. They are conditions operating solely between the authority and the managers, and the only effect of non-compliance is the forfeiture of maintenance. Clause (c) gives no rights to a teacher, and the power of the managers to dismiss him depends only on the terms of his agreement with them. "Exclusive power" in section 7, sub-section 7, means "exclusive of the education authority." Young v. Cuthbert, 75 L. J. Ch. 247; [1906] 1 Ch. 451; 94 L. T. 191; 54 W. R. 296; 70 J. P. 130; 4 L. G. R. 356; 22 T. L. R. 251—Buckley, J.

Delegation of Powers.]—An education committee appointed under section 17 can exercise the powers of the education authority and can delegate them to a sub-committee under the First Schedule, A (6), and the consent of either such body, given after the dismissal of a teacher by the managers, would refer back and ratify such dismissal if ratification were required. Ib.

United District School Board—Transfer to Educational Authorities—Different "appointed days"—Adjustment of Liabilities—Immediate or Postponed Arbitration.]—The H. Urban District Council is the local education authority for the H. Urban District. June 1, 1903, was the "appointed day" for the coming into operation of the Education Act, 1902, within the district. The corporation of J. and the county council of D. are respectively the local education authorities for the borough of J. and the rural district of M. At the passing of the Education Act, 1902, the H., M., and J. United District School Board was the school board for the urban district of H., the rural district of M., and the borough of J. April 1, 1904, was the appointed day for the coming into operation of that Act within the county of D. and the borough of J. Matters having arisen requiring adjustment between the council and the united district school board, and clause 1 of the second schedule to the Act providing that the rights and liabilities "of any school board" existing at the appointed day should be transferred to the council exercising the powers of the school board,—Held, that an arbitrator should be at once appointed to adjust such matters, and that the appointment should not be delayed until the appointed day for the remainder of the united district school board. Hebburn Urban Council and Hedworth School Board, In re, 90 L. T. 145; 63 J. P. 232; 2 L. G. R. 821; 20 T. L. R. 244—Kekewich, J.

Improvement of Public Elementary School—

"Capital Expenditure"—Payment out of Current Rate.]—The words "capital expenditure" in clause (c) of section 18, sub-section 1 of the Education Act, 1902, mean the expenditure, irrespective of the source from which it is obtained, which, on its being laid out, becomes in itself capital. Re v. Wraith; Kent County Council, Ex parte, 76 L. J. K.B. 881; [1907] 2 K.B. 756; 97 L.T. 577; 71 J.P. 447; 5 L.G.R. 1091—D.

Science and Art Schools and Classes—Power to Provide and Maintain out of Rates.]—It is not within the powers of the London School Board as a statutory corporation to provide or to pay the expenses of maintaining science and art schools or classes either in their day schools or in their evening continuation schools out of the School Board rate. Re v. Cockerton, 70 L. J. K.B. 441; [1901] 1 K.B. 726; 84 L.T. 488; 49 W.R. 433; 65 J.P. 435—C.A.

Scheme—Publication by Board of Education—Disapproval of Scheme.]—Where a scheme for the establishment of an education committee has been submitted by the local education authority to the Board of Education, and is not approved by them, there is no duty imposed upon the Board by section 17, sub-section 6 of the Education Act, 1902, to publish the scheme. Cardiff Corporation, Ex parte, 20 T.L.R. 317—D.

(b) School Board Election.

Votes Indicated by Crosses — Costs against Returning Officer.]—Ballot papers at a school board election are not invalid merely because votes are indicated thereon by crosses instead of figures. Where the returning officer is not a party to an election petition no costs can be given against him. Long Sutton Election Petition, In re, 62 J.P. 565—D.

Election Petition—Re-count of Votes.]—At an election of a School Board eight candidates contested five seats, and five were elected. A petition was afterwards presented for a re-count of votes as between the fifth and the sixth candidates. The re-count shewed a majority in favour of the sixth candidate over the fifth:—Held, that to unseat the fifth candidate and seat the sixth, the re-count need not include a re-count also of the votes polled for the first four candidates. Monkswell (Lord) v. Thompson (No. 2), 67 L.J. Q.B. 378; [1898] 1 Q.B. 479; 78 L.T. 116; 46 W.R. 382; 62 J.P. 212—D.

— Order for Special Case—Appeal to Court of Appeal.]—An order of a Judge at chambers upon an application under section 93, sub-section 7 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, for a Special Case to be stated in proceedings relating to a school board election petition, is an order on an interlocutory question arising in such petition, from which an appeal lies to the Court of Appeal. Harmon v. Park (50 L.J. Q.B. 227; 6 Q.B. D. 323) followed. Monkswell (Lord) v. Thompson (No. 1), 67 L.J. Q.B. 243; [1898] 1 Q.B. 353; 77 L.T. 707—C.A.

(c) Transfer of Property.

Division of Area — Adjustment of Property and Liabilities—Compromise of Dispute.]—A school board district ceased to exist, by reason of the provisions of section 1 of the Education Act, 1902, part of the district becoming, for educational purposes, part of an urban district, and the rest coming under the jurisdiction of the county council. A dispute having arisen between the county council and the urban district council as to the proportion which each were to contribute towards the cost of education in the added parts, an agreement was arrived at by which separate accounts of the cost of education in the added parts were to be kept, excluding establishment and capital expenditure, the amounts shown by such accounts were to be added together, and the net charge for the same on the rates was to be annually divided between the county council and the urban council in the proportion that the rateable value of the added parts bore to each other. In an action to have the agreement declared ultra vires,—Held, that the agreement was a compromise of the dispute, and was therefore binding. Att.-Gen. v. Essex County Council, 71 J.P. 557; 24 T.L.R. 22—Kekewich, J.

United School Board District—Property and Liabilities—Two New Education Authorities—Adjustment.]—Where an united school board district, which has borrowed money for building purposes, becomes by the effect of the Education Act, 1902, divided into two districts, each having a different council as education authority, there must be an adjustment of property and liabilities between the councils, for neither does the Act automatically vest in each council the schools which happen to be situate within that part of the united school board district which becomes its district, nor does it vest them in both jointly or in undivided shares, and the debt is one aggregate liability of the old board, though the amount borrowed for each school may have been earmarked. Wallsend Corporation and Northumberland County Council, In re, 75 L.J. Ch. 813; [1906] 2 Ch. 506; 95 L.T. 259; 70 J.P. 434; 4 L.G.R. 1141; 22 T.L.R. 773—Swinfen Eady, J.

Stock Standing in Bank Books in Name of School Board "Abolished."]—Section 5 of the Education Act, 1902, provides that on the appointed day under the Act school boards "shall be abolished":—Held, that on the happening of the appointed day the school board for the district in question was dissolved, and ceased to exist for all purposes. Oldham Corporation v. Bank of England, 73 L.J. Ch. 785; [1904] 2 Ch. 716; 91 L.T. 582; 53 W.R. 243; 68 J.P. 584; 2 L.G.R. 1324; 20 T.L.R. 787—C.A.

Clause 1 of Schedule II. to the Act provides that the property, powers, rights, and liabilities of any school board existing at the appointed day "shall be transferred" to the council exercising the powers of the school board:—Held, that on the happening of the appointed day all the property, powers, rights, and liabilities of a school board ipso facto, by operation of the Act, vest in the new educational authority without the aid of any additional instrument of any sort or kind; and consequently where Consols were standing in the name of a school board in the books of the Bank of England on the appointed day, the Consols vested in the new educational authority under the Act, and they were entitled to be entered in the bank books as owners thereof. Ib.

Dissolution of School District—Title to Consols.—The Poor Law Amendment Act, 1844, which empowers parishes and poor law unions to combine into school districts, by section 45 incorporates the boards of management for such school districts, and not the school district itself. When a school district has been dissolved by the Local Government Board under the Dissolved Boards of Management and Guardians Act, 1870, section 12 of that Act does not automatically vest in the members constituting the board of management the property of the school district which has been dissolved, but such property remains vested in the district board. Consols vested in the board of management of a dissolved school district are therefore not transferable by the individual members constituting the board until some further act has taken place vesting the right to transfer in them. Morton v. Bank of England, 73 L. J. Ch. 503; [1904] 1 Ch. 664; 90 L. T. 375; 52 W. R. 393; 68 J. P. 268; 2 L. G. R. 734; 20 T. L. R. 230—Farwell, J.

Office—Abolition—Compensation—“In pursuance or in consequence of this Act”—Superintendent of Training Ship.—The applicant was in 1877 appointed by the London School Board captain-superintendent of the training ship Shafesbury. By the Education Act, 1902, the powers and duties of the School Board were transferred to the London County Council, who determined to discontinue the use of the ship, and they accordingly gave the applicant six months' notice. The applicant applied, under clause 21 of schedule 2 to the Education Act, 1902, for compensation for the abolition of his office:—Held, that the abolition of the applicant's office was not “in pursuance of or in consequence of” the Act, and that therefore he was not entitled to compensation. Rex v. London County Council; Scriven, Ex parte, 23 T. L. R. 493—D.

3. TEACHERS.

Non-provided School—Salary of Schoolmistress—Liability of Local Education Authority.—Section 7 of the Education Act, 1902, does not create any privity of contract between a teacher appointed by the managers of a non-provided school and the local education authority. Therefore an action will not lie at the suit of the teacher against the local education authority to recover arrears of salary. Nor does a contract arise from the mere fact that the local education authority pays the teacher direct. Crocker v. Plymouth Corporation, 75 L. J. K.B. 375; [1906] 1 K.B. 494; 94 L. T. 734; 54 W. R. 391; 70 J. P. 204; 4 L. G. R. 571; 22 T. L. R. 336—D.

Pupil Teachers' Centres—Power to Provide and Maintain out of Rates.—It is not within the powers of the London School Board to expend money out of the rates for the purpose of providing separate schools for the education of pupil teachers (commonly called “Pupil Teachers' Centres”), in which the education is in reality higher education and not the elementary education contemplated by the Elementary Education Act, 1870. Rex v. Cockerton (70 L. J. K.B. 441; [1901] 1 K.B. 726) followed. Dyer v. London School Board, 72 L. J. Ch. 10; [1902] 2 Ch. 768; 87 L. T. 225; 51 W. R. 34—C.A.

National School—Teacher Appointed by Managers under Trust Deed—Notice of Dismissal before “appointed day”—Expiration of Notice Afterwards—Consent of Local Education Authority.—The plaintiff was in July, 1899, appointed teacher at a National school by the then managers under the trust deed, by an agreement, one of the terms of which was that his engagement should be determinable by three months' notice. On May 6, 1904, the then managers gave the plaintiff notice that they would not require his services as master after August 9, 1904. On July 1, 1904, the Education Act, 1902, came into operation in the county in which the school was situated, that being the “appointed day” in that county. The county council, the local education authority, refused to consent to the plaintiff's dismissal. Under section 7, sub-section 1 (c), in the case of a non-provided school maintained by the local education authority the consent of the authority is required to the dismissal of a teacher except in the case there mentioned:—Held, that on the day when the Act came into operation the plaintiff was being employed for a term which ended on August 9, 1904, when the term came to an end by the expiration of the time fixed by the previous notice which was validly given in accordance with the terms of the contract; that the managers had not to give any further notice, or do anything which would amount to a dismissal within the meaning of the Act; and that section 7, sub-section 1 (c) of the Education Act, 1902, had no application to the case. Jones v. Hughes, 74 L. J. Ch. 57; [1905] 1 Ch. 180; 92 L. T. 218; 53 W. R. 344; 69 J. P. 33; 3 L. G. R. 1; 21 T. L. R. 59—C.A.

Parties to Action.—The action was brought for an injunction restraining the defendants from preventing the plaintiff from exercising his duty as teacher. The defendants were the four persons who were “foundation managers” under the Education Act, 1902. They were not the persons with whom the plaintiff made his contract, neither were they the whole body of managers under the Act:—Held, that the action was not properly constituted. Ib.

Superannuation Fund—Deductions from Salaries of Teachers—Ultra Vires.—A School Board formed under the Elementary Education Act, 1870, established a scheme for a superannuation fund for such of their teachers as elected to join it, the fund being provided by a deduction of 2 per cent. from the salaries of the teachers. After the scheme was established the Board appointed all their teachers subject to the scheme. The expenses of the management of the fund were defrayed out of the funds of the Board, the deficiencies in which were made up out of the local rate, but the Board made no contribution to the benefits of the fund, and did not guarantee its solvency. The plaintiffs, one of whom had elected to join the scheme, while the other was appointed subject to the scheme, having ceased to be in the employment of the Board without becoming entitled to any benefit from the fund, brought actions to recover from the Board the deductions which had been made from their salaries under the scheme as money had and received by the Board to their use:—Held, that, as the contract between the plaintiffs and the Board contained no provision that the Board should pay the expenses of the management of the scheme out of the ratepayers' money, such payment, even if ultra vires, did not make the contract illegal; and secondly, that, even assuming that the Board were administering the fund as a trust without statutory powers, as the money had been voluntarily contributed by the plaintiffs to a fund to which others had subscribed on the basis of mutual subscription, and had been applied to the purpose for which they contributed it, and as the plaintiffs had, as long as they remained in the employment of the Board, a right to a grant from the fund according to the provisions of the scheme, they were not entitled to recover the money back on the ground that there had been a total failure of consideration. Phillips v. London School Board, 67 L. J. Q.B. 874; [1898] 2 Q.B. 447; 79 L. T. 50; 46 W. R. 658—C.A. Affirming, 61 J. P. 758—D.

4. ATTENDANCE OF CHILDREN.

Refusal to Admit Child.]—Under the by-laws of the S. School Board, the parent of every child not less than five or more than thirteen years of age shall cause such child to attend school unless there shall be a reasonable excuse for non-attendance. The child of the appellant was ten years of age, and had up to May, 1898, attended at St. G. School, which was a voluntary and public elementary school, but had then been refused admission. The Education Department had confirmed the action of the managers in refusing admission. Since then the appellant had and still declined to send the child to any other school than St. G. School. He had had notice of the managers' refusal, and was informed by the S. School Board that he must send his child to another school, and the board had mentioned to him certain schools within two miles that would receive the child. On several occasions the appellant sent the child, between May and September, to the doors of St. G. School, but it was always refused admission:—Held, that the offering did not constitute an attendance, and that no reasonable excuse for the non-attendance had been proved. Jones v. Rowland, 80 L. T. 630; 63 J. P. 454; 19 Cox C.C. 315—D.

Absence from School—Attendance at Church.—"Day exclusively set apart for religious observance"—Ascension Day.—Ascension Day is a "day exclusively set apart for religious VOL. II.

observance" by the Church of England within the meaning of sections 7 and 7' of the Elementary Education Act, 1870; and a member of that Church who desires to send his child to church on that day, and withdraws it from school for the purpose, is entitled to the protection of those sections from prosecution under a by-law which directs him to cause his child to attend school. Held, also, that these facts constituted a "reasonable excuse" under that by-law for withdrawing the child from school in order to attend one service. Bell v. Graham; Marshall v. Graham, 76 L. J. K.B. 690; [1907] 2 K.B. 112; 97 L. T. 52; 5 L. G. R. 738; 71 J. P. 270; 23 T. L. R. 435—D.

Quare, whether they would constitute a "reasonable excuse" for withdrawal from school all day. Id.

5. EMPLOYMENT OF CHILDREN.

Employment of Child by Parent "for purposes of gain."—A father who keeps his child at home for domestic purposes in order to enable his wife to earn money by going out to work does not employ the child "for the purposes of gain" within the meaning of section 47 of the Elementary Education Act, 1876, and cannot therefore be convicted under section 6. Mather v. Lawrence, 68 L. J. Q.B. 714; [1899] 1 Q.B. 1000; 80 L. T. 600; 47 W. R. 559; 63 J. P. 455; 19 Cox C.C. 300—D.

Taking Child into Employment.]—A father whose child at the age of thirteen was subject to fits, acting on medical advice, allowed such child to come into his workshop when he pleased and do such work as he was minded and able to do. He never compelled the child to work or go into the workshop:—Held, that the father had not taken the child into his employment within section 47 of the Elementary Education Act, 1876. Rex v. Austin; Leah, Ex parte, 96 L. T. 29; 71 J. P. 29; 5 L. G. R. 126—D.

6. EDUCATION RATE.

Rate Collector Employed by Corporation of London—Collection of Education Rate—Transfer of Officers—Compensation for Loss of Fees.]—A rate collector in the employment of the Corporation of the City of London is not entitled to compensation under the Second Schedule, provision 21 of the Education Act, 1902, by reason of loss of poundage incurred through the education rate ceasing to be collected by the Corporation:—So held by LORD ALVERSTONE, C.J., and RIDLEY, J.; DARLING, J., dissenting. Rex v. London County Council; Norris, Ex parte, 75 L. J. K.B. 241; [1906] 1 K.B. 346; 94 L. T. 218; 54 W. R. 439; 70 J. P. 160; 4 L. G. R. 305; 22 T. L. R. 235—D. 7. SUBSCRIBER TO SCHOOL.

Management Vested in Subscribers—Bona fide Subscriber.]—Where the management of a school and the right to appoint the teachers were, under a deed, vested in the subscribers to the school to the amount of 20s. and upwards:—Held, that certain persons, on behalf of whom subscriptions were sent to the school treasurer on the day of the election of headmaster, with a view to their voting at such election, and whose subscriptions were returned by him to the persons sending the same, were not bona fide subscribers with a right to vote at such election. It appears to be a right inherent in such a body of subscribers to refuse to admit a new subscriber for good cause. Nott v. Williams, 48 W. R. 316—Byrne, J.

8. SCHOOL BOARD CONTRACTS.

Contract—Not under Seal—Executory Contract.]—The plaintiff prepared, at the request of the defendant board, plans for an enlargement of their school, and did certain other work in connection therewith. There was no express contract to pay for such services, the only real contract between the parties being expressed in a resolution by the defendants to pay the plaintiff a percentage on the cost of construction of the buildings to be erected. The defendants having thereafter refused to carry out the work on the plaintiff's plans, the plaintiff sued them for breach of contract:—Held, that, the contract not being under seal, the plaintiff was not entitled to recover. Start v. West Mersea School Board, 63 J. P. 440—Wills, J.

Member Concerned in Contract with Board—Sale of Sand to Contractor—Offence.]—The respondent, a member of a school board, sold a quantity of sand and gravel to a contractor, who was under a contract with the board to build certain schools. The respondent knew that the sand and gravel were to be used in the building of the schools:—Held, that the respondent had committed an offence under section 34 of the Elementary Education Act, 1870, as having been concerned in work done under the authority of the school board. Barnacle v. Clark, 69 L. J. Q.B. 15; [1900] 1 Q.B. 279; 81 L. T. 484; 48 W. R. 336; 64 J. P. 87—D.

9. LAND COMPULSORILY TAKEN FOR.

Compensation.]—In assessing the compensation to be paid to the owner of land compulsorily purchased for the erection of a board school, the noise made by children outside a board school may be taken into consideration as injuriously affecting his adjoining land. Reg. v. Pearce; London School Board, ex parte, 67 L. J. Q.B. 842; 78 L. T. 681—D.

10. TRANSFER OF PART OF PARISH.

Claim by School Board for Compensation for Additions to School—Question for Adjustment by Arbitration.]—By an order of the Local Government Board a part of the parish of L., in which were certain schools vested in the L. School Board, was transferred to the parish of Y., and such schools became vested in the Y. School Board. All contracts, liabilities, and engagements attaching to or incurred by the L. School Board in respect of such schools were declared by the order to vest in the Y. School Board, and all questions arising between the two School Boards as to these schools, or the interests of the two School Boards, it was further declared should be dealt with in an adjustment order under section 68 of the Local Government Act, 1894. The L. School Board claimed compensation for outlay on the schools in increasing their accommodation:—Held, that this was a matter proper to be dealt with by arbitration under the section mentioned. Llanwornno School Board and Ystradgofdwg School Board, In re, 62 J. P. 644—D.

11. ENDOWED SCHOOL.

Scheme—Dismissal of Assistant Master by Head Master without Notice—Right of Action against Governors.]—The plaintiff was an assistant master in a school which came within the provisions of the Endowed Schools Act, 1868 and 1869, and was regulated by a scheme made by the Charity Commissioners under the latter Act. Rule 30 of the scheme empowered the governors to dismiss at pleasure the head master without assigning cause, after giving six calendar months' written notice. Rule 37 defined the powers of the governors as to prescribing subjects of instruction, fixing the number of assistant masters to be employed, and fixing each year the amount to be paid out of the income of the foundation for the purpose of maintaining assistant masters and school plant. Rule 40 provided that "The head master shall have the sole power of appointing, and may at pleasure dismiss all assistant masters in the school, and shall determine, subject to the approval of the governors, in what proportions the sum fixed by the governors for the maintenance of assistant masters and school plant and apparatus shall be divided among the various persons and objects for which it is fixed in the aggregate. The governors shall pay the same accordingly, either through the hands of the head master or directly, as they think best." The plaintiff having been dismissed by the head master without notice, sued the defendants as the governors of the school for wrongful dismissal:—Held, that there was no contract between the plaintiff and the defendants, and that they were not responsible for his dismissal by the head master, whether such dismissal was wrongful or not. Wright v. Zetland (Marquis), 23 T. L. R. 709—Lawrance, J. Affirmed, 77 L. J. K.B. 152; [1908] 1 K.B. 63; 97 L. T. 867; 24 T. L. R. 48—C.A.

Effect.]—A scheme for the government of an endowed school framed by the Commissioners under the Endowed Schools Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 56), abrogates all pre-existing statutes except so far as they may be expressly preserved by such scheme. *Chester (Dean) v. 2. APPEAL.

To the House of Lords from Scotland—Competency—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.]—By section 14 (c) of the second schedule to the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, which applies to Scotland, "Any application to the sheriff as arbitrator shall be heard, tried, and determined summarily in the manner provided by the fifty-second section of the Sheriff Courts (Scotland) Act, 1876, save only that parties may be represented by any person authorized in writing to appear for them, and subject to the declaration that it shall be competent to either party, within the time and in accordance with the conditions prescribed by act of sederunt, to require the sheriff to state a case on any question of law determined by him, and his decision thereon in such case may be submitted to either Division of the Court of Session, who may hear and determine the same finally, and remit to the sheriff with instruction as to the judgment to be pronounced":—Held, that in cases within this enactment no appeal lies to the House of Lords from a decision of the Court of Session. Osborne v. Barclay, Curle & Co., [1901] A.C. 269; 85 L. T. 286—H.L. (Sc.)

3. BANKRUPTCY.

Trust for Creditors—Right in Security—Preference—Pledge—Private Manager.]—By trust deed executed July, 1895, S., a farmer, conveyed his whole estate to M., "as trustee and in trust and as my commissioner (but hereinafter called trustee) for the uses, ends, and purposes after specified," "with full power to manage the farm until expiry or renunciation of the lease, to sell the stock, &c., to sue and defend actions, pay rent and wages, and out of the remainder pay the creditors" of S.; "or if the remainder was inadequate, to call for claims and divide the sums." S. was declared bankrupt July 10, 1896. M. claimed a preferential right to be paid a balance due to him in respect of his actings in the management of the farm. He alleged that at the date of the bankruptcy he held the whole estate in security and for payment of his advances, expenses, and remuneration as trustee, and claimed full payment of his debt. And in virtue of his having paid for the seed and labour of sowing and caring for the crop of 1896, he specially claimed to be preferred to the whole sum arising from the realisation of the crops, or such part as would recoup him for his expenses, advances, and remuneration. The trustee rejected M.'s claim so far as it included law expenses after the date of the bankruptcy and other small sums, and under deduction of these sums the trustee admitted M.'s claim to be an ordinary debt, rejecting the debt altogether as a preferable one:—Held, that M. had no right to a preferable claim, on the ground that he had never held the bankrupt's estate in security, and that the payments made for seed and labour did not entitle him to a preferable ranking. Mess v. Hay, [1899] A.C. 233—H.L. (Sc.)

4. BY-LAW.

Ultra Vires—Ice-cream Vendor's Licence—Lawful Day.]—By section 80 of the Edinburgh Corporation Act, 1900, as amended by the Edinburgh Corporation Order Confirmation Act, 1901, any person selling ice-cream (except in a duly licensed hotel) without a licence from the magistrates "who are hereby empowered to grant the same" for the house, building, or premises where such ice-cream is kept for sale or sold shall be liable to a penalty: Provided that such licence shall run from the date of issue until May 15 next ensuing, and upon renewal from the date of expiry of the licence so renewed to May 15 succeeding such expiry, "unless the same shall be sooner forfeited, revoked, or suspended," and that "every person licensed . . . to sell ice-cream, under the provisions of this Act who shall . . . sell ice-cream, except during the hours of" 8 A.M. and 11 P.M. "on any lawful day, or at such extended hour at night as the magistrates may by special regulation in particular cases and for reasons assigned permit," shall be liable in a penalty. No form of licence was annexed to the statute. The magistrates proposed to issue the following licence: "(1.) That the said licensee shall not keep open said premises, or sell or permit the sale of ice-cream therein, on Sunday or on any other day set apart for public worship by lawful authority. (2.) That the said licensee shall not keep open said premises or sell or permit the sale of ice-cream therein before 8 o'clock in the morning or after 11 o'clock at night. (3.) That the said magistrates, or any of them, may at any time suspend or revoke this licence":—Held, that the conditions of the licence were ultra vires. Rossi v. Edinburgh Corporation, [1905] A.C. 21; 91 L. T. 668—H.L. (Sc.)

5. DIVORCE.

Wife's Costs.]—Where the wife is successful in her defence to an action of divorce the rule of the law of Scotland is to give the wife her costs as between agent and client. Grant v. Grant, [1905] A.C. 466—H.L. (Sc.)

6. ENTAIL.

Restriction—Provision for Widow—Deduction from Free Rental.]—By section 1 of the Entail

Provisions Act, 1824, it was provided that the annuity to the widow of the deceased heir of entail "shall not exceed one-third part of the free yearly rent of the said lands and estates where the same shall be let, or of the free yearly value thereof where the same shall not be let, after deducting the public burdens, life-rent provisions, the yearly interest of debts and provisions, including the interest of provisions to children . . . and the yearly amount of other burdens of what nature soever affecting and burdening the said lands and estates, or the yearly rents or proceeds thereof, and diminishing the clear yearly rent or value thereof to such heir of entail in possession, all as the same may happen to be at the death of the grantor":—Held, that on the calculation of the widow's annuity the heir of entail in possession was not entitled to make deduction for upkeep of estate, buildings, and fences, or for management and superintendence of the estate, these outgoings not being, in the sense of the statute, burdens affecting either the estate or its rents. Galloway (Earl) v. Galloway (Dowager Countess), [1904] A.C. 50; 20 T. L. R. 58—H.L. (Sc.)

7. FEU CONTRACT.

Construction—Stipulation for Additional Rent for Ground "on which building shall be erected."—Land, which then consisted of a mansion-house and grounds, was let upon a contract by which a feu-duty (or rent) of 5*l.* an acre was reserved, and, 't being in the contemplation of the parties that the land might eventually come to be used as building land, a provision was inserted for an additional duty "for every square pole of the said piece of ground on which buildings shall be erected," with an exception in the case of additions to the mansion-house, or the building of a lodge. Other buildings were afterwards erected on the land:—Held, that the additional duty was only payable for land on which buildings were actually erected, and not for land accessory to such buildings, though it might be incapable of separate occupation. McFarlane v. Stirling-Maxwell, 87 L. T. 554—H.L. (Sc.)

8. FISHERY.

Mussel Fishings—Crown Rights.—Mussel scalps on the foreshore or the estuary of a navigable river form part of the patrimonial property of the Crown, which it can convey or let in lease to a subject. Parker v. Lord Advocate, [1904] A.C. 364; 20 T. L. R. 547—H.L. (Sc.)

Salmon Fishery Acts—Illegal Methods—Fixed Engines—Toot and Haul Net—Prescription—Hang Nets—Illegal Methods.—The toot and haul net used in the estuary of the Tay is fastened by a rope at one end to the shore. The net is then placed on a boat or coble; and the boat with its net is pulled out by means of an overhaul rope to an anchor in the stream; the boatman on reaching the anchor attaches the net at about twenty yards from its end to a floating rope fastened to the anchor; the end of the net is then turned inward toward the shore forming a bend or hook, and the men on shore haul the net taut. Another rope attached to the boat keeps the net upright. The net is retained in this upright position until a fish strikes it, when the outer end is freed and hauled in by fishermen on shore so as to encircle the fish:—Held, that this mode of fishing for salmon was an illegal method within the meaning of the Salmon Fishery Acts. The drift or hang nets used in the river Tay are from 80 to 220 yards long and 12 to 19 feet in depth, and are shot into the river about an hour before the turn of the tide both at high and low water, when the current is least. They are run out of a boat over the stern, in a straight line across the river, and followed with the current by a man in a boat, who, when he sees or feels the net struck by a fish, rows to the spot and captures the fish entangled in the net, or, if the fish is getting away, he secures it with a gaff. The net is not fixed to any post on the shore:—Held, that fishing in the tidal portions of the river Tay with drift or hang nets was an illegal method of fishing for salmon within the meaning of the Salmon Fishery Acts. Weidernburn v. Atholl (Duke), [1900] A.C. 403—H.L. (Sc.). And see FISHERY.

9. HERITAGE.

Right in Security—Messenger-at-Arms.—By the Heritable Securities (Scotland) Act, 1894, s. 8, any creditor who has exposed for sale under his security the lands held in security . . . may apply to the sheriff for decree in the terms of Schedule D thereto annexed, and the sheriff may, "after service on the proprietor and on the other creditors, if any, and after such intimation and inquiry as he may think fit, grant such application and issue decree in the said terms. On such decree being pronounced and an extract thereof in which said lands shall be described at length or by reference recorded in the appropriate register of sasine, the right of redemption reserved to the debtor shall be extinguished, and the creditor shall have right to the lands disposed in security in the same manner and to the same effect as if the disposition in security had been an irredeemable disposition as from the date of such decree." By section 10 "no purchaser from the creditor or other successor in title in the lands shall be under any duty to inquire into the regularity of the proceedings under which such creditor has acquired right to the lands held under his security by virtue of the provisions contained herein, or be affected by any irregularity therein, without prejudice to any competent claim of damages against such creditor." In 1895 certain creditors presented a petition under section 8 of the above Act. The appellant, the proprietor of the lands, did not appear. The sheriff granted decree. Thereafter the creditors sold the lands and granted dispositions in favour of the purchasers. In 1901 the original proprietor brought an action against the creditors and purchasers for reduction of the citation and execution of service upon him of the petition in the sheriff Court, alleging that the service had been executed by a messenger-at-arms, who was not an officer of the sheriff Court; and he pleaded that such service, with all that had followed thereon, including the disposition to the purchasers, was null and ineffectual:—Held, that, assuming the service to be as stated, the error was an "irregularity in the proceedings" within the meaning of section 10 of the Heritable Securities (Scotland) Act, 1894, and consequently that the right of the purchasers was not affected thereby. Sutherland v. Thomson, [1906] A.C. 51—H.L. (Sc.)

10. LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Landlord and Tenant—Condition to take over Sheep at Expiration of Lease—Forfeiture of Lease.]—A tenant in a letter offering to take a lease of a farm for ten years from 1897 stipulated that at his “awaygoing at the expiration of the lease” the landlord should take over the sheep at a valuation. The lease contained a clause that the lease should be forfeited for non-payment of rent, and, the tenant having failed to pay five half-years’ rent, the landlord put an end to the lease in February, 1902, and refused to take over the sheep:—Held, that “awaygoing” must be taken to mean the legal expiration of the lease, and that the landlord on the tenant’s default was not bound to take over the sheep. Breadalbane (Marquess) v. Stewart, [1904] A.C. 217—H.L. (Sc.)

11. LICENSING.

Licensing Acts—Refusal to Renew Certificate—Evidence on which Magistrates Entitled to Act—Absolute Discretion of Magistrates.]—The pursuer, a widow, by her condescence averred that she was possessed of a house which had been licensed for fifty years; that in 1904 she applied to the Licensing Court under the Licensing (Scotland) Act, 1903, for renewal of her licence, that no complaint of the management or sanitary condition of the premises was ever made, nor any notice of objection given at any time prior to April, 1904; but at the licensing Court on that date an inspector of police objected to the renewal on the ground that the premises were insanitary and the district congested; that he was not put on oath, nor was any evidence given as to either objection; that the pursuer through her agent offered to carry out any recommendation in regard to sanitary arrangements of the premises, but the Court thereupon, without calling any evidence, refused to renew the certificate on the ground that the premises were insanitary and the district congested. She further averred that the licensing authority had prejudiced the question by having come to a resolution previous to the sitting of the Court to reduce the number of licensed premises; and that an appeal to the licensing Court of appeal was overruled by the same preconceived determination, and that no evidence was heard by the said Court. She brought her action against the licensing authorities and town clerk of the burgh and the members of the licensing appeal Court for non-performance of their duty:—Held, that the discretion of the licensing authority was absolute when exercised within the limits of its statutory authority, and that the pursuer’s averments set out no case of ignorance, prejudice or bias, or refusal to give the hearing prescribed by the Act of 1903; secondly, that the licensing Court of appeal could give its decision without the appearance of any objector or evidence. Lundie v. Falkirk Magistrates (18 R. 60) affirmed. Boyle v. Wilson, [1907] A.C. 45; 95 L. T. 763; 23 T. L. R. 124—H.L. (Sc.)

12. MARRIAGE CONTRACT.

Effect of Divorce on Children’s Provisions—Income Undisposed of.]—By antenuptial contract of marriage the intended wife conveyed a sum of about 19,000*l.* to trustees, directing them to pay the annual income to her during her life, and after her death, in the event of her being survived by her husband, to pay the same to him during all the days of his life and survivorship, and on the death of the said spouses to pay or deliver the fee or capital of the said means and estate to the child or children of the marriage. The marriage was dissolved by decree of divorce obtained by the wife against the husband on the ground of desertion. Thereafter the wife died, survived by her husband and a daughter. The daughter and her marriage-contract trustees claimed that in consequence of the wife’s death and the husband being divorced she (the daughter) and her trustees became entitled to the funds in the hands of her mother’s marriage trustees:—Held, first, that the divorce of the father was not equivalent to his death in a question as to the vesting of the daughter’s provisions; secondly, that during her father’s life nothing fell to the daughter; and thirdly, that the income which but for the divorce would have been paid to the father fell into the executory estate of the wife. Dawson v. Smart, [1903] A.C. 457; 89 L. T. 943—H.L. (Sc.)

Wife’s Acquirenda—Accumulations of Income—Legitim.]—By antenuptial marriage contract executed in 1848 the wife bound herself to convey to trustees the whole funds and estate real and personal which she might hereafter “conquest and acquire by purchase succession or otherwise.” The trustees were directed to pay the income of the trust estate to the wife during her life for her own separate benefit and use exclusive of the jus mariti, and by a clause in the contract the provisions in favour of children were to bar any claim they might make under the head of legitim:—Held, that the clause of conquest did not extend to estate which at the dissolution of the marriage by the death of the husband consisted of or was purchased with accumulations of the wife’s separate income; secondly, that the only child of the marriage was not entitled to legitim out of his mother’s estate. Mackenzie v. Allardie, [1905] A.C. 285—H.L. (Sc.)

13. MINES.

Mines — Minerals — Coal Below Low-water Mark—Barony Title.]—The doctrine of possession by prescriptive working of minerals applicable to the foreshore ex adverso of a barony, granted with parts and pertinents, cannot be extended to a barony granted with power to work minerals infra fluxum maris, because these words shew that the grant is limited to the minerals under the foreshore only. Nor can such prescriptive use be extended to a third barony where a barony with a bounding charter lies between. Quære, whether the doctrine can be extended to cover minerals running from the foreshore under the sea-bed. Lord Advocate v. Wemyss, [1900] A.C. 48—H.L. (Sc.)

Adoption—Minor—Lease of Coal.—The right of a proprietor of estates adjoining the sea to work the coal below low-water mark was challenged by the Crown during the proprietor's minority. The estates to which the minor had succeeded consisted in part of entailed and in part of unentailed lands. The administration of the unentailed lands was vested in the testamentary trustees of the minor's father, who were also curators of the minor. These trustees, without the concurrence of the minor, entered into a transaction with the Crown whereby they on their part accepted a lease of the whole coal below low-water mark ex adverso of both the entailed and unentailed lands, and the Crown agreed not to claim damages in respect of coal which had been worked in the past. After the proprietor came of age, he accepted an assignment of the lease, and subsequently applied for and obtained from the Crown a reduction of the royalty payable under the lease, and a modification of the whole mode of working the coal. When the proprietor so acted in regard to the lease, he was unaware that he had a claim to some of the coal below low-water mark. In an action brought by the proprietor fourteen years after he had reached majority, concluding, inter alia, for a declarator that he was not bound by the lease,—Held, that the act of the proprietor after he came of age barred him from challenging the lease. Ib.

14. POOR LAW.

Settlement by Residence—Maintenance without Recourse to Common Begging or Receipt of or Application for Parochial Relief—Support by Charitable Institution—Bodily and Mental Unfitness for Self-maintenance.—Under section 1 of the Poor Law (Scotland) Act, 1898, which enacts that "no person shall be held to have acquired a settlement in any parish in Scotland by residence therein unless such person shall . . . have resided for three years continuously in such parish and shall have maintained himself without having recourse to common begging . . . and without having received or applied for parochial relief,"—Held, that a person who had for three years continuously resided in a charitable institution in the appellants' parish, and during that period had not had recourse to common begging and did not apply for parochial relief, had acquired a residential settlement, and that the fact that during the whole time of her residence she suffered from mental weakness and chronic physical disease, which made her incapable of maintaining herself, did not take her out of the enactment. Kirkintilloch Parish Council v. Eastwood Parish Council (5 F. 274) approved. Kilmacolm Parish Council v. Glasgow Parish Council, [1906] A.C. 344; 94 L. T. 826; 22 T. L. R. 602—H.L. (Sc.)

Capacity of Deserted Wife to Acquire a Settlement.—By section 1 of the Poor Law Settlement Act, 1898, "No person shall be held to have acquired a settlement in any parish in Scotland by residence therein, unless such person shall . . . have resided for three years continuously in such parish and shall have maintained himself . . . and without having received or applied for parochial relief. . . ."—Held, that a married woman having a husband living from whom she has derived a settlement cannot, although deserted by him, acquire a settlement different from that of her husband. Gray v. Fowlie (9 D. 811) affirmed. Rutherglen Parish Council v. Glasgow Parish Council, [1902] A.C. 360; 86 L. T. 607; 51 W. R. 65—H.L. (Sc.).

15. PRESCRIPTION.

Public Right to User of Land—Claim by Immemorial User.—According to the practice of the Scottish Courts, at least forty years' user of land by the public must be proved in order to establish a claim of right by immemorial user; and the evidence required to establish such a right must be of the same character and cogency as would be required in a case of prescription—that is, the right must be shewn to have been enjoyed nec vi, nec clam, nec precario. Montgomerie v. Wallace-James (No. 1), 73 L. J. P.C. 25; [1904] A.C. 73; 90 L. T. 1—H.L. (Sc.)

16. PROCURATOR FISCAL.

Remuneration of—Preliminary Enquiries into Non-prosecuted Cases.—In an action for debt, the debt must be established either by contract or at common law or by statute. Section 4 of the County General Assessment Act, 1868, authorised an assessment to be imposed called the "county general assessment"; and section 3 provided that "the following salaries, fees, outlays, and expenses, namely (sub-s. 2): The salaries or fees and the necessary outlays of Procurators Fiscal in the Sheriff and Justice of Peace Courts . . . , in so far as such salaries, fees, and outlays are at present in use to be paid by each county." Sub-section 3: "The expenses incurred in searching for, apprehending, subsisting, prosecuting, or punishing criminals:—in so far as any such salaries, fees, outlays, and expenses are not by law or usage payable or provided from other funds than those raised by the Commissioners of Supply, may be defrayed by the said Commissioners out of the county general assessment." Under the Rogue Money Act of 1724 certain fees had been paid to the Procurators Fiscal for criminal prosecutions. Subsequently these charges which lay on the county were undertaken by the Treasury, and eventually a salary in lieu of fees was paid to the Procurators Fiscal. The Procurator Fiscal of the lower ward of Lanark alleged that his salary only included cases which were reported or went to trial, and made a claim for remuneration for those cases in which he made enquiry, but which went no further. Since 1851 the county council had refused to pay this claim. And from 1851 to 1868, when the County General Assessment Act came into force, no attempt had been made by the then Procurator Fiscal to compel the county to pay, although accounts by the Procurator Fiscal were furnished at different periods:—Held, that it could not be said that in the county of Lanark "it was in use" to pay these fees at the date of the Act of 1868, and therefore the county was not liable. Lanark County Council v. Hart, [1904] A.C. 235—H.L. (Sc.)

17. PUBLIC HEALTH.

Assessment—Special Drainage District—Expenses of Forming Special District.]—By section 133 of the Public Health (Scotland) Act, 1897: "In any burgh or where any special drainage district has been formed under this Act . . . the expense incurred by the local authority for sewerage or drainage within the same or for the purposes thereof and the sums necessary for payment of any money borrowed therefor either before or after the passing of this Act, together with the interest thereof, shall be paid out of a special sewer assessment which the local authority shall raise and levy on and within such . . . special district".—Held, that where a special drainage district has been formed in a county the local authority is entitled to levy an assessment within the special district to meet expenses, including legal expenses necessarily and properly incurred in connection with, but prior to, the formation of the district. Inverarity v. Forfarshire County Council, [1906] A.C. 354; 70 J. P. 509—H.L. (Sc.)

18. SERVITUDE.

Construction—Bond to Secure Amenity—Meaning of the Word "unseemly" in a Bond of Servitude.]—The pursuers, proprietors of a feu, raised an action against the defenders, the proprietors of an adjoining feu held of the same superior, to enforce building restrictions. These restrictions were contained in a bond of servitude, by which the defenders bound themselves and their successors not to erect on any part of an adjoining piece of ground "any building of an unseemly description." The pursuers alleged that the defenders were about to allow the erection of unseemly buildings within the meaning of the bond of servitude:—Held, that a condition against the erection of buildings of "an unseemly description" was too vague and indefinite to be valid as a permanent restraint on the use of property. Murray v. Dunn, [1907] A.C. 283; 97 L. T. 112—H.L. (Sc.)

19. SHOPS.

By-law—Ultra Vires—Power of Magistrate to Close Shops at 10 p.m.]—By section 380 of the Burgh Police (Scotland Act), 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 55), a penalty is imposed on the occupier of any building for the sale or consumption of provisions or refreshments who opens his premises for business before five o'clock in the morning or keeps them open after midnight. By section 82, sub-section 1 of the Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1903, any building used as an ice-cream shop must be registered. By section 82, sub-section 2, town councils of burghs in Scotland may make by-laws (subject to confirmation of the sheriff and the Secretary for Scotland: section 318 of the Act of 1892) in regard to the hours of opening and closing of premises registered as ice-cream shops, "the hours for business not being more restricted than fifteen hours daily." The defenders, the town council of a burgh, made a by-law by which it was illegal for such premises to be kept open except between seven o'clock in the morning and ten o'clock at night:—Held, that the by-law was not ultra vires or unreasonable. De Prato v. Partick (Provost), [1907] A.C. 153; 96 L. T. 398—H.L. (Sc.)

20. STREETS.

Building Regulations—Meaning of "Width" in Respect to Existing Streets.]—Section 9 of the Glasgow Building Regulations Act, 1900, Part II., which has a general heading "Streets," provides for the formation by the defenders of a "register of public streets," in which are to be entered various particulars as regards all public streets then in existence, and, inter alia, the "point of commencement and termination" and the "width," and enjoins the marking of such streets, and the area thereof, on an Ordnance Survey map:—Held, that the "width" as used in the Act meant in the case of existing public streets the actual width; and secondly, that the action of the pursuers raised while the register was in preparation and before the statutory period was exhausted was competent, but premature. Caledonian Railway v. Glasgow Corporation, [1907] A.C. 160—H.L. (Sc.)

Fixing Width of Existing Street.]—The Glasgow Building Regulations Act, 1900, makes provision for a register of public streets in Glasgow, and by section 20 imposes restrictions upon the erection of any building upon ground adjoining any street, and for the purpose enacts that the "width" of any public street shall be the "width" set forth in the register where such width is entered therein. And the width of any public street of which the dimensions are not set forth in the register . . . shall be fixed by the master of works:—Held, that the master of works was bound to fix as the width of a public street the width of the street actually existing. Nisbet v. Hamilton, [1907] A.C. 153—H.L. (Sc.)

21. SUCCESSION.

Will—Provision for Widow—Partial Intestacy—Terce, Jus Relictæ, and Legitim.]—A testator by his will made a provision for his wife declaring it to be in full of all claims by her of terce and jus relictæ or otherwise. Through the death of certain devisees before vesting took place, the residue fell into intestacy:—Held, that the declaration was to be construed as excluding the widow's claim in so far only as conflicting with the will, and, an event happening which the testator never contemplated, the widow was entitled both to her provision and to terce and jus relictæ out of such heritables and movables as had fallen into intestacy. Nat Smith v. Boyes, [1899] A.C. 495—H.L. (Sc.)

Vesting—Postponed Period of Distribution—Conditional Institution.]—A testator directed his trustees to allow his widow the life-rent use of his house and such allowance as they thought necessary, and "on the dissolution and winding up of the firm of B. & Co." (of which he was a partner), "in the event of the predecease of my said wife, and if she then survives, on her death, to realise my whole means and estate and to divide the same into four equal shares, and pay one share to each of my children," A, B, C, and D, "or to their respective heirs." The widow survived the testator, and the firm had not been wound up. C and D survived the testator, but were dead:—Held, that the interests of all the children were not in suspense, but had vested a morte testatoris. Bowman v. Bowman, [1899] A.C. 518—H.L. (Sc.)

Will—Residue of Estate to Heir Entitled to Succeed to Entail—Lands Disentailed—Intestacy.—The testator directed his trustees to entail his Kintail estate upon a series of heirs specified in a tailzied destination clause, and gave certain beneficial interests in the residue of his estate "to the heir for the time being entitled to succeed under the said deed of entail" upon his attaining the age of twenty-four. On his attaining twenty-one the institute heir of entail took advantage of the Entail Amendment (Scotland) Act of 1848, s. 27, and before any deed of entail had been executed obtained from the Court an order to have the estate of Kintail conveyed to him in fee simple, and he evacuated the tailzied destination, thus destroying the entail; he afterwards died unmarried before attaining the age of twenty-four. The next-of-kin claimed that, in the circumstances of the entail, the residue had fallen into intestacy:—Held, that the residue did not fall into intestacy, as the will declared that the beneficial interest therein was to go to the heir for the time being under the tailzied destination, and it was not a condition of such heir succeeding to the said interest that he should be in the position of heir of entail of Kintail under a deed of entail. Wesselenyi v. Jamieson, [1907] A.C. 440—H.L. (Sc.)

22. SUPERIOR AND VASSAL.

Casualty or Composition—Singular Successor—Annual Value of Minerals.—The measure of the right of a superior to a casualty or composition on the entry of a singular successor is the year's rent for which the land is let for the time, and this rent includes mineral rents or royalties where coal or other minerals are being worked; and it makes no difference that the minerals are approaching exhaustion. Home (Earl) v. Belhaven (Lord), [1903] A.C. 327—H.L. (Sc.).

23. TRAMWAY.

Lease—Landlord's Rates and Taxes—Covenant by Tenant to Keep Free from all Expenses whatever.—By section 6 of the Valuation of Lands (Scotland) Act, 1854, it is enacted that a tenant whose name has been entered in the valuation roll as proprietor "shall be entitled to relief from the actual proprietor thereof, and to deduction from the rent payable by him to such actual proprietor of such proportion of all assessments laid on upon the valuations of such lands and heritages made under this Act, and payable by such lessee as proprietor in the sense of this Act, as shall correspond to the rent payable by such lessee to such actual proprietor as compared with the amount of such valuation." The corporation of Glasgow agreed to borrow money and to construct certain tramways in Glasgow and lease the undertaking to the Glasgow Tramway Co. for twenty-three years. The company agreed to make various payments to the corporation, and then agreed as follows: "And the company shall also pay to the corporation the expenses of borrowing, management, &c., and this provision shall be so construed as to keep the corporation free from all expenses whatever in connection with the said tramways." The lease exceeding twenty-one years, the company, under the Valuation of Lands (Scotland) Act, 1854, s. 6, became primarily liable to pay and did pay during the whole term of the lease, "owner's assessments, rates, and taxes," amounting in the aggregate to over 14,000*l*. During the currency of the lease the company intimated to the corporation that they had a claim in this respect, but did not make any deduction from the rent when paid. The company contended that the corporation ought to reimburse them these outgoings, or such other sum as might be ascertained to be the amount of owner's assessments, rates, and taxes paid by the company during the lease:—Held, that the assessments, rates, and taxes, whether imperial or local, levied on the owner in respect of a tramway or other erection in solo, were an expense connected with the tramway or erection, and that the company were bound by their lease to relieve the corporation from these expenses, and were not entitled to claim reimbursement. Glasgow Corporation v. Glasgow Tramway and Omnibus Co., [1898] A.C. 631—H.L. (Sc.)

24. TRUST.

Property held in Trust for Religious Body—Power to Unite with other Religious Body—Variation of Fundamental Tenets—Position of Dissident Minority—Right to Trust Fund.—Where property is held in trust for a religious body holding certain definite tenets, it is not lawful for a majority of such body, by agreeing to unite with another religious body differing from them on some essential points, to alienate the trust property from its original destination for the use of such united body, in the absence of an express power to modify their original tenets; but a dissident minority, who disapprove of the union, and hold to the original tenets of the founders of the body, are entitled to retain the trust property. Free Church of Scotland v. Overtoun (Lord), [1904] A.C. 515; 91 L. T. 394—H.L. (Sc.)

The position is not affected by the fact that the two bodies proposing to unite agree to regard certain points upon which they differ as open questions. Ib.

Judgment of the Court below reversed, LORD MACNAGHTEN and LORD LINDLEY dissenting on the question of whether there was in the particular case a power to modify the original tenets of the founders. Ib.

Will — Denuding — Vesting.—A testator directed that the income of his property (consisting of movable and real estate) be divided between his children; that in the event of any child dying leaving issue, his or her share of income should be paid to the issue; and if a child left no issue, the deceased child's share should be divided among the survivors; and he finally directed that "on the death of all" his children his estate should "be winded up and converted into money" . . . and divided among the children of his sons and daughters per stirpes. The testator was survived by four children—Andrew, who died unmarried; George, who died in 1880, survived by the appellant (who became of age in 1898), Mary, and Jane. The two latter were still alive, and had families. The appellant claimed payment of one-third of the corpus of the testator's estate:—Held, that the appellant was not entitled to immediate payment on the ground that the third of the income of the corpus was not by any means the same as the income of a severed portion of the estate; and it did not follow that if the estate was now divided the remaining portion of the estate left undivided would represent in the future the present value. Macculloch v. Anderson, [1904] A.C. 55—H.L. (Sc.)

25. WATERWORKS.

"Heritor"—Church and Manse—Assessment of Wayleave.—The Scottish Act, 1663 (c. 21 or c. 31): "Wher competent manses are already built, ordaines the heritors of the parochie to releive the minister and his executors of all costs charges and expenses for repairing of the forsaid manses." A conduit of the Glasgow Waterworks Commissioners was carried underground through lands in a parish in virtue of grants of wayleave in perpetuity, obtained from the proprietors of the land:—Held, that the Commissioners were liable under the Act of 1663 to assessment in respect of their conduit as "heritors" of the parish for the repair of the manse. Glasgow Corporation v. M'Ewan, [1900] A.C. 91—H.L. (Sc.)

SEA.

Charter—Long User—Evidence.—The respondent claimed to be entitled, under a charter of 1621, to a quay and the foreshore on which it was built in 1848. The charter did not in terms grant the foreshore:—Held, on the evidence of long and notorious user, that the quay and foreshore were included in the charter. Att.-Gen. for Ireland v. Vandeleur, 76 L. J. P.C. 89; [1907] A.C. 369; 97 L. T. 221—H.L. (Ir.)

Foreshore—Crown Lease—Trespass—Rights of Public—Right to Preach and Hold Meetings.—The public have no right at common law to enter upon the foreshore except for the purpose of navigation or fishing. They are not entitled to cross the shore even for the purpose of bathing or amusement. Llandudno Urban Council v. Woods, 68 L. J. Ch. 623; [1899] 2 Ch. 705; 81 L. T. 170; 48 W. R. 43; 63 J. P. 775—Cozens-Hardy, J.

The sands of the seashore are not in the full sense of the word a highway. Ib.

A more extended right to use the foreshore may be gained by prescription or by custom either by individuals or by the temporary or permanent inhabitants of the place in which the foreshore is situate, but the existence of this more extensive right must be proved, and will not be presumed in the absence of proof. Blundell v. Catterall, (5 B. & Ald. 268) followed. Ib.

Foreshore—Private Owner—Right of Public to Bathe.—There is no right in the public by common law to go upon a foreshore which is private property for the purpose of bathing in the sea from it. 2. CONDITIONS TENDING TO DEFEAT ACTS.

Condition as to Residence—Provision "tending to induce" Non-execution of Powers—Invalidity—Sale by Tenant for Life to Trustees of Beneficial Interest—Compromise—Sanction of Court—Jurisdiction.]—Testator by his will gave his widow the use of his residence so long as she should desire to make it her permanent place of residence and should remain his widow, his estate to pay all rates and taxes and outgoings in respect thereof, and to keep the house and grounds in tenantable repair. Subject to this, the testator devised and bequeathed his residuary real and personal estate to his trustees upon trust to sell and to divide the proceeds equally among his children, and he settled his daughters' shares. The rental value of the house and grounds, together with the average amount of the rates and taxes which would be payable out of the estate, was estimated to exceed 350*l.* per annum. The widow had entered into an agreement by way of compromise with the trustees, under which, in consideration of the payment of an annuity of 275*l.* during widowhood, she agreed to give up her beneficial interest in the house, and applied to the Court to sanction the compromise.—Held, that there was nothing in the Settled Land Act, 1882, which precluded her from making any arrangement she chose for disposing of her beneficial interest in the house; and that the compromise being in the opinion of the Court beneficial to all parties interested, the Court would declare that it was within the powers of the trustees to enter into and would sanction it. Trenchard, In re; Trenchard v. Trenchard, 71 L. J. Ch. 178; [1902] 1 Ch. 378; 86 L. T. 196; 50 W. R. 266—Buckley, J.

Section 51 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, only renders void a condition as to residence so far as it tends to induce the tenant for life to abstain from exercising the power of sale given by the Act. It does not apply to the case of a tenant for life voluntarily ceasing to reside apart from a sale.* Ib.

— Devise of Freeholds upon trust to One for Life, Subject to—Trust upon Breach of Condition to Sell and Pay One-third Only of Income to Devisee for Life.]—S. D. by her will devised certain freeholds to trustees upon trust for T. S. for life, subject to a condition of residence; and in case T. S. should cease to reside there, then on trust to sell and invest the proceeds and pay one-third of the income thereof to T. S. for life, and the remaining two-thirds to other persons therein mentioned.—Held, that the provision was such as to induce the tenant for life to abstain from exercising his powers under the Settled Land Act, 1882, within the meaning of section 51, and was void. Dalrymple, In re; Bircham v. Springfield, 49 W. R. 627—Kekewich, J.

— Invalidity.]—A testatrix devised her residuary real and personal estate to her niece upon condition that she should reside in the testatrix's house during the lifetime of the testatrix's sister, and provide there a home for her said sister whenever she chose to avail herself of it; in the event of the niece not complying with the condition there was a gift over of the property to another niece upon the like condition. The sister of the testatrix was a lunatic not so found, and had been under restraint for twelve years:—Held, that the provision as to residence was a condition, and not a trust or reservation for the benefit of the lunatic, and the devisee being a person having the powers of a tenant for life within the meaning of section 58, subsection 1, clause (ii.) of the Settled Land Act, 1882, the condition in question was void under section 51 of the Act. Richardson, In re; Richardson v. Richardson, 73 L. J. Ch. 783; [1904] 2 Ch. 777; 91 L. T. 775; 53 W. R. 11—Joyce, J.

— Forfeiture Clause.]—A testatrix gave to A B the use of her house in Dublin during her life as a residence, with a proviso that in the event of A B ceasing to reside in it it should form part of her residuary estate. She also gave to A B the income of a sum of 10,000*l.* for life, or so long as she made the house her principal residence, with a like gift over in the event of her ceasing to make the house her principal residence:—Held, in the event of a sale of the house by A B under the Settled Land Acts, the gift over of the 10,000*l.* was void under the Settled Land Act, 1882, s. 51. Fitzgerald, In re; Brereton v. Day, [1902] 1 Ir. R. 162—M.R.

— Tenant for Life—Sale of Option—Validity—Whether Binding on Successors in Title.]—In 1887 a water company entered into a contract with a tenant for life, acting under the powers conferred by the Settled Land Acts, 1882 to 1890, for the purchase of a plot of settled land with the object of erecting thereon certain buildings for the purposes of their undertaking, and agreed to enter into a covenant not to build thereon or let it for building otherwise than for the purpose of their undertaking. They promoted a bill in Parliament for power to erect the proposed buildings, which was thrown out before the conveyance was executed, and thereupon requested the vendor to agree to the omission from the conveyance of the covenant restrictive of building on the plot sold. The vendor, however, insisted on a conveyance in accordance with the contract, but entered into an agreement with the company, to which the trustees of the settlement were parties, to the effect that if the company should not require the land for the purposes of their undertaking and should desire to erect other buildings thereon or to sell or let the same and thereof should give notice to the vendor, then the vendor would, on payment of 10*l.*, consent to the company building upon or selling the land without the restriction as to building contained in the conveyance, which agreement, although dated the day after the conveyance, was executed simultaneously and formed one transaction with it. The vendor died, and was succeeded by his son as tenant in tail of the settled land, who possessed lands adjoining the plot sold. The company then gave the notice and tendered to him 10*l.* in accordance with the agreement, but he declined to give his consent, alleging that he was not bound thereby:—Held, that the vendor as tenant for life of the settled land had no power under the Settled Land Acts, 1882 to 1890, to enter into such an agreement with the company, which therefore was not binding on his successors in title. Palmer v. Grand Junction Waterworks Co., 86 L. T. 352—Swinfen Eady, J.

— Inducement to Tenant for Life not to Exercise Powers—Separate Settlement—Different Settlers.—Section 51 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, which makes void any provision in a settlement tending to induce a tenant for life to abstain from exercising his powers under the Act, applies to a case where the inducement is contained in a separate instrument made by a person other than the settlor of the land. Smith, In re; *Grose-Smith v. 3. "SETTLEMENT."

Trusts for Settlor for Life—Remainder to Settlor subject to Rentcharge to Wife and Term for Securing Portions to Children.—By a settlement dated in 1862, and made upon the marriage of the plaintiff, certain lands and hereditaments were limited by the plaintiff to the use of himself for life, with remainder to the use that if his wife should survive him she might receive a jointure during her life, and to further uses limiting powers of distress and entry for the purpose of enforcing payment of such jointure, and subject and charged as aforesaid to the use of trustees for the term of one hundred years, to commence from the decease of the plaintiff, upon trusts for raising portions for the children of the marriage, and subject thereto and to the trusts of the term to the use of the plaintiff, his heirs and assigns for ever:—Held, that under or by virtue of the settlement the lands in question, or some estate or interest in them, stood "limited to or in trust for persons by way of succession" so as to create a "settlement" within the meaning of section 2, sub-section (1) of the Settled Land Act, 1882, and that under sub-section (5) the plaintiff was the tenant for life of those lands for the purposes of that Act. Mundy and Roper's Contract, In re (68 L. Will and Jointure Deeds—Sale by Tenant for Life—Trustees for Purposes of the Settled Land Acts.—Real estate was devised in strict settlement to legal uses to A for life, remainder to B for life, with remainder to his first and every other son in tail male; remainder to C for life, with remainder to his first and every other son in tail male; remainder to D. for life, with remainder to his first and every other son in tail male, with remainders over. A, C, and D. were dead. A, B, and D had all executed jointure deeds under powers contained in the will. The deed executed by A was in operation, and created an existing charge on the property. B, the tenant for life in possession, contracted to sell part of the property under the powers conferred on him by the Settled Land Act, 1882. There were existing trustees of the will for the purposes of the Act, but the purchaser took the objection that it was necessary that trustees for the purposes of the Act should be appointed of the will and the three jointure deeds, on the ground that the same formed together a compound settlement:—Held, that the will by itself constituted a settlement within section 2 of the Settled Land Act, 1882; that B could under section 20 convey the land to the purchaser discharged from the jointures; and that the trustees appointed for the purposes of the settlement could give a good discharge for the purchase-money. Meade's Settled Estates, In re ([1897] 1 Ir. Charge of Jointure and Portions by Will—Disentailing Deed—Resettlement—Restoration and Subsequent Extinguishment of Life Estate—Sale by Original Tenant for Life—Original Settlement—Compound Settlement—Trustee's Receipt.—In 1852 lands stood limited under a will to the use of the vendor for life, with remainder to his first and other sons successively in tail. In 1868, upon his marriage and in exercise of a power given him by the will, the vendor charged the land with a jointure rentcharge in favour of his wife after his death, and a sum for portions for his younger children, and appointed terms to commence from his death to secure the same. In 1895 the vendor and his eldest son, by a disentailing assurance, conveyed the lands to such uses as the vendor and his son should by deed jointly appoint, and by a re-settlement, executed immediately afterwards, they appointed the lands to such uses as the vendor and his son should by deed jointly appoint, and in default of and subject to such appointment to the use of the vendor for life in restoration and confirmation of the estate for his life limited by the will, and from and after his death to the use of his son for life, with divers remainders over: Subsequently the vendor, by deed of family arrangement, assigned his life estate to his son, and by a re-settlement executed in 1899 the vendor and his son, in exercise of the joint power of appointment contained in the earlier re-settlement of 1895, appointed that the settled land should remain and be to such uses as would be subsisting under the re-settlement of 1895 if the vendor were then dead. The vendor, as the person having the powers of a tenant for life under the original settlement created by the will, contracted to sell part of the settled land, and stipulated that the purchase-money should be paid to the trustees of that original settlement. The purchaser took the objection that such trustees could not give a good receipt, and required trustees of the compound settlement, made up of all or some of the above-mentioned deeds, to be appointed:—Held, that the original settlement created by the will was still subsisting by reason of the jointure and portions charges remaining to be raised; that the powers of a tenant for life under that settlement were still exercisable by the vendor, notwithstanding the extinguishment of his life estate; and that the trustees of such original settlement could give a good receipt for the purchase-money. Du Cane and Nettleford's Contract, In re (67 L. 4. COMPOUND SETTLEMENT.

Series of Deeds—Disentailing Deed and Re-settlement—Creation of New Life Estate—Jointure and Portions Existing under Prior Deed—Sale by Tenant for Life—Power to Convey Discharged from Jointure and Portions.—The definition in section 2, sub-section 1 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, of a settlement as being an instrument or number of instruments whereby "land, or any estate or interest in land, stands for the time being limited to or in trust for any persons by way of succession," includes the case of a jointure and portions limited to arise on or after the death of a tenant for life and the terms of years limited to secure them. Mundy and Roper's Contract, In re, 68 L. J. Ch. 135; [1899] 1 Ch. 275; 79 L. T. 533; 47 W. R. 226—O.A.

Under settlements of 1861 and 1865 land stood limited (in effect) to the use of A. for life, and subject thereto to the use of trustees for a term of three hundred years from the death of A. to secure a jointure rentcharge for his wife, and subject thereto to the use of trustees for a term of fifteen hundred years from the death of A. to secure portions for his younger children, and subject thereto to the use of the eldest son of A. in tail male. In 1889 A. and his eldest son disentailed the estate, and by subsequent deed re-settled it. Under the re-settlement the land was limited to the use of A. for life, but his life estate was not stated to be in restoration of his old life estate:—Held (dubitante VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.), that the settlement consisted of the deeds of 1861, 1865, and 1889; and that, though the life estate of A. must be treated as a new life estate arising under the re-settlement, he had power, upon trustees of the settlement consisting of these deeds being appointed, to convey the land discharged from the jointure and portions. Ailesbury (Marquis) and Iveagh (Lord), In re (62 L. J. Ch. 713; [1893] 2 Ch. 345), approved. Ib.

Per LINDLEY, M.R., and CHITTY, L.J.: There may be at the same time a settlement consisting of several deeds, and a less comprehensive settlement constituted by one of the deeds only. Du Cane and Nettleford's Contract, In re (67 L. J. Ch. 393, 399; [1898] 2 Ch. 96, 105), on this point approved. Ib.

By virtue of section 50 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, the statutory power of sale of a tenant for life is not annexed to his estate, but is vested by the Act once for all in the tenant for life, and remains vested in him, is incapable of being assigned or released, and continues exercisable by the tenant for life, notwithstanding any assignment by him of his estate. Consequently the statutory power of sale which A. had given to the execution of the deeds of 1889 was not affected by those deeds. Ib.

Series of Deeds—Disentail and Re-settlement—Old Life Estate Restored—Persons Competent to Dispose of Property—Trustees for Purposes of Acts—Declaration.—Land was conveyed by a marriage settlement in 1878 to the use of the husband for life, remainder to the use of his first and other sons successively in tail male, remainders over. There were no jointure portions or other charges, and no power of sale. In 1903 the husband and his eldest son, by a disentailing deed, re-settled the land to the subsisting uses of the marriage settlement "so as to restore and confirm the same uses," and they declared that the trustees and trustee for the time being of the marriage settlement should be the trustees or trustee of the settlement constituted by the joint effect of the two indentures for the purposes of the Settled Land Acts:—Held, that effect must be given to the manifest intention of the parties to create a compound settlement; that they had power to declare trustees thereof for the purposes of the Acts; and that H., who was sole surviving trustee of the marriage settlement, had been effectually declared trustee of the compound settlement for those purposes. Spencer's Settled Estates, In re (72 L. J. Ch. 59; [1903] 1 Ch. 75), distinguished. Spearman's Settled Estates, In re, 75 L. J. Ch. 829; [1906] 2 Ch. 502; 95 L. T. 605—Swinfen Eady, J.

Separate Documents—Infant Tenant in Tail Absolutely Entitled—Sale of Heirlooms—Application of Proceeds of Sale—Discharge of Incumbrance on Settled Land.—Where by will made in 1884 a testator who died in the same year bequeathed certain pictures to the trustees of his will upon trust to hold the same as heirlooms for the successive owners of land settled in strict settlement in 1874, but the same were not to vest absolutely in any tenant in tail male by purchase who should not attain twenty-one or should die under that age leaving issue male, and the heirlooms were now vested absolutely in the first tenant in tail in remainder, a female infant, subject to certain life estates and to any possible estates tail that might come in and defeat her estate, and one of the pictures had been recently sold by the tenant for life in possession of the settled land and heirlooms, and the purchase-money had with the sanction of the Court been paid to the trustees of the will and invested in Consols, and such trustees had been appointed trustees of the compound settlement of the heirlooms and the proceeds of sale thereof created by the will and the settlement of 1874 for all the purposes of the Settled Land Acts, the Court held that the land and heirlooms, although settled by different documents, must be treated as if they had been settled by the same document, and that, consequently, the tenant for life was, under section 21, sub-section 2, and section 37 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, entitled to have the proceeds of the sale of the picture applied in discharge of a mortgage on the settled land. Marlborough's (Duke) Settlement, In re; Marlborough (Duke) v. Marjoribanks (54 L. J. Ch. 833; 30 Ch. D. 127; affirmed, 55 L. J. Ch. 339; 32 Ch. D. 1), applied. Stafford's (Lord) Settlement and Will, In re; Gerard v. Stafford, 73 L. J. Ch. 560; [1904] 2 Ch. 72; 91 L. T. 229; 52 W. R. 536—Warrington, J.

Separate Instruments—Trusts by Reference—Appointment of Trustees for Purposes of Act—Discharge of Incumbrance on One Estate by Mortgage of Both.—Where it is necessary to appoint trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Acts, and the settlement consists of two instruments forming one compound settlement, the trustees must be appointed of the compound settlement and not of either one or other of the separate instruments. Coul's Settled Estates, In re, 74 L. J. Ch. 378; [1905] 1 Ch. 712; 92 L. T. 616; 53 W. R. 504—Kekewich, J.

Semble, a power of sale does not constitute trustees for the purposes of the Acts unless it is a general power—that is, a power exercisable at any time and for any purpose, and not a power exercisable on a contingency and for a particular purpose. Ib.

Re-settlement—New Life Tenancy in Restoration of Old—Trustees for Purposes of Settled Land Acts.—Where a tenant for life and tenant in tail in remainder under a strict settlement of land have executed a disentailing assurance, and have subsequently, in re-settling the property, expressly restored the former life tenancy, the life tenant is tenant, not under the re-settlement alone, but under the compound settlement constituted by the original settlement, the re-settlement, and the disentailing assurance. It is therefore necessary, in order that he may exercise his powers as tenant for life under the Settled Land Acts, 1882 to 1890, that there should be trustees of this compound settlement for the purposes of those Acts. Cornwallis-West and Munro's Contract, In re, 72 L. J. Ch. 499; [1903] 2 Ch. 150; 88 L. T. 351; 51 W. R. 602—Farwell, J.

Limitation of Remainder Subject to Payment of Annuities and of a Capital Sum—Settlement of Remainder.—A settlor in exercise of a power by deed settled freehold and leasehold estates upon himself for life, with remainder in trust to pay certain reversionary annuities and to raise a capital sum, with remainder to himself, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns. He settled the ultimate remainder by his will:—Held, that the deed creating the power, the appointment, and the will constituted a compound settlement. Ailesbury (Marquis) and Iveagh (Lord), In re (62 L. J. Ch. 713; [1893] 2 Ch. 345), followed. Phillimore, In re; Phillimore v. Milnes, 73 L. J. Ch. 671; [1904] 2 Ch. 460; 91 L. T. 256; 52 W. R. 682—Farwell, J.

Will—Power to Jointure—Exercise of Power by Deed—Appointment of Trustees.—Where lands have been put in settlement by a will with power to the tenant for life to charge the lands by way of jointure, and the power is exercised by the tenant for life by a deed, the will and deed do not together constitute a “compound” settlement. In such a case it is only necessary to appoint trustees, for the purposes of the Settled Land Act, of the will. Hayes' Settled Estates, In re, [1907] 1 Ir. R. 88—Barton, J.

5. TENANT FOR LIFE.

(a) Who is.

Beneficial Interest.—Section 58 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, extends the powers conferred by the Act on tenants for life only to persons whose interests are beneficial. Jemmett and Guest's Contract, In re; 76 L. J. Ch. 367; [1907] 1 Ch. 629—Swinfen Eady, J.

Tenant pur Autre Vie—Right to Sell the Fee.—Where by a voluntary settlement land is conveyed to trustees without words of limitation to the use of one for life with remainders over, the tenant for life can sell the fee under the Settled Land Act, 1882, for by section 58, sub-section 1 (v. and vi.), he has the powers of a tenant for life, and the fee reverting to the settlor is comprised in the settlement by virtue of section 2, sub-section 2 of the same Act. Hunter & Hewlett's Contract, In re, 76 L. J. Ch. 26; [1907] 1 Ch. 46; 95 L. T. 674—Swinfen Eady, J.

Person “deemed to be tenant for life”—Sale of Settled Land.—A person who, by virtue of section 63 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, is “deemed to be tenant for life” of settled land is not entitled, as a matter of course, to an order under section 7 (iii.) of the Settled Land Act, 1884, giving the applicant leave to sell or proceed with a sale of the settled land. Tutill, In re, [1907] 1 Ir. R. 305—M.R.

Undivided Share of Land—Power to Sell—Vendor and Purchaser.—A tenant for life of an undivided moiety of land can sell the moiety of which he is tenant for life under the powers of the Settled Land Act, 1882, without the concurrence of the owner or person having the power or right of disposition of the other undivided moiety. Collinge's Settled Estates, In re (57 L. J. Ch. 219; 36 Ch. D. 516), overruled. Cooper v. Belsey, 68 L. J. Ch. 258; [1899] 1 Ch. 639; 80 L. T. 69; 47 W. R. 443—C.A.

Personalty only Settled—Power to Invest in Land—Land Purchased—Settled Land—Capital Money.]—Where a settlement comprises personalty only, with a power to invest in land (but no trust for investment in land), and a direction that land purchased shall be held until sale upon the trusts of the settlement, in that case land so purchased is settled land, and the person entitled for the time being to the income of the personal property comprised in the settlement is tenant for life within section 63 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, and any personal property in the hands of the trustees of the settlement is capital money within section 33 of the Act. Childs' Settlement, In re, 76 L. J. Ch. 565; [1907] 2 Ch. 348; 97 L. T. 80; 23 T. L. R. 609—Kekewich, J.

Person Beneficially Entitled to Settled Land for Life—Trust to Keep up Mansion-house and Grounds and Permit Daughter to Reside.]—Testatrix by her will devised her real estate to trustees upon trust to enter into possession of the rents and profits thereof, and to pay the expenses of the management of the estates, and certain annuities; and she directed her trustees to apply such sums as should be necessary for keeping up certain country mansion-houses and the gardens and grounds thereof, and also a town mansion-house, in a fit state for residence, including in such keeping up the wages of all servants and other persons employed by the trustees about such houses and grounds, and to permit the testatrix's daughter at any time and from time during her life to reside at the said mansion-houses, and during such residence pay to her an allowance of 80l. per week; and after the death of her daughter she directed that certain of her grandchildren should be successively permitted to reside in the mansion-houses in a similar manner; and she directed that the heirlooms in the houses should be enjoyed by the person or persons for the time being entitled to the same residences respectively under the directions in her will:—Held, that the daughter was a person "for the time being, under a settlement, beneficially entitled to possession of settled land, for her life" within sub-section 5 of section 2 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, and she was accordingly tenant for life of the mansion-houses and grounds under the Act. Llanover's (Baroness) Will, In re; Herbert v. Freshfield (No. 1), 72 L. J. Ch. 406; [1903] 2 Ch. 16; 88 L. T. 648; 51 W. R. 418—C.A.

Trust for Sale—Tenant for Life of Proceeds—Right to Income before Conversion.]—Where real estate is settled upon trust to sell and to pay the income of the proceeds to a person for life, that person is, by the general rule of law, unless the sale is improperly postponed, entitled to the rents and profits of the land until sale, and therefore is "for the time being beneficially entitled to the income of the land until sale" within the meaning of section 63 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, and is a tenant for life under that Act. Searle's Settlement Trusts In re, 69 L. J. Ch. 712; [1900] 2 Ch. 829; 83 L. T. 864; 49 W. R. 44—Kekewich, J.

The principle laid down in Chesterfield's (Earl) Trusts, In re (52 L. J. Ch. 958; 24 Ch. D. 643), does not apply to a devise of land upon trusts for conversion. Id.

Persons having Powers of Tenant for Life—Annuitants.]—Annuitants under a will, who between them are entitled to the receipt of the whole of the rents and profits of a portion of a testator's settled estate, will be declared to be persons having together the powers of a tenant for life within the meaning of section 58 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, in respect of that portion of the estate. Bennet, In re; Bennet v. Bennet, 72 L. J. Ch. 524; [1903] 2 Ch. 136; 88 L. T. 683—Kekewich, J.

Trust for Accumulation.]—Where land is limited to trustees of a marriage settlement to the use of the trustees for twenty-one years and subject thereto to the use of the husband for life, and the trusts of the term are to manage the property, pay certain annuities, and to accumulate the residue, such accumulations to be capital moneys under the Settled Land Act, the husband is a person having the powers of a tenant for life under the Settled Land Act, 1882, s. 58. Strangways, In re; Hickley v. Strangways (56 L. J. Ch. 195; 34 Ch. D. 423), distinguished. Martyn, In re; Coode v. Martyn, 69 L. J. Ch. 733; 83 L. T. 146—Kekewich, J.

Gift of Income to Wife of Testator during Widowhood for Benefit and Maintenance of Herself and their Children—Tenant for Life.]—Testator devised all his real estate to trustees in trust for his wife "during her widowhood for the benefit and maintenance of herself and our dear children, and the proper bringing up of the latter":—Held, that the widow had the powers of a tenant for life under section 58, sub-section 1 (vi.) of the Settled Land Act, 1882, notwithstanding that her estate was incumbered or charged with the liability to provide maintenance for such of her children as required it. Pollock, In re; Pollock v. Pollock, 75 L. J. Ch. 120; [1906] 1 Ch. 146; 94 L. T. 92; 54 W. R. 267—Swinfen Eady, J.

Devise in Trust to Keep up Mansion-house and Permit A to Reside.]—A testatrix devised certain mansion-houses to trustees upon trust to keep up the same, and the gardens and grounds thereof, in a fit state for residence, paying the wages of all servants and persons employed by them for that purpose, and to permit her daughter at any time or from time to time during her life to reside at any of the said mansion-houses, and during such residence to pay her an annuity of 80l. a week:—Held, that the daughter had the powers of a tenant for life under the Settled Land Acts. Llanover's (Baroness) Will, In re; Herbert v. Freshfield, [1902] 2 Ch. 679; 51 W. R. 89—Swinfen Eady, J.

Direction to Apply Surplus Rents—Discharge of Incumbrances—Alternative Object Void—Heiress-at-Law Entitled—Interest Liable to be Suspended.]—A testatrix devised freeholds to trustees upon trust to manage the same and receive the rents and profits, and, after making thereout various annual payments, to apply the surplus (if any) during the lives of her daughter, grandson, and great-granddaughter successively, but not for more than twenty years after testatrix's death, in the discharge of incumbrances, or in the purchase of other estates. Subject to and after the determination or failure of the foregoing directions, the trustees were to stand possessed of the freeholds (subject to subsisting incumbrances), and all surplus rents thereof, in trust for all the daughters successively in tail male—first, of the great-granddaughter and afterwards of a great-grandson, both of whom were young and unmarried; and there were limitations over, but no ultimate disposition of the fee. The direction to buy land having been held void under the Accumulations Act, 1892, the daughter, as heiress-at-law, became entitled to the surplus rents so far and so long as they were undisposed of by the will, and in virtue thereof she claimed to be a person having the powers of a tenant for life under section 58 of the Settled Land Act, 1882. The period of twenty years had not expired, and the trustees stated that the accumulations were as yet insufficient to pay off the incumbrances:—Held, that the daughter was not within clause vi. of section 58, sub-section 1, because the freeholds were not devised to her for her own or any other life; nor within clause ix., because she was not entitled to the rents "during her own or any other life" or under a "trust or direction for payment thereof to her," nor was such a trust or direction to be implied by virtue of section 2, sub-section 2. Ilanover (Baroness), In re; Herbert v. Ram, 76 L. J. Ch. 427; [1907] 1 Ch. 635; 97 L. T. 286—Swinfen Eady, J.

— Mortgage to Raise Estate Duty.—Held, also, that a mortgage to secure moneys borrowed by the trustees to pay estate duties on testatrix's death was an incumbrance that should be paid off under the direction in the will. Ib.

— Trust to Allow Residue to Remain as Invested—Absolute Discretion to Sell.—A testator who died in the year 1901 gave the residue of his estate real and personal, consisting of certain stocks and shares, freehold hereditaments, and leasehold houses held on leases expiring in the year 1924, to trustees upon trust either to allow the same to remain in its state of investment at his decease or, as and when his trustees should, in their absolute discretion, see fit so to do, from time to time to realise and sell and convert the same or any part thereof. The testator directed his trustees to reinvest the money when realised in trustees' securities and to hold the investments, whether original or substituted, upon trust to pay unto or permit his wife, F. C. (who was one of the trustees), to receive the income of his residuary estate during widowhood, to be reduced to a moiety of the income on her re-marriage, and, subject to her life interest, the testator gave his residuary estate to his son F. R. C., to be paid to him as to a moiety at twenty-five and the residue on his attaining thirty, but should his son die under twenty-five the whole residue was given to F. C.:—Held, that the words of the will created a trust for sale; that F. C., being the person for the time being beneficially entitled to the income until sale, must be deemed to be the tenant for life of the estate within section 63 of the Settled Land Act, 1882. Seem, no case ought to be treated as falling within section 58, sub-section 1 (ix.), which is covered by section 63. Crips, In re; Crips v. Todd, 95 L. T. 865—Kekewich, J.

— Power to Raise Money by Mortgage—"Person beneficially entitled to possession."—A testator devised portion of his estates to trustees upon trust to pay out of the rents and profits a proportion of certain annuities and interest on legacies, and to accumulate the residue until a sum sufficient to pay certain debts and the legacies had been formed, and then to pay the said debts and legacies. Subject to these trusts the testator devised the said estates in trust for his son for life, remainder to J.'s sons in tail male, with remainder to the testator's son C. for life. J. died unmarried. C., who was also one of the trustees of the will, went into possession as tenant for life. The trustees did not accumulate the rents, and the testator's debts and legacies remained unpaid. On an application for an order authorising C. to raise money under the Settled Land Act, 1890, s. 11, for the purpose of discharging incumbrances upon the settled lands,—Held, that, notwithstanding the trust for accumulation, C. was "beneficially entitled to possession," and entitled to exercise the powers of a tenant for life, although his enjoyment of the estate was intercepted by the provision for accumulation. Annesley v. Woodhouse, [1898] 1 Ir. R. 69—V.C.

— Dwelling-house—Right of Occupation—Trustees of Term—Power to Mortgage—Trustees for Purposes of Settled Land Acts.—An unlimited right of personal occupation of a dwelling-house and premises, if exercised, constitutes the occupier a tenant for life thereof within the meaning of the Settled Land Acts. Carne's Settled Estates, In re, 68 L. J. Ch. 120; [1899] 1 Ch. 324; 79 L. T. 542; 47 W. R. 352—North, J.

Land was limited to trustees for a term of 1,000 years on trust, as to the premises therein comprised, to allow the applicant to occupy a dwelling-house and appurtenances forming part thereof rent free for so long as she might wish to continue to do so; and also by mortgage of the said premises, or by or out of the rents and profits thereof, or by any other reasonable ways and means, to raise and pay certain moneys and interest. Subject to the trusts of the said term, the property was limited over in fee-simple:—Held, that the applicant was tenant for life of the dwelling-house and appurtenances. Ib.

But held that the trustees of the term were not trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Acts. Ib.

— Land Vested in Bishop in Right of See—Grant to Church Dignitary under Custom—Right of Selling.—Land vested in a bishop in right of his see, and from time immemorial granted by him to a dignitary of his cathedral church for life so long as he should continue in his dignity, —Held, not to be settled land which could be sold under the Settled Land Act. Bath and Wells (Bishop), Ex parte, 68 L. J. Ch. 524; [1899] 2 Ch. 138; 81 L. T. 69—North, J.

(b) Right to Possession.

Tenant for Life Subject to Term for Discharge of Incumbrances—Possession and Management Given to Trustees of Term—Right of Tenant for Life to Possession.—A testator devised certain estates to trustees for a term of years upon trust to manage the same and receive the rents and profits thereof until certain incumbrances thereon had been paid off, and subject thereto to uses under which A. was tenant for life and his infant son was tenant in tail in remainder. The trustees had out of the rents and profits greatly reduced the incumbrances, but had not had time to pay them off, and they objected to hand over the management of the estates to the tenant for life, as calculated, in their opinion, to be prejudicial to the carrying into execution of the trusts of the term, and to the interests of the infant remainderman:—Held, that the tenant for life was entitled to the possession of the estates and to the custody of the title-deeds upon his undertaking to account for the rents and to hand over the surplus rents to the trustees to be applied by them in carrying out the trusts of the term, and also to pay an occupation rent in case he should occupy any part of the estates, and upon his giving security to the satisfaction of the Judge in chambers for the due performance of such undertaking. Money-Kyrle, In re; Money-Kyrle v. Money-Kyrle, 69 L. J. Ch. 780; [1900] 2 Ch. 839; 83 L. T. 74; 49 W. R. 44—Cozens-Hardy, J.

Term of Years to Discharge Mortgages—Legal Tenant for Life subject to Term—Possession—Exercise of Powers.—By settlement in 1879 lands were conveyed subject to certain mortgages affecting the same to the use of the settlor for life, and after his death to the use that his wife and daughters should receive certain rent-charges, and subject as aforesaid to the use of trustees for the term of 1,000 years from the death of the settlor upon the trusts thereafter declared, and after the determination of the term and in the meantime subject thereto to the use (in the events which had happened) of J. B. R. for life. The settlement conferred upon the trustees a power of sale and exchange, but not of leasing. The trusts of the term were that so long as any incumbrance should remain unpaid the trustees should receive the rents and profits and manage the premises and keep down the interest on the mortgages and rent-charges, and in the next place pay the tenant for life a certain annuity and apply the residue in or towards the discharge of the principal moneys charged by way of mortgage or otherwise upon the premises. There was a proviso for cesser of the term upon the discharge of all principal moneys charged by way of mortgage or otherwise upon the premises. The settlor and his wife were both dead, but the rentcharge in favour of the daughters was still in force, and the mortgages had not been paid off:—Held, on the authority of Clitheroe Estate, In re (54 L. J. Ch. 401; 28 Ch. D. 378; affirmed, 55 L. J. Ch. 107; 31 Ch. D. 135), that J. B. R. was a person having the powers of a tenant for life under the Settled Land Acts, and that he was not precluded from exercising the powers by the existence of the term; that he ought to be let into possession upon giving the usual undertakings as to the performance of the trusts of the term, and that the title-deeds ought to be delivered into his possession. Richardson, In re; Richardson v. Richardson, 69 L. J. Ch. 804; [1900] 2 Ch. 778—Stirling, J.

Contract for Sale—Proceeds of Sale—Direction to Trustees to Pay off Mortgages—Validity—Cesser of Term.—Subsequently J. B. R. entered into a contract for the sale of certain portions of the settled lands, the purchase-money for which was a little more than sufficient to pay off the mortgages; and he, acting under section 21, sub-section 2, and section 22, sub-section 2 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, gave a direction to the trustees of the settlement that the proceeds of sale should be applied in paying off the mortgages. The sale was a bona fide one, and J. B. R. made an affidavit in which he stated that he had considered the interests of all parties entitled under the settlement:—Held, that the direction was a proper one, and that the mortgages ought not to be transferred to the trustees or otherwise kept on foot, and that on payment off of the mortgages the trusts of the term would cease. Semble, if the trustees had been themselves selling under their power of sale they might have paid off the existing incumbrances out of the purchase-money. Knatchbull's Settled Estate, In re (54 L. J. Ch. 1168; 29 Ch. D. 588), and Hampden v. Buckinghamshire (Earl) (62 L. J. Ch. 643; [1893] 2 Ch. 531) discussed. Ib.

(c) Power of Leasing.(i.) Generally.

Statutory Power—Lease by Donee to Himself and Others—Joint Covenants by Lessees—Invalid Exercise—Lease to Trustee for Lessor.—A tenant for life purported, in exercise of the powers of section 46 of the Settled Estates Act, 1877, to demise the settled messuage, works, and premises to himself and his two partners for twenty-one years, the lease containing the usual lessee's covenants entered into by the three lessees jointly. A certain rent was reserved by the lease, but dehors the lease it was arranged between the partners that the tenant for life should be allowed to occupy the house rent free, and should receive an additional rent as compensation in the event of his ceasing to reside there. In an action by the remaindermen, after the death of the tenant for life, to recover possession of the premises from an assignee of the lease,—Held, that the lease was void for non-compliance with the requirements of section 46 of the Settled Estates Act, 1877, both on the ground that the best rent had not been reserved, and also because the covenants in the lease, being joint covenants by a man and others with himself, were not enforceable at law, and consequently were not proper covenants within the meaning of the section, or such as the reversioners were entitled to have inserted in the lease. Boyce v. Edbrooke, 72 L. J. Ch. 547; [1903] 1 Ch. 836; 88 L. T. 344; 51 W. R. 424—Farwell, J.

"Covenant," in the Act, means a legal covenant which can be sued upon at law, and not some right which might or might not arise from equitable considerations. Ib.

The donee of an ordinary power of leasing cannot validly exercise the power by leasing to himself either alone or jointly with others. Quare, whether, independently of express statutory authority or some long-established special custom, the donee can validly exercise such a power by leasing to a trustee for himself, as such an execution would seem to transgress the doctrine of equity forbidding a man to put himself in such a position that his interest conflicts with his duty. Ib.

Wilson v. Sewell (4 Burr. 1975, 1979; 1 W. Bl. 617, 620), and Cardigan (Earl) v. Montague (App. Sugden on Powers (8th ed.), p. 917) examined and explained. Bevan v. Habgood (30 L. J. Ch. 107; 1 J. & H. 222) commented upon and dissented from. Ib.

"Usually occupied therewith"—"Park"—Easement over Mansion-house.—The words "usually occupied therewith" in section 10, sub-section 2 of the Settled Land Act, 1890, must be read as qualifying "lands (if any)," and not as qualifying "pleasure grounds in park." "Park" in section 10, sub-section 2 of the Settled Land Act, 1890, is used in a popular, and not in its ancient technical, sense. It is used, for example, in the second sense attributed to the word in the Imperial Dictionary, but not in the first. Pease v. Courtney, 73 L. J. Ch. 760; [1904] 2 Ch. 503; 91 L. T. 341; 53 W. R. 75; 20 T. L. R. 653—Swinfen Eady, J.

Specific Performance—Damages.—A tenant for life of settled land agreed to let a "park" without having first obtained the consent of the trustees of the settlement or an order of the Court. The lessees had not stipulated for the investigation of the lessor's title, nor had they ever asked him to execute a lease. There was no evidence to shew that the lessor could have obtained the necessary consent or order, had he endeavoured to do so. The lessor had subsequently died, and the lessees were refused specific performance:—Held, that under the circumstances the estate of the lessor was not liable to the lessees for damages. Day v. Singleton (68 L. J. Ch. 593; [1899] 2 Ch. 320) considered and distinguished. Ib.

Two Estates with Mansion-house on Each—"Principal mansion-house"—Lease by Tenant for Life to his Wife—"Good faith"—Consent of Trustees.—A lease by a tenant for life under the Settled Land Acts to his wife is good if it is in other respects free from objection. Gilbey v. Rush, 75 L. J. Ch. 32; [1906] 1 Ch. 11; 93 L. T. 616; 54 W. R. 71; 22 T. L. R. 23—Kekewich, J.

"Good faith" in section 54 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, means nothing more than that the provisions of the Act must be complied with. Ib.

Where there are two or more mansion-houses in the same settlement the question which is the principal mansion-house is a question to be tried in each case, having regard to the particular circumstance and on a comparison of the different houses. Semble, there may be two or more principal mansion-houses comprised in the same settlement. Ib. See In re Wythe's Settled Estates, 77 L. J. Ch. 319; [1908] 1 Ch. 593—Eve, J.

Semble, the consent of the trustees of the settlement to a lease of the principal mansion-house need not be formally expressed or recorded, but may be gathered from the approval and other acts of the trustees. Ib.

Bona Fide Exercise of Power—Determination of Tenancy for Life.—A widow, being under the Settled Land Acts tenant for life during her widowhood of settled estate, on the eve of her second marriage intended to grant a twenty-one years' lease of the settled estate to her intended husband:—Held, that the granting of such lease must be restrained, as not being a bona fide exercise of the powers of a tenant for life. Middlemas v. Stevens, 70 L. J. Ch. 320; [1901] 1 Ch. 574; 84 L. T. 47; 49 W. R. 430—Joyce, J.

Commission Payable to an Estate Agent.—The commission payable to an estate agent for letting parts of a settled estate on building leases is a charge or expense incidental to the exercise of some of the powers of the Settled Land Act, 1882, and is payable out of capital moneys arising under the Act. Maryon-Wilson's Settled Estates, In re, 70 L. J. Ch. 500; [1901] 1 Ch. 934; 84 L. T. 708—Joyce, J.

(ii.) Building Lease.

Reservation of Mines and Minerals.—A tenant for life has power under the Settled Land Act, 1882, to grant a building lease of settled land with a reservation of the mines and minerals. Nevill and Newell's Contract, In re (69 L. J. Ch. 94; [1900] 1 Ch. 90), overruled. Gladstone, In re; Gladstone v. Gladstone, 69 L. J. Ch. 455; [1900] 2 Ch. 101; 82 L. T. 515; 48 W. R. 531—C.A.

Where a settlement of land contains the usual powers of granting building and mining leases, the donee of the powers can grant a building lease with a reservation of minerals, notwithstanding the absence of any express authorisation to that effect. Rutland's (Duke) Settled Estates, In re; Rutland (Duke) v. Bristol (Marquis), 69 L. J. Ch. 603; [1900] 2 Ch. 206—Byrne, J.

A tenant for life of settled land cannot grant a valid building lease of the surface of the land under the Settled Land Act, 1882, with a reservation of the mines and minerals. Nevill and Newell's Contract, In re, 69 L. J. Ch. 94; [1900] 1 Ch. 90; 81 L. T. 581; 48 W. R. 181—Kekewich, J.

Where a tenant for life purports to grant such a lease, it will not be rendered a valid lease by virtue of the provisions of the Leases Act, 1849. Ib.

Extended Term.—Leave given to the tenant for life of a settlement to grant a building lease of settled land for 500 years under the Settled

Land Act, 1882, s. 10, sub-s. 2. O'Connell's Estate, In re, [1903] 1 Ir. R. 154—V.C.

(iii.) Mining Lease.

Power as to Rent.—A tenant for life in granting a mining lease under the powers of the Settled Land Act, 1882, may—first, reserve no minimum rent for the first year and then a minimum rent on an ascending scale from the second to the fifth years; secondly, may reserve a nominal rent only during the residue of the term after all the saleable coal has been worked out under the provisions of the lease; and thirdly, may include in the lease a wayleave for foreign coal without reserving any separate rent, though the wayleave is to continue during the residue of the term after all the saleable coal has been worked out and after the cesser of the minimum rent. Aldam's Settlement, In re, 71 L. J. Ch. 552; [1902] 2 Ch. 46; 86 L. T. 510; 50 W. R. 500—C.A.

A "fixed or minimum rent" under section 9, sub-section 1 (ii.) of the Settled Land Act, 1882, need not be a uniform rent. Ib.

The requirements of the Settled Land Acts are that the best rent should be reserved which can be reasonably obtained, regard being had to all the circumstances of the case, and that due regard should be had to the interests of all parties entitled under the settlement. Whether any particular lease satisfies these requirements must depend on the evidence, which should not be couched in general language, but should set out the material circumstances and state the grounds for the conclusion arrived at. Ib. And see col. 2258.

(d) Mortgage.

Different Instruments—Identical Trusts—Mortgage of One Estate to Discharge Incumbrance on the Other.—Where different estates stand limited on identical trusts under different instruments, the effect of section 2, sub-section 1 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, by which both the instruments are made to create "a settlement" for the purposes of the Act, is to enable the tenant for life, under section 11 of the Act of 1890, to raise the money required to discharge an incumbrance on the one estate by means of a mortgage of the other estate, although the settlement of the latter estate was the earlier in date, and was made free from incumbrances, and the former estate was settled by the tenant for life himself, and subject to the incumbrance which it is sought to discharge. Monson's (Baron) Settled Estates, In re, 67 L. J. Ch. 176; [1898] 1 Ch. 427; 78 L. T. 225; 46 W. R. 330—Romer, J.

Payment of Instalment—Deficiency of Proceeds—Rateable Repayment.—A testator devised certain lands, subject to an instalment mortgage, to his wife for life, remainder to his children for life, remainder over. After the testator's death his widow paid several instalments of the mortgage. She died intestate, and further instalments were then paid by the other tenants for life. The lands were sold under the Settled Land Act, and the balance of the mortgage paid out of the proceeds; and by an order of the Court the tenants for life were declared entitled to be recouped the sums expended by them on the mortgage out of the remaining surplus of the purchase-money. The fund proving insufficient to repay the tenants for life in full,—Held, that the several tenants for life were entitled to be recouped rateably, the first tenant for life having no right to be repaid the sums expended by her on the mortgage in priority to the other tenants for life. Nepean's Settled Estate, In re, [1900] 1 Ir. R. 298—V.C.

•(e) Easement.

Power to Exchange for other Easement.—Section 5 of the Settled Land Act, 1890, empowers a tenant for life to grant an easement over the settled land in exchange for an easement over adjoining land. Bracken's Settled Estates, In re, 72 L. J. Ch. 101; [1903] 1 Ch. 265; 87 L. T. 743—Swinfen Eady, J.

The latter part of the section is independent of the earlier part, and is not dominated by the first words of the section, "on an exchange or partition." Ib.

Power to Release.—A tenant for life has no power under the Settled Land Acts to release an easement over the settled land. Brotherton, In re; Brotherton v. Brotherton, 77 L. J. Ch. 58; 97 L. T. 880—Joyce, J. And see Pearson's Will, In re, 83 L. T. 626, infra.

Exchange of—Extinguishment.—An exchange of easements between two adjoining settled estates cannot be made under section 5 of the Settled Land Act, 1890, so as to extinguish the easements. Ib.

"Incorporeal hereditament."—An easement is not an incorporeal hereditament within the meaning of section 2, sub-section 10 (i) of the Settled Land Act, 1882. Ib.

Right to Let Down Surface of Settled Land.—A tenant for life under a settlement of the surface of lands, being also entitled in fee-simple to the mines and minerals under the settled lands, may grant to the lessee of the mines and minerals a right to let down the surface, although the tenant for life could not, under the terms of the settlement, himself so work the mines as to let down the surface. Sitwell, In re; Sitwell v. Londesborough (Earl), 74 L. J. Ch. 254; [1905] 1 Ch. 460; 53 W. R. 445—Warrington, J.

The rent to be reserved is not incapable of ascertainment if experts can say what rent should be reserved. Ib.

Section 6 and section 7, sub-section 3 of the Settled Land Act must be read together, and a lease may be granted of an incorporeal hereditament to which a condition of re-entry is inapplicable. Ib.

(f) Sale.

Power of—Right to Construct and Maintain Tunnels for Railway under Land—Easement.—

A tenant for life by virtue of section 63 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, of a settlement by way of trust for sale created by will, of undivided shares of settled land beneath which a railway company desired to construct tunnels for an electric railway, having joined with the owners of the remaining shares in entering into an agreement with the company for the sale to them of the right to construct, maintain, and use tunnels with railways therein under the land, took out a summons under section 7 of the Settled Land Act, 1884, asking for leave to enter into a contract in the form of the agreement with the company for the sale to them of that right. It was urged in support of the application that to proceed under the Settled Land Acts was cheaper and more simple than under the Lands Clauses Act, and that the right in question constituted an easement under section 3 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, or, if not, that the Court had power under that section to make the order asked for:—Held, that the sale of the subsoil of the settled land was not the sale of an easement under section 3 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, but that the Court had power under that section to make an order authorising the sale as being a sale of a part of the settled land. Pearson's Will, In re, 88 L. T. 626—Cozens-Hardy, J.

— Partial Merger of Life Interest—Sale of Entirety.—A tenant for life assigned her life interest in two undivided third parts of the settled land to the remaindermen respectively entitled to those parts, and subsequently contracted to sell the entirety:—Held, that, notwithstanding the partial merger, her power of sale under the Settled Land Act, 1882, was still subsisting in respect of the entirety of the settled land, and that with the consent of her assignees she could make a good title thereto. Barlow's Contract, In re, 72 L. J. Ch. 214; [1903] 1 Ch. 382; 88 L. T. 84; 51 W. R. 399—Swinfen Eady, J.

— Devise of Real Estate—Settlement of Undivided Shares—Persons having Powers of Tenant for Life—Sale of Entirety—Conflict of Powers—Consents.—Land was devised to trustees upon trust to divide the same into five equal parts, and stand possessed of each part upon certain trusts under which some of the beneficiaries had the powers of a tenant for life within the meaning of the Settled Land Act, 1882, in respect of their one-fifth shares. The testator gave the trustees a general power of sale over the whole or any part of the land. Upon a sale of the entirety by the trustees,—Held, that there was a conflict between the trustees' power of sale and the power of such beneficiaries to sell their individual shares, by virtue of the Settled Land Act, 1882, and that consequently the trustees must obtain the consent of the tenants for life, or of the persons having the powers of a tenant for life in respect of such settled shares. Osborne to Brights, Linn., In re, 71 L. J. Ch. 285; [1902] 1 Ch. 335; 86 L. T. 178; 50 W. R. 468—Kekewich, J.

Sub-section 2 of section 56 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, is not confined to the case of a tenant for life, but includes as well the case of a person having the powers of a tenant for life. Id.

Agreement—Price to be Fixed by Arbitration

— Breach of Trust—Confirmation of Agreement by Local Act—Effect—Whether Binding on Remaindermen—Necessary Implication.—A tenant for life of settled land agreed with a municipal corporation to sell a portion of the settled land at a price to be fixed by arbitration. The agreement was conditional on the sanction of Parliament by a local Act being obtained. The corporation obtained a local Act which confirmed the agreement (scheduled to it) and made it "binding on the parties thereto respectively, and the same shall and may be carried into effect accordingly." The agreement was made between the tenant for life, an assignee of his life estate, and the corporation, and provided that the award of the arbitrators or umpire fixing the price should be "binding upon all the parties hereto respectively and upon all parties interested in the said" (settled) "estates":—Held, that, although it was a breach of trust on the part of the tenant for life to delegate his authority and enter into an agreement to sell at a price to be fixed by some one else, yet the effect of the agreement and the Act was that the agreement should be carried into effect as a sale by a tenant for life under the Settled Land Acts, with all the consequences which that involved, and the persons interested in remainder in the settled estates were therefore bound. Wilton's (Earl) Settled Estates, In re, 76 L. J. Ch. 37; [1907] 1 Ch. 50; 96 L. T. 193; 23 T. L. R. 64—Warrington, J.

— Conveyance—Mortgage on Life Estate—Concurrence of Mortgagee—Consent.—On a sale by a tenant for life under the Settled Land Acts, 1882 to 1890, a mortgagee of the life estate cannot be required to join in conveying to the purchaser. His consent once obtained under section 50 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, the tenant for life can convey the land under section 20 discharged from his own mortgage; for the estates, interests, and charges mentioned in section 20, sub-section 2 (ii.), are only such as subsist or arise under the settlement, and that is not the case with those created by the tenant for life. Dictum of NORTH, J., in Sebright's Settled Estates, In re (56 L. J. Ch. 169; 33 Ch. D. 429, 438), not followed. Dickin and Kelsall's Contract, In re, 77 L. J. Ch. 177; [1908] 1 Ch. 213—Swinfen Eady, J.

The true construction of section 20, sub-section 2 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, is to read the words "subject to" as applying to clause (i.), and the words "with the exception of" as applying to clauses (ii.) and (iii.) Id.

— No Trustees of Settlement for Purposes of Act—Payment of Purchase-money into Court.—A purchaser on a sale under the Settled Land Act cannot be compelled by the tenant for life, under the option conferred by section 22 of the Act, to pay the purchase-money into Court, unless there are in existence trustees of the settlement for the purposes of the Act. Fisher and Grazebrook's Contract, In re, 67 L. J. Ch. 613; [1898] 2 Ch. 660; 79 L. T. 268; 47 W. R. 58—Romer, J.

— Licensed Freehold Public-house—Inadequate Price—Good Faith of Purchaser.—The tenant for life of a licensed freehold public-house sold it to W. for 2,000l., the purchaser (who had supplied the house with goods) having heard that it was for sale from a friend, but not an authorised agent, of the solicitors of the tenant for life. No strict valuation appeared to have been made by the tenant for life or the trustees. Shortly afterwards W. re-sold the property for 3,000*l.* to brewers, who held a lease from the tenant for life, and had previously refused to give 2,700*l.* for the property. In an action by a remainderman to set aside the sale,—Held, that, in the absence of fraud, the purchaser was not proved to have dealt otherwise than in good faith with the tenant for life, and that section 54 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, supplied a good defence to the action. Hurrell v. Littlejohn, 73 L. J. Ch. 287; [1904] 1 Ch. 689; 90 L. T. 260; 20 T. L. R. 198—Joyce, J.

The mere fact that a purchase of this nature and character is at an undervalue of itself, without anything more at all, is insufficient to invalidate a sale. Ib.

Subsequent Dealings with Interests under Settlement—Assignment of Life Interest—Contract for Sale by Tenant for Life—Consent of Assignees.—Upon a sale by a tenant for life who has alienated for value, the purchaser is in general entitled under section 50 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, to ask for evidence of the consent of the assignee, but if the assignment contains a general consent beforehand all the powers of the tenant for life under the Settled Land Act, 1882, will remain unfettered. Du Cane and Nettlefold's Contract, In re, 67 L. J. Ch. 893; [1898] 2 Ch. 96; 78 L. T. 458; 46 W. R. 523—Stirling, J.

Section 4 of the Settled Land Act, 1890, only applies to a limited class of assignments—namely, assignments or charges in consideration of marriage or as part of or by way of family arrangement, and in such cases is limited to the purpose of excluding the operation of section 50 of the Act of 1882. It therefore does not make an assignment by a tenant for life by way of family arrangement one of the instruments creating the settlement for all the purposes of the Acts, so as to make it necessary in order to carry out a sale by the tenant for life to appoint trustees of the compound settlement made up of the original settlement and the assignment. Tibbits' Settled Estates, In re (66 L. J. Ch. 660; [1897] 2 Ch. 149), and Meade's Settled Estates, In re ([1897] 1 Ir. R. 121), distinguished. Ib.

Jointure—Portions—Sale.—By a deed of re-settlement, made in exercise of a general power of appointment conferred by a disentailing assurance, A. B. and his eldest son C. D. appointed an estate to the use of A. B. during his life, with remainders over; but the life estate of A. B. was not expressed to be in continuation, restoration, or confirmation of any estate in him. On summons taken out under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874,—Held, that this was a new settlement, and not a compound settlement; the tenant for life therefore could not sell under the Settled Land Acts free from a jointure and portions charged on the estate by previous settlements. Mundy and Roper, In re, 78 L. T. 547—Kekewich, J.

6. INSURANCE MONEYS.

Fire Insurance—Premiums Paid by Trustees out of Income—Right to Policy-moneys—Gift to Trustees of Fund.—A tenant for life under no liability by the settlement to insure and not impeachable for waste, by whose directions a policy of insurance has been kept up on the mansion-house, and the premiums thereon paid out of his income, is entitled as against the trustees of the settlement to money paid by the insurance office in respect of damage to the mansion-house by fire. Seymour v. Vernon (16 Jur. 189) and Warwick v. Brentnall (23 Ch. D. 188), which were cases of tenants in tail, followed. Gausson v. Whatman, 93 L. T. 101—Kekewich, J.

The fact that, pending a decision by the tenant for life as to whether he will expend the insurance fund in rebuilding the premises, the money had been invested in the names of the trustees of the settlement during a period of fourteen years,—Held, not, under the circumstances, to amount to an abandonment of the life tenant's right to the fund or a gift of it by him to the trustees for the benefit of the corpus of the settlement fund. Ib.

7. TIMBER.

Sale of, by Court—Conversion.—Where timber growing on settled land has been rightfully felled and sold under an order of the Court it becomes personal estate, and all the consequences of conversion must follow; and there is no equity for re-conversion as between the heir-at-law and the legal personal representative of the tenant in fee in remainder. Field v. Brown (27 Beav. 90) not followed. Hartley v. Pendarves, 70 L. J. Ch. 745; [1901] 2 Ch. 498; 85 L. T. 64; 50 W. R. 56—Cozens-Hardy, J.

8. WASTE.

Tenant for Life and Remainderman—Equitable Waste—Ornamental Timber—Planted or Left for Ornament or Shelter—Intention—Evidence.—The fact that, in the opinion of an expert in forestry, trees on a settled estate, from their position, must have been planted or left for ornament or shelter, is sufficient evidence to call for an answer from the tenant for life who proposes to fell them, that they were not so planted or left, without specific evidence of such intention on the part of the settlor. The issue to be determined is not whether the trees are in fact ornamental or give shelter, but whether they have been planted or left for ornament or shelter by the settlor. Weld Blundell v. Wolseley, 73 L. J. Ch. 45; [1903] 2 Ch. 664; 89 L. T. 59; 51 W. R. 635—Swinfen Eady, J.

9. TRUSTEES.

Power of Sale—Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 42—Infant.]—The testamentary guardian of an infant tenant for life is entitled under section 9 of 12 Car. 2, c. 24 (Abolition of Tenures Act), to receive during the infancy the rents and profits of real estate devised in strict settlement unless the testator has appointed trustees qualified, either expressly or otherwise, to exercise the powers of section 42 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881. Sed quære, how far this right of the testamentary guardian has been affected by the provisions of the Land Transfer Act, 1897, Part I. Helyar, In re; Helyar v. Beckett, 71 L. J. Ch. 209; [1902] 1 Ch. 391; 85 L. T. 627—Joyce, J.

It is upon the person who is tenant for life, or who has the powers of a tenant for life, whether sui juris or an infant, that the Settled Land Act, 1882, confers a power of sale. Section 60 of that Act does not, by authorising the trustees of the settlement to exercise such power on behalf of an infant, thereby constitute them "trustees with power of sale of the settled land" so as to bring them within the purview of section 42 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, and enable them to exercise the powers given by that section. Ib.

"Other land comprised in settlement"—Power of Sale—Land Purchased.]—Section 16, sub-section (i.) of the Settled Land Act, 1890, applies as well to land for the time being comprised in a settlement as to land originally comprised therein; so that trustees of the settlement created by a will are none the less trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Acts by virtue of the sub-section because all the land comprised in their power of sale at the testator's death has been sold, and the only land subject to the power has been purchased since under a direction in the will. Moore, In re; Moore v. Bigg, 75 L. J. Ch. 342; [1906] 1 Ch. 789; 95 L. T. 521; 54 W. R. 434; 22 T. L. R. 342—Swinfen Eady, J.

Appointment of—Validity of Sale.]—A compound settlement consisted of a settlement made in 1863 and a disentailing deed and a re-settlement made in 1898. The re-settlement deed contained a declaration that the trustees of it should be trustees of the compound settlement for the purposes of the Settled Land Acts. A jointress and portioners, whose interests arose under the settlement of 1863 and were outstanding, were not parties to the re-settlement deed:—Held, that the trustees of the re-settlement deed were not validly appointed trustees of the compound settlement. Seemle, if all the persons interested under the settlement had been parties to the re-settlement deed, the declaration of appointment would have been effectual. Hammond Spencer's Settled Estates, In re, 72 L. J. Ch. 59; [1903] 1 Ch. 75; 88 L. T. 158; 51 W. R. 262—Byrne, J.

Appointment of Trustees by Court.]—The trustees purported to be appointed were the existing trustees of the original settlement, one being the tenant for life's solicitor. THE COURT, being asked to appoint trustees of the compound settlement, declined to appoint the tenant for life's solicitor to be one, in accordance with the ordinary rule that it will not, in the absence of special reason, appoint the tenant for life's solicitor to be a trustee of the settlement. Ib.

Compulsory Purchase—Payment of Proceeds out of Court.]—By post-nuptial settlement, lands were conveyed to trustees, upon trust for the wife, without power of anticipation, and after the death of the husband or wife upon trust for the survivor for life, and subject thereto upon trust for the children of the marriage as the husband and wife should jointly appoint. The settlement contained a power of advancement but no express power of sale. Part of the lands having been taken under compulsory powers, the husband and wife appointed the trust property to the children of the marriage, and a joint application for payment out of the fund to the trustees was made by the husband, wife, children, and trustees. An order was made appointing the trustees of the settlement trustees for the purpose of the Settled Land Acts, and directing the fund to be paid out to them, to be held upon the trusts of the settlement. Belfast Improvement Acts, In re; Reid, ex parte, [1898] 1 Ir. R. 1—M.K.

For Purposes of Settled Land Act—Powers of Court.]—As a general rule, new trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Acts need not be appointed in every case in which a deed has been executed affecting the interests created by the original settlement, so that such settlement is no longer the only instrument under or by virtue of which land stands limited for the time being to or in trust for persons by way of succession, but section 38 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, does in a proper case enable the Court to appoint trustees of a settlement made up of the original settlement and subsequent instruments. Du Cane and Nettlefold's Contract, In re, 67 L. J. Ch. 393; [1898] 2 Ch. 96; 78 L. T. 458; 46 W. R. 523—Stirling, J.

Future Trust for Sale—Trust Exercisable on Death of Tenant for Life—Tenant for Life One of Trustees.]—The persons who are for the time being trustees of a settlement with a future trust for sale are trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Acts, 1882 to 1890, within section 16, sub-section (ii.) of the Act of 1890, notwithstanding that some or one of such persons, in all probability, will not, or in fact cannot, exercise the trust for sale. A tenant for life may therefore be a trustee for the purposes of the Acts, where he is a trustee with a future trust for sale, although such trust does not arise until his death. Jackson's Settled Estate, In re, 71 L. J. Ch. 154; [1902] 1 Ch. 258; 85 L. T. 625; 50 W. R. 235—Buckley, J.

10. INCUMBRANCES.

Conveyance—Money "actually raised."]—By his will made in 1854 a testator resident in Scotland devised his real estate, including the lands of B. in Ireland, to his six daughters for life, with remainders over. The testator died in 1857, having, prior to his death, advanced 1,500*l.* to the husband of one of his daughters, and 475*l.* to the husband of another daughter.

In 1882, by deed of family arrangement, the testator's real estate was conveyed to trustees, to hold on the trusts of the will, charged, as to the life estates of the two daughters therein, with repayment of the sums of 1,500*l.* and 475*l.* advanced to their husbands respectively. An order was subsequently made for the administration of the testator's real and personal estate in Ireland, and the lands of B. were sold to a purchaser:—Held, that the sums of 1,500*l.* and 475*l.* were not money "actually raised" within the exception to section 20 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, and that the persons who together constituted the tenant for life of the settled lands could convey to the purchaser discharged from these two sums. Connolly v. Keating (No. 1), [1903] 1 Ir. R. 353—M.R.

— Payment Off—Possession by Tenant for Life—Ground-rents.—A testator gave his annual ground-rents, secured on two estates, to trustees upon trust to collect and apply the same in reduction of a mortgage debt thereon, and subject thereto upon trust as to two-fifths of the annual income for J. for life, as to other two-fifths for P. for life, and as to the remaining one-fifth for L. for life. And he directed that on the decease of either J., P., or L., his or her share of the ground-rents should go to his or her children. And the testator empowered his trustees to sell the ground-rents, pay off the mortgage debt, invest the residuary proceeds of sale, and stand possessed thereof upon the trusts declared respecting the annual ground-rents should they remain unsold. The testator died in 1891. J. had three, and P. one, infant children entitled to the ground-rents in remainder. The trustees considered it advisable in the interest of all the beneficiaries to retain the ground-rents and apply the income in reduction of the mortgage debt thereon, which by January, 1901, was reduced to less than half. The mortgage debt became vested in the surviving trustee of the will:—Held, that the tenants for life were entitled to immediate possession of the ground-rents and to sell them to pay off the mortgage debt, and also to delivery up of the documents of title held by the surviving trustee, as trustee, relating to the ground-rents. Wilkinson, In re; Lloyd v. Steel, 85 L. T. 43—Cozens-Hardy, J.

Money "Required" for Discharging—Costs of Tenant for Life of Raising Amount.—The word "required" in section 11 of the Settled Land Act, 1890, is not confined to the case of the calling in of a mortgage by the mortgagee, but extends to all cases in which the money is reasonably required, having regard to the circumstances of the settled land:—Held, therefore, that a tenant for life who had effected a discharge of incumbrances on the settled land amounting in the aggregate to 26,043*l.*, bearing interest at 4 per cent., of which 15,000*l.* has been called in by the mortgagees, and had raised a new loan on the settled land for the same amount at a reduced rate of 3½ per cent., was entitled under the section to raise the costs of so doing by mortgage of the settled land. Clifford, In re; Scott v. Clifford, 71 L. J. Ch. 10; [1902] 1 Ch. 87; 85 L. T. 410; 50 W. R. 58—Buckley, J.

Expenses of Sewering and Paving—Charge upon Premises.—A tenant for life who has been required by an urban authority under section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, as owner of premises forming part of the settled land, to pay certain expenses for making up streets fronting, adjoining, or abutting thereon, and has done so with a view of keeping the charge constituted by section 257 of that Act alive for his own benefit, is entitled under section 11 of the Settled Land Act, 1890, to raise the money necessary for discharging such incumbrance and the costs thereof by mortgage of the settled land or any part thereof. Smith's Settled Estates, In re, 70 L. J. Ch. 273; [1901] 1 Ch. 689—Buckley, J.

11. CAPITAL MONEYS.

(a) Generally.

Redemption of Improvement Rentcharges—Money Paid by Tenant for Life for Reduction of Interest.—The Settled Land Act, 1887, s. 1, does not entitle a tenant for life to be repaid out of capital moneys a lump sum paid by him in obtaining a reduction of interest on terminable rentcharges created under the Improvement of Land Act, 1864. Verney's Settled Estates, In re, 67 L. J. Ch. 243; [1898] 1 Ch. 508; 78 L. T. 191; 46 W. R. 348—Kekewich, J.

Where an improvement rentcharge has been duly created under the Improvement of Land Act, 1864, for an improvement described by that Act in terms substantially identical with those used in section 25 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, the Court will without further enquiry treat the improvement as of a kind authorised by the Act of 1882, for the purpose of allowing redemption of the rentcharge out of capital money, under the Settled Land Act, 1887, s. 1. Ib.

Improvements—Fencing—Re-roofing.—The re-roofing of farm buildings with galvanised iron in place of thatch is an improvement authorised by the Settled Land Act, 1882, s. 25, sub-s. (xx). Ib.

Quære, whether the making of new fences, partly in place of old ones rotten through age, partly in order to divide a park for grazing purposes, is an improvement authorised by section 25, sub-s. (vi.). Ib.

(b) Investment.

Personal Settlement—Power to Purchase Land—Trust for Re-sale and Re-investment—"Money liable to be laid out in the purchase of land."—Money in the hands of trustees of a personal settlement, whereby the proceeds of sale of land are settled, with power to lay out the trust funds in the purchase of land to be made subject to the settlement, may be applied as capital money under section 33 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, such money being "liable to be laid out in the purchase of land" within the meaning of that section, which is not confined to money that must necessarily be so laid out. Soltan's Settled Estates, In re, 68 L. J. Ch. 39; [1898] 2 Ch. 620; 79 L. T. 335—North, J.

Selection by Tenant for Life—Fiduciary Position—Improper Investment—Interference by Court—Bona Fides.]—In the selection of investments for capital moneys under the Settled Land Acts, the tenant for life is in the position of an ordinary trustee who has a discretionary power, and it is not enough for the selected investment merely to fall within the description of investments authorised by those Acts, it must in other respects also be a proper and suitable investment, and one which a trustee would be justified in accepting. Hunt's Settled Estates, In re; Bulteel v. Lawdeshayne, 74 L. J. Ch. 759; [1905] 2 Ch. 418; 93 L. T. 333; 54 W. R. 119—Farwell, J.

Whether the tenant for life in selecting such investments has acted bona fide or not, the Court will, in the interest of the remaindermen, interfere to prevent improper or unsuitable investment, and in such a case the trustees of the settlement are not bound to comply with the direction of the tenant for life, but are justified in obtaining the direction of the Court. Ib.

Eight leasehold houses of the artisan class, held for a term of ninety-two years unexpired, at ground rents amounting to 50l. per annum, and which were described by the surveyor employed by the trustees as "badly planned, badly built, badly drained," and as likely to be "increasingly expensive to maintain in repair and keep occupied," held not to be a proper investment for capital money. Ib.

—Fiduciary Position—Discretion—Improper Investment—Interference by Court—Bona Fides.]

—Decision of FARWELL, J. (74 L. J. Ch. 759; [1905] 2 Ch. 418), affirmed on the facts; COLLINS, M.R., and COZENS-HARDY, L.J., stating that they entirely agreed with FARWELL, J.'s judgment on the point of law as to the duties of a tenant for life with regard to investments of capital moneys under the Settled Land Acts. Hunt's Settled Estates, In re; Bulteel v. Lawdeshayne, 75 L. J. Ch. 496; [1906] 2 Ch. 11; 94 L. T. 747—C.A.

English Settlement—Power to Lay out Money in Purchase of Land—Land in Scotland—Power to Purchase Specified Real Estate in Scotland—Improvements on Real Estate in Scotland—Jurisdiction.]—Where there is power in an English settlement to lay out capital moneys in purchase of land, and part of the settled estate consists of land in Scotland, capital moneys arising out of the settlement can be applied to improvements of such real estate. Gurney's Marriage Settlement, In re; Sullivan v. Gurney, 76 L. J. Ch. 609; [1907] 2 Ch. 496; 97 L. T. 687—Neville, J.

Purchase of Ground-rents.]—Where trustees are empowered to invest trust funds "in or upon the purchase of freehold ground-rents, . . . such ground-rents bearing a proportion to the rack-rents at the time of purchase of not more than one-tenth, and the property from which the said ground-rents shall arise being let for a term of not less than sixty years unexpired at the time of the purchase," the trust funds may be treated as capital moneys under the Settled Land Acts. Thomas, In re; Weatherall v. Thomas, 69 L. J. Ch. 198; [1900] 1 Ch. 319; 48 W. R. 409—Byrne, J.

Direction of Tenant for Life—Mortgage—Investigation by Trustees.]—Where a tenant for life of settled land directs the trustees of the settlement, under sub-section 2 of section 22 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, to invest capital moneys arising under the Act on a particular mortgage, the trustees are not bound to do anything with reference to it unless and until they are satisfied that the direction given by the tenant for life has been given upon a proper report as to value, and a proper investigation of the title to the property proposed to be comprised in the security, and upon proper advice as to the form of the mortgage; but upon being so satisfied they are bound to comply with such direction. Hotham, In re; Hotham v. Doughty, 71 L. J. Ch. 789; [1902] 2 Ch. 575; 87 L. T. 112; 50 W. R. 692—C.A.

Choice of Brokers—Trustees.]—The trustees of settled estates are entitled to select their own brokers for the purpose of investing capital moneys in their hands applicable for investment under the Settled Land Acts, and are not bound to employ the broker selected by the tenant for life for that purpose. Hotham, In re; Hotham v. Doughty (71 L. J. Ch. 68; [1901] 2 Ch. 790), followed. Cleveland's (Duke) Settled Estates, In re, 71 L. J. Ch. 763; [1902] 2 Ch. 350; 86 L. T. 678; 50 W. R. 508—Joyce, J.

After a sale of settled estates a tenant for life entered into negotiations with a firm of brokers for the investment of the proceeds of sale. The trustees refused to employ the broker nominated by the tenant for life, and desired the transaction to be carried through by their bankers, who would employ their own brokers. The tenant for life then asked that the trustees might be directed to apply the capital moneys in their hands in the purchase, through the brokers nominated by the tenant for life, of such investments, authorised by the Act, as the tenant for life might direct:—Held, that the trustees, and not the tenant for life, were the proper persons to select and employ a broker, just as they were the proper persons to select and employ a solicitor or banker. Ib.

Estates in England and Ireland Settled by One Settlement upon the same Trusts—Application of Proceeds of Sale of Irish Estates in Payment for Improvement of English Estates.]—The tenant for life of estates in England and Ireland which were settled by the same will and upon the same trusts, laid out considerable sums on improvements upon the estates in England in pursuance of a scheme approved of by the trustees of the settlement, and was desirous that the trustees should apply capital moneys in their hands, being the proceeds of the sale of part of the estates in Ireland, in repaying him the sums already laid out on such improvements, and in completing the improvements authorised by the scheme which was left at the chambers of the Judge. On a summons by the tenant for life against the trustees as defendants,—Held, that the capital moneys in the hands of the trustees arising from the sale of part of the estates in Ireland might be applied in payment for improvements on the estates in England in accordance with the principle of Mundy's Settled Estates, In re ([1891] 1 Ch. 399), and similar cases. Coote, In re; Coote v. Cadogan, 81 L. T. 535—North, J.

Trustees—Prospective Approval.]—Trustees under the Settled Land Acts may approve of a scheme for the improvement of settled land, although they have not at the time capital moneys in their hands; and if the tenant for life provides the moneys for carrying out the improvements, the trustees, on subsequently receiving capital money, may recoup the tenant for life what he has actually spent, subject to the proper certificate or order of the Court being obtained. Millard's Settled Estates, In re (62 L. J. Ch. 761; [1893] 3 Ch. 116), considered. Norfolk's (Duke) Estates, In re; Norfolk (Duke) v. Herries (Lord), 69 L. J. Ch. 236; [1900] 1 Ch. 461; 82 L. T. 613; 48 W. R. 328—Byrne, J.

Opinion of Court—No Capital Money Available—Jurisdiction—Improvements to House—Tenant in Occupation—Intention to Leave unless Works Executed—“Reasonably necessary or proper to enable the same to be let”—Working-class Dwellings—“The building of which in the opinion of the Court is not injurious to the estate”—Old Dwellings.]—Where a tenant for life applies for the opinion of the Court upon a question of construction whether certain works proposed to be executed on the settled land, and included in a scheme submitted to the trustees for their approval, are improvements within the meaning of the Settled Land Acts, 1882 to 1890, and does not ask the Court to approve the scheme in any way, the Court can, as a mere matter of construction, decide the questions raised, although at the time the trustees have no capital money in hand. Calverley's Settled Estates, In re, 73 L. J. Ch. 25; [1904] 1 Ch. 150; 89 L. T. 500; 52 W. R. 206—Farwell, J.

A tenant was induced to enter into possession of a house upon settled land by the promise of the tenant for life to execute certain works upon the premises. The works were subsequently included in a scheme submitted by the tenant for life to the trustees for their approval, with a view to the expenditure thereon being borne by capital money. The evidence showed that unless the works were executed it would not be possible to procure another tenant:—Held, that, upon the trustees being satisfied that unless the works were carried out the tenant would leave, the works in question would become “additions to or alterations in buildings reasonably necessary or proper to enable the same to be let,” within the meaning of section 13, sub-section (ii.) of the Settled Land Act, 1890. Ib.

Section 74, sub-section 1 (b) of the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1890, amended section 25 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, by enacting that improvements on which capital money might be expended should, in addition to “cottages for labourers, farm servants, and artisans whether employed on the settled land or not” (sub-section x.), include “any dwellings available for the working classes the building of which in the opinion of the Court is not injurious to the estate.” Upon an application by the tenant for life for the opinion of the Court whether the execution of certain necessary sanitary works to cottages occupied by members of the working classes, and already existing at the date of the amending Act, constituted a “reconstruction, enlargement, or improvement of any of those works” within the meaning of section 25, sub-section (xx.) of the Settled Land Act, 1882,—Held, that the limitation “the building of which in the opinion of the Court is not injurious to the estate” was only applicable where the erection of new working-class dwellings was proposed, and did not narrow the operation of sub-section (xx.) so as to exclude the works in question. Ib.

Section 25, sub-section (xx.) of the Settled Land Act, 1882, as above amended, does not apply to dwellings which, although capable of being adapted for, are not actually occupied by, members of the working classes. Ib.

Order of Court—Discretion.]—Where an application is made to the Court for an order under section 26 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, directing or authorising trustees to apply a specified portion of capital moneys in or towards payment for an improvement authorised by the Act, the Court must be satisfied by evidence that the proposed expenditure is proper and provident. The Court, in exercising the power conferred by section 26 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, does not act merely ministerially. Keck's Settlement, In re, 73 L. J. Ch. 262; [1904] 2 Ch. 22; 90 L. T. 113; 52 W. R. 362; 20 T. L. R. 156—Farwell, J.

Undertaking to Expend in Permanent Improvements—Small Sum in Court.]—A sum of 76l. lodged in Court as the purchase-money of lands taken under the Labourers (Ireland) Acts was ordered to be paid out to a tenant for life, after advertisements, on his undertaking to expend it in permanent improvements as if it was capital money under the Settled Land Acts. Coleraine Rural Council, In re; Lyle, ex parte, [1903] 1 Ir. R. 445—M.R.

A sum of 47l., lodged in Court as the purchase money of lands taken under the Labourers (Ireland) Acts, was ordered to be paid out to a tenant for life without requiring advertisements, on his undertaking to expend it in making an avenue to the mansion-house on the settled lands. Coleraine Rural Council, In re; Givcen, ex parte, [1903] 1 Ir. R. 447—M.R.

Scheme for the Execution of Improvements—Discretion of Trustees.]—Where under section 26 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, a tenant for life is desirous that capital money arising under that Act shall be applied towards payment for an improvement authorised by that Act, and submits a scheme for the execution of the improvement to the trustees of the settlement for approval, the discretion of the trustees is limited to considering—first, whether the scheme is for the benefit of settled land; secondly, whether the scheme for the execution of the improvement is a proper scheme; and thirdly, whether in proposing the scheme the tenant for life is acting within the restrictions imposed upon him by section 53. The trustees are not bound to take into consideration the number of previous schemes and the amount of capital moneys already expended; nor the general connection between the proposed improvements with improvements already sanctioned or the general policy of the tenant for life in improving the property; nor the proportion between the probable cost of the proposed improvements and the probable increased annual value of the estate; nor the amount of capital moneys in their hands and the relation between such amount and the value of the estate. Egmont's (Earl) Settled Estates, In re; Lefroy v. Egmont (Earl), 75 L. J. Ch. 649; [1906] 2 Ch. 151; 95 L. T. 187; 54 W. R. 504; 22 T. L. R. 430—Warrington, J.

Agreement to Advance Money for—Assignment of Provisional Order for Creation of Rentcharge—Action for Breach of Contract to Pay Instalments of Loan.]—A Land Improvement Society (only incorporated for making advances) agreed to advance to the owner of an estate 4,000*l.* for improvements on his lands on condition of having assigned to them a provisional order from the Board of Works, under the Act of 1864, sanctioning the proposed expenditure for improvements, and subject to the requirements of the Act, creating a rentcharge on the estate. The Board of Works sanctioned the loan, and the owner assigned the provisional order to the society which advanced 1,500*l.* on account of the loan by the specified instalments, but refused to make any further advances:—Held, that the owner was entitled to specific performance of his contract with the society, the transaction being in substance a purchase by the society of a rentcharge to be created in part by means of the purchase-money to be paid for it. Gorringe v. Land Improvement Society, [1899] 1 Ir. R. 142—M.R.

Developing Settled Land as Building Estate—Rebuilding Principal Mansion-house—Salvage—Dry-rot.]—Where a large sum has been expended by the tenant for life of settled estates upon the rebuilding and reconstruction of the principal mansion-house, owing to its threatened destruction by dry-rot, the Court will sanction the repayment to the tenant for life by the trustees, out of capital moneys in their hands, of a sum equal to one-half of the rental of the settled estate, pursuant to section 13, sub-section (iv.) of the Settled Land Act, 1890, but will decline to allow the repayment of any additional sum by way of salvage. Legh's Settled Estates, In re, 71 L. J. Ch. 668; [1902] 2 Ch. 274; 86 L. T. 884; 50 W. R. 570; 66 J. P. 600—Kekewich, J.

The Court will also sanction the payment by the trustees of the settlement of the instalments paid or payable to a corporation in respect of the expenses of making new streets on part of the settled land, but to the extent of capital only, not of interest. Ib.

Drainage.]—The Court sanctioned the payment out of capital moneys of the cost of new drains and of modernising leasehold houses with a view to enable the same to be more readily let, but refused to allow payment out of capital for repairs which were not structural or in the nature of a rebuilding. Thomas,

In re; Weatherall v. Thomas, 69 L. J. Ch. 198; [1900] 1 Ch. 319; 48 W. R. 409—Byrne, J.

Hot-water Supply.]—A was tenant for life under a will of house property, with remainder to B in fee. One of the houses having become vacant, A, in order to let it, but without consulting B, employed a contractor to put in a bath and hot-water supply and a new system of drainage, with the result that the house was let at a higher rent. A died shortly afterwards. The contractor, who had taken out administration to A as a creditor, sought to have the cost of the works charged on the inheritance as being "improvements" authorised by the Settled Land Acts. There was no capital money arising under the Acts:—Held, first, assuming the works were "improvements" authorised by the Acts, that there was no power under the Acts to charge the cost of executing them on the inheritance; secondly, that the new system of drainage was an "alteration in buildings reasonably necessary or proper to enable the same to be let" within section 13 (ii.) of the Act of 1890. Semble, that the bath and hot-water supply were also within the same sub-section. Standing v. Gray, [1903] 1 Ir. R. 49—M.R.

Electric-Light Installation.]—The installation of a system of electric lighting into tenantless houses situated in a fashionable neighbourhood and having nothing but a worn-out and ineffective gas service, with a view to rendering them more attractive to responsible tenants, is an "addition to the building" within the meaning of section 13, sub-section (ii.) of the Settled Land Act, 1890, and the cost of such an installation may be paid out of capital moneys in the hands of the trustees. Freake's Settlement, In re; Kinnaird (Lord) v. Freake, 71 L. J. Ch. 20; [1902] 1 Ch. 97; 85 L. T. 454; 50 W. R. 237—Joyce, J.

— "Additions" with a View of Letting.]—The installation of a system of electric lighting in a house is not an "addition" to the building within the meaning of section 13, sub-section (ii.) of the Settled Land Act, 1890, and the cost thereof cannot therefore be paid out of capital moneys in the hands of the trustees. Clarke's Settlement, In re, 71 L. J. Ch. 593; [1902] 2 Ch. 327; 86 L. T. 653; 50 W. R. 585—Buckley, J.

An "addition" to come within the sub-section must be a structural addition. Gaskell's Settled Estates, In re (63 L. J. Ch. 243; [1894] 1 Ch. 485), followed. Freake's Settlement, In re; Kinnaird (Lord) v. Freake (71 L. J. Ch. 20; [1902] 1 Ch. 97), not followed. Ib.

— — — Installation at Mansion-house.]—An "addition" to a building in sub-section ii. of section 13 of the Settled Land Act, 1890, means something in the nature of a building, a structural addition. The installation of a system of electric lighting in a house is not, though ornamental fittings be excluded, an addition to a house within the meaning of the sub-section, and the cost of it cannot be paid out of capital moneys in the hands of the trustees of the settlement. Gaskell's Settled Estates, In re (63 L. J. Ch. 243; [1894] 1 Ch. 485), and Clarke's Settlement, In re (71 L. J. Ch. 593; [1902] 2 Ch. 327), approved. Blaggrave's Settled Estates, Quere, per ROMER, L.J., and COZENS-HARDY, L.J., whether a dynamo-house erected at a little distance from the mansion-house for the purpose of the supply of electric light in the mansion-house could be called an "addition" to it within sub-section ii. of section 13. Ib.

— Engine-house — Electric Lighting of Mansion-house — Drainage — Baths and Lavatories.—An engine-house for engines to supply electric light to the principal mansion-house is not an improvement which is authorised by section 25 (xii.) of the Settled Land Act, 1882, and the cost of which can be paid for out of capital money. Mere improvements in sanitary arrangements for the more convenient occupation of the mansion-house are not within section 25. But where the system of drainage is imperfect from beginning to end, a new and complete system not confined to mere matters of convenience ought to be allowed. Leconfield's (Lord) Settled Estates, In re, 76 L. J. Ch. 562; [1907] 2 Ch. 340; 97 L. T. 163; 23 T. L. R. 573—Kekewich, J.

— "Enfranchisement" — Mortgage of Settled Land—Infant.—The purchase by the trustees of settled property of a freehold reversion of leaseholds comes within the meaning of the word "enfranchisement" in section 18 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, and the raising of money upon mortgage of the settled property in order to make such purchase may be authorised. Bruce, In re; Halsey v. Bruce, 74 L. J. Ch. 578; [1905] 2 Ch. 372; 93 L. T. 119; 54 W. R. 60—Kekewich, J.

Expenditure out of Capital—Hydrants and Hose for Extinguishing Fire—Garden Walls—"Reconstruction"—Laundry.—Hydrants and hose to extinguish fire at the principal mansion-house are an improvement within sub-section xiii. of section 25 of the Settled Land Act, 1882. Garden walls inclosing new garden ground are an improvement within sub-section vi. New garden walls replacing old walls are a "reconstruction," and are therefore within sub-section xx. A laundry 250 yards from the mansion-house is not part of the mansion-house, and cannot therefore be rebuilt under the Settled Land Act, 1890, s. 13, sub-s. iv. Dunraven's (Earl) Settled Estates, In re, 76 L. J. Ch. 591; [1907] 2 Ch. 417; 97 L. T. 336; 23 T. L. R. 691—Kekewich, J.

Mansion-house—Rebuilding—Limit of Amount—New Water-supply—"Annual rental of the settled land."—Whether proposed structural work is a "rebuilding" of a mansion-house within section 13, sub-section iv. of the Settled Land Act, 1890, or merely an addition to or alteration in the house within section 13, sub-section ii., is a question of fact in each case. In order to ascertain the "annual rental" of the settled land within the meaning of section 13, sub-section iv.—which limits the sum to be applied in rebuilding the mansion-house to one-half of the annual rental of the settled land—the cost of repairs ought not to be taken into account. Capital moneys may be applied for the purpose of obtaining a new water-supply to a mansion-house. Kensington Settled Estates, In re, 21 T. L. R. 351—Swinfen Eady, J.

— New Drainage and Water System.—Certain structural works executed in the principal mansion-house held to be a "rebuilding" of the house within the meaning of section 13 (iv.) of the Settled Land Act, 1890; and a new drainage system and new water supply to the house and other works were sanctioned as improvements under the Settled Land Acts. Dunham Massey Settled Estates, In re, 22 T. L. R. 595—Kekewich, J.

— "Additions to or alterations in buildings" — Detached Vinery and Peach-house—Rebuilding on Same Site.—Upon the negotiation for an occupation lease of the principal mansion-house upon settled land, the intending tenant agreed to take the lease on condition that the dilapidated lean-to vinery and peach-house, situated near the kitchen garden and five hundred feet away from the mansion-house, were rebuilt. The tenant for life accordingly pulled them down and removed them and built an entirely new vinery and peach-house on the same sites. Upon the application of the tenant for life under section 13, sub-section (ii.), and section 15 of the Settled Land Act, 1890, to have this expenditure recouped out of capital moneys,—Held, that the removal of an old building and the erection of a new one in its place was not an improvement authorised by the words of section 13, sub-section (ii.)—namely, "making any additions to or alterations in buildings reasonably necessary or proper to enable the same to be let." Leveson-Gower's Settled Estate, In re, 74 L. J. Ch. 540; [1905] 2 Ch. 95; 92 L. T. 836; 53 W. R. 524—Swinfen Eady, J.

— Short Occupation Lease—House Agent's Commission—Incidence.—The commission payable to house agents for procuring a tenant for the principal mansion-house, on a short occupation lease granted by the tenant for life under his Settled Land Act powers, is not such an expense as ought to be paid out of capital moneys. Ib.

— Structural Alterations—Rebuilding.—It was proposed to pull down a substantial portion of the mansion-house, consisting of some old and inconvenient rooms, and upon the site thereof to build other rooms; and, so far as they were available for the purpose, to use the old walls, both internal and external:—Held, that this would not be a "rebuilding" within the meaning of section 13 (iv.) of the Settled Land Act, 1890. Wright's Settled Estates, In re, 83 L. T. 159—Farwell, J.

— "Mill"—What included—Agricultural Purposes.—The words "other mills" in section 25, sub-section (xii.) of the Settled Land Act, 1882, mean mills for the purpose of developing the agricultural produce of the settled land, and do not include a silk and cotton mill. Harrington's (Earl) Settled Estates, In re, 75 L. J. Ch. 460; 94 L. T. 623—C.A.

— Addition to Shafting.—The lengthening of a shaft in a silk and cotton mill to enable it to be driven by steam as well as by water power is not an "addition to or alteration in" a building within section 13, sub-section (ii.) of the Settled Land Act, 1890. Ib.

Repairs Executed under Sanitary Notices—

Payment out of Capital or Income.]—Testator possessed of leaseholds for the unexpired residues of long terms bequeathed them to trustees upon trust out of the rents and profits thereof to pay the rents reserved by the leases and perform and observe the covenants and conditions in the leases, and subject thereto to hold the premises upon trust for the tenant for life, with remainders over. Sanitary notices were served requiring repairs or improvements of drainage, and, without any scheme having been submitted for approval, 415*l.* was expended for this purpose. Each lease contained a covenant which would oblige the lessee to do all the works which had been done:—Held, that the 415*l.* was payable out of income and not capital on the ground—first, that the tenant for life was tenant for life not of the rents of the leaseholds, but only of the balance of such rents after payment (inter alia) of the 415*l.*; and secondly, that the improvements having been executed without any scheme having been submitted, the case fell within section 15 of the Settled Land Act, 1890, under which the Court had a discretion, which it would exercise by directing the expenses to be paid in accordance with the settlor's directions contained in his will. Clarke v. Thornton (56 L. J. Ch. 302; 35 Ch. D. 307) distinguished. Partington, In re; Reigh v. Kane, 71 L. J. Ch. 472; [1902] 1 Ch. 711; 86 L. T. 194; 50 W. R. 388—Buckley, J.

Sanitary Works—Capital or Income—Permanent Improvements.]—Notice was served under the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, upon the trustees of certain settled property as the owners of the premises to do certain sanitary works upon the premises. The plaintiffs, who were the assignees of the life interest of the equitable tenant for life, agreed with the trustees that they would themselves do the work without prejudice to the question who was liable to pay for it, and they carried out the works, and spent in so doing 255*l.* 19*s.* 10*d.*:—Held, that, having regard to the arrangement that had been come to, the plaintiffs were in the circumstances of the case entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the trustees, and to have a declaration of charge on the corpus of the estate for so much of the money expended by them as had been spent upon permanent improvements, and for the costs of the application and of the appeal. Farnham's Trusts, In re; Law Union and Crown Insurance Co. v. Hartopp, 73 L. J. Ch. 667; [1904] 2 Ch. 561; 91 L. T. 780; 2 L. G. R. 1050—C.A. Reversing, 52 W. R. 535—Kekewich, J.

Semble, in determining how the expenses of repairs of this kind ought to be borne as between the tenant for life and the remainderman, the Court is not bound by any hard-and-fast rule, but has a discretion, and can enquire into the nature of the repairs and the circumstances of the case. Ib.

Re-flooring.]—By section 13, sub-section (ii.) of the Settled Land Act, 1890, improvements authorised by the Settled Land Act, 1882, include "making any additions to or alterations in buildings reasonably necessary or proper to enable the same to be let":—Held, that the words "reasonably necessary or proper" refer to something which, although not absolutely necessary, is a thing which a reasonable and prudent owner of a house would, if he were absolute owner, do to enable the house to be let. Held also, that the section contemplates not necessarily an intention to let immediately but a present intention to let either at the present or a future time, as distinguished from an intention to occupy. Stanford, In re; Stanford v. Roberts, 70 L. J. Ch. 203; [1901] 1 Ch. 440; 83 L. T. 756; 49 W. R. 315—Buckley, J.

Observations of CHITTY, J., in De Teissier, In re; De Teissier v. De Teissier (62 L. J. Ch. 552; [1893] 1 Ch. 153), as to the necessity of there being a present intention to let before an application under section 13, sub-section (ii.), could properly be made, explained. Ib.

On an application by a tenant for life of a building which was let out for offices that capital money might be applied in concreting and re-flooring the basement of the building, which was affected with dry rot, the Court sanctioned the application, notwithstanding that the rooms were all let, on the ground that the proposed concreting and re-flooring was an alteration which was necessary to make the building habitable, and was one which a reasonable and prudent owner would make if he were absolutely entitled to the property. Ib.

12. MINERALS.

Mining Leases—Rent in Kind—Rent Varying with Selling Price of Minerals—Concurrent Powers of Leasing—Conflict—Successive Tenants for Life—Alienation of Life Interest.]—Where under a settlement a power to grant mining leases authorises the reservation of a rent in kind, a rent varying with the selling prices of the minerals gotten may be reserved under such power, for the latter reservation, equally with the former, involves a variation in value, and has the additional advantage of being the more convenient of the two methods. Lonsdale (Earl) v. Crawford, 69 L. J. Ch. 686; [1900] 2 Ch. 687; 83 L. T. 312—Farwell, J.

The provisions of sub-section 2 of section 56 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, are provisions connected with the execution of any power under the Act—e.g. the consent of a third person—and not with the results of such execution, and therefore where a tenant for life has a power of leasing under the settlement and also under the Act, and exercises the former and more advantageous power, the provisions of the Act will not override the provisions of the settlement under which the donee derives a greater benefit from the execution of the power than he would have done if he had exercised the power conferred upon him as tenant for life under the Settled Land Act. Ib.

When such a tenant for life grants the leases "in exercise of every power or authority enabling him," he will, in the absence of any contrary intention, be presumed to have exercised the power earlier in time and more favourable to himself. Ib.

A power of leasing conferred by the settlement on each of several successive tenants for life "as and when he shall be entitled to the possession or the receipt of the rents and profits," is referable to the falling into possession of the several life interests, and not to the unincumbered beneficial enjoyment thereof, and is exercisable by the donee notwithstanding that he has aliened his life interest. Ib. And see Aldam's Settlement, In re, 71 L. J. Ch. 552; [1902] 2 Ch. 46; 86 L. T. 510; 50 W. R. 500—C.A.

Tenant for Life—Not Expressly Unimpeachable for Waste—Implied Authority to Commit—Open Mines—Mineral Lease—Portion of Rent to be Set Aside.—A tenant for life entitled to work mines may be properly described as not impeachable for waste in respect of the minerals got from such mines, whether the power arise from the terms of the settlement or from the circumstance that the mines are open. Chaytor's Settlement, In re, 69 L. J. Ch. 837; [1900] 2 Ch. 804; 49 W. R. 125—Stirling, J.

Where, therefore, a tenant for life, who is not expressly declared by the settlement under which he claims to be unimpeachable for waste in respect of minerals, grants a mining lease of open mines, he is only bound to set aside one-fourth part of the rent as capital money under section 11 of the Settled Land Act, 1882. Ib.

Open or Unopen—Tenant for Life—Lease—Lands Separated by Strip Belonging to Another Owner.—The statement of the law in Elias v. Snowdon Slate Quarries Co. (48 L. J. Ch. 811; 4 App. Cas. 454) to the effect that when a mine is once open, the sinking a new pit on the same vein is not necessarily the opening of a new mine, is inapplicable to a case where two portions of a settled estate are separated from each other by a strip of land belonging to a different owner, although one continuous seam of coal runs under the whole. If, therefore, the seam of coal has been worked under one portion of the settled estate in the lifetime of the settlor, but not under the other, the unworked portion cannot be held an "open mine," even when the tenant for life has acquired the coal under the intervening strip. The Court, in sanctioning a lease of the unworked portion, will consequently direct that three-fourths of the rent must be set aside and invested, according to section 4, sub-section iii. of the Settled Estates Act, 1877. Maynard's Settled Estate, In re, 68 L. J. Ch. 609; [1899] 2 Ch. 847; 81 L. T. 163; 48 W. R. 60; 63 J. P. 552—Kekewich, J.

13. HEIRLOOMS.

Family Portrait—Sale by Tenant for Life in Impediment Position through no Fault of his Own—Opposition by Remainderman—Discretion of Court.—A nobleman, tenant for life of settled estates to which but for a settlement, to which he had himself been a party, he would have been entitled as tenant in tail, was through no fault of his own in an impediment position and unable to marry. The sale of certain heirlooms, including family portraits, some of historical interest, would put him in a better pecuniary position, and he applied under the Settled Land Act, 1882, for leave to sell the same. A remainderman, who was older than the tenant for life, but who would succeed him as tenant for life in the event of his not having male issue, opposed the sale of any family portraits or any portraits of persons connected with the family:—Held, under the circumstances of the case, that the Court ought to allow the sale of all the heirlooms, including the portraits. • Townshend's Settlement, In re, 89 L. T. 691—Farwell, J.

Unique Family Jewel—"Hope" Diamond—Opposition of Remaindermen—Discretion of Court.—When a tenant for life applies to the Court under section 37 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, for leave to sell heirlooms, he must show some reason why the Court should sanction the sale. The fact that he has involved himself in pecuniary difficulties is not a circumstance which ought to have weight in deciding in favour of a sale. Hope's Settlement, In re (9 Times L. R. 506), approved. Hope's Settled Estates, In re; De Cetto v. Hope, 68 L. J. Ch. 625; [1899] 2 Ch. 679; 81 L. T. 141; 47 W. R. 641—C.A.

In considering whether its sanction should be given to a sale of heirlooms the Court ought to look at all the circumstances—the settlement, the intention of the settlor, and the wishes and interests of the family—and consider whether it would be for the benefit of the estate as a whole that the heirlooms should be sold. Observations of LINDLEY, L.J., in Ailesbury (Marquis) Settled Estates, In re (61 L. J. Ch. 116, 123; [1892] 1 Ch. 506, 536), explained. Ib.

Application of Proceeds of Sale of Heirlooms for Repair of Unsold Heirlooms.—A settlement made by will included several large estates, with three mansion-houses and the pictures, china, and furniture therein, which were settled as heirlooms. Two of the mansion-houses were sold under orders of Court made in pursuance of the provisions of the Settled Land Acts, and certain pictures, china, and furniture removed therefrom, for which no room could be found in the remaining mansion-house and the town house of the tenant for life for the time being, were warehoused. Of the other pictures for which room was found in the remaining mansion-house, some were in a bad state of repair, and required the expenditure of a considerable sum for their preservation. On an originating summons taken out by the tenant for life, to which the trustees of the settlement were made defendants, for authority to sell the warehoused heirlooms, and that the trustees might have liberty out of the proceeds of sale to repair the remaining heirlooms,—Held, that the tenant for life might sell the warehoused heirlooms, and that the trustees might, out of the proceeds of sale, spend such a sum as was necessary in repairing the remaining heirlooms, with liberty to apply in chambers as to the amount to be spent for that purpose. Waldegrave, In re; Waldegrave (Earl) v. Selborne (Earl), 81 L. T. 632—North, J.

14. COSTS.

Proceedings for Protection of Settled Estate—Salvage—Costs of Action made a Charge on Inheritance.—An action was brought by the tenant for life and the trustees of a settled estate to establish their right to a several fishery which formed part of the settled estate, and a decree was made, and a perpetual injunction granted with costs. The defendants being persons, these costs could not be recovered, whereupon the plaintiffs instituted a separate action to have the costs made a charge upon the inheritance, on the ground that the original action had been brought for the preservation of the fishery, and was in the nature of a salvage suit, and made defendants the next tenant for life, and the first tenant in tail in remainder. The defendants filed no defence and gave a consent for judgment:—Held, that the Court had jurisdiction to make the costs a charge on the inheritance, and that it was a proper case to exercise the jurisdiction. Hamilton v. Tighe, [1898] 1 Ir. R. 123—M.R.

1. VALIDITY.

Consideration—Prohibited Marriage—Deceased Wife's Sister.—By a settlement executed in contemplation of marriage between the settlor and his deceased wife's sister, the settlor gave her a life interest in property which was thereby vested in trustees. The ceremony of marriage was gone through, and after the settlor's death the trustees applied to have it determined whether the rents of the property were payable to the beneficiary or to the settlor's representative:—Held, that, the consideration being illegal, the gift of the life interest failed. Phillips v. Probyn, 68 L. J. Ch. 401; [1899] 1 Ch. 811; 80 L. T. 513—North, J.

Ayerst v. Jenkins (42 L. J. Ch. 690; L. R. 16 Eq. 275) distinguished on the ground that the trust here was being invalidated not at the instance of a person claiming through the settlor, but on an application by trustees for the Court's direction. Id.

Marriage with Deceased Husband's Brother—Invalid Marriage—Limitations after "solemnisation of the intended marriage"—Construction.]

—A widow, being about to marry her deceased husband's brother, executed a settlement by which her real estate was conveyed to trustees to hold to her use in fee "until the intended marriage" and "from and after the solemnisation of the said intended marriage" upon trust for her for life with remainder in fee to her younger son. She shortly afterwards went through the form of marriage with the deceased husband's brother, and subsequently died intestate:—Held, that the words "solemnisation of marriage" could be construed only as meaning a valid marriage, and that extrinsic evidence was not admissible to shew that this was not the intention of the parties; and that the heir-at-law was therefore entitled to the property. Neale v. Neale, 79 L. T. 629—C.A.

Personal Property—Perpetuity.—See col. 1814.

2. ANTE-NUPTIAL.

Agreement for Settlement—"Usual" Clauses—Covenant to Settle After-acquired Property.—According to the usage of conveyancers, a covenant by an intended wife to settle her after-acquired property is not a "usual" clause in a marriage settlement. Maddy, In re; Maddy v. Maddy, 71 L. J. Ch. 18; [1901] 2 Ch. 820; 85 L. T. 341—Joyce, J.

Ante-nuptial Settlements—Different Dates—After-acquired Property—Covenants to Settle—Conflicting Trusts—Intention—Evidence.—It is doubtful whether the principle of Legg v. Goldwire (Cas. t. Talb. 20), allowing marriage articles to be altered before marriage, applies to ante-nuptial settlements only partly executory. Cundry, In re; Mills v. Mills, 67 L. J. Ch. 641; [1898] 2 Ch. 504; 79 L. T. 438; 47 W. R. 137—North, J.

Each of two ante-nuptial settlements, besides settling different existing property, contained a covenant to settle the wife's after-acquired property. The second settlement, which contained no reference to the first, not only differed from the first in giving the husband a life interest, but gave the wife a general power enabling her to defeat the interest of her children. On becoming entitled to some property, the wife desired to have it transferred to the trustees of the second settlement on the trusts thereof, but neither she nor her husband gave, or offered to give or furnish, any evidence as to the circumstances under or the intention with which the second settlement was executed, and the matter was left without any explanation:—Held, that even assuming the settlements could, quoad the covenants in question, be treated as articles, which was doubtful, the Court would, in the absence of any such evidence and under the circumstances, decline as a matter of law to say that the second settlement overrode the first merely because it was later in date. Ib.

As to the presumable legal effect of the second settlement on the first, if no evidence had been obtainable, quære. Ib.

3. POST-NUPTIAL.

Post-nuptial—Reversionary Property of Wife to which Husband Entitled Jure Mariti—Ante-nuptial Parol Agreement to Settle—Recital of, in Settlement—Admissibility of Recital as Evidence—Trustee in Bankruptcy of Husband—Life Interest of Husband Determinable on Bankruptcy.]—By a post-nuptial settlement which recited an ante-nuptial parol agreement to settle, the husband covenanted that certain reversionary personal property of the wife, then an infant, to which he was entitled jure mariti, subject to his not dying before her without having reduced it into possession, should as soon as it became an interest in possession be settled on trust for the wife for life, with remainder, if the husband should survive her, in trust for him for life or until he should become bankrupt or alienate his interest, with remainder to the children and issue of the marriage. The husband survived the wife, and twenty-five years after the date of the settlement became bankrupt. The fund afterwards fell into possession:—Held, first, that, as against the trustee in bankruptcy claiming to set aside the settlement, the recital must be disregarded and the settlement treated as voluntary; but in the absence of evidence that the husband was either indebted at the date of the settlement or intended at that date to enter into a business of such a speculative nature as to be likely to result in financial embarrassment, the settlement ought not to be regarded as void in toto under the statute 13 Eliz. c. 5, as having been executed with intent to delay or defraud creditors. Pearson, In re; Stephens, ex parte (3 Ch. D. 807), dissented from. Holland, In re; Gregg v. Holland, 71 L. J. Ch. 518; [1902] 2 Ch. 360; 86 L. T. 542; 50 W. R. 575; 9 Manson, 259—C.A.

Held, secondly, assuming the settlement not to be fraudulent, upon the question whether it was for valuable consideration and could be enforced in equity, the recital was admissible in evidence against all persons claiming through the husband, including in this respect the trustee in bankruptcy; and the settlement taken as a whole constituted a sufficient memorandum in writing of a parol ante-nuptial contract in consideration of marriage within section 4 of the Statute of Frauds, and the contract could be enforced against the husband and his trustee in bankruptcy. Ib.

Per STIRLING, L.J., and COZENS-HARDY, L.J.—There might be a question whether the limitation of the husband's life interest contained in the settlement was valid against his trustee in bankruptcy, but the decision of the Court did not affect that question. Ib.

4. VOLUNTARY.

Expectancy—Spes Successionis—Effect.]—A voluntary settlement of an expectancy or spes successionis cannot be enforced. Meeke v. Kettlewell (13 L. J. Ch. 28; 1 Ph. 342), followed, and treated as not affected by Kelkewich v. Manning (21 L. J. Ch. 577; 1 De G. M. & G. 176). Ellenborough, In re; Torry-Law v. Burne, 72 L. J. Real Estate—Grant to Trustee—Refusal to Act—Disclaimer by Grantee—Revesting of Legal Estate—Validity of Settlement—Imposition of Trust.]—By a voluntary settlement of 1866, real estate was granted unto and to the use of a trustee upon certain trusts; the settlement contained the usual covenant for further assurance, but no power of revocation by the settlor. In 1867, the trustee executed a deed of disclaimer, and the settlor also purported to put an end to the settlement:—Held, that the settlement was not thereby rendered inoperative, but that the trust was imposed on the settlor, in whom, by operation of law, the estate had revested after the creation of the trust. Mallott v. Wilson, 72 L. J. Ch. 664; [1903] 2 Ch. 494; 89 L. T. 522—Byrne, J.

Statement in Preston's notes to Sheppard's Touchstone (7th ed.), p. 285, that "from the moment there is evidence of disagreement" between the grantor and grantee, "then in construction of law the grant is void ab initio, as if no grant had been made," discussed and explained. Ib.

Mortgage of Part of Settled Property—Marshalling for Payment of Mortgage—Priority of Cestui que Trust.]—In 1888, the settlor mortgaged part of the property comprised in the voluntary settlement; in 1899 the mortgage was paid off, and a transfer thereof taken for the benefit of the settlor's estate:—Held, that the beneficiaries under the settlement were entitled to have the settlor's estate marshalled, and the mortgage discharged out of the unsettled portion of his assets. Ib.

Disclaimer by Trustee—Revesting of Legal Estate—Validity of Settlement—Imposition of Trust.]—By a voluntary settlement of 1866, real estate was granted unto and to the use of a trustee upon certain trusts; the settlement contained the usual covenant for further assurance, but no power of revocation by the settlor. In 1867 the trustee executed a deed of disclaimer, and the settlor also purported to put an end to the settlement:—Held, that the settlement was not thereby rendered inoperative, but that the trust was imposed on the settlor, in whom, by operation of law, the estate had revested after the creation of the trust. Mallott v. Wilson, 72 L. J. Ch. 664; [1903] 2 Ch. 494; 89 L. T. 522—Byrne, J.

Statement in Preston's notes to Sheppard's Touchstone (7th ed.), p. 285, that "from the moment there is evidence of disagreement" between the grantor and grantee, "then in construction of law the grant is void ab initio, as if no grant had been made," discussed and explained. Ib.

Mortgage of Part of Settled Property—Marshalling for Payment of Mortgage—Priority of Cestui que Trust.]—In 1888 the settlor mortgaged part of the property comprised in the voluntary settlement; in 1899 the mortgage was paid off, and a transfer thereof taken for the benefit of the settlor's estate:—Held, that the beneficiaries under the settlement were entitled to have the settlor's estate marshalled, and the mortgage discharged out of the unsettled portion of his assets. Ib.

5. FRAUDULENT.

13 Eliz. c. 5.]—In considering whether a conveyance is fraudulent and void within the statute 13 Eliz. c. 5, the Court must look at the whole of the circumstances surrounding the execution of the conveyance and see whether it was in fact executed with the intent to defeat and delay creditors. Holland, In re; Gregg v. Holland, 71 L. J. Ch. 518; [1902] 2 Ch. 360; 86 L. T. 542; 50 W. R. 575; 9 Manson, 259—C.A. And see FRAUD AND MISREPRESENTATION, col. 873.

6. EXECUTORY TRUST.

Will—Direction to Duly and Properly Settle Share of Daughter Marrying—Provision for Children of Marriage.]—A testator gave his residuary estate to trustees upon trust for his sons and daughters who should attain twenty-one in equal shares, and declared that no daughter should be entitled in any case to receive her share, but should receive the income thereof only, with power to dispose of the principal by will, if unmarried; but in the event of any daughter marrying, then the testator especially empowered his trustees to see that her share was duly and properly settled upon her by deed, so that the same should be preserved for her separate use independently of her husband:—Held, that the share of a daughter marrying should be settled so as to give her a life estate for her separate use without power of anticipation, with trusts in favour of the children of the marriage, and the ultimate trusts usual in a settlement of the wife's property. Spicer, In re; Spicer v. Spicer, 84 L. T. 195—Buckley, J.

—Direction in—To be Settled on Each Marriage "strictly on my said daughters on their demise on their lawful issue share and share alike"—Executory Trust—Children of Marriage Attaining Twenty-one, or Daughters Marrying, only to take.]—A testator bequeathed to each of his four unmarried daughters a sum of stock to be settled on each marriage strictly on his said daughters and on their demise on their lawful issue, share and share alike, not to be subject to the control of any husband any of his daughters might marry; and in case of any of his said daughters dying and leaving no lawful issue who should attain twenty-one or get married, then such stock to be divided, share and share alike, among the survivors of his said four daughters. By a settlement made on the marriage of a daughter it was declared that the trustees of the will should hold the daughter's stock upon trust for her for life, and after her decease for all and every her child and children, if more than one, share and share alike. There were four children of the marriage; one of whom died in the lifetime of the father and mother under age and unmarried. The other three attained twenty-one and survived their father, but one of them died in the lifetime of their mother:—Held, that the trust was executory, and that the settlement should have been for the mother for life, and then for sons attaining twenty-one and daughters attaining that age or marrying, and that the fund was divisible in thirds amongst the children who attained age. Harris v. Loftus (No. 2), [1903] 1 Ir. R. 203—V.C.

Gift to Son—Provision that Property "in the event of marriage be put in strict settlement"—Jointure.]—A testator devised real and personal estate to his son, and directed that in the event of his son getting married this property should be put in strict settlement. The son died, leaving a widow and three infant daughters, one infant daughter having predeceased him. An action was brought to carry out the trusts of the will. A second infant daughter died before the hearing of an application for an order declaring the rights of the parties:—Held, that the two deceased daughters, having died before attaining age or marrying, could take no share in the property directed to be settled, and that the Court, in the exercise of its jurisdiction in carrying out the executory trust, had power to and would provide an annuity, by way of jointure for the widow, and that, subject thereto, the property should be held in trust for the two infant daughters in equal shares, as tenants in common in fee on their respectively attaining twenty-one or marrying, and that in case one only should attain that age or marry, then the whole in trust for that one. Wright v. Wright, [1904] 1 Ir. R. 360—M.R.

Marriage Articles—Covenant to Convey Real Estate to Use of Children of Marriage as Tenants in Common and their Respective Heirs and Assigns—Death of Son under Twenty-one—Survivorship to other Children.]—By an indenture made in consideration of his intended marriage with B., W. covenanted with a trustee that he would convey and settle certain real estate to the use of himself for life, with remainder to the use that B. should receive a jointure, with remainder to the use of the children of W. and B. in equal shares as tenants in common and their respective heirs and assigns. A son of the marriage died in the lifetime of W. under age and without having married:—Held, that the other children, all of whom had attained twenty-one, became entitled to the entire estate, subject to the life interest and jointure. Herring-Cooper v. Herring-Cooper, [1905] 1 Ir. R. 465—Barton, J.

7. SETTLEMENT BY INFANT.

Repudiation.]—By a marriage settlement made in 1891, when the intended wife was an infant, after reciting that it was agreed that a sum of 1,000*l.* to which the wife was then entitled under the will of her father, who died in 1875, should be settled, it was witnessed that the wife, with the privity and approbation of the husband, declared that the trustees of the will, in whom the fund was then vested, should hold it on the trusts declared by the settlement. The legacy was not expressed by the will to be given to the wife for her separate use. The wife on attaining twenty-one repudiated the settlement:—Held, that the fund was, notwithstanding the repudiation and section 2 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, bound by the settlement, by virtue of section 19 of the Act. Stevens v. Trevor Garrick (62 L. J. Ch. 660; [1893] 2 Ch. 307) followed. Queade's Trusts, In re (54 L. J. Ch. 786), disapproved. Buckland v. Buckland, 69 L. J. Ch. 648; [1900] 2 Ch. 534; 82 L. T. 759; 48 W. R. 637—Buckley, J.

Covenant to Settle After-acquired Property—Change of Domicil—Repudiation—Reasonable Time—Conflict of Laws.—The rule that an infant's contract is voidable, but binding upon the infant unless repudiated within a reasonable time after attaining majority, does not apply where the infant after entering into the contract acquires a foreign domicile and becomes under the law of the country of domicile incapable of validly ratifying the contract made by her. Viditz v. O'Hagan, 69 L. J. Ch. 507; [1900] 2 Ch. 87; 82 L. T. 480; 48 W. R. 516—C.A.

An infant executed marriage articles in 1864, and married an Austrian and became domiciled Austrian. Under the law of Austria she had power to revoke but no power of irrevocably affirming any marriage contract made by her:—Held, that the marriage articles were rendered void by a repudiation by her which took place in 1893. Van Grutten v. Digby (32 L. J. Ch. 179; 31 Beav. 561) distinguished. Ib. And see INFANT, col. 1009, and cols. 2277–2283.

8. CONSTRUCTION.

Gift to A. for Life and to "children or child or remoter issue" at his Death—Substitutionary Gifts per Stirpes.—In a settlement where property is given in default of appointment to "the children or any the child or remoter issue" of A. on the happening of certain contingencies, a child living at the happening of such contingencies will take to the exclusion of his issue. Tand's Settlement, In re; Stanfield v. Keene, 89 L. T. 606—Farwell, J.

Provision for "all and every the child and children or grandchild" of a Named Person Living at the Death of the Survivor of Husband and Wife—Right of Grandchildren to Take in Competition with Children.—Under a gift to "all and every the child and children or grandchild" of a named person, where there is no context requiring the word "or" to be read "and," a grandchild (whether his parent be living or dead) cannot take in competition with a child of the named person, if there be one of that class living at the period of distribution. Coley, In re; Gibson v. Gibson, 70 L. J. Ch. 153; [1901] 1 Ch. 40; 83 L. T. 671; 49 W. R. 165—Byrne, J.

Trust for Children of Marriage—No Words of Limitation—Intention—Equitable Fee—Life Estates.—Real and personal estate were vested in the trustees of an ante-nuptial settlement, their heirs, executors, and administrators, upon the usual trusts in favour of the intended husband and wife and the children of the marriage. The trusts of the settlement contained apt words referable to the real estate, a power of advancement in the ordinary form, and an ultimate gift over to the settlor on failure of children of the marriage, but words of limitation had been omitted from the trust for the children in default of appointment, an event which happened:—Held, that there was sufficient on the face of the deed to show an intention that the children should take the equitable fee-simple, and not merely life estates. Tringham's Trusts, In re; Tringham v. Greenhill (73 L. J. Ch. 693; [1904] 2 Ch. 487), followed. Oliver's Settlement, In re; Evered v. Leigh, 73 L. J. Ch. 62; [1905] 1 Ch. 191; 53 W. R. 215; 21 T. L. R. 61—Farwell, J.

"Trusts aforesaid"—Life Interest to Unmarried Niece with Reversion to Children—Power to Appoint Life Interest to Surviving Husband—Gifts Over in Default of Children—Remoteness—Independent Alternative Trusts—Validity of Ultimate Trusts.—A testatrix, after settling a sum of money upon trusts for M. (a married niece) for life with power to appoint the income to any husband who might survive her for his life, with remainder to her children, if any, at twenty-one, settled three other sums of money upon such trusts and with such powers in favour of E., B., and J. (three unmarried nieces) and their respective husbands and children, if any, as should correspond with the preceding trusts and powers in favour of M. and her husband and children, if any. And the testatrix directed that, in case none of her said nieces should have any child who should become entitled to the said principal sums under "the trusts aforesaid," then all the said principal sums should, "subject to the preceding trusts," be held in trust for a class of persons, ascertained within due limits, in such shares, &c., as the last survivor of the four nieces should by will appoint. M. died without having had a child, and E., B., and J. all died unmarried; and B., the last survivor of them, by her will executed the power in favour of the class mentioned in the ultimate trust. On the death of B., the question arose whether the ultimate trust or gift was not void for remoteness on the ground that, if the power to appoint to husbands had been exercised, the period for ascertaining the class in the ultimate gift might have infringed the rule against perpetuities because the husbands need not necessarily have been born in the lifetime of the settlor:—Held, that the words "the trusts aforesaid" in the ultimate gift were not restricted to the previous trusts actually declared, but would include a trust created by the exercise of the power to appoint to husband. But held, that it was a case of alternative independent gifts within the principle of Monypenny v. Dering (22 L. J. Ch. 313; 2 Do G. M. & G. 145) and Longhead v. Phelps (2 W. Bl. 704); and that, inasmuch as the power in favour of husbands was never exercised, the ultimate gift in the events which had happened was valid, and therefore the appointment made by B. was good. Bowles, In re; Page v. Page, 74 L. J. Ch. 338; [1905] 1 Ch. 371; 92 L. T. 556—Farwell, J.

Settled Shares—Accruer—“Survivors” read “others”—Survivorship of Estates or Interests.]—By a settlement, freehold lands were assured to trustees upon trust for the seven children of the settlor's brother-in-law during their respective lives as tenants in common, and from and after their respective deaths the share of each was to go to his or her children, sons at twenty-one, daughters at twenty-one or marriage, with a proviso that in case one or more of the seven children should die without issue or, leaving issue, such issue should being sons die under twenty-one, or being daughters should die under that age without being or having been married, then the original and accrued share of the person so dying were to go and be divided “unto and equally between the survivors and survivor of them” the seven children “and their her and his issue respectively for such estates and interests in such shares and proportions and in such manner in all respects as the original shares” of the seven children “and their issue respectively are hereinbefore directed to be divided.” Then followed an ultimate gift over in the event of the total failure of the previous trusts. One of the seven children died in 1865 leaving a son who attained twenty-one and died in 1886. Another died in 1897, having had children, some of whom were living. Upon the death without issue of another of the seven children in 1901,—Held, that, as the original gift in each case was to the parent for life with remainder to the children at twenty-one or marriage, without any necessity for the children to survive their parent or any one else, the vesting of the accruing shares, which were directed to devolve in the same manner as the original share, was not contingent upon the children surviving any one of the tenants for life; and, consequently, that the words “survivors and survivor” must be taken as implying a survivorship not of individuals, but of estates or interests, and must be construed as “others.” Billham, In re; Buchanan v. Hill (70 L. J. Ch. 518; [1901] 2 Ch. 169), distinguished. Friend's Settlement, In re; Cole v. Allcot, 75 L. J. Ch. 14; [1906] 1 Ch. 47; 93 L. T. 739; 54 W. R. 295—Farwell, J.

Eldest Son—Mortgage by Tenant for Life and Tenant in Tail—Child other than Son becoming Entitled to Estate under Settlement—Disentail—Portions for Younger Children—Power of Appointment—Revocation.]—By marriage settlement of 1839 an estate was settled on H. (the husband) for life, remainder to the first and every other son of the marriage successively in tail male. The estate was charged with a sum of money (subject to life interests of H. and his wife therein) in favour of the children of the marriage “other than the son of the marriage who under the limitations of the settlement should become entitled to the lands” in such shares as H. and M. (the wife) or the survivor of them should appoint, and in default of appointment in trust for such children equally, the shares to be vested at twenty-one or marriage. There was a hotchpot clause in the settlement. There were four children of the marriage—A., J., and C., sons, and one daughter. By deed-poll of 1874 (after reciting the death of C. intestate) H. and M. appointed (subject to their life interests therein) the sum of 5,000*l.*, portion of the trust fund, to the daughter, and appointed the residue of the fund to J., the second son. The deed-poll contained a power of revocation over the share thereby appointed to J. A., the eldest son, attained age, and joined with his father in mortgaging the estate for 1,100*l.* in 1876, and for 2,000*l.* in 1880, the lands having been disentailed by them for the purpose of carrying out the two loans, and to that extent only. J., the second son, joined in the mortgage of 1880 for the purpose of covenanting with the mortgagee that the principal sum of 2,000*l.* thereby secured, and interest thereon, should be paid before and have priority over his share and interest in the trust fund charged on the estate. The father, H., covenanted that so long as any money remained due on the mortgage security he would not exercise the power of revocation contained in the deed-poll of 1874. A., the eldest son, died in 1883, intestate and unmarried. In 1884 H. and J. disentailed the estate. H. died in 1896 (having survived his wife), and thereupon J. became owner in fee of the lands subject to incumbrances. By his will H. purported to revoke the appointment contained in the deed-poll of 1874 in favour of J., of the residue of the trust fund (after setting apart 5,000*l.*, the portion for the daughter), but made no further appointment of it:—Held, first, that A. had become entitled to the estate under the limitations of the settlement by reason of joining with his father in charging the inheritance, and that consequently his representatives could not share in the trust fund charged on the estate in favour of the other children; secondly, that the revocation by H. in his will of the share appointed to J. by the deed-poll of 1874 was invalid so far as it would prejudice the security of the mortgagees of 1880, but was otherwise valid as between the parties entitled under the settlement of 1839 to the trust fund; and that the residue thereof (after providing for the 5,000*l.* appointed to the daughter of the marriage) went as unappointed to J., and the representatives of C., the share of J. therein being bound by his covenant in the mortgage-deed of 1880. Rooke v. Plunkett, [1902] 1 Ir. R. 299—M.R.

Equitable Estate—Words of Limitation—Want of Word “heirs”—Absolute Interest.]—A settlement of land upon trust for a number of persons in remainder as tenants in common without the use of the word “heirs” will confer the equitable fee where the intention to do so is sufficiently indicated on the face of the instrument. Tringham's Trusts, In re; Tringham v. Greenhill, 73 L. J. Ch. 693; [1904] 2 Ch. 487; 91 L. T. 370; 20 T. L. L. 657—Joyce, J.

Scoble, the Court would in such a case rectify the deed by the insertion of the word “heirs,” if necessary, in order to effectuate the obvious intention of the settlor. Prugh v. Drew (17 W. R. 988) followed. Ib.

—Omission of Word “heirs”—Absolute Interest.]—Where a settlor by deed conveys an equitable estate in fee-simple to trustees without words of limitation, in order that the equitable fee-simple may pass to them, it is necessary that the settlor should either refer to other words in that or some other deed which shew an intention that the absolute interest is to pass to them, or that he should use words which shew that the trustees are to take all the estate and interest that the settlor had. Irwin, In re; Irwin v. Parkes, 73 L. J. Ch. 832; [1904] 2 Ch. 752; 53 W. R. 200—Buckley, J.

A settlor by a post-nuptial settlement assigned to trustees, without the words "and their heirs" (inter alia), certain freehold property to which he was entitled for an equitable estate in fee-simple, upon trust for sale and investment and to pay the income to the settlor's wife for life and then to the settlor and then for their children. The settlement contained no words referring to any gift of an absolute interest nor any words to shew that the settlor was disposing of his whole estate:—Held, that on the death of the settlor and his wife their children were only entitled to the property during the joint lives of the trustees and the life of the survivor. Hudson, In re; Kühne v. Hudson (72 L. T. 892), followed. Ib.

Equitable Estate in Fee—Words of Limitation.]

—By a voluntary settlement executed in 1870, lands held in fee-farm were conveyed to trustees and their heirs in trust, after the death of the settlor, to pay his wife out of the rent and profits a clear annuity of 100*l.* for her life, and to apply the balance for the maintenance of the settlor's children during their minority. In case the settlor's eldest son T. should die or marry without prescribed consent before attaining twenty-one, his share of the land was to go to the younger son G.; and it was provided that after the death of the settlor's wife, "her 100*l.* a year, or half the rents and profits of" the lands, should be paid to G. On G.'s death or marriage without consent under twenty-one, his "share and proportion of" the lands was to go to T., and if both sons died, or married without consent under twenty-one, the lands were to belong to the settlor's daughters, their heirs and assigns, as tenants in common:—Held, first, that G. was entitled to a rentcharge of 100*l.* a year in any event, with the superadded right of taking half the rents and profits whenever the rental exceeded 200*l.* a year; and secondly, that G. took an estate for life only in the rentcharge. Bennett's Estate, In re, [1898] 1 Ir. R. 185—Kennedy, J.

Power of Jointuring—Appointment of Jointure on First Marriage—Divorce—Appointment to Second Wife—Public Policy.]—By a resettlement of family estates a tenant for life was empowered "at any time or times either before or after his marriage with any woman by any deed or deeds . . . to appoint to any woman whom he may so marry for her life or for any less period any yearly rentcharge or rentcharges by way of jointure," not exceeding in the events which happened the yearly sum of 2,500*l.*, and it was declared that the power of jointuring might be exercised as often as he should marry. The tenant for life under this power appointed a yearly sum of 2,500*l.* to a lady whom he married in 1869. She obtained a divorce from him in 1883, and he married a second wife in 1888, and purported to appoint to her under the same power a yearly sum of 2,500*l.* On the death of the tenant for life the validity of the jointure of the second wife was disputed:—Held, that the appointment of the second jointure was authorised by the power in the resettlement, and that that power was not invalid as being against public policy, notwithstanding that it enabled the tenant for life to appoint a jointure after a dissolution by divorce of his first marriage. Cartwright v. Cartwright (22 L. J. Ch. 841; 3 De G. M. & G. 982) distinguished. Marlborough (Dowager Duchess) v. Marlborough (Duke), 70 L. J. Ch. 244; [1901] 1 Ch. 165; 83 L. T. 578; 49 W. R. 275—C.A.

"Income"—Outgoings—Tithe—Rentcharges—Repairs.]—The plaintiff, a married woman, was entitled, under a deed dated in 1867, to the surplus rents and profits of certain estates for her life for her separate use without power of anticipation, but subject to a proviso that if she should succeed to an income in her own right of 8,000*l.* or more per annum for her separate use, then her life interest in the estates should absolutely cease and determine, and the property should be held upon trust for her husband:—Held, that in estimating the income the amount coming to the married woman for her own benefit after payment of all proper charges must be ascertained as fairly as possible; that the tithes, rentcharges, and reasonable abatements of rent were properly deducted; that the occupation rent of unlet farms and the mansion-house in which the married woman lived could not be regarded as income; and the defendant had not made out that the plaintiff had succeeded to an income in her own right of 8,000*l.* or more per annum. Bateman (Lady) v. Faber, 83 L. T. 7; 48 W. R. 625—C.A.

Failure of Trusts—Marriage Portion—Resulting Trust.]—A father, on the marriage of his daughter C., paid over to the trustees of the settlement a sum of 800*l.* upon trust for the husband and his wife C. for their lives and the survivor for life, with remainder to the children of the marriage; and if the wife should die leaving the husband surviving, and there being no children, to pay said sum to the husband. The father also covenanted, after securing to each of his children not yet provided for a like sum of 800*l.*, to dispose of the residue of his property so that on the death of himself and his wife it should be divided equally among his surviving children, and the share of the said C. should be and enture to the like trusts, intents, and purposes as were expressed concerning the said sum of 800*l.* In the event of the husband not surviving C. and there being no issue (which happened), there was no trust expressly declared in the settlement concerning the trust property. By his will the father bequeathed the residue of his property in accordance with the terms of the covenant:—Held, that the 800*l.* should be regarded as a marriage portion, given by the father to his daughter C. on her marriage, as a provision for her, and that C. took both the 800*l.* and the share of her father's residue absolutely, there being a resulting trust in her favour. Doyle v. Crean, [1905] 1 Ir. R. 252—Barton, J.

9. INVESTMENT.

Authorised Security—Depreciation—Tenant for Life and Remainderman—Apportionment of Loss—Period of Account.]—In the case of a loss arising from the depreciation of an authorised security of trust funds, in order to apportion the loss between the tenant for life and the remainderman, an account should be taken from the date when it is first ascertained that the security is insufficient to the time when the security was realized, the tenant for life bringing into hotchpot any sums which he has received as interest between these dates. Phillimore, In re; Phillimore v. Herbert, 72 L. J. Ch. 591; [1903] 1 Ch. 942; 88 L. T. 765—Swinfen Eady, J.

10. PROTECTOR.

Owner of Prior Estate—Void Accumulation Clause—Persons Deprived of Accumulations—Heir—Disentailing Deed.—Land was devised to trustees during the lives of A, B, and C and the survivors and survivor, upon trust out of the rents and profits to pay annuities to them and accumulate the surplus till the death of the last survivor for the benefit of testator's grandchildren, and on the determination of the trustees' estate the land was devised to J. in tail, with remainders over. After twenty-one years, the trust for accumulation having become void under the Accumulations Act, 1800, the heir took the surplus rents till the death of the surviving annuitant:—Held, that the heir was not protector of the settlement under the Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833, because excluded by section 27 of that Act, nor could the grandchildren be considered as persons "who would have been entitled if no absolute disposition had been made" within the meaning of section 22 of that Act, because the effect of the Accumulations Act, 1800, was not to make but to avoid a disposition. Consequently there was no protector, and a disentailing deed executed by J. was effectual. Hughes, In re, 75 L. J. Ch. 784; [1906] 2 Ch. 642; 95 L. T. 379—Swinfen Eady, J.

Disentailing Assurance—Consent of Protector Given after Death of Tenant in Tail—Separate Assurance—Enrolment.—Where a tenant in tail effects a disentailing assurance under the provisions of the Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833, it is immaterial that the consent of the protector of the settlement be given by his execution of the same assurance after the death of the tenant in tail, provided that he gives it before the end of the six months within which the assurance must be enrolled. Piers' Estate, In re (14 Ir. Ch. 452), applied. Whitmore-Searle v. Whitmore-Searle, 76 L. J. Ch. 576; [1907] 2 Ch. 332; 97 L. T. 160—Kekewich, J.

Office of—Survivorship.—Where a settlor under section 32 of the Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833, nominates two or three persons to be protectors of an entail, the office is one which (in the absence of any expression of a contrary intention) survives on the death or retirement of any of the persons nominated. Bell v. Holby (42 L. J. Ch. 266; L. R. 15 Eq. 178) approved. Bailey, Worthington & Cohen's Contract, In re, 77 L. J. Ch. 1; [1903] 1 Ch. 26; 98 L. T. 143—C.A.

11. TENANT FOR LIFE AND REMAINDERMAN.

Several Estates—Several Charges—Interest Accrued during life Tenancy—Sale of Part of Settled Estates—Proceeds Applied in Payment off of Charges and Arrears of Interest—Liability to make good Arrears out of Subsequent Income.—Apart from any question arising upon the special terms of the instrument creating the settlement, a tenant for life must keep down the interest accruing during his lifetime on all paramount incumbrances to the extent of and out of the rents and profits received by him. If the current rents are insufficient to keep down the interest, subsequent rents arising during his life are applicable to liquidate arrears accruing during the same life tenancy—Revel v. Watkinson (1 Ves. sen. 93), Tracy v. Hereford (Lady) (2 Bro. C.C. 128), and Caulfield v. Maguire (2 Jo. & Lat. 141). Honywood v. Honwood, 71 L. J. Ch. 174; [1902] 1 Ch. 347; 86 L. T. 214—Byrne, J.

Where several estates are included in the same settlement, the tenant for life is bound out of the whole rents and profits to keep down the interest on charges on all the estates—Freuen v. Law Life Assurance Society (65 L. J. Ch. 787; [1896] 2 Ch. 511) and Hotchkys, In re; Freke v. Calmady (55 L. J. Ch. 546; 32 Ch. D. 408). Ib.

Upon principle the tenant for life of several estates included in the same demise remains liable as between himself and the remaindermen to make good arrears of interest accrued during his life tenancy and paid out of capital out of subsequent rents received by him from any of the estates, even although the charge in respect of which the arrears have arisen has been paid off by means of a sale of a part of the property. Tewart v. Lawson (43 L. J. Ch. 673; L. R. 18 Eq. 490), Norton v. Johnstone (55 L. J. Ch. 222; 30 Ch. D. 649), and Green, In re; Baldock v. Green (58 L. J. Ch. 157; 40 Ch. D. 610), distinguished. Ib.

Railway Bonds—Cumulative Interest—Payment out of Net Earnings of any Year Remaining Available—Deficiency of Earnings—Arrears of Interest—Sale of Bonds—Apportionment of Proceeds as between Capital and Income.—Bonds of a company were settled on trust for one for life, with remainders over. They contained a proviso for payment of interest "accumulative" at a rate per cent. twice in each year "as and when earned out of any net earnings of any year remaining after" certain other payments, "and if in any year the net earnings so remaining available . . . shall not be sufficient to pay such interest in full . . . any deficiency shall . . . be paid . . . out of the net earnings of any subsequent year or years as and when there shall be any net earnings available for such purpose." Coupons attached stated interest to be payable "only as and when earned out of any net earnings available." There were never sufficient earnings to pay the interest in full. The bonds were sold in the lifetime of the tenant for life for a sum not sufficient to pay both principal and arrears of interest:—Held, as between tenant for life and remainderman, that the sum was not apportionable between capital and income, but must be treated wholly as capital. Taylor, In re; Matheson v. Taylor, 74 L. J. Ch. 419; [1905] 1 Ch. 734; 92 L. T. 558; 53 W. R. 441—Buckley, J.

Apportionment of Trust Fund—Tenant for Life—Remaindermen—Mortgage—Arrears of Interest—Sale—Deficient Security—Interest and Capital.]—Trust funds vested in the trustees of a marriage settlement included a mortgage of leasehold property. The mortgage interest fell much into arrear, and finally the security was sold at a considerable loss:—Held, that the amount recovered must be apportioned between capital and income, represented by the remaindermen and the tenant for life, in proportion to the amounts due at the date when it was recovered in respect of arrears of interest and in respect of principal; as between successive tenants for life, the amount attributed to interest being apportioned in proportion to the arrears due to them respectively. So held, following Moore, In re (54 L. J. Ch. 432), and Lyon v. Mitchell (34 L. J. N.C. 135; W. N. (1899), 27). Alston, In re; Alston v. Houston, 70 L. J. Ch. 869; [1901] 2 Ch. 534—Kekewich, J.

— Reversionary Fund.]—The rule in Howe v. Dartmouth (Earl) (7 Ves. 137), and the corollary established in Chesterfield's (Earl) Trusts, In re (52 L. J. Ch. 958; 24 Ch. D. 643), respecting the apportionment between tenant for life and those absolutely entitled in remainder of a reversionary fund which falls into possession, has no application where the fund is subject to the trusts of a marriage settlement. Van Straubenzee, In re; Boustead v. Cooper, 70 L. J. Ch. 825; [1901] 2 Ch. 779; 85 L. T. 541—Cozens-Hardy, J. And see ESTATE, col. 795, and TENANT FOR LIFE AND REMAINDERMAN.

12. TENANT IN TAIL.

Mortgage by—Proviso for Re-conveyance on Redemption to Uses of Original Settlement—Absolute Bar of Estate Tail.]—Under a settlement of real estates made in 1831, A, in 1884, was tenant for life in possession, B first tenant in tail, and C second tenant in tail in reversion. B being a lunatic, C, with the consent of A, disentailed his interest and re-settled the estates, with a power to charge the same, which was exercised. In 1893 B, who was then tenant in tail in possession, acting by C as his committee, mortgaged the estates with a proviso that on redemption they should be "reconveyed by the mortgagees to the uses, upon the trusts and with and subject to the powers and provisions in and by the settlement (of 1831) declared and contained":—Held, that, notwithstanding that the estate tail was barred by virtue of section 21 of the Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833, the proviso for redemption in the mortgage of 1893 was valid and operative, so that the uses created by the settlement of 1831 were revived subject to the re-settlement of 1884. Oxenden's Settled Estates, In re; *Oxenden v. 13. WIFE'S PROPERTY.

Ultimate Trust for Wife's Next-of-Kin—"Die without having been married"—Infant Child.]

By a marriage settlement a sum of money to which the wife was entitled on the death of her mother was settled upon trust to pay the income to the husband for life, then to the wife for life, and after the death of the survivor in trust for the children and remoter issue as the husband and wife or the survivor should appoint, and in default of appointment to the children equally, if sons on attaining twenty-one, or if daughters on attaining that age or marrying. In default of issue attaining vested interests, the fund was to be held in trust for the wife absolutely if she survived her husband, but if she predeceased him, then upon such trusts as she should by will appoint, and in default of appointment in trust for the person or persons who, under the statutes for the distribution of the effects of intestates, would on the decease of the said wife have been entitled thereto, if she had died possessed thereof intestate and without having been married. There were three children of the marriage, all of whom died under age and unmarried. No appointment was made by husband or wife. The wife predeceased her husband, leaving him and two of the three children surviving, and her only next-of-kin other than the children being her mother and two brothers. The husband survived his wife's mother and his two children, and married again. By his will he left all his property to his second wife, and appointed her executrix. On his death the fund became distributable:—Held, that the fund went to the persons who would have been entitled thereto if the first wife had died a spinster, and not to her infant children. Stoddart v. Saville (63 L. J. Ch. 467; [1894] 1 Ch. 480) distinguished. Deane's Trusts, In re; Dudley v. Deane, [1900] 1 Ir. R. 332—M.R.

— "Die unmarried"—Widow's Settlement.]

—By a settlement executed prior to the second marriage of M. (then a widow) a fund, which was her property, was assigned to trustees in trust for herself for life for her separate use with power of appointment after her death. In default of appointment the income was to be paid to W. (the intended husband) for life, and after his death the principal was to go to such child or children of M. by W., or by her former husband, in equal shares, as should be living at the death of W. In case there should be no child or other issue of M. entitled under the previous provisions of the settlement, there was an ultimate trust in favour of "such person or persons as would, under the Statute of Distributions, be entitled to the personal estate of M. in case she had died intestate and unmarried." M. did not exercise the power given her by the settlement. She had no child by W. She had one son by her first marriage, who survived her, but died before W., without leaving issue:—Held, that "unmarried" in the ultimate trust of the settlement meant "discovered at the time of death," and that consequently the representatives of the deceased son of the first marriage were entitled to the fund. Woodhouse's Trusts, In re, [1903] 1 Ir. R. 126—M.R.

Children Dying before taking Vested Interests

—Ultimate Trust—"Die without ever having been married"—Absence of Context.]—By a marriage settlement a wife's trust funds were, in the event of her death in her husband's lifetime and in default of children living to attain a vested interest therein under the previous trusts, directed to be held upon trust for such person or persons of the blood and kindred of the wife as under the Statutes for the Distribution of the Estates of Intestates would have been the next-of-kin of the wife in case she had died intestate and without ever having been married. The wife died in her husband's lifetime. None of the children of the marriage lived to attain a vested interest, but some of them survived their mother:—Held, that the words of the ultimate trust were clear and unambiguous, that they must therefore be construed according to their ordinary and natural meaning, and that the children were accordingly excluded. Smith, In re; Wilkins v. Smith, 72 L. J. Ch. 184; [1903] 1 Ch. 373; 87 L. T. 740; 51 W. R. 217—Swinfen Eady, J.

Wilson v. Atkinson (33 L. J. Ch. 576; 4 De G. J. & S. 455) was a decision upon the context of a particular instrument, and does not lay down any general rule for the construction of all marriage settlements, irrespective of the nature of the provisions in them. Ib.

Conveyance by Wife of all her Property Acquired during Marriage—Policy of Insurance taken out by Intended Husband, in Anticipation of Marriage, on his Life, Payable to Wife if Living.]—By ante-nuptial contract of marriage C D, the intended wife, conveyed to trustees, for the purposes specified, "all and sundry lands and heritages, goods and sums of money, and generally the whole property and estate, heritable and moveable, now belonging or which shall belong to her during the subsistence of the marriage." A B, in anticipation of his marriage with C D (which took place two days later), took out a policy of insurance on his own life, payable at his death to C D if then alive, if not, to his executors. The policy gave A B a right to change the beneficiary, but this clause was deleted after the marriage at his request. A B was under no obligation to keep up the policy. A B predeceased C D:—Held, that the sum due under the policy was not property which pertained or belonged to the wife during the subsistence of the marriage, and that it was therefore payable to the widow absolutely and not to the trustees under the marriage contract. Coulton's Trustees v. Coulson, 3 F. 1041—Ct. of Sess.

Widow's Share under Intestates' Estates Act, 1890—Marriage Settlement Executed Before Act—Provision in Bar of Share of Husband's Estate.]—A provision for a wife in a marriage settlement executed before the passing of the Intestates' Estates Act, 1890, in discharge of all claims by her on the estate and effects of her husband, bars her right to the sum of 500*l.* given by the Act to a widow out of her husband's assets in the event of his dying intestate and without issue, as well as to the share of his assets to which she is entitled under the Statute of Distributions. Hogan, In re; Hogan v. Hogan, [1901] 1 Ir. R. 168—M.R.

14. AFTER-ACQUIRED PROPERTY.

Covenant to Settle—Annuities.]—Where the words in a covenant to settle the after-acquired property of a wife are wide enough to include annuities, the question whether they will be caught by the covenant depends upon whether the annuities fit the trusts which are declared, and whether their inclusion will not be inconsistent with the general intention of the parties in making the settlement. White v. Briggs, (22 Beav. 176*n.*) and Townshend v. Harrowby (27 L. J. Ch. 553; 4 Jur. (n.s.) 353) followed. Schofield v. Spooner (53 L. J. Ch. 777; 26 Ch. Income to Separate Use of Person Agreeing to Settle—Investment of Savings.]—An agreement in a marriage settlement to settle after-acquired property of the wife does not bind investments made by her with the savings of her separate income. Finlay v. Darling (66 L. J. Ch. 348; [1897] 1 Ch. 719) followed. Bendy, In re; Wallis v. Bendy (64 L. J. Ch. 170; [1895] 1 Ch. 109), not followed. Clutterbuck's Settlement, In re; Bloxam v. Clutterbuck, 73 L. J. Ch. 698; [1905] 1 Ch. 200; 53 W. R. 10—Buckley, J.

Exception of Business Assets—Enforcing Covenant.]—A covenant by a husband in a settlement made in consideration of marriage to settle all his after-acquired property except business assets is not too vague and uncertain to be enforced. Lewis v. Madocks (6 Ves. 150; 17 Ves. 48) followed. Reis, In re; Clough, ex parte, 73 L. J. K.B. 929; [1904] 2 K.B. 769; 91 L. T. 592; 53 W. R. 122; 11 Manson, 229; 20 T. L. R. 547—C.A. See s.c. in H.L., sub nom. Clough v. Samuel, BANKRUPTCY, col. 85.

Separate Legacies each below Limited Amount, but together above it—Aggregation—Deduction of Legacy Duty.]—By a marriage settlement the wife covenanted that if at any time during the continuance of the marriage she should "at one and the same time and from one and the same source" become entitled to any real or personal property of the value of 500*l.* and upwards, she would cause the same to be settled. Under two successive codicils to a will of a testatrix the wife became entitled to two legacies, each for the sum of 500*l.*, one payable out of the general estate of the testatrix and the other out of the proceeds of certain lands directed by the testatrix to be sold. The legacies were subject to duty at the rate of 10 per cent., reducing them to 450*l.* each:—Held, that the legacies, so far as the beneficial receipt by the legatee was concerned, were reduced to 450*l.* each, and were therefore separately not bound by the covenant, but that the legatee, having become entitled to them "at one and the same time"—namely, the death of the testatrix; and "from one and the same source"—namely, the testatrix—the legacies must be aggregated, and were together bound by the covenant. Scott-Chad's Settlement, In re; Scott-Chad v. Pares, 70 L. J. Ch. 426; [1901] 1 Ch. 708; 84 L. T. 385—Buckley, J.

Vested Reversionary Interest—"Shall become entitled."]—A marriage settlement contained a covenant that all property to which the wife during her then intended coverture "shall become entitled" should be settled. At the date of her marriage the wife was entitled to a vested reversionary interest in certain property expectant upon the death of tenants for life:—Held, that the words "become entitled" meant entitled "in interest" and not "in enjoyment," and that even if the reversionary interest in question fell into possession during the coverture it would not become subject to the trusts of the settlement. Bland's Settlement, In re; Bland v. Perkin, 74 L. J. Ch. 28; [1905] 1 Ch. 4; 91 L. T. 681—Kekewich, J.

— Property Acquired "during the marriage" — Reversionary Interest—Judicial Separation—Property Subsequently Acquired.—An antenuptial settlement made in 1868 contained a covenant by the husband and wife with the trustees to settle all real and personal estate to which the wife or the husband in her right should at any time "during the said intended marriage" become beneficially entitled in possession or reversion. At the date of the marriage the wife was entitled to a reversionary interest under her grandfather's will expectant on her mother's death. In 1875 she obtained a decree for judicial separation against the husband. In 1900 the wife's mother died, having by her will bequeathed a share of her estate to the wife:—Held, that the reversionary interest to which the wife was entitled at the date of the settlement and which fell into possession on her mother's death was bound by the covenant. Held also, that the property to which the wife became entitled under her mother's will after the date of the decree for judicial separation was not property acquired "during the said intended marriage" within the meaning of the covenant, that the marriage there contemplated was a marriage involving the usual marital relations which would enable the husband to obtain control over the property, and did not extend to the case of a judicial separation where the husband had no such rights. Davenport v. Marshall, 71 L. J. Ch. 29; [1902] 1 Ch. 82; 85 L. T. 340; 50 W. R. 39—Buckley, J. And see Lloyd v. Pritchard, 77 L. J. Ch. 183; [1908] 1 Ch. 265; 97 L. T. 904—Parker, J.

— After-acquired Real Estate of Wife—Covenant by Husband Alone that Wife's Future-acquired Property should be Settled—Settlement Executed by Wife—No Recitals in Settlement—Liability of Wife.—Where a marriage settlement, which was executed by husband and wife, contains a covenant by the husband alone that all property which shall be acquired by the wife or the husband in her right shall be forthwith settled, real estate to which under her father's will the wife has become entitled during the coverture is bound by the covenant. Haden, In re; Coling v. Haden, 67 L. J. Ch. 428; [1898] 2 Ch. 220—Stirling, J.

— Married Woman—Estate Tail.—By a marriage settlement the husband and wife covenanted that if during the coverture the wife, or the husband in her right, should at one and the same time and from the same source become seised or possessed of or entitled to any real or personal property, except as therein mentioned, for any estate or interest in possession, remainder, or expectancy, then and in every such case he and she would convey, assign, settle, and assure the said real and personal estate unto or otherwise cause the same to be vested in the trustees of the settlement upon the trusts thereof. The wife during the coverture became entitled in possession as tenant in tail to certain estates:—Held, that the covenant was not applicable to an estate tail. Hilbers v. Parkinson (53 L. J. Ch. 194; 25 Ch. D. 200) approved and followed. Dunsany's Settlement, In re; Nott v. Dunsany (Baroness), 75 L. J. Ch. 356; [1906] 1 Ch. 578; 94 L. T. 361—C.A.

— Bonus Percentage under the Irish Land Acts, 1903 and 1904.—Under the will and codicil of her father, H. Viscount C., Lady A. at the date of her marriage with Lord A. in 1884 was tenant in tail in remainder, expectant on the death of her brother, H. G. Viscount C., without issue (which event happened), to extensive Irish estates. Under two settlements which practically comprised all her property real and personal then executed, and disentailing deeds, Lady A. became tenant for life of the Irish realty with divers remainders over to her husband and their issue. The settlement of personalty contained a covenant to settle real and personal property to which Lady A. was then, or during the intended marriage should, at one and the same time and from one and the same source, become entitled, besides the real estates subject to the will and codicil of her father, her interest in which was settled by the other settlement of realty. Property of less value than 1,000*l.* was (inter alia) specifically excepted from the operation of this covenant. By numerous contracts made with occupying tenants portions of nine "separate estates" in Ireland subject to the realty settlement had been agreed to be sold under the Irish Land Act, 1903, and Lady A., as limited owner of them, became entitled to bonus percentage exceeding 40,000*l.* under section 3, subsection 1 of the Irish Land Act, 1904. The amount due as bonus on each "estate" sold, except one, exceeded 1,000*l.*, but on no single contract did it amount to that sum. On the question whether Lady A. was entitled to the bonus for her own use and benefit,—Held, that the bonus percentage, although being property to which Lady A. became entitled during the coverture, came within the terms of the covenant to settle after-acquired property, yet it fell also within the exception in the personalty settlement of interests in real estates settled by the realty settlement, and so, not being caught by the covenant, Lady A. was entitled to it. Observations in Ely's (Marquis) Estate, In re ([1904] 1 Ir. R. 66), as to the nature of bonus under the Irish Land Acts, discussed and applied. *Annaly's (Lady) Trusts, In re; Annaly v. — Bequest to Married Woman—Restraint on Anticipation—Marriage Settlement.—A testator bequeathed certain freehold property and a legacy of 5,000*l.* to his daughter, a married woman, for her sole and separate use, independent of any husband she might marry, without power of anticipation. The settlement executed on the marriage of his said daughter contained an "after-acquired" property clause. Testator nominated executors of his will, but did not appoint trustees:—Held, that as there was no intention expressed in the will that the executors were to act as trustees and retain the fund, the fund should be paid over to the testator's daughter free from restraint, and that it was captured by the "after-acquired" clause in her marriage settlement. Russell v. Lawder, [1904] 1 Ir. R. 328—Barton, J.

— Jus Relictæ—Separation Deed—Covenant by Husband to Indemnify Wife.—An ante-nuptial settlement, made in 1873, contained a covenant by the husband and wife that if during the coverture the wife or husband in her right should become entitled to any personal property which should amount to 200*l.* for any estate or interest whatsoever, they would respectively assure the same to the trustees upon the trusts of the settlement. The husband and wife separated, and by a separation deed made in 1894 the husband, who was a domiciled Scotchman, agreed that in the event of his death in the lifetime of the wife her rights in his means and estate should not be less than she would have been entitled to by the law of Scotland if he had been a domiciled Scotchman at the date of his death. The husband died, leaving net personal estate of 16,000*l.*, to one-third of which the wife would by the law of Scotland have been entitled under her jus relictæ:—Held, that the equivalent share to which the wife was entitled under the separation deed was not bound by her covenant to settle her after-acquired property. Simpson, In re; Simpson v. Simpson, 73 L. J. Ch. 53; [1904] 1 Ch. 1; 89 L. T. 542; 52 W. R. 310—C.A.

— Gift from Husband to Wife.—By a marriage settlement dated November 9, 1883, it was agreed that if the intended wife then was, or if during the intended coverture she or her intended husband in her right should, at one time and from one source, become entitled to property of the value of 100*l.* or upwards, except jewels, &c., the intended husband and wife would do all things necessary for vesting the same in the trustees of the settlement, upon the trusts thereby declared of certain property of the intended wife. In 1903 the husband, for a nominal consideration, transferred certain shares, exceeding 100*l.* in value, in a limited company to his wife:—Held, that these shares were not bound by the settlement. Coles v. Coles (70 L. J. Ch. 324; [1901] 1 Ch. 711) followed and applied. Kingan v. Matier, [1905] 1 Ir. R. 272—Barton, J.

Income to Separate Use of Covenantor—Investment of Savings.—A covenant in a marriage settlement to settle after-acquired property of the wife does not bind investments made by her with the savings of her separate income. Lewis v. Madocks (8 Ves. 849; 17 id. 48) explained. In re Bendy; Wallis v. Bendy (64 L. J. Ch. 170; [1895] 1 Ch. 109), differed from. Finlay v. Darling, 66 L. J. Ch. 348; [1897] 1 Ch. 719—Romer, J.

— Power of Appointment—Appointment to Self.—A daughter, by her marriage settlement in 1881, covenanted to settle after-acquired property to the value of 200*l.* or over. Under her mother's will, dated in 1888, she had a general power of appointment over her mother's own property (which might exceed 200*l.*) and in default of and until such appointment it was given to her for her separate use. Under a codicil to the will a sum of 500*l.* out of her mother's marriage settlement funds was given in trust for the daughter, with a direction to hold it so that the daughter should have a general power of appointment over it, and that in default she should have it for her separate use. The mother had expressed her intention in both will and codicil that the daughter by exercising the powers of appointment might be enabled to defeat the operation of her covenant:—Held, that, as the gift over was to the donee of the power, and not to a stranger, the several funds were all bound by the covenant to settle after-acquired property. Steward v. Poppleton (W. N. (1877), p. 29) followed. Bower v. Smith (40 L. J. Ch. 194; L. R. 11 Eq. 279) distinguished. Townshend v. Harrowby (27 L. J. Ch. 553) and Gerard (Lord), In re; *Oliphant v. — Marriage of Englishwoman with Foreigner—Restraint on Anticipation—Covenant to Settle After-acquired Property—Construction—Legacy—Property in England—Domicil—Decree of Foreign Court for Separation.—By a settlement in English form executed in 1878 in contemplation of a marriage between a domiciled Italian and an Englishwoman, it was agreed that the trustee should hold a sum of money secured upon an English mortgage upon trust to invest in English securities and to hold the same upon trust for the benefit of the wife and husband and their issue. The settlement contained a covenant to settle after-acquired property of the wife. The marriage took place in Italy, where the husband and wife continued to reside. In 1898 a decree for the voluntary separation of the husband and wife was made by the Italian Court, and they had since lived apart from each other. In 1881 the wife's father died, having by his will bequeathed to the wife certain legacies subject to his widow's life interest therein. The will contained a declaration that all money payable to any female should during coverture be paid to her for her separate use without power of anticipation. The widow died in 1899:—Held, that, assuming English law to be applicable, the restraint on anticipation lasted only until the date of payment—namely the death of the widow—and that the legacies were therefore bound by the covenant. Bown, In re; O'Halloran v. King (53 L. J. Ch. 881; 27 Ch. D. 411), and Holmes, In re; Hallows v. Holmes (67 L. T. 335), followed. Curry, In re; Gibson v. Way (55 L. J. Ch. 906; 32 Ch. Assignment of Wife's Property and Fortune "present and expectant or future"—Gift from Husband to Wife—Intention of Parties.—By the settlement made previously to her marriage the defendant's wife conveyed and assigned to the trustee thereof "all and singular" her "property and fortune whatsoever both present and expectant or future vested or contingent" upon trust, after the solemnisation of the marriage, for herself for life, and after her death upon trusts in favour of the children of the marriage. During the coverture the defendant gave his wife a sum of 280*l.*:—Held, adopting the ground of MALINS, V.C.'s decision in Dickinson v. Dillwyn (39 L. J. Ch. 266; L. R. 8 Eq. 546), that the assignment never could have been intended to apply to a gift from the husband to the wife, and that therefore the sum of 280*l.* was not bound by the settlement. Coles v. Coles, 70 L. J. Ch. 324; [1901] 1 Ch. 711; 84 L. T. 142—Joyce, J.

15. COVENANT TO PAY MONEY.

Policies Effected under Married Women's Property Act, 1870—Double Portions—Satisfaction.—By an indenture of marriage settlement in 1864, C. covenanted to pay to the trustees of the deed 2,000*l.* upon trusts in favour of his wife and children, including his children by a former marriage. In 1873 C. effected two policies for 1,000*l.*, each on his own life under the provisions of section 10 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1870. By his will dated in 1902, C. gave the residue of his personal estate to trustees upon trusts, after payment of debts, in favour of his third wife, and certain only of the above-mentioned children:—Held, that the covenant in the settlement had not been satisfied by the effecting of the policies, and was therefore enforceable. Cartwright, In re; Cartwright v. Cartwright, 72 L. J. Ch. 622; [1903] 2 Ch. 306; 88 L. T. 854; 51 W. R. 666—Kekewich, J.

Covenant to Pay if Marriage be "solemnised"—Nullity of Marriage—Effect of Decree Absolute.—By a settlement made in contemplation of the marriage of his daughter, a father covenanted that if the marriage were "solemnised" his executors would, within twelve months from his death, pay 25,000*l.* to the trustees of the settlement. The marriage took place. Under an order made in an action for the administration of the estate of the father his executors were directed to pay and did pay over the 25,000*l.*, being unaware of the fact that on the previous day a decree absolute had been made in the Divorce Court declaring the marriage to have been and to be absolutely null and void on the ground of the impotence of the husband:—Held, that, inasmuch as the marriage had been declared null ab initio, it had never been "solemnised"; consequently the covenant to pay the 25,000*l.* never became operative, and the money in question must be repaid to the executors of the testator. Garnett, In re; Richardson v. Greenep, 74 L. J. Ch. 570; 93 L. T. 117—Kekewich, J.

Joint Covenants—Contribution—Evidence of Intention—Implied Contract—Inference from Circumstances.—The doctrine of contribution between joint covenantors is based on a broad principle of equity, or, as it has sometimes been expressed, on an implied contract, and depends on the intention of the parties contracting. Evidence of such intention is admissible after the death of one of such covenantors; and when a father, on the marriage of his son, had entered, together with the son, into a joint and several covenant with the trustees of the marriage settlement to pay a certain sum of money six months after his death and had specifically charged some of his own property with payment of the same, and the son, at the date of his marriage, was possessed of a reversionary interest only which he brought into settlement, and, the father having died insolvent, the security had to be realised, the Court declined to infer, in the absence of express contract, an intention on the part of the father to reserve a right to his executors to sue his son for contribution. Bentinck, In re; Bentinck v. Bentinck, 80 L. T. 71—Stirling, J.

16. POWER OF APPOINTMENT.

General—Special—Exercise by Will.—By a marriage settlement in 1859 real estate was settled for the benefit of S. R. and her husband, W. R., for their lives, and then for the children of S. as she should by deed or will appoint, and, in default, to them in equal shares, and if no such child then for such persons as S. should by deed or will appoint, and in default for S., her heirs and assigns. And in the settlement was a covenant by W. that after-acquired property of S. should be conveyed to the trustees to be held by them upon the trusts of the settlement. W. and S. R. married, and had four children, one only of whom was now living. W. R. died in 1891. By her will made in that year S., "in pursuance of all powers and authorities in anywise enabling me thereto," directed, limited, and appointed her residuary estate as to a moiety for her son M. and his wife and children, and as to the other moiety to persons not objects of the special power. She died in 1898. During her coverture she had become entitled to certain real and personal estate which was never conveyed to the trustee of the settlement:—Held, first, that the after-acquired property was not bound by the covenant in the settlement; secondly, that there was not sufficient evidence to shew an intention on the part of the testatrix to exercise her special power of appointment in favour of her son M. Rickman, In re; Stokes v. Rickman, 80 L. T. 518—Stirling, J.

Conveyance by Sole Object of Power—"Entitled"—Subsequent Appointment to Object of Power—Estoppel.—The only child of a marriage, being at the time the sole object of a power of appointment, and entitled, in default of appointment, to the property comprised in the marriage settlement, married, and after her marriage assigned by deed the interest to which she was "entitled under the indenture of settlement" upon certain trusts. Afterwards the donee of the power appointed the property to her absolutely:—Held, following Sweetapple v. Horlock (48 L. J. Ch. 660; 11 Ch. D. 745), that her interest under the appointment was not assigned by the deed, which comprised only her then existing interest under the settlement, and that the deed not being for value she was not estopped from claiming the property absolutely. Lovett v. Lovett, 67 L. J. Ch. 20; [1898] 1 Ch. 82; 77 L. T. 650; 46 W. R. 105—Romer, J. And see POWERS, col. 1867.

17. POWER OF JOINTURING.

Validity of Exercise—No Disentailing Deed—Statute—Private Act—Construction—Application of Later Act to Earlier.—By a private Act of Parliament passed in 1535 certain manors and estates were settled upon tenants in tail, with a proviso that they should not alien, bargain, give or sell, the same, nor do any other thing to the hurt or disinheritance of their heirs, but only for the jointure of a wife, or for term of life of a husband, or for term of life of any other person or for years or at will after the custom of the manor, yielding the true and ancient rent, but that all other acts contrary to the true intent of the Act should be void. A tenant in tail who died in 1902 purported to exercise the power of jointuring in favour of his widow by a codicil:—Held, that, on the true construction of the Act, neither fine nor recovery, nor, since the Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833, any disentailing assurance, was necessary to the exercise of the power; and that it was well exercised by testamentary disposition, on the principle laid down in Vernon's Case (4 Co. Rep. 1a, 4a), though the Act was earlier in date than the statutes enabling land to be devised by will. Bolton Estates Acts, In re; Russell v. Meyrick, 72 L. J. Ch. 603; [1903] 2 Ch. 461; 88 L. T. 851; 52 W. R. 87—C.A. And see col. 1887.

18. FORFEITURE CLAUSE.

Life Interest Determinable on Alienation—Words of Futurity—Retrospective Effect.]—A trust in a settlement for payment of the income of a trust fund to A for life “or until he shall assign, charge, or incur, or affect to assign, charge, or incur” the same, though future in terms, has also a retrospective operation so as to include past acts. Manning v. Chambers (1 De G. & Sm. 282) and Seymour v. Lucas (1 Dr. & S. 177) followed. West v. Williams, 67 L. J. Ch. 213; [1898] 1 Ch. 488; 78 L. T. 147; 46 W. R. 362—Kekewich, J.

Life Interest Determinable on Bankruptcy—Trustees—Beneficiaries—Unnecessary Parties—Costs.]—In a successful action by the trustee in bankruptcy of a settlor against the trustees of his settlement, by which he had purported to settle his own property upon trust for himself for life, with a gift over on bankruptcy, the trustees of the settlement will be entitled to retain their costs, as between solicitor and client, out of the moneys in their hands, before paying over the balance; but the beneficiaries under the settlement, who have been made defendants by the plaintiff at the instance of the trustees, are not necessary parties, and will not receive their costs. Merry v. Pownall, 67 L. J. Ch. 162; [1898] 1 Ch. 306; 78 L. T. 146; 46 W. R. 487—Kekewich, J.

19. CONDITIONAL LIMITATION.

Trust for Wife “if she shall survive her now intended coverture” — Termination of Coverture by Divorce—Effect of Trust.]—By a marriage settlement the wife's father covenanted that his executors should within twelve months of his death, if the wife were then living, pay to the trustees 10,000*l.* on trust (in default of issue, which happened) for the wife absolutely “if she shall survive her now intended coverture, but if she shall die during her now intended coverture,” then in trust for the father absolutely. The husband obtained an absolute decree for dissolution of the marriage, and the wife survived the father:—Held, that the wife had survived the coverture within the meaning of the settlement, and was therefore entitled to receive the 10,000*l.* from the trustees when paid to them. Cranford, In re; Cooke v. Gibson, 74*c* L. J. Ch. 22; [1905] 1 Ch. 11; 91 L. T. 683; 53 W. R. 107—Kekewich, J.

Seem, that, an order of the Divorce Court having dealt with the settled property as if the husband were dead, the husband must be considered as dead for the purpose of construing the settlement, and the coverture might be considered as terminated in this manner also. Ib.

Quere, whether under the Matrimonial Causes Acts, 1857, 1859, and 1878, the Divorce Court has power to interfere with the interests, rights, and liabilities of persons not parties to the suit—for example, a wife's father covenanting to settle a fund. Ib.

Post-nuptial Settlement — Trust for Wife during Cohabitation — Validity — Policy of the Law.]—By a post-nuptial settlement the husband assigned certain leaseholds to trustees upon trust to pay the rents to his wife for life, or so long as she should continue the cohabiting wife or the widow of the settlor, for her separate use, and upon the determination of the trust in favour of the wife the husband took an interest in the settled property. Some years after the date of the settlement the husband and wife separated by mutual consent, and they had not since cohabited:—Held, that the restriction of the wife's enjoyment of the rents to the period of cohabitation was not void as against the policy of the law, and that the trust in her favour determined upon her ceasing to live with her husband. Cartwright v. Cartwright (3 De G. M. & G. 982) and II. v. W. (3 K. & J. 382) distinguished. Hope-Johnstone, In re; Hope-Johnstone v. Hope-Johnstone, 73 L. J. Ch. 321; [1904] 1 Ch. 470; 90 L. T. 253; 20 T. L. R. 282—Kekewich, J.

20. HOTCHPOT CLAUSE.

Appropriation.]—A testator directed his executors and trustees to convert his whole estate into money, and to stand possessed of the clear residue in trust for his two children in equal shares. In the case of his son, he had covenanted with the trustees of the son's marriage settlement that his executors would pay to them 10,000*l.* to be held upon trust for the son for life, with remainder to the son's wife for life, with remainder as to the capital for the children of the marriage, and in case of there being no child the capital was to be in trust for the testator absolutely. By a hotchpot clause in the will, any sum given “to or with any child” on his or her marriage was to be taken in or towards satisfaction of the share of such child and brought into hotchpot. The son died without issue:—Held, that the testator's trustees must specifically appropriate and allot to the son's share under the will the testator's contingent reversionary interest in the 10,000*l.*, not under the hotchpot clause, but under the directions in the earlier part of the will, as the only way to effect an equal division as directed between the son and the daughter. Wheeler v. Humphreys, 67 L. J. Ch. 499; [1898] A.C. 506; 78 L. T. 799; 47 W. R. 17 H.L. (E.)

21. NEXT-OF-KIN.

Ultimate Trust for Wife's Next-of-Kin—"Died without having been married"—Child.—An only son who survives his mother, but dies an infant, is entitled as her next-of-kin to property settled by her marriage settlement upon an ultimate trust in the event of her death in her husband's lifetime and in default of any son attaining twenty-one, "for such person or persons as under or by virtue of the Statute for the Distribution of Intestates' Effects should or would have been entitled to her personal estate in case she had died intestate without having been married." Mare, In re; Mare v. Howey, 71 L. J. Ch. 649; [1902] 2 Ch. 112; 87 L. T. 41—Kekewich, J.

The only object of such a trust is to exclude the husband, and this general principle will be applied in construing such a trust, notwithstanding that the application results in the acquisition of the whole fund by the husband as sole next-of-kin of his infant son. Ib.

Wilson v. Atkinson (83 L. J. Ch. 576; 4 De G. J. & S. 455) followed. Deane's Trusts, In re; Dudley v. Deane, [1900] 1 Ir. R. 332, not followed. Ib. Overruled. See next case.

—Death "without having been married"—Children Dying under Twenty-one—Collaterals.—The case of Wilson v. Atkinson (83 L. J. Ch. 576; 4 De G. J. & S. 455) does not lay down any hard-and-fast rule applicable to all marriage settlements as to the meaning of the words "without having been married," and the usual ultimate trust of the wife's property in favour of the wife's statutory next-of-kin as if she had died "intestate and without having been married," will (at any rate where the settlement contains the usual express trusts in favour of children) be construed according to the natural meaning of the words so as to exclude not only the husband, but also infant children living at the death of the wife, who afterwards die without attaining a vested interest. Smith, In re; Wilkins v. Smith (72 L. J. Ch. 184; [1903] 1 Ch. 373), approved. Mare, In re; Mare v. Howey (71 L. J. Ch. 649; [1902] 2 Ch. 112), overruled. Brydone's Settlement, In re; Cobb v. Blackburne, 72 L. J. Ch. 523; [1903] 2 Ch. 84; 88 L. T. 614; 51 W. R. 497—C.A.

Trust for Persons who would have been Entitled as Wife's Next-of-Kin if Wife had Survived Husband—Survivorship of Husband—Time for Ascertaining Next-of-Kin.—Under the ultimate trust in a marriage settlement trustees were directed to hold certain funds "in trust for the person or persons who, under the statutes made for the distribution of intestates' personal estates, would then be entitled to the personal estate of A.P." (the wife) "in case she having survived" her husband "had died possessed of the said stocks, funds, and securities, and to be paid and divided accordingly." The husband survived the wife:—Held, following Pinder v. Pinder (28 Beav. 44), that the persons entitled were the wife's next-of-kin at the time of the husband's decease. Pierson's Settlement, In re; Cayley v. De Wend, 88 L. T. 794; 51 W. R. 519 Byrne, J.

22. ASSIGNMENT OF SHARE.

Subsequent Bequest of Property to be Held on Trusts of Settlement—General Words—Accretion.—The assignment by a person of his share under a settlement and all other his interest in the trust funds for the time being subject to the trusts of the settlement does not pass his interest under a subsequent appointment of property afterwards bequeathed, and directed to be held upon the trusts of the settlement. Walpole's Settlement, In re; Thomson v. Walpole, 72 L. J. Ch. 522; [1903] 1 Ch. 928; 88 L. T. 419; 51 W. R. 587—Joyce, J.

Semble, such subsequent bequest does not operate as an accretion to the fund originally settled, but merely creates a new referential settlement on similar trusts. Ib.

23. RECTIFICATION.

Mistake—Limitation of Real Estate without Words of Inheritance—"In tail."—By a marriage settlement executed in 1859, lands belonging to the sister of the husband were, subject to her life estate, limited to the husband for life, with remainder (in default of exercise of a power of appointment given to him), if there should be only one child of the marriage, to such child "in tail." The only interest limited back to the settlor was a general power of appointment in default of issue of the marriage. A power of sale and a leasing power were given to the trustees exercisable during the respective lives of the two tenants for life, with their respective consents, and during the minority of any child of the marriage. There was no evidence of the intention of the parties apart from the settlement itself, the instructions on which it was prepared not being forthcoming, and the solicitor who prepared it, as well as the parties to it, being dead. There was only one child of the marriage, the plaintiff, who sought as against the heir-at-law of the settlor and the trustees to have the deed reformed by the insertion of proper words of limitation, so as to confer on her an estate tail in the lands:—Held, that the deed itself afforded evidence of the intention of the parties sufficient to enable the Court to rectify the mistake and to reform the settlement by the introduction of technical words of limitation, so as to confer an estate tail on the plaintiff. Bird's Trustees, In re (3 Ch. D. 214), approved and followed. Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald, [1902] 1 Ir. R. 477—C.A. And see DRED, cols. 686-7.

2. REGISTRATION.

Fishing-boat Register—Limitation of Liability.—A British fishing boat registered only in the Fishing-boat Register under Part IV. of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, and not under Part I. of the Act, is a British ship "registered under the Act" within the meaning of section 2, and consequently its owner is entitled to the limitation of liability for injury caused by the fault of the vessel conferred by section 503. Couper v. MacKenzie, 8 F. 1202—Ct. of Sess.

3. SHIPOWNER.

Disbursements on Authority of Managing Owner—Contracts for Sale of Shares by Registered Owner—Subsequent Mortgage by Registered Owner—Purchaser not Paying Price in Full—Purchaser of Moiety of One Sixty-fourth Share—Purchaser Paying in Full, but not before Registration of Mortgage—Foreign Purchaser Receiving Bill of Sale—Liability of Purchasers as Equitable Owners.]—The managing owner of a ship, who was the registered holder of shares therein, entered into contracts with several persons for the sale to them of shares, the price to be paid by instalments. He afterwards mortgaged all his shares to a bank, who eventually registered their mortgage. Subsequently, on his authority as managing owner, the plaintiffs made disbursements at a foreign port in respect of the ship. The plaintiffs brought an action for these disbursements against the defendants, as the only registered owners from whom there was a prospect of recovering them, and obtained judgment. The defendants claimed contribution from the persons who had entered into the contracts already mentioned for the purchase of shares. Of these persons, all of whom had received dividends on the earnings of the ship, several had purchased one sixty-fourth share each and had not paid the price in full; one had purchased only half a share and paid in full before the date of the mortgage to the bank; one had purchased two shares and paid in full, but not before the bank had registered their mortgage; and one, a foreigner, had purchased one share, paid in full after the date of the mortgage, but before it was registered, and had alone received a bill of sale:—Held, that of these persons none was an "owner" of the ship either at law or in equity except the last mentioned, who was an owner in equity and therefore liable to make good to the defendants one-half of the amount which they had paid under the judgment. Von Freeden v. Hull, 75 L. J. K.B. 359; 94 L. T. 849; 10 Asp. M.C. 247; 22 T. L. R. 358—Phillimore, J.

On appeal this decision was reversed on a question of fact, the Court holding that the respondents to the appeal had given authority to the managing owner to sail the ship and pledge their credit, and that they were therefore liable to contribute to the loss incurred in proportion to their interests. Von Freeden v. Hull, 76 L. J. K.B. 715; 96 L. T. 590; 10 Asp. M.C. 394; 23 T. L. R. 335—C.A.

Duty to Cargo-owner—Perishable Cargo—Port of Refuge—Discharge of Cargo by Master—Repairs—Transshipment—Abandonment of Voyage.]—Where a ship is damaged and obliged to put in to an intermediate port for repairs, it is the duty as well as the right of the shipowner, if he can repair his ship without unreasonable sacrifice and within a reasonable time, to repair his ship and carry the goods to their destination. This is the purpose for which he has been entrusted with the cargo, and this purpose he is bound to accomplish by every reasonable and practicable method. If he so determines to fulfil his contract, it is his duty, whilst the repairs are being done, to take all reasonable means to preserve the cargo from deterioration. If, on the other hand, the circumstances are such that the shipowner is justified in not repairing his ship, or are such that, even if the ship is eventually repaired, it is not, with a due regard to his own interest and the interest of the owner of the cargo, reasonably practicable, owing either to the length of time which the repairs will take, or the perishable nature of the cargo, or to the expense involved, or all or any such reasons, that the carriage of the cargo should be completed in the ship when repaired, then the shipowner is at liberty to tranship and carry the cargo to its destination in another bottom and so earn his freight. He is not bound to employ another vessel to complete the voyage at his own loss. But if he chooses, because he deems it best and for his own advantage, to pursue this course, he must, where he has been entrusted with a perishable cargo, which is daily incurring on shipboard an increase of deterioration, use all reasonable promptitude in procuring the transshipment, and take all reasonable means to prevent, or at least to minimise, the deterioration of the cargo until the transshipment is effected. Lastly, if the shipowner decides neither to repair nor to tranship, it is his duty, with the greatest dispatch which the circumstances reasonably considered admit, to inform the owner of the cargo, or his agents on the spot, in order that he or they may not be unreasonably hindered in the protection of his interests, and the perishable cargo may not be unnecessarily damaged by the lapse of time before the owner or his agents have it placed at his or their disposition. If, instead of promptly transshipping a perishable cargo, which is daily deteriorating on shipboard, he prefers to negotiate for a pro rata freight to which he is not entitled, he can only do it by incurring the expense involved in discharging the cargo from the ship's hold. The absence of definite instructions from the cargo-owners or underwriters on cargo does not relieve the shipowner from the duty of doing one or other of the above things. Hanson v. Dunn, 11 Com. Cas. 100; 22 T. L. R. 458—Kennedy, J.

Damage to Cargo—"By reason of fire"—"Actual fault or privity"—Implied Warranty of Seaworthiness.]—Cargo taken on board a ship was damaged partly by fire, partly by water used to put out the fire, and partly by the taint of the smoke, all arising from the negligence of the crew in overheating a stove in the fore-castle. The plaintiffs, owners of the cargo, claimed to recover from the shipowner, who relied on section 502 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, under which a shipowner is not liable for damage "by reason of fire" occurring "without his actual fault or privity" to goods put on board his ship. The plaintiffs alleged that the defendant was liable notwithstanding the section—first, because the section was subject to an implied exception in case of unseaworthiness of the ship, and here the stove was in an improper condition when the vessel started on her voyage, and the vessel was thereby unseaworthy; secondly, because the defendant knew of the improper condition of the stove, and therefore the damage occurred with his "actual fault or privity," and he was not protected; thirdly, as regards the damage by water and smoke, because this was not damage "by reason of fire":—Held, that section 502 of the Merchant Shipping Act covered the case, and the action failed. The stove was perfectly safe as it was, and the vessel was seaworthy. The damage occurred "without the actual fault or privity" of the defendant; and the damage by water and smoke was damage "by reason of fire" within the meaning of the section. The Diamond, 75 L. J. P. 90; [1906] P. 282; 95 L. T. 550; 10 Asp. M.C. 286—Bargrave Deane, J.

Sale of Ship by Owner of Majority of Shares in Possession—Maritime Liens Paid off—Cancellation of Onerous Charterparty—Position of Mortgagee of other Shares.—The payment of money by the owner of a majority of the shares in a ship, who is in possession and acting as managing owner, to free the ship from maritime liens attaching to her in respect of matters for which he is not personally liable, and to procure the cancellation of an onerous charterparty, does not, ipso facto, entitle him in law to claim a proportionate part of such payments as against a mortgagee of other shares in the ship. The Ripon City (No. 2), 67 L. J. P. 30; [1898] P. 78; 78 L. T. 296; 46 W. R. 586; 8 Asp. M.C. 391—Jeune, P.

Nor, semble, can a mortgagee of a majority of shares, who has taken possession under his mortgage, recover from the mortgagees of other shares a proportionate part of similar payments which he has made without their request. Ib.

Bill of Lading Signed by Charterers for Captain and Owners.—Tillmans v. Knutsford Steamship, 77 L. J. K.B. 135; [1908] 1 K.B. 135.

4. MASTER.

"Wages"—"Emoluments"—Bonus—Maritime Lien.—Where the master of a ship has earned a bonus which the owners arranged to pay to him if he remained in the ship and otherwise satisfied them, such bonus is "wages" or "emoluments" within sections 167 and 742 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, and the master therefore has a maritime lien for the recovery thereof. The Elmville; Goodrich v. Owners of SS. Elmville (No. 1), 73 L. J. P. 120; [1904] P. 422; 91 L. T. 330; 10 Asp. M.C. 23; 20 T. L. R. 783—Jeune, P.

Disbursements—Costs of Defending Action on Bill of Exchange.—Where the master of a ship had drawn a bill of exchange on his owners in payment for coals and ship's disbursements, and his owners had dishonoured the bill, and he had been sued as drawer and at the request of his owners had defended, but judgment had been recovered against him thereon with costs, —Held, that the costs incurred by the master in the action on the bill of exchange were not "liabilities properly incurred by him on account of the ship" within section 167 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, and therefore could not be recovered by him in an action in rem against the ship. The Elmville (No. 2), 74 L. J. P. 69; [1904] P. 422; 53 W. R. 287—Jeune, P.

Claim—Liabilities Incurred on Account of Ship—Appointed by Persons Allowed to Remain in Possession and to have Control of Vessel by Owners—Owners not Personally Liable—Maritime Lien.—The master of a ship, appointed by persons who are not the real owners, but who have been allowed by the real owners to remain in possession and to have the control of the vessel for the purpose of using her in the ordinary way, may have a maritime lien on the ship for his disbursements and liabilities properly incurred by him on account of the ship, although the owners may not be personally liable for the disbursements or the matters in respect of which the liabilities have been incurred. The Castlegate (62 L. J. P.C. 17; [1893] A.C. 38) and The Orienta (64 L. J. P. 32; [1895] P. 49) distinguished. The Ripon City (No. 1), 66 L. J. P. 110; [1897] P. 226; 77 L. T. 98; 8 Asp. M.C. 304—Gorell Barnes, J.

Board of Trade Enquiry—Suspension of Certificate—Duty of Board of Trade to Express Opinion—Appeal to High Court—Costs.—On a Board of Trade enquiry, when a formal investigation is being held under section 466 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, and when the evidence has been given and the questions are put to the Court, and there is a liability for the master or other officer of the ship to have his certificate suspended, the Board of Trade should state whether in their opinion such certificate should be suspended or not. The Carlisle, 75 L. J. P. 97; [1906] P. 301; 95 L. T. 552; 22 T. L. R. 709—D.

In a case where the Board of Trade had not adopted this course, but had declined to say whether the certificate should be suspended or not, and the Court of enquiry had suspended the master's certificate, and the master appealed,—Held (after reversing the judgment of the Court of enquiry and deciding that the certificate should be restored), that, on the question of costs, the case must be treated as if the Board of Trade had invited the Court of enquiry to suspend the certificate, and that the Board of Trade must pay the costs incurred by the master. Ib.

Alien—Stowaway—Ship in which Alien has been Brought to the United Kingdom—Liability of Master for Expenses of Deportation.—The master of the ship in which an undesirable alien has been brought into the United Kingdom is liable under section 4, sub-section 2 of the Aliens Act, 1905, for the expenses of the deportation of such alien, following upon an expulsion order, although the alien, having been a stowaway, was brought into the United Kingdom involuntarily on the part of the master. Att.-Gen. v. Sutcliffe, 76 L. J. K.B. 991; [1907] 2 K.B. 997; 97 L. T. 373; 23 T. L. R. 711—Bray, J.

Protection from Imposition—Going on Board before Discharge of—Crimping—Right of Offender to Trial by Jury.]—By section 680 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, an offence under the Act punishable with imprisonment for any term not exceeding six months "shall be prosecuted summarily in manner provided by the Summary Jurisdiction Acts." By section 218 a person going, without permission of the master, on board a ship arriving or arrived at the end of her voyage before the seamen lawfully leave the ship is liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months:—Held, that a person charged with an offence under this section is entitled to demand trial by jury under section 17 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879. Ree v. Goldberg, 73 L. J. K.B. 970; [1904] 2 K.B. 866; 91 L. T. 490; 68 J. P. 554; 20 Cox C.C. 699; 10 Asp. M.C. 2; 20 T. L. R. 683—D.

— Foreign Seaman — Foreign Ship "having arrived at the end of her voyage."—By section 218 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, a person going without permission of the master on board a ship arriving, about to arrive, or having arrived at the end of her voyage, before the seamen lawfully leave the ship or are discharged, is liable to a fine or imprisonment. By section 219 the Crown is in certain events empowered by Order in Council to declare that the provisions of section 218 shall apply to the ships of a foreign country, and have effect as if the ships of that country "arriving, about to arrive, or having arrived at the end of their voyage" were British ships:—Held, that, having regard to the repealed section 6 of the Merchant Seamen (Payment of Wages and Rating) Act, 1880, a foreign ship arriving at a British port in the course of a voyage to that port and further was a ship "having arrived at the end of her voyage" within the meaning of section 219. Ree v. Abrahams, 73 L. J. K.B. 972; [1904] 2 K.B. 859; 91 L. T. 493; 68 J. P. 546; 20 Cox C.C. 715; 10 Asp. M.C. 5; 20 T. L. R. 684—D.

Engagement by Unlicensed Agent — Foreign Ship—Conviction—Punishment.]—A person acts in contravention of section 111 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, who, not being qualified as therein mentioned, engages or supplies a seaman to be entered on board a foreign ship in the United Kingdom. Reg. v. Stewart: Olsen, Ex parte, 68 L. J. Q.B. 582; [1899] 1 Q.B. 964; 80 L. T. 660; 47 W. R. 445; 63 J. P. 547; 8 Asp. M.C. 534—D.

The fine imposed by sub-section 4 of the section for such contravention is a punishment for an offence, and is not a civil debt. Therefore a conviction which imposes imprisonment in default of sufficient distress for an offence committed under the section is good, proof of means to pay being unnecessary. Id.

Duty of Owners towards Seamen—Seaworthiness—Negligence in Loading Cargo—Shifting of Cargo.]—A ship belonging to the defendants was chartered to carry a cargo of maize in bulk from Liverpool to Galway, and by the charter-party the charterers were to supply sufficient bags for stowage of the cargo, if required. The cargo, 632 tons, was loaded in bulk under the direction of a stevedore, and 111 bags were placed in coamings under the forward hatch. The vessel left Liverpool on June 12, and arrived in Lough Swilly at 6 A.M. on the 13th, having had fine weather all the way. It was found at Lough Swilly that the ship had a list to port, as to the extent of which the evidence varied from five to twenty degrees. Nothing was done to correct the list, and she left about eight in the evening and proceeded on her voyage. The list increased, and a gale of wind having sprung up, the vessel foundered. Seven of the crew were drowned. In an action under Lord Campbell's Act the jury found that all the necessary and reasonable precautions had not been taken to prevent the cargo from shifting as regards bagging and stowage, and that the vessel became unseaworthy for the voyage by reason of a list existing when she was in Lough Swilly; that the list was caused by the cargo shifting by reason of the omission of proper precautions:—Held, that there was evidence to sustain the verdict that the cargo was not properly loaded at Liverpool, and also that there was evidence to shew that the ship was not seaworthy when she left Lough Swilly. Cunningham v. Frontier Steamship Co., [1906] 2 Ir. R. 12—C.A.

Crew Space — Lascars.] — Lascars shipped under agreements in the form and with the provisions approved by the Governor-General of India in Council, as part of the crew of vessels registered in the United Kingdom trading between England and India, and China and Australia, are seamen within section 210 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894; and their accommodation, in the matter of crew space on board, is regulated by the provisions of that section, and not by the Merchant Seamen's (Indian) Act, No. 1 of 1859, ss. 70 and 118, as amended by the Indian Merchant Seamen's Act, No. 13 of 1876, so that owners of such vessels are bound to appropriate to the use of Lascars the accommodation for seamen specified in section 210 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, and the Sixth Schedule as part of that section. Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Co. v. Regem, 70 L. J. K.B. 845; [1901] 2 K.B. 686; 85 L. T. 71; 9 Asp. M.C. 228—Mathew, J.

Injury Sustained by Seaman on Board Ship—Expense of Surgical and Medical Attendance after Arrival at Home Port—Liability of Shipowner.]—A shipowner is not liable under section 207, sub-section 1 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, for the expense of providing surgical and medical advice and attendance and medicine to the master or a seaman or apprentice who has been injured in the service of his ship, after such master, seaman, or apprentice has been brought back to a home port. Anderson v. Dayner, 72 L. J. K.B. 292; [1903] 1 K.B. 589; 88 L. T. 313; 51 W. R. 369; 9 Asp. M.C. 385—C.A.

Discharge at Foreign Port—"Passage home."]—Where the service of a seaman belonging to a British ship terminates at any port out of her Majesty's dominions, the master of the ship does not comply with section 186, sub-section 2(c) of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, by providing him with a passage to any port in the United Kingdom, but is bound, if he elects to "provide him with a passage home" under that clause of the sub-section, to provide him with a passage to the port in her Majesty's dominions at which he was originally shipped, or to a port in the United Kingdom agreed to by the seaman. Purves v. Straits of Dover Steamship Co., 63 L. J. Q.B. 925; [1899] 2 Q.B. 217; 81 L. T. 35; 47 W. R. 630; 8 Asp. M.C. 566—C.A. Affirming, 8 Asp. M.C. 446—Mathew, J.

— Expenses of Maintenance and Passage Home.—Section 186 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, which provides that where the service of any seaman belonging to any British ship terminates at any port out of her Majesty's dominions, the master, besides paying the wages to which the seaman is entitled, shall, as one of several alternatives, "(d) deposit with the consular officer . . . such a sum of money as is by the officer . . . deemed sufficient to defray the expenses of his maintenance and passage home," imposes upon the consular officer the duty of determining the amount to be deposited; and where the master has deposited the amount fixed by the officer, no further claim can be made against the ship-owner under the section for any expenses incurred by the seaman. Edwards v. Steel, Young & Co., 66 L. J. Q.B. 690; [1897] 2 Q.B. 327; 77 L. T. 297; 45 W. R. 689; 8 Asp. M.C. 323—C.A.

"Passage home."—"Home" in the section means the port at which the seaman was originally shipped, or such other port in the United Kingdom as he agrees to go to. Ib.

"Voyage"—"End of Voyage"—"Such port as may be required by the master"—Final Port of Discharge.—A "voyage," within the meaning of section 115, sub-section 5 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, is the passing of a vessel from home to a given port and back again to home; and it is consistent with the vessel both on the passage out and the passage back going to more than one foreign country to unload or load and trade, before finally loading for her return home. The end of a "voyage," within the meaning of the said sub-section, is the place at which the cargo brought home is finally discharged. The Scarsdale, 74 L. J. P. 135; 21 T. L. R. 488—Bargrave Deane, J.

Where, under the agreement with the crew, a seaman shipped "on a voyage not exceeding one year's duration to any ports or places within the limits of 75° North and 60° South Lat., commencing at Cardiff, proceeding thence to Malta, thereafter trading to ports in any rotation, and to end at such port in the United Kingdom or Continent of Europe within home-trading limits as may be required by the master," and the vessel having proceeded on her voyage returned home to a port in the United Kingdom, where the homeward cargo was discharged, and the seaman there claimed his wages, but the master refused them on the ground that he required the seaman under the agreement to go on in the ship to a certain other port in the United Kingdom,—Held, that the agreement being "for a voyage" within section 115, sub-section 5 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, the voyage ended at the port at which the homeward cargo was discharged; and that the master by accepting the charter of his homeward cargo to this port had exercised his power under the agreement so as to require this port to be the end of the voyage, and that the seaman was entitled to his discharge and wages at this port. Ib.

Wages—Agreement for Ordinary Voyage—Discovery by Crew that Cargo is Contraband of War for Belligerent Port—Refusal to Proceed on Voyage—Termination of Service—Claim for Wages.—

A seaman signed articles to serve on board a British ship for a voyage not exceeding two years to ports in the East, proceeding to Hong-Kong and thereafter trading to ports in any rotation and ending at a port in the United Kingdom. War then existed between Russia and Japan, and coal had been declared contraband of war. The vessel left with a cargo of coal to Hong-Kong or Shanghai as might be ordered at Singapore. On the voyage to Singapore the cargo was sold for Nagasaki in Japan, and on the arrival of the ship at Singapore the master received orders from the owner to go to Nagasaki instead of Hong-Kong. At Singapore it first came to the knowledge of the crew that the ship was to go to Nagasaki instead of Hong-Kong. They refused to proceed to Nagasaki on account of the increased risk and danger in going to a belligerent port with contraband of war. It was then arranged by the master that the crew should remain at Singapore and that he would call for them on his way back. He took another crew on board, went to Nagasaki, delivered the coal, and left that port, but on her way back the ship was driven ashore, was got off, and was taken to Hong-Kong. It was not proved that she became a wreck. The seaman was sent home with the rest of the crew, and arrived in London. He claimed his wages up to the date of his arrival in London, upon the ground that the agreement was broken by the owner when the ship was ordered to Nagasaki. When he made the agreement he had no knowledge that he would be required to sail with contraband of war to a belligerent port:—Held, that, there having been no wreck or loss of the ship which would terminate the service under section 158 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, and there having been no termination by the discharge of the seaman under the provisions of the contract or under the provisions of the Act, either at home or abroad, the seaman was entitled to his wages up to the date of his arrival in London. Lloyd v. Sheen, 93 L. T. 174; 10 Asp. M.C. 75—D.

— Obligation of Seamen under Articles—Enforcement of Agreement to Pay Increased Wages.—

In an action by seamen to enforce an agreement made by the master with them abroad, while under articles, to pay additional remuneration in consideration of their remaining on board and working the vessel home after an accident, which had, in fact, not rendered the vessel unseaworthy,—Held, that in the absence of evidence that the risk of navigating the vessel in her then state was such as would have justified the crew breaking their articles abroad, the agreement was not one that could be enforced. Hopkins v. M'Bride, 50 W. R. 255—D.

— Advance of—Seaman Shipped at Foreign Port.—The restriction in section 140 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, of advance notes to seamen to a sum not exceeding one month's wages is confined to agreements made between masters of ships and seamen conditional on shipping at ports in the United Kingdom, and has not by the operation of section 124 been extended to agreements made at foreign ports conditional on shipping from such ports. Ritchie v. Larsen, 68 L. J. Q.B. 335; [1899] 1 Q.B. 727; 80 L. T. 259; 47 W. R. 413; 8 Asp. M.C. 501—D.

The restriction in section 140 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, of advance notes to seamen to a sum not exceeding one month's wages is confined to the engagement of seamen at ports in the United Kingdom. Section 163 does not prohibit advances of more than one month's wages to seamen shipped at foreign ports; nor, where it is one of the terms of their engagement by the master of the ship at a foreign port that the seamen shall receive advances of more than one month's wages, is their indorsement of the master's advance notes to the crimp, who supplies them to the ship, an assignment within that section. There is no limit to advances made abroad; and section 7 of the Piracy Act, 1721, has no application to the terms of the engagement of seamen abroad. Rowlands v. Miller, 68 L. J. Q.B. 338; [1899] 1 Q.B. 735; 80 L. T. 290; 47 W. R. 687; 63 J. P. 407; 8 Asp. M.C. 508—D.

— Advance Note—Assignment—Condition—Non-fulfilment—Liability of Owner.—An advance note was given to A., a seaman, for a half month's wages. The note was in this form: "Five days after the ship W. leaves P. pay to the order of A. (provided he sails in the said ship and is duly earning his wages, according to his agreement)," &c. It was directed to B. & Co., the shipowners' agents at P., and there was a note upon it that it should at once be presented to B. & Co. for acceptance. A. transferred the note to C., who presented it to B. & Co., by whom it was duly accepted. Four days after the W. left P., A. was discharged. The master of the W. informed B. & Co. that A. had been discharged within five days of sailing, and directed them not to pay the note. B. & Co. paid the note. On action by B. & Co. against the shipowners for the amount of the note, —Held, that, as A. was not earning his wages at the end of five days after the W. left P., the condition of the note was not fulfilled, and that neither the shipowners nor B. & Co. as acceptors were liable upon it. Bellamy v. Lunn, 77 L. T. 396; 8 Asp. M.C. 348—D.

— Ship Carrying Contraband of War—Order to Proceed to Belligerent Port—Refusal of Seamen to Proceed—Conviction and Imprisonment of Seamen—Action for Wages—Damages.—Seamen engaged on an ordinary commercial voyage were required by the master at Hong-Kong to proceed to a belligerent port during the Japanese war, with a cargo which included contraband of war. The men refused and were imprisoned, and on their release were sent home as distressed seamen. In an action for wages and damages:—Held, that they were entitled to their wages, and also, by way of damages, to maintenance till the "final settlement" under section 134 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, the final settlement being interpreted to mean the date of the Court of Appeal's judgment. THE HOUSE (LORD ATKINSON dissenting as to the amount of damages), after consideration, affirmed the decision of the COURT OF APPEAL (76 L. J. K.B. 292; [1907] 1 K.B. 670). Palace Shipping Co. v. Caine, 76 L. J. K.B. 1079; [1907] A.C. 386; 97 L. T. 587; 13 Com. Cas. 51; 23 T. L. R. 731—H.L. (E.). Affirming, 10 Asp. M.C. 380—C.A.

— Non-disclosure that Cargo is for Belligerent Port—Refusal by Seamen to Proceed.

—A seaman signed articles at Glasgow for a voyage on the British steamship G. of "not exceeding three years' duration to any ports or places within the limits of 75 degrees north and 60 degrees south latitude, commencing at Glasgow, proceeding thence to Hong Kong, via the Bristol Channel, thereafter trading to ports in any rotation, and to end at such port in the United Kingdom or Continent of Europe (within home trade limits) as may be required by the master." The vessel proceeded to Cardiff, where she was loaded with a cargo of coal. At the time the articles were signed a state of war existed between Russia and Japan, and both Powers had declared coal to be contraband of war. The master knew at the time of the loading of the vessel at Cardiff that the cargo was destined for the Japanese port of Sasebo, but did not disclose this information to the crew. Sasebo was within the limits prescribed by the articles. Upon arrival at Hong Kong the seaman discovered the port of destination, and refused to proceed in the vessel. He remained at Hong Kong until she returned, when he rejoined her and returned to Cardiff:—Held, that the seaman was entitled to wages and maintenance while he was waiting at Hong Kong. Caine v. Palace Steam Shipping Co. (76 L. J. K.B. 292) followed. Sibery v. Connelly, 96 L. T. 140; 10 Asp. M.C. 330; 23 T. L. R. 257—C.A. Affirming, 70 J. P. 145—D.

— Increase of Risk—"Loss" of Ship—Conditional Release.—A conditional release signed by a seaman is not a "release" within the meaning of section 136 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894. The plaintiffs agreed to serve as seamen on board the defendants' ship on a voyage from Cardiff to Kiau Chiu and any ports within certain limits and home again. At this time war had broken out between Russia and Japan. The plaintiffs subsequently discovered that the ship was engaged in carrying contraband of war for Russia. When in the Far East on a voyage to Saigon, a port within the above limits, she was destroyed by an explosion. The plaintiffs were rescued and were sent home to Cardiff as distressed seamen, and at Cardiff they signed a conditional release without prejudice to their claim for damages and wages. The plaintiffs claimed wages down to the time of "final settlement," and damages for loss of their kit and for the hardship suffered. The defendants contended that the plaintiffs were only entitled to wages down to the date of the destruction of the ship, and were not entitled to damages, —Held, that there had not been a "loss" of the ship within section 158 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to wages under section 134 (c) down to the time of "final settlement"—namely, the judgment in the action; and that they were entitled to damages for the loss of their kit and for the hardship suffered. Collins v. Simpson Steamship Co., 23 T. L. R. 241—Sutton, J. Reversed in part, 24 T. L. R. 178—C.A.

— Dock Dues—Right to Detain Ship for Unpaid Dues.—The maritime lien of the master and crew of a vessel for wages does not take priority over the right given by section 253 of the Mersey Dock Acts Consolidation Act, 1858, to the Mersey Docks and Harbour Board to detain the vessel for unpaid dock dues. The right given by that section to detain a vessel until all dock and harbour rates have been paid is absolute. The Emilie Millon, 75 L. J. K.B. 81; [1905] 2 K.B. 817; 93 L. T. 692; 10 Asp. Section 167 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, giving remedies to a master for his wages, disbursements, and liabilities, applies to masters of foreign ships notwithstanding the provisions of section 260. The Milford (Sw. 362) discussed and followed. Ib.

— Voyage “to end at such port in the United Kingdom . . . as may be required by the master”—Discharge of Cargo at Home-trade Port—Ship Required by the Master to go to another Port in Ballast within Home-trading Limits—“Voyage.”—By an agreement a crew was engaged on a voyage within specified limits of time and space, which was to end “at such port in the United Kingdom or the Continent of Europe within home-trading limits as may be required by the master.” Within the prescribed limits the ship arrived at Southampton, where she discharged her cargo. The master required the crew to take her on to Cardiff in ballast. One of the seamen claimed his discharge and wages at Southampton, on the ground that the voyage had ended there:—Held, that he was not entitled to his discharge at Southampton. The Scarsdale; Board of Trade v. Baxter, 76 L. J. P. 147; [1907] A.C. 873; 97 L. T. 526; 23 T. L. R. 729—H.L. (E.)

— Desertion—Forfeiture—Criminal Matter—Private Arrangement—Deduction—Payment—“Through or in presence of” Mercantile Marine Superintendent.—By the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, s. 131, a seaman when discharged shall receive his wages “through or in presence of a superintendent” of mercantile marine, unless a competent Court otherwise direct. A master paying a seaman’s wages in the absence of a superintendent is liable to penalties. By section 221, a seaman deserting from his ship when abroad is liable to forfeit the wages he has earned and those which he may earn until his return to the United Kingdom, and also to satisfy any excess of wages paid by the master or owner of the ship to any substitute engaged at a higher rate of wages. By section 232, any wages forfeited for desertion are to be applied towards reimbursing the expenses caused by the desertion to the master or owner of the ship, and subject to that reimbursement are to be paid into the Exchequer and carried to the Consolidated Fund:—Held, that the liability to forfeiture of wages on desertion is a liability of a criminal nature, and cannot be compromised by a private arrangement between masters or owners and seamen. Keslake v. Board of Trade, 72 L. J. K.B. 829; [1903] 2 K.B. 453; 89 L. T. 534; 52 W. R. 127; 67 J. P. 356; 9 Asp. M.C. 491—D.

A seaman deserted abroad from his ship. The master of the ship engaged a substitute at a higher rate of wages. The seaman engaged himself for a homeward voyage on another ship. In pursuance of an arrangement between the seaman, the master of the first ship, and the master of the second ship, the latter, on the seaman’s return to the United Kingdom, deducted from his wages earned on the second ship the excess which the master of the first ship had paid to the substitute, and offered to the seaman in presence of the mercantile marine superintendent the balance after making such deduction. The superintendent refused to sanction the payment and withdrew, and the master of the second ship in his absence paid to the seaman the amount offered:—Held, that the superintendent was justified in withdrawing, that the amount was therefore paid in his absence, and that consequently the master was liable to a penalty under section 131. Ib.

— Dismissal by Naval Court held in Foreign Country—Jurisdiction to Declare Wages Forfeited.—Where a Naval Court, held in a foreign country, under sections 480 to 485 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, discharges a seaman who is found guilty by the Court of an offence under section 225 of the Act from his employment on board a ship, and forfeits his wages, the seaman cannot, after such discharge, recover any wages from the shipowner in respect of his employment on the ship, inasmuch as the order and decision are within the jurisdiction of the Naval Court, and bind the seaman under section 483, sub-section (1), clauses (c) and (d), and sub-section (2). Hutton v. Ras Steamship Co., 94 L. T. 645; 54 W. R. 182; 11 Com. Cas. 66; 22 T. L. R. 103—Lord Alverstone, C.J.

— Termination of Service at Foreign Port—Sending Home—“Port in the United Kingdom agreed to by the seaman.”—By section 186 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, where the service of any seaman belonging to any British ship terminates at any port out of her Majesty’s dominions the master shall besides paying the wages to which the seaman is entitled, either “(a) provide him with adequate employment on board some other British ship bound to the port in her Majesty’s dominions at which he was originally shipped, or to a port in the United Kingdom agreed to by the seaman, or (b) furnish the means of sending him back to some such port.” Seamen agreed to serve on a British ship on a voyage from Newport, Mon., to Malta, and to end at a final port of discharge in the United Kingdom or Continent of Europe between the Elbe and Brest inclusive; and it was agreed that when the seamen were discharged on the Continent as above the master should furnish the means of sending them back to the nearest port in the United Kingdom served by regular steamers, and the seamen agreed to such nearest port as the port in the United Kingdom to which they might be so sent back. The voyage ended at Hamburg and the crew were discharged, and the master paid the expense of sending them to Hull, which was the nearest port served by regular steamers. The seamen claimed that they were entitled to the expense of conveyance to Newport, the port of shipment:—Held, that "the port agreed to by the seaman" meant a particular defined home port, and not one of several ports which the master might select by terminating the voyage at a particular port on the Continent; that the agreement therefore contained a stipulation which was inconsistent with the provisions of section 186, and the stipulation was void under section 156 of the Act; and that the seamen were entitled to the expense of being sent back to Newport. Att.-Gen. v. Fargrove Steam Navigation Co., 23 T. L. R. 230—Bray, J.

— Termination of Service before Date contemplated—Capture of Vessel while carrying Contraband—"Loss" of Vessel—Change of Risk.—Where a seaman's service terminates before the date contemplated by his agreement, he is not precluded by section 158 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, from claiming wages beyond the date of the actual termination of the service on the ship, where such termination has been brought about by the wilful act of the captain and owners, as, for example, by engaging in the business of carrying contraband of war, which has led to the capture and condemnation of the vessel. In such a case the Court can also award damages to the seaman for breach of the agreement with him. Austin Friars Steamship Co. v. Strack, 74 L. J. K.B. 683; [1905] 2 K.B. 315; 93 L. T. 169; 53 W. R. 661; 10 Asp. M.C. 70; 21 T. L. R. 556—D.

Termination of Agreement of Service by "Loss" of Ship—Capture by Belligerent State—Subsequent Destruction.—The destruction of a British ship by one of two foreign Powers at war with each other following upon her capture by that Power is a "loss" of the ship within the meaning of section 158 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, and consequently a seaman whose service has terminated before the date contemplated in the agreement by reason of such destruction is entitled to wages only up to the time of such destruction. Sivewright v. Allen, 75 L. J. K.B. 476; [1906] 2 K.B. 81; 94 L. T. 778; 54 W. R. 604; 70 J. P. 290; 11 Com. Cas. 167; 10 Asp. M.C. 251; 22 T. L. R. 482—D.

The capture of the ship of itself would not in such a case be a "loss" within the meaning of the section. (DARLING, J., dissenting.) Ib.

Fishing-boat's Agreement—Order to be on Board at Specified Time—Failure to be on Board—Wilful Disobedience—Liability to Imprisonment.—A seaman engaged to serve on a fishing-boat was, when on board the boat in dock, ordered by the foreman manager of the owners, acting on behalf of them and of the master, to be on board at a specified hour on the following day, when the boat was to start on a fishing voyage. He did not go on board at all on that day. He was thereupon charged under section 376, sub-section (1), clause (d) of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, with the offence of "wilful disobedience," which was punishable by imprisonment. The Justices found as a fact that he had disobeyed the order wilfully and without excuse. On behalf of the seaman it was contended that he was wrongly charged under clause (d) of the sub-section, as the boat was in port, and it was not proved that an order had been given to him on board by the master; and that if he had committed any offence it was that of desertion under clause (a) or absence without leave under clause (b), neither of which was punishable by imprisonment. The Justices came to the conclusion that he had committed the offence charged, no matter whether he had or had not also committed an offence under clause (a) or clause (b), and they accordingly convicted him, and sentenced him to imprisonment:—Held, that the conviction and, consequently, the sentence were justified. Edgill v. Awarad, 71 L. J. K.B. 690; [1902] 2 K.B. 239; 87 L. T. 121; 66 J. P. 760; 9 Asp. M.C. 341; 20 Cox C.C. 302—D.

Conspiracy—Intimidation—Necessity for Actual Employment.—Persons who follow the sea as a calling are not "seamen" within the exception contained in section 16 of the Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875, unless they are actually employed or engaged on board ship within the meaning of the definition of "seaman" contained in section 2 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (re-enacted by section 742 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894). An indictment for intimidation under section 7 of the Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875, will therefore lie against persons not so employed or engaged. Reg. v. Lynch, 67 L. J. Q.B. 59; [1898] 1 Q.B. 61; 77 L. T. 568; 46 W. R. 205; 8 Asp. M.C. 363; 18 Cox C.C. 677—C.C.R.

"Distressed seaman"—Seaman Shipwrecked Abroad but in Receipt of Wages—Expenses Incurred in Relief of Seaman—Action by Board of Trade for Recovery of Expenses from Owner—Evidence of Expenses—Account of Relieving Authority—Proof of Payment by Board of Trade—"Sufficient evidence."—It is a question of fact in each case whether a seaman who has been shipwrecked and in distress abroad is a "distressed seaman" within the meaning of the Merchant Shipping Acts, 1894 and 1898. A seaman may, however, be a "distressed seaman" within the meaning of those Acts, and as such entitled to relief under the Acts, notwithstanding that he has been paid arrears of wages sufficient to cover his passage home and maintain him in the meantime. Board of Trade v. "Glenpark" Sailing Ship, 73 L. J. K.B. 315; [1904] 1 K.B. 682; 90 L. T. 360; 52 W. R. 646; 9 Com. Cas. 192; 9 Asp. M.C. 550; 20 T. L. R. 321—C.A.

Expenses Incurred in Relief of Seaman—Action by Board of Trade for Recovery of Expenses from Owner—Evidence of Expenses—Account of Relieving Authority—Proof of Payment by Board of Trade—"Sufficient evidence."—Section 193, sub-section 3 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, provides that in any proceeding by the Board of Trade for recovery from the owner of a ship of expenses incurred in the relief of a distressed seaman who belonged to the ship, the production of the account (if any) of the expenses furnished in accordance with the Act or the distressed seamen regulations, and proof of payment of the expenses by or on behalf of the Board of Trade, shall be "sufficient evidence" that the expenses were incurred or repaid under the Act by or on behalf of the Crown:—Held, that the expression "sufficient evidence" means conclusive evidence. Board of Trade v. Sailing Ship "Glenpark," 72 L. J. K.B. 697; [1903] 2 K.B. 824; 88 L. T. 693; 51 W. R. 554; 8 Com. Cas. 285; 9 Asp. M.C. 413—Bigham, J. See s.c. in C.A., supra, col. 2304.

Persuading Seamen to Desert—Foreign Ship neither Registered nor Owned in United Kingdom.]—The special provision in section 233 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, Part II., is alone applicable to the case of desertion of seamen from foreign ships, and excludes the general provisions of Part II. of the Act relative to desertion of seamen, which are limited to desertion from British ships—that is, sea-going ships registered in the United Kingdom, or sea-going British ships registered out of the United Kingdom. Accordingly, it is no offence under section 236 to persuade a seaman to desert from a foreign ship, for such an offence, as well as harbouring a deserter from a foreign ship, is punishable only under section 238 when applied by Order in Council. Poll v. Dambe, 70 L. J. K.B. 721; [1901] 2 K.B. 579; 84 L. T. 870; 50 W. R. 28; 65 J. P. 774; 9 Asp. M.C. 220—D.

Offences of Seamen against Discipline—Complaint to Naval Court against Seamen—Powers of Naval Court—Jurisdiction to Dismiss from Ship and Forfeit Wages—Finality of Order of Court.]—Upon a complaint made to a naval Court, convened under section 480 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, by the master against a seaman for offences against discipline under section 225, the Court is not restricted in its powers of punishment to the power conferred by section 483, sub-section 1, clause (h), but may exercise any of the powers conferred by the other clauses of that sub-section; and where the Court in such a case discharges the seaman and forfeits his wages under the powers conferred by section 483, sub-section 1, clauses (c) and (d), the order of the Court is by section 483, sub-section 2, a complete bar to a subsequent action by the seaman against the shipowner for wrongful dismissal and wages. *Hutton v. 6. CHARTERPARTY.

(a) Hire of Ship.

Breach of Contract—Measure of Damages.]—There is no difference between the law of England and that of Scotland in respect of the compensation recoverable for breach of contract. The respondents, by a charterparty, contracted with the appellants to provide a ship for the carriage from Sweden of wood pulp which the appellants were under obligation to supply to a firm of merchants. The respondents broke their contract, the firm had to buy pulp elsewhere to replace that which ought to have been delivered, and received the price of it from the appellants, who thereupon sued the respondents for the loss thus sustained:—Held, that the proper measure of damages was the cost of replacing the goods at their place of destination at the time when they ought to have arrived, less the value of the goods in Sweden and the amount of the freight and insurance. Ströms Bruks Aktie Bolag v. Hutchinson, 74 L. J. P.C. 130; [1905] A.C. 515; 93 L. T. 562; 10 Asp. M.C. 138; 11 Com. Cas. 13; 21 T. L. R. 718—H.L. (Sc.)

Freightment—Necessity for Charterparty.]—The contract of freightment does not require the execution of a charterparty for its constitution. Rederi Aktiebolaget Nordstjernan v. Salvesen, 6 F. 64—Ct. of Sess.

Previous Verbal Representation as to Carrying Capacity of Vessel—Breach of Warranty.]—During negotiations for the chartering of a vessel the owners' agents represented that the vessel had carried a certain quantity of cargo. The charterers acted on the representation, which in fact was untrue, and entered into a charterparty containing no reference to the previous cargo:—Held, that, the representation being untrue, the charterers could recover as for breach of a collateral verbal warranty. Hassan v. Runciman, 91 L. T. 808; 10 Com. Cas. 19; 10 Asp. M.C. 31—Channell, J.

Guarantee by Owners that Steamer shall Carry Named Dead Weight and Provide not Less than Defined Cargo Space—Liberty to Steamer to Carry Named Weight of Coal for Steaming Purposes—Breach of Guarantee.]—By the terms of a charterparty the freight to be paid for the hire of a vessel for a voyage was the lump sum of 10,000L., the ship to take on board at the port of loading all such goods and lawful merchandise as the charterers or their agents should tender alongside for shipment, including explosives and deck cargo not exceeding what she could reasonably stow and carry. The charterparty contained the following provision: "The lump sum is based on owner's guarantee that the said steamer shall carry a dead weight of 6000 tons of cargo when loaded according to Lloyd's rules, exclusive of 1100 tons of coal, which steamer may carry for steaming purposes, &c., of which about 800 to be carried in the hold, and the necessary stores for the steamer's use for the voyage, and also that the steamer shall place at the disposal of the charterers for cargo not less than 8450 tons of forty cubic feet cargo space grain measurement; failing which, a pro rata reduction shall be made." The cubic space of 8450 tons of forty cubic feet cargo space grain measurement in the vessel was placed at the disposal of the charterers; but if she had taken on board a cargo of 6000 tons dead weight it would have been necessary to limit the quantity of coals on leaving the port of loading to 728 tons in order to comply with Lloyd's rules as to freeboard. The charterers in fact loaded a cargo which filled all the available space, but did not weigh 6000 tons, and the master thereupon took on board 1,250 tons of coal for steaming purposes. The charterers deducted from the 10,000L., named in the charterparty as the lump sum freight, the sum of 523L. 18s. 10d., being the proportion of the 10,000L. corresponding to the difference between 7,100 tons (6,000 + 1,100) and 6,728 tons, the total dead-weight capacity of the vessel, upon the ground that she was not of the guaranteed dead-weight capacity of 6,000 tons when loaded according to Lloyd's rules, exclusive of 1,100 tons of coal for steaming purposes. In an action by the shipowners to recover the 523*l.* 18*s.* 10*d.* so deducted,—Held, that the deduction had been rightly made by the charterers, and that the shipowners were therefore not entitled to recover. Societa Anonima Ungherese di Armamento Marittimo Oriente v. Tyser Line, 8 Com. Cas. 25—Kennedy, J.

Charter of Ship for Voyage—Full Cargo over "tackle, apparel, provisions and furniture"—Implied Condition that Ship should be Used for Charterers' Purposes Only—Loading More Coal than Necessary for Chartered Voyage—Expense of Lightening Ship—Liability of Shipowner.]—A charterparty provided that a ship should load "a full and complete cargo . . . not exceeding what she can reasonably stow and carry over her tackle, apparel, provisions and furniture," and proceed to two or three ports. On her arrival at her first port of discharge the shipowner loaded a larger amount of bunker coal (after allowing a reasonable margin) than was required for the chartered voyage. In consequence it became necessary to lighten the ship outside the next port of discharge to enable her to get into such port, and the charterers were put to considerable expense.—Held, that in a charterparty of this kind there was an implied condition that, subject to what was reasonably necessary for the seaworthiness of the ship on the chartered voyage and the due performance of such voyage, the ship should be used for the purposes of the charterers only, and that the shipowners by loading an excessive quantity of bunker coal had committed a breach of that condition, and were bound to repay the money expended by the charterers. Darling v. Raeburn, 76 L. J. K.B. 570; [1907] 1 K.B. 846; 96 L. T. 437; 12 Com. Cas. 262; 23 T. L. R. 354; 10 Asp. M.C. 499—C.A. Affirming, 10 Asp. M.C. 268—Kennedy, J.

Obligation of Shipowner to Supply Ballast for Ship.]—Where in a charterparty the responsibility for safe navigation is imposed on the owner, the provision of proper ballast to secure the stability of the ship, which is an incident of navigation, is the duty of the owner, whether or not there has been a demise of the vessel to the charterer. Weir v. Union Steamship Co., 69 L. J. Q.B. 809; [1900] A.C. 525; 83 L. T. 91; 5 Com. Cas. 363; 9 Asp. M.C. 111—H.L. (E.)

Option of Charterers to Cancel on Non-Arrival of Vessel by Fixed Date—Impossibility of Arrival—Refusal to Proceed—Injunction.]—By a charterparty the shipowner agreed that his vessel should proceed to a named port and there load a cargo for the charterer, and it was provided that, if the vessel should not be at that port ready to load by a specified date, the charterer should be at liberty to cancel the charterparty. The vessel was then at another port unloading, and was delayed in doing so for so long that it became impossible for her to arrive at the agreed port by the specified date. The charterer refused to extend the time for cancellation, or to promise to load the vessel if she proceeded to the agreed port, and said that if he did load, the rate of freight must be reduced, and he insisted on the vessel proceeding to the agreed port. The shipowner thereupon refused to send his vessel there.—Held, that an injunction ought not to be granted to restrain the shipowner from using the vessel for any purposes other than those of the charterparty. De Mattos v. Gibson (28 L. J. Ch. 165, 498) and Sevin v. Deslandes (30 L. J. Ch. 457) distinguished. Bucknall v. Tatem, 83 L. T. 121; 9 Asp. M.C. 127—C.A.

Failure to Provide Ship "with all convenient speed"—Option to Charterers to Cancel Contract.]

—A charterparty for a voyage from Leith to London provided that "the s.s. Alice now trading and expected ready to load about March 3" should "with all convenient speed sail and proceed to" the loading berth at Leith and there load. It further provided that "in the event of . . . any mishap entailing delay in arrival at port of loading, beyond seven days of her expected readiness, charterers to have the option of cancelling the charter." The charterparty also contained a clause giving the shipowners the option of substituting for the Alice a sister ship called the Douglas. Neither the Alice nor the Douglas was ready to load within seven days of March 3, owing to the shipowners having, after entering into the charterparty, undertaken other engagements for these ships which rendered it impossible for them to be ready for loading by that date. The charterers thereupon despatched their goods by other vessels at increased rates. In an action of damages at the instance of the charterers,—Held, that, as the shipowners had by their own act put it out of their power to fulfil the contract, they were liable in damages. Nelson v. Dundee East Coast Shipping Co., [1907] S.C. 927—Ct. of Sess.

Ship "to proceed immediately"—Deviation—Repudiation—Condition Precedent.]—By two charterparties of even date a steamer was chartered to proceed on successive voyages to a port in America and there load a cargo, and to proceed therewith to Rotterdam. The second charterparty contained a clause that on the completion of the first voyage the steamer should "proceed immediately" to fulfil that charterparty. On the completion of the first voyage the steamer left Rotterdam and went to Cardiff to coal, and thence proceeded to America, where she arrived before the cancelling date provided by the charterparty. The charterers refused to load the steamer under the charterparty on the ground that by reason of the steamer going to Cardiff there had been a breach of the above clause.—Held, that there had been no breach of the charterparty, it being the ordinary course of business for steamers proceeding from Rotterdam to America to go to Cardiff to coal. Held, also, that the above clause was not a condition precedent, the breach of which would entitle the charterers to repudiate the charterparty. Forest Oak Steam Shipping Co. v. Richard, 5 Com. Cas. 100—Bigham, J.

Breach of Warranty—Damages—Remoteness.]

—The plaintiff chartered a ship from the defendants for a single voyage. By the charterparty the defendants warranted that the vessel was

"in every way fitted for the voyage and service, and to be so maintained by the owners." During the currency of the charterparty a stevedore engaged on the ship in the work of unloading sustained injuries by reason of the defective condition of an iron ladder leading to the hold. The stevedore sued the charterer for damages. The charterer defended the action, and in so doing acted reasonably, and judgment was given against him for damages and costs on the ground that he had committed a breach of duty towards the stevedore in not making an inspection of the vessel before inviting the stevedore on board:—Held, that the charterer's liability to the stevedore was the natural consequence of the defendants' breach of warranty; and that the charterer was entitled to recover from the defendants the damages and costs paid by him to the stevedore, and his own costs, as between solicitor and client, incurred in defending the action. Scott v. Foley, 5 Com. Cas. 53—Bigham, J.

Mortgage—Charterparty whether Impairing Security of Mortgagee.—Mortgagors of a ship chartered her to the plaintiff for passenger and merchandise traffic between Liverpool and North Wales during the months of September and October. By the terms of the charter the plaintiff was authorised to sell such of the effects on board the ship as might be necessary for the service, and bring the proceeds into account. He was to keep an account of receipts for passage-money, freight on merchandise, sales of wines and other refreshments on board, payments of wages, stores and expenses of service; all such payments to be made out of receipts. Accounts were to be made up weekly. The mortgagors were to keep the ship properly insured against usual risks. The profits of the venture (if any) were to be divided in equal shares between the mortgagors and the plaintiff at the expiration of the charter. If the ship was found to be running at a loss the plaintiff was to be at liberty to discontinue or modify the charter. At the date of the charter the vessel was not fully insured, and it was anticipated that there would be default in payment of the mortgage debt:—Held, that the charter did not impair the security of the mortgagee. The Heather Bell, 70 L. J. P. 57; [1901] P. 272; 84 L. T. 794; 49 W. R. 577; 9 Asp. M.C. 206—C.A.

Sub-charterparty—Right of Shipowner to Sue Indorsee of Bill of Lading for Freight on Cargo Shipped under Sub-charterparty.—The owners of the W. chartered her to G. under a charterparty which provided that the master should sign bills of lading as presented, and that the charterers' liability should cease on shipment of the cargo, and gave the shipowners a lien for freight, dead freight, and demurrage. G. re-chartered the vessel to M. L., under a charterparty which contained provisions similar to the original charterparty. M. L., who had no notice of the original charterparty, shipped a cargo in pursuance of the second charterparty, and bills of lading were signed by the master as presented, by which the cargo was to be delivered to the order or assigns of the shippers on payment of freight without recourse to shippers as per the second charterparty:—Held, that the bills of lading were signed by the master as agent of the shipowners, and that the shipowners were entitled to sue the indorsees of the bills of lading for the freight due thereon. Wastwater Steamship Co. v. Neale, 86 L. T. 266; 9 Asp. M.C. 282—D.

Spanish Export Tax—Liability to Pay.—By a charterparty a ship was chartered to proceed to a Spanish port and load a cargo of iron rails, "Spanish Customs dues on cargo to be paid by steamer not exceeding 1s. per ton." There was a Spanish export tax on iron rails:—Held, that the ship had to pay the export tax, which came within the words "Customs dues," up to 1s. per ton, and the charterers had to pay the balance. Rea v. London Transport Co.; London Transport Co. v. Bessler, Waechter & Co., 23 T. L. R. 271—Channell, J. Reversed, 24 T. L. R. 133—C.A.

(b) Time Charter.

Captain under Direction of Charterer—Shipowner's Lien for Hire—Lien on Sub-freights—Sub-charter—Bill of Lading—Payment of Freight to Agent Nominated by Sub-charterer—Right of Shipowner to Freight—Right to Withdraw Ship—"Without prejudice to other rights"—Lien for Hire Due after Withdrawal.—In the case of a time charter in the ordinary form, not operating as a demise of the ship, the contracts contained in bills of lading are made with the shipowner and not with the charterer, notwithstanding that, by the terms of the time charter, the captain is to be under the orders and direction of the charterer as regards agency, employment, and other arrangements. Wehner v. Dene Steam Shipping Co., 74 L. J. K.B. 550; [1905] 2 K.B. 92; 10 Com. Cas. 139; 21 T. L. R. 339—Channell, J.

Agents appointed by the charterer or his sub-charterers to collect freight due under bills of lading collect the same on behalf of all parties concerned, including the shipowner having a lien on cargoes and sub-freights for hire due and unpaid under the time charter. A shipowner having such a lien, who claims the freight from the agent before the latter has paid it to or allowed it in account with the charterers, has a right to have paid to him an amount equal to the amount of hire presently due to him and unpaid for which he has the lien. Any further sum received by him as freight from the agents he holds to the use of the charterers. Ib.

Seemle, that the shipowner who receives freight from the agent has no right to hold it as security for hire accruing due. Gilkison v. Middleton (26 L. J. C.P. 209; 2 C. B. (n.s.) 134) followed. Marquand v. Banner (25 L. J. Q.B. 313; 6 E. & B. 232) questioned. Ib.

By the terms of a time charter the hire of the ship was payable half-monthly in advance. In default of payment the owner was to have the faculty of withdrawing the ship from the service of the charterer without prejudice to any claim he might have against the charterer under the charterparty. The owner was also to have a lien upon all cargoes and sub-freights for any amounts due under the charter:—Held, that, after exercising his right of withdrawing the ship from the service of the charterer, the owner could not exercise his lien on sub-freights to enforce payments of hire alleged to be due for the use of the ship after the date of the withdrawal. Ib.

Part of the time allowed for discharging was occupied in the reasonable and necessary process of ballasting the ship, and the discharge was delayed in consequence:—Held, that the time so occupied was not to be excluded from the time allowed for discharging. Ib.

Periodical Payments in Advance—Power Reserved to Owners on Default of Payment to Withdraw Vessel—Estoppel.—By a charterparty a ship was let for nine months, the charterers to pay for the hire of the ship at an agreed rate, fortnightly in advance, and in default of such payment the owners to have the faculty of withdrawing the ship from the service of the charterers. The owners were to pay the wages of captain and crew, but the charterers were to pay for coals, port charges, &c., and the captain was to be under their orders and directions as regarded employment. After the charterers had had the use of the ship for two months they made default in making the fortnightly payment due on June 21. The ship was then on a voyage to S., where she arrived on the 25th, and while there the captain telegraphed to H. to order the cargo to be ready. After lying two days at S. the ship started on the 27th for H. On the 28th the owners gave notice to the charterers of their withdrawal of the ship by reason of the charterers' default in the payment due on the 21st:—Held, that upon these facts there was no evidence of any waiver by the shipowners of their right to withdraw the vessel, nor of any conduct on their part estopping them from insisting on their right. Tyler and Hessler, In re, 86 L. T. 697; 7 Com. Cas. 166; 9 Asp. M.C. 292—C.A.

"Lien on sub-freights."—By the terms of a time charter the shipowner was to have a "lien on sub-freights" as security for payment of the hire of the ship:—Held, that this gave the shipowner a right to stop freight before it was paid to the time charterer or his agent authorised to receive it; and that when once the freight was so paid the shipowner's right to stop it was gone. Tugart, Beaton & Co. v. Fisher, 72 L. J. K.B. 202; [1903] 1 K.B. 391; 88 L. T. 451; 51 W. R. 599; 9 Asp. M.C. 381; 8 Com. Cas. 133—C.A.

Duty to Supply Ballast.—By a charterparty it was agreed that a vessel with officers and crew should be placed at the disposal of the charterers or their assigns for the conveyance of merchandise and (or) passengers between certain ports, the vessel being let for the sole use of the charterers, with liberty to sub-let, for three voyages commencing not later than a certain day when she was to be placed with clear holds at the charterers' disposal at New York, they having the whole reach or burden of the vessel, sufficient room being reserved to the owners for the officers, crew, and tackle, &c., of the ship. The vessel was not to be required to load more than she could reasonably stow and carry over and above her tackle, stores, &c. The captain was to be under the orders of the charterers as regards employment, agency, and other arrangements, and in case of dissatisfaction of the charterers the owners agreed to make any necessary change in the appointment of the captain or crew. The freight payable by the charterers was a fixed monthly amount, and was payable until the charterers delivered up the vessel to the owners. The owners were to have a lien on the cargo and freight for arrears of hire, and the charterers were to have a lien on the ship for the freight payable in advance. The charterers sent the ship upon one of the voyages contemplated by the charterparty without any cargo. It consequently became necessary for the proper navigation of the ship to take on board some ballast in addition to her usual water ballast. In an action to decide at whose cost this extra ballast was to be supplied,—Held, that there was nothing in this charterparty which relieved the shipowners from the ordinary obligation of shipowners to supply the necessary ballast for the proper navigation of the ship. Weir v. Union Steamship Co., [1900] 1 Q.B. 28; 81 L. T. 553—C.A.

Power of Extension for Completion of Voyage.—Under a charterparty a ship was hired within certain limits for "a term of about six calendar months" from the date when she was placed at the charterers' disposal. The charterparty provided that should the steamer be upon a voyage at the expiration of the term, the charterers were to have the use of the steamer at the same rate and conditions for such extended time as might be necessary for the completion of the contemplated voyage, and in order to bring the steamer to the port of redelivery. The steamer came on hire on May 12. On October 26 the charterers sent the steamer on a voyage within the prescribed limits, which it was obvious could not be completed so as to permit of the re-delivery of the steamer to the owners at the end of the period of about six months, and the steamer was, in fact, delivered to the owners nearly two months after the expiration of that period:—Held, that the charterers had not committed a breach of the charterparty. Dene Steam Shipping Co. v. Bucknall, 5 Com. Cas. 372—Bigham, J.

Duration of Hire—Completion of Voyage.—A steamer was chartered for twelve calendar months, payment of hire to be at a certain rate per month, and "at and after the same rate for any part of a month used to complete a voyage," hire to continue from the time specified for terminating the charterparty until delivery of the steamer to the owners at a port in the United Kingdom in the charterer's option. The twelve months expired on August 12. On August 18 the vessel finished discharging a cargo at Cronstadt, which had been carried under a sub-charterparty for a voyage from Cardiff to that port. The charterer intended that the vessel, after discharging at Cronstadt, should proceed to Lulea in ballast, load a cargo there, and proceed therewith to Rotterdam and thence to Gravesend, where the vessel would be delivered to the owners, according to reasonable calculations, before September 12:—Held, that to send the ship to Lulea would be to cause her to commence a fresh voyage, and that the owners were therefore entitled to have her re-delivered to them at Cronstadt. Istok v. Steamship and Drughorn, In re, 7 Com. Cas. 190—C.A.

Hire—Quarantine—"Restraint of princes and rulers."—A time charter contained a condition that payment of the stipulated hire should cease during loss of time occasioned by certain specified circumstances. Among these circumstances detention in quarantine was not mentioned. By a further clause "restraints of princes and rulers" were "mutually excepted." The vessel having been detained for some days in quarantine, the charterers declined to pay the hire for that period on the ground that quarantine fell within the exception of "restraints of princes and rulers":—Held, that the charterers were liable for the hire during the period the vessel was in quarantine. Aktieselskabet Lina v. Turnbull, [1907] S.C. 507—Ct. of Sess.

(c) Warranty of Seaworthiness.

Liability of Shipowners—Charterers Agreeing to Provide and Pay for all Coal—Insufficiency of Supply of Coal.—Where under a charterparty for a round voyage from Liverpool to the River Plate and back to the United Kingdom, the charterers are to provide and pay for all the coal, the shipowners are not relieved from responsibility to see that the ship is seaworthy at the commencement of each stage of her voyage by reason of there being a sufficient supply of coal on board. McIver v. Tate Steamers, Lim., 72 L. J. K.B. 253; [1903] 1 K.B. 362; 88 L. T. 182; 51 W. R. 393; 8 Com. Cas. 124; 9 Asp. M.C. 362—C.A.

Division of Voyage into Stages for Coaling Purposes—Insufficient Equipment of Coal.—Where in an action by a cargo-owner against a steamship-owner upon a contract of affreightment the cargo-owner establishes that the ship was not seaworthy at the commencement of the voyage because she had not on board sufficient coal for the whole voyage, and that a loss was thereby caused to him, the shipowner may displace this cause of action by proving that by reason of the necessity of the case he had divided the voyage into stages for coaling purposes, and that at the commencement of each stage the ship had sufficient coal on board for that stage; but if he fails in this he fails in disproving a breach of the implied warranty of seaworthiness which prima facie attaches to a contract of affreightment. Thin v. Richards & Co. (62 L. J. Q.B. 39; [1892] 2 Q.B. 141) explained. The Vortigern, 68 L. J. P. 49; [1899] P. 140; 80 L. T. 382; 47 W. R. 437; 8 Asp. M.C. 523—C.A. An owner of a cargo-carrying steamship agreed by charterparty to carry a cargo from Cebu, in the Philippine Islands, to Liverpool, with liberty to call at any port in any order, the negligence, default, or error in judgment of the master, crew, and other servants of the shipowner excepted. From the necessity of the case a cargo-carrying steamship cannot start upon this voyage with sufficient coal for the whole voyage, and the shipowner therefore, in accordance with the ordinary course of business in that trade, divided the voyage into three stages for coaling purposes. The ship did not, at the commencement of the second stage, take in sufficient coal for that stage, and, in consequence, burnt a part of the cargo for fuel to carry the ship to the end of the stage. In an action by the cargo-owner for non-delivery of the cargo burnt,—Held, that the implied warranty that the ship should be seaworthy for the voyage at the commencement thereof included a condition that the ship should, at the commencement of each stage, be seaworthy as to her equipment of coal for that stage, and that, as the warranty was not made good with regard to the second stage, the cargo-owner was entitled to recover, the negligence of the servants of the shipowner being no answer to the breach of warranty. Id.

Per COLLINS, L.J.—The subject-matter as to which, and the stages into which, the voyage is to be deemed to be divided for the purposes of the warranty of seaworthiness must be determined in each case by reference to the exigencies of the adventure contemplated by the parties, having regard to the ordinary course of business. Id.

Unseaworthiness from Improper Loading—Personal Negligence of Owner.—The owner of a chartered ship, in herself seaworthy, but rendered unseaworthy by the improper loading of cargo and ballast which is carried out under his orders, is liable for damage occasioned by his personal negligence. City of Lincoln v. Smith, 73 L. J. P.C. 45; [1904] A.C. 250; 91 L. T. 206; 9 Asp. M.C. 586—P.C.

Clause of Non-liability—"Provided all reasonable means have been taken to provide against unseaworthiness"—Negligence.—In a charterparty the owners stipulated that they should not be liable for, among other things, unseaworthiness, "provided all reasonable means have been taken to provide against unseaworthiness." In an action for loss caused by unseaworthiness, brought by the charterers, the jury found that such reasonable means were not taken, and judgment was entered for the plaintiffs for the damages sustained:—Held, on the construction of the clause as a whole, that the owners were not protected by the clause under which they claimed protection, the clause being contradictory and inconsistent in its terms. Nelson Line v. Nelson & Sons (No. 2), 77 L. J. K.B. 82—H.L. (E.) Affirming, [1907] 1 K.B. 769; 96 L. T. 402; 10 Asp. M.C. 390; 12 Com. Cas. 210; 23 T. L. R. 302—C.A. And see The Europa, 77 L. J. (d) Exceptions.

"All other accidents"—Spilling of Sugar in Bags—Bags Torn by Reckless and Improper Use of Hooks in Discharging Cargo.—The spilling of sugar, owing to the tearing of the bags in which it was contained by the reckless and improper use of hooks in discharging the cargo, held to be an "accident" within the meaning of the following clause in a charterparty under which the sugar was carried: "Act of God, fire, perils of the sea, barratry on the part of the captain or crew, enemies, pirates or robbers, strikes, arrests or restraints of princes, rulers and peoples; collisions, strandings, and all other accidents excepted, even though caused by negligence, fault or error of judgment on the part of the pilot, captain, sailors, or other servants of the owners in the management or navigation of the vessel or otherwise." The Torbryan, 72 L. L. T. 265; 52 W. R. 40; 9 Com. Cas. 1; 9 Asp. M.C. 450—C.A.

Detention by Railways and Scarcity of Waggons.—A charterparty for a cargo of iron ore to be delivered to the charterer or his assignees free into trucks at Glasgow provided that the charterer was not to be responsible for "detention by railways, scarcity of waggons . . . or other causes beyond his control." The iron ore was not discharged until sixteen days after the ship was berthed, owing to the Caledonian Railway Co. (by whose line the consignees had directed the charterer to forward the ore) not having supplied waggons until the latter part of these sixteen days. In an action by the shipowners against the charterers for demurrage, the pursuers maintained that the defender ought to have forwarded the ore by the North British Railway Co.'s line, and in any view that the charterer was liable because the reason why the Caledonian Co. did not at first supply waggons was that the consignees were detaining too many of that company's waggons at their works:—Held, that the delay in discharging the cargo was due to detention by railways and scarcity of waggons beyond the defender's control, and that he was not liable in demurrage. Mein v. Ottmann, 6 F. 270—Ct. of Sess.

Specified Holidays — Unauthorised Holiday Taken by Men—Exception of "any time lost through riots, strikes, lock-outs, or any disputes between masters and men, occasioning a stoppage of pitmen"—Cause beyond Charterers' Control.]—A charterparty provided: "The cargo to be loaded in 130 running hours (excluding bunkering time, Sundays, Custom House, colliery and local holidays, Easter Monday and Tuesday, Whit Monday and Tuesday, and three days following Christmas . . .) commencing when written notice is given of steamer being . . . ready to load"; and further: "Any time lost through riots, strikes, lock-outs, or any dispute between masters and men occasioning a stoppage of pitmen, trimmers, or other hands connected with the working or delivery of the coal for which the steamer is stemmed; or by reason of accidents to mines or machinery, obstructions on the railway or in the docks, or by reason of floods, frosts, fogs, storms, or any cause beyond the control of the charterers, not to be computed as part of the loading time." The colliers belonging to the colliery from which the coal was taken gave notice that they would work on Good Friday, April 10, 1903, and the next day, but that they would take Easter Monday and the following Tuesday and Wednesday, April 13, 14, and 15, as holidays. The colliery owners had no voice in this matter. Notice of the steamer's readiness to load was given by the shipowners at 9 A.M. on Wednesday, April 15, on which day all work at the colliery was stopped and no coal raised:—Held, that the time lost by reason of the stoppage of the colliery on April 15 was within the exceptions in the charterparty, the words "or any cause beyond the control of the charterers," and that the shipowners were entitled to damages for detention. Richardsons and Samuels & Co.; In re, 66 L. Negligence Clause — Exemption of Owners from Liability for Master's Negligence—Bill of Lading not Incorporating Negligence Clause—Loss of Ship and Cargo by Master's Negligence — Payment of Damages by Shipowners to Holders of Bills of Lading—Indemnity of Shipowners by Charterers.—Merchants chartered a ship by a charterparty, one of the terms of which was that the owners should not be liable for loss caused by the master's negligence. The charterers presented to the master, and the master signed, a bill of lading which did not incorporate this term of the charter. The ship and cargo were lost through the master's negligence, and the owners were compelled to pay to the holders of the bill of lading the damages sustained. The owners, by their action, claimed to be indemnified by the charterers:—Held, that they were entitled to be so indemnified. Kruger v. Moel Tryvan Ship Co., 76 L. J. K.B. 985; [1907] A.C. 272; 97 L. T. 143; 13 Com. Cas. 1; 10 Asp. M.C. 465; 23 T. L. R. 677—H.L. (E.)

It is the charterers' duty to present for the master's signature such a bill of lading as is not inconsistent with and not to the prejudice of the charterparty. Ib.

Delay Caused by Collision without Shipowner's Default.—By the terms of a charterparty a ship was to proceed to Poti and there load a cargo for Baltimore or Philadelphia. All hours on demurrage over the running days were to be paid for. By the charterparty all causes beyond the control of the shippers, consignees, or the charterers which might prevent or delay the loading or discharging during the voyage were always mutually accepted. Subject to the exceptions, the charterers guaranteed cargo and quay berth from the time that written notice of free pratique having been received by the vessel had been given to charterers' agent. After the notice of receipt of free pratique had been given and the ship was on demurrage, and while she was waiting at Poti for a berth, a steamer, on March 4, came into collision with her, and in consequence she was obliged to proceed to Constantinople for repairs. No demurrage was claimed in respect of the time she was at Constantinople. Upon her return to Poti on April 19, owing to the number of steamers waiting to be loaded, a quay berth was not ready till June 2, and she completed her loading and sailed from Poti on June 10:—Held, that, there being no default on the part of the owners, the period of demurrage was resumed upon the return of the ship to Poti, and that the exceptions did not protect the charterers from liability to pay demurrage from April 19 to June 10. Tyne Shipowning Co. v. Lecch, 69 L. J. Q.B. 353; [1900] 2 Q.B. 12; 48 W. R. 500; 5 Com. Cas. 155—Kennedy, J.

Causes Operating before Shipment.—The defendants chartered the plaintiffs' vessel for the carriage of a cargo of ore from Poti in the Black Sea, the charterparty containing amongst the excepted perils which might prevent or delay the loading of the vessel, "floods, stoppages of trains, miners or workmen, accidents to railways and to mines or piers from which the ore is to be shipped." In the ordinary course the ore was brought from the mines to the pier by lines of railway and could not be brought in any other way, and was not generally brought until it was wanted for shipment. The vessel arrived at Poti, but no cargo was or could be supplied to her in consequence of the breakdown of the railway communication between the mines and the pier, caused by storms and floods, and the vessel sailed away without cargo. In an action by the plaintiffs against the charterers for not supplying the cargo,—Held, that the exceptions in the charterparty applied not only to causes operating at the port of loading, but also to causes operating to prevent the ore being brought from the mines to the pier, and that the charterers were therefore protected by the exceptions. Furness v. Forwood, 77 L. T. 95; 8 Asp. M.C. 298—Mathew, J.

(e) Cargo.

"Full and complete cargo"—Wet Cargo in Frozen Condition—Broken Stowage.—A charterparty provided that the charterers should ship a full and complete cargo of "wet woodpulp which contains 50 per cent. water." During the shipment of the cargo a severe frost prevailed at the port of loading, which froze the bales of woodpulp, with the result that there was a large amount of broken stowage, and the cargo loaded, although as much as the ship could stow, was less than the cargo which the ship could have stowed had the bales been shipped in their ordinary flexible condition. It was proved that intense frosts existed at the port of loading at the period of the year contemplated by the charterparty for the shipment of the cargo, and that wet woodpulp is always shipped there in winter in a frozen condition:—Held (VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., dissentiente), that the charterers had shipped a full and complete cargo of "wet woodpulp which contains 50 per cent. water" within the meaning of the charterparty. Isis Steamship Co. v. Bahr, Behrend & Ross, 68 L. J. Q.B. 930; [1899] 2 Q.B. 364; 81 L. T. 241—C.A.

Loading "ex cars from alongside steamer"—Railway Seventy Feet from Ship—Custom of Port.—The charterparty provided that the cargo should be loaded "ex cars from alongside steamer at ship's expense." The charterers brought the cargo in cars upon rails near the ship, so that the nearest car was not nearer to the ship than seventy feet, and the others were further from the ship, and relied upon a custom that delivery in cars at the end of the nearest rail was at the port considered delivery alongside in cars:—Held, that the charterers had not delivered the cargo to be loaded "ex cars from alongside steamer," pursuant to the charterparty. Ib.

—Cargo in Frozen Condition.—A charterparty provided that a ship should load "a full and complete cargo of wet woodpulp which contains about 50 per cent. of water." Of this substance there are two kinds, one of which packs more closely than the other and is not liable to freeze, but there was no stipulation which of the two kinds was to be loaded. A cargo partly of one and partly of the other kind was loaded. Part of the cargo was frozen hard, and the result was that a much smaller cargo was loaded than might have been placed in the ship if it had all been in an unfrozen condition. But it was admitted that as large a cargo was loaded as was possible in the frozen state of the pulp:—Held, that "a full and complete cargo" had been loaded within the terms of the charterparty. Isis Steamship Co. v. Bahr, Behrend & Ross, 69 L. J. Q.B. 660; [1900] A.C. 340; 82 L. T. 571; 5 Com. Cas. 277; 9 Asp. M.C. 109—H.L. (E.)

"A full and complete cargo not exceeding what she can reasonably stow and carry over her Tackle, Apparel, Provisions and Furniture"—"Lighten at receiver's expense"—Shipowner causing Charterer Expense of Second Lightening by Loading Subsequent to First Lightening more Coals than necessary for Chartered Voyage—Liability of Shipowner.—The essence of a contract to carry by sea from one port to another port or set of ports is, in the absence of agreement to the contrary, that the charterer shall have the full advantage of the ship subject to that which is necessary for seaworthiness, safety, and the fulfilment by the shipowner of his contract. Darling v. Raeburn, 75 L. J. K.B. 415; [1906] 1 K.B. 572; 95 L. T. 108; 11 Com. Cas. 147; 22 L. R. 465—Kennedy, J.

A charterparty provided that the vessel should load "a full and complete cargo . . . not exceeding what she can reasonably stow and carry over her Tackle, Apparel, Provisions and Furniture," and proceed to a certain port and "there lighten at receiver's expense as much of the cargo as may be found necessary to allow Steamer to enter, at all times of high water, such Port." The charterer at a port lightened in anticipation of the difficulty in getting into the next port. The shipowner then loaded a larger amount of bunker coals (after allowing a reasonable margin) than was required for the chartered voyage. In consequence, a second lightening outside the port of discharge became necessary. The charterer, under threat by the shipowner of the exercise of his lien on cargo for the expense of the second lightening, paid the amount under protest:—Held, that the charterer was entitled to recover the amount paid from the shipowner. Ib.

Failure to Ship Cargo—Measure of Damages—Special Damages—Loss to Charterer by Inability to Implement Contract of Sale.—By a charterparty a shipowner became bound to load a cargo of wood pulp at Stocka, Sweden, "in August/September, owners' option," for carriage to Cardiff under conditions making the ordinary duration of the voyage twenty-one days. In an action by the charterer for damages for an admitted breach of this contract by the failure of the shipowner to send a ship to Stocka before the last day of September, it was proved that the shipment was intended for delivery at Cardiff in implement of a contract of sale between the charterer and a purchaser, bearing "mode and place of delivery—c.i.f., Cardiff. Time of delivery August/September 1900," but that no notice of this contract had been given to the shipowner. It was further proved that woodpulp had been brought in against the charterer by the purchaser on the non-arrival of the cargo in September, but after it had been ascertained that the cargo could not be shipped from Stocka before October 12 or 13. The pursuer paid to his customer the loss resulting under the contract of sale—that is, the difference between the market price at Cardiff at which the goods had been bought in and the contract price. He claimed this sum as damages from the shipowner—first, in respect of his loss under this special contract; and secondly, as, apart from any special contract, the proper measure of damages caused by the defender's default:—Held, that the pursuer was not entitled to recover his loss under the contract of sale, in respect that the breach of this contract—which was to deliver at Cardiff by September 30—was not caused by the defender's breach of his contract to ship from Stocka by that date. Held, further, that, as no other special loss was proved, the pursuer was only entitled in respect of the admitted breach of contract to a random sum—assessed by the Court at 50*l.*—for storage and other charges caused by the delay. Stroms Bruks Aktie Bolag v. Hutchison, 6 F. 486—Ct. of Sess.

Penalty Clause.—A charterparty contained the following clause: "Penalty for non-performance of this agreement, estimated amount of freight on quantity not shipped in accordance herewith":—Held, that the clause was inapplicable to a breach of contract by the shipowner. Id.

Charterer's Option to Carry Damaged Cotton on Deck—Shipowner's Right to Freight.—The Anglo-American Cotton charterparty provides that the charterer is to have the option of shipping damaged cotton on deck, consistent with the seaworthiness of the steamer, such to be at the shipper's risk and expense, and that the charterer is to fully insure the freight thereon. The charterparty contains no provision for the payment of freight on such deck cargo:—Held, that the shipowner is entitled to a reasonable freight upon cotton so shipped. Ursula Bright Steamship Co. v. Ripley, 8 Com. Cas. 171—C.A.

Coal Cargo—Charterers to Ship except in the Event of Strike.—"Subject in all respects to the colliery guarantee"—Tender of Guarantee of Colliery on Strike.—By a charterparty it was agreed that a ship should "proceed to such loading berth as freighters may name at Cardiff and . . . shall there load in the usual and customary manner a full and complete cargo of steam coals as ordered by charterers which they bind themselves to ship except in the event of . . . strike or lockout of shippers' pitmen . . . the vessel to be loaded as customary, but subject in all respects to the colliery guarantee in colliery working days as may be arranged, any claim for demurrage in loading to be settled with the colliery direct, no liability to attach to charterers in respect thereof." Shortly after the charterparty was made the charterers made a contract with a colliery for the purchase, subject to the usual strike clause, of coal which they intended for the ship, "loading to be mutually arranged in accordance with the usual colliery guarantee." More than two months later, the arrival of the vessel being shortly expected, the charterers sent to the shipowners the guarantee of the colliery, which was then on strike, but the shipowners refused to accept it. The ship remained until the end of the strike, and the owners then claimed damages from the charterers for the delay in the loading of the vessel:—Held, that the shipowners were not entitled to recover, the charterers being protected by the exception of strikes in the charterparty, and not being bound, in the circumstances, to furnish any other guarantee than that which they sent, or to load the ship from a colliery which was not on strike. Dobell v. Green, 69 L. J. Q.B. 454; [1900] 1 Q.B. 526; 82 L. T. 314; 9 Asp. M.C. 53; 5 Com. Cas. 161—C.A.

— Ship Damaged and Coals Wetted on Voyage—Port of Refuge—Discharge of Cargo—Repairs—Subsequent Refusal to Re-ship Cargo.

—A ship loaded a cargo of coals under a charterparty, but having met with bad weather on the voyage was compelled to put into a port of refuge for repairs, which necessitated the discharge of the cargo. The cargo, which had been considerably wetted with sea-water, was upon discharge placed in covered sheds, where the action of drying gradually proceeded, but at the time the repairs to the ship were completed and she was again ready to go to sea the cargo was still in an unfit state for re-shipment, owing to the danger of spontaneous combustion. The master refused to carry on the cargo. In an action brought by the owners of the cargo against the owners of the ship for breach of contract, —Held, that, the cargo being unfit for re-shipment at the time of the commencement of the action, and there being nothing at that time to shew how long a time must elapse before it would be in a condition to be re-shipped with safety, the master was justified in so refusing. Held, further, that the time which would be occupied in reconditioning the cargo, and the cost of so doing, were elements to be taken into consideration by the master at the time when he had to make up his mind whether or not he should carry on the cargo. The Savona, 69 L. J. P. 95; [1900] P. 252; 49 W. R. 303—Gorell Barnes, J.

Grain Cargoes—London Corn Trade Association Contract—Number of Days Allowed for Discharge.—The London Corn Trade Association Contract, No. 22, provided as to the discharge of grain cargoes from vessels, "Sufficient days to be left for unloading," and, by clause 4, "Sufficient days (counting quarter days) shall be as follows: One running day for every 400 tons up to 2,800 tons of grain, and for all quantities in excess 500 tons per day (as provisionally invoiced)," but in no case were less than five days to be allowed:—Held, upon the construction of this clause, that for all vessels of whatever size the time to be allowed for discharging the cargo was one day for every 400 tons of cargo up to 2,800 tons, and one day for every 500 tons above 2,800 tons, subject in every case to the minimum of five days; and that consequently, in discharging a grain cargo of 3,800 tons, one day was to be allowed for every 400 tons up to 2,800 tons—that is, seven days—and one day for every 500 tons for the excess above 2,800 tons—namely, 1,000 tons—making in all nine days. Turner, Brightman & Co. v. Bannatyne, 91 L. T. 618; 9 Com. Cas. 306; 10 Asp. M.C. 1; 20 T. L. R. 782—C.A.

Shipowner's Liability to Cargo-owners for Negligence—Insurance against, to Limited Amount—Sue and Labour Clause—Applicability to Subject-matter of Insurance.—Shipowners effected a policy of marine insurance to cover their liability of any kind to the owners of a cargo up to a specified sum (which was about half the value of the cargo) owing to the omission of the negligence clause in the contract of affreightment. A printed form was used as the basis of the policy, which form contained a clause authorising the assured to sue, labour, and travel for and about the defence, safeguard, and recovery of the said goods, merchandises, and ship. The ship stranded owing to the negligence of the master, and became a total loss. The shipowners incurred expenses in saving part and attempting to save the rest of the cargo, and sought to recover these expenses from the insurers under the suing and labouring clause:—Held, that that clause was not applicable to the subject of the insurance, and the expenses could not be recovered under it. Cunard Steamship Co. v. Marten, 72 L. J. K.B. 754; [1903] 2 K.B. 511; 89 L. T. 152; 52 W. R. 39; 9 Com. Cas. 9—C.A. Affirming, 9 Asp. M.C. 342—Walton, J.

(f) Loading.

Arrival at Port—Customary Place of Loading—Demurrage.—Where a charterparty provides that a ship is to proceed to a certain port and there load, no specific place therein being named, she is an arrived ship when she reaches a usual loading place in that port, although under a general obligation to proceed to a specific place in it to load the charterer's goods. Leonis Steamship Co. v. Rank, 76 L. J. K.B. 342; [1907] 1 K.B. 344; 96 L. T. 458; 12 Com. Cas. 173; 10 Asp. M.C. 398; 23 T. L. R. 215—Channell, J.

The terms of the charterparty must be consulted in order to determine whether the time occupied in getting to the actual loading berth is to be treated as part of the lay days, or part of the time before she is an arrived ship. Sanders v. Jenkins (66 L. J. Q.B. 40; [1897] 1 Q.B. 93) discussed. Ib.

Time for—Stoppage by Strike—"Stoppage for six days from time of vessel being ready to coal"—Right to Cancel Charter.—By a charterparty it was agreed that a ship of the appellants should load a cargo of coal for the charterers "to be loaded in 140 running hours, commencing when written notice is given of steamer being completely discharged of inward cargo and ballast in all her holds, and ready to load." The charterparty also provided that in the event of a stoppage caused by a strike "continuing for a period of six running days from the time of the vessel being ready to load, this charter shall become null and void, provided, however, that no cargo shall have been shipped on board the steamer previous to such stoppage." Due notice was given that the ship was ready to load, and, after the expiration of the time allowed for loading, a stoppage caused by a strike commenced, and continued for six days. No cargo had been shipped, and the charterers gave notice that the charterparty was cancelled:—Held, that the charterparty contemplated a stoppage in existence at the beginning of the loading time, and that the charterers were not entitled to cancel the charter on the occurrence of a stoppage at a later period. Steel, Young

No Time Fixed for Loading—Reasonable Time Implied.—Where by the terms of a charterparty there is no fixed time within which the charterer has agreed to load a ship, the law implies upon the charterer an obligation to load within a reasonable time, and that obligation is performed if he loads within a time which is reasonable under the circumstances existing when the agreement must be performed, provided that such circumstances, in so far as they involve delay, are not caused or contributed to by the charterers. Ardan Steamship Co. v. Weir, 6 F. 294—Ct. of Sess.

Charterer's Obligation to have Cargo Ready—Custom of Port—Knowledge of Parties at Time of Contract.—Under a charterparty dated May 30, 1900, which did not fix the time within which the ship was to be loaded, the s.s. Ardandearg was bound to proceed to Newcastle, New South Wales, and there load a cargo of Australian coals "in the usual and customary manner, as ordered by the charterers, which they bind themselves to ship (except in the event of riot, strikes, &c. . . . or any other accidents or causes beyond the control of the charterers, which may delay her loading)." By the custom of the port of Newcastle, of which both parties were aware, a loading berth could not be procured until a coaling order from a colliery was produced. These coaling orders were issued in regular turn. There were no facilities for storing coal at the harbour. The charterers ordered a cargo of coal from the Lambton Colliery, in the neighbourhood of Newcastle, ten days after the ship was chartered. On July 14, when the Ardandearg arrived, two other ships having coaling orders from the same colliery had arrived before her. In consequence of the colliery having only an output of 350 tons per day, the loading of these ships was not completed till August 13. The Ardandearg, having then obtained a colliery order and a berth, completed her loading on August 23, and sailed the following day:—Held, that the charterers were not liable in damages to the shipowners for the detention of the ship, on the grounds—first, that there was no absolute obligation on the charterers to have a cargo ready when the Ardandearg arrived; and secondly, that the delay was due to the custom of the port, which was known to both parties, and to circumstances existing at the time of arrival over which the charterers had no control. Ib.

Per LORD KINNEAR.—Where a contract is made for loading or discharging a ship at a particular port, such contract must be construed with reference to the customs of that port, whether or not the parties to the contract were aware of them. Ib.

Ship to Load as Customary always Afloat—Draught Insufficient to Complete Loading.—By a charterparty a ship was to proceed to B. or so near thereto as she could safely get, and there load as customary, always afloat, at such wharf, jetty, or anchorage as the charterers' agent might direct, a certain cargo. Owing to her draught the ship could not have ded fully at the berth at the jetty, but according to the custom of the port she would move when partly loaded from the jetty to anchorage to complete loading:—Held, that the lay days did not begin to run until the ship was at the jetty or anchorage the charterers' agent directed, and that the fact that she could not fully load there made no difference, and did not prevent the charterers requiring her to come to the jetty and claiming that the lay days did not commence until she was at the jetty. Stieselskabet Ingledwood v. Millar's Karri and rrah Forests, 88 L. T. 559; 8 Com. Cas. 196; 1 Asp. M.C. 411—Kennedy, J.

Obstacles to Loading caused by Charterers.—[a ship is prevented from going to the loading-place which the charterer has a right to name]—obstacles caused by the charterer or in consequence of the engagements of the charterer, the lay days commence to count as soon as the ship is ready to load and would but for such obstacles or engagements begin to load at such place. Ib.

Ship to Load "always afloat as and where ordered by charterers"—[Insufficiency of Water Detention of Ship.]—Shipowners, equally with charterers, must be taken to know the natural conditions as to the depth of water in the dock at a named port, and where a charterparty provided that the ship should go to a particular dock, or as near thereto as she could safely get, and there load a cargo "always afloat as and where ordered by the charterers," and the ship went there, but after partially loading left because the period of spring tides had so far elapsed that it had become impossible to complete the loading of the ship before the return of the neaps, and she would have taken the ground,—Held, that the only obligation on the charterers was to load within a reasonable time, and not to find a berth where the ship could load immediately, and that, in the circumstances, the obligation was discharged. Carlton Steamship Co. v. Castle Mail Packets Co., 67 J. Q.B. 795; [1898] A.C. 486; 78 L. T. 661; 1 W. R. 65; 8 Asp. M.C. 402—H.L. (E.)

To Ship Coal Ordered by Charterers—Strike of Colliery—Refusal to Accept Guarantee—Each.—[By a charterparty made on January 1 between the plaintiffs, the owners, and the defendants, the charterers, the Curzon was to discharge her inward cargo at Liverpool, proceed to Cardiff to such loading berth as the charterers should name, and there load a cargo of stean coal as ordered by the charterers which they bound themselves to ship except in the event of a strike of shippers' pitmen. "The vessel to be loaded as customary, but subject in all respects to the colliery guarantee in working days as may be arranged. Any claim for demurrage in loading to be settled with the colliery direct, no liability attaching to the charterers in respect thereof." On February 3 the defendants bought a cargo of Hood's forthyr Colliery coal for the Curzon. On April 6 Hood's Colliery stopped owing to the strike, and on April 26 the defendants procured from the colliery the usual guarantee whereby they undertook to load in twenty days, subject to the usual exception as to strikes. The ship's agents refused to accept this guarantee, and the colliery was on strike, and required to be furnished by a colliery that was working, 15 per cent. about not being on strike:—Held, that the defendants were not bound to furnish any other guarantee, and that the plaintiffs could not recover damages for a breach of the charterparty. Dobell v. Green, 80 L. T. 19; 8 Asp. M.C. 473—Bigham, J.

"Strikes, lock-outs, accidents to railway"—"Other causes beyond charterers' control"—Discharge of Workmen in Consequence of Accident to Railway—Absence of Workmen after Railway Re-opened.—[By charterparty it was agreed that the ship should load from charterers' agents a cargo of petroleum in cases, lay days for loading to commence twenty-four hours after the receipt by the charterers' agents of written notice of steamer's readiness in berth to receive, strikes, lock-outs, accidents to railway, . . . or other causes beyond charterers' control, excepted. The railway which brought the oil in tanks to the port of loading being partially destroyed by floods, the charterers' agents dismissed the men employed at their factory in packing the oil in cases. On the re-opening of the railway, sufficient supplies of oil were received at the factory, but owing to the absence of men the production of filled cases was delayed. The charterers' agents also, in accordance with the practice of shippers at the port, deferred the loading of the ship until they had loaded other ships which had arrived previously, and been delayed in loading by the same causes. The lay days having been exceeded,—Held, that the lay days commenced to run as soon as sufficient oil had arrived to enable the work of filling cases to be resumed; that the failure to load the ship within the lay days was not owing to "strikes, lock-outs, accidents to railway, . . . or other causes beyond the charterers' control," within the meaning of the charterparty; and being perfectly capable of being taken as ejusdem generis with "riots, strikes, and lock-outs." Allison and Richards, In re, 20 T. L. R. 584—C.A.

"Cargo to be taken from alongside, always within reach of ship's tackle"—"Custom of port to be observed"—Custom of Port of Belfast—Expense of Chaining and Rafting Timber.—[By a charterparty a ship was to deliver cargo, as customary, at such place as the consignees might direct, always afloat; cargo to be taken from alongside at port of discharge, always within reach of ship's tackle and at merchant's risk and expense, vessel always lying afloat; the custom of each port to be observed in all cases where not specially expressed. The cargo consisted of log timber, to be delivered at port of Belfast, and a custom of that port was proved to the effect that the delivery of log timber to the consignee was to be made after the ship had chained and rafted the timber, and it had been measured by the official measurer:—Held, that the consignee, and not the shipowner, was liable to pay the expense of such rafting. Held, also, that as the measuring was for the benefit of both shipowner and consignee, the latter was not entitled to waive the chaining and measuring and insist on the timber being delivered log by log over the vessel's side. Northmoor Steamship Co. v. Harland & Wolff, [1903] 2 Ir. R. 657—K.B. D.

Loading "in regular turn"—Overcrowding of Port—Delay—Liability of Charterers.]—The defendants chartered a sailing ship to proceed to Newcastle, New South Wales, and “in the usual and customary manner load in regular turn” coal from a certain named colliery or any other colliery the charterers might name. By the regulations and custom of the port vessels could only load on a loading order from the colliery for which they were chartered, and the practice was to load in order of their arrival after the colliery order had been lodged. Owing to the number of ships chartered for the particular colliery selected by the defendants, and waiting to load, considerable delay was caused, and the ship was detained for some time at the port:—Held, that “in regular turn” in the charterparty meant regular colliery turn, and not port turn, and that as the plaintiffs must have been aware at the date of the charterparty of the circumstances of the port and the possibility of delay occurring in obtaining their turn for loading, and the defendants had not acted unreasonably, the plaintiffs could not recover damages for the delay, although less delay might have occurred if the defendants had selected some other colliery. Quilpué (Barque) v. Brown, 73 L. J. K.B. 596; [1904] 2 K. B. 264; 90 L. T. 765; 9 Com. Cas. 13; 9 Asp. M. C. 596—C.A.

Cargo Loaded “at charterers’ risk”—Exceptions—Liability of Shipowner—Negligence of Persons for whose Acts Shipowners are Responsible—Improper Loading by Stevedores—Seaworthiness.]—A charterparty provided that the steamer was “to be provided with a deck load at full freight at charterers’ risk . . . accidents to hull . . . always excepted, even when occasioned by the negligence . . . of the pilot, master, mariners, or other persons employed by the shipowner, or for whose acts he is responsible.” While the vessel was lying at anchor taking in the cargo, through want of proper care on the part of the stevedores a quantity of cargo on the bridge deck pressed so severely on the uprights which were placed against the stanchions to keep the cargo in position that the stanchions gave way and a part of the cargo was lost:—Held, that the loss was not due to the unseaworthiness of the ship, but to an accident to the hull occasioned by the negligence of persons for whose acts but for the exceptions clause the owners would be responsible, and that the owners were therefore protected by that clause. Semble, the owners were also protected by the words “at charterers’ risk.” Wade v. Cockerline, 53 W. R. 420; 10 Com. Cas. 115; 21 T. L. R. 296—C.A.

Ship to Proceed to Port to “loading place as ordered” for Cargo—Order to Ship to go to Particular Loading Wharf at Port—Commencement of Lay Days.]—A charterparty made between the plaintiffs and defendants provided that the plaintiffs’ steamship was to proceed to Santander, excluding San Salvador old tip, “to a loading place as ordered,” and there take on board a full and complete cargo. The merchants were to be allowed one working day for loading every 400 tons of cargo. The period for loading was “not to commence . . . until after a true written notice has been given . . . that the vessel is wholly unballasted . . . and in every other respect ready to load . . . and that she has been duly entered inwards at the Custom House and is in free pratique.” It was also provided that the charterers were to be advised of the steamer’s departure from the last port within twenty-four hours of sailing for Santander if proceeding direct; or, should the steamer take outward cargo to a port on the way, the captain to telegraph from such port to the shippers at Santander the probable date the steamer would be there ready to load; and further, if she should not have arrived in Santander and be ready to load within twenty-seven days of the date of the charterparty, the charterers were to have the option of cancelling the charterparty. The ship arrived at Santander on November 18, and notice under the charterparty of free pratique was given on November 19, but in consequence of having, by the custom of the port of Santander, to wait her turn until a berth was ready for her the ship did not arrive at the loading berth to which she was ordered till December 7, 1900:—Held, that the lay days began to run from the time she reached the loading berth to which she was ordered, and not from the time notice of free pratique was given, inasmuch as the place described in the charterparty as that at which she would be arrived for the purpose of being at the charterer’s disposal was not merely the port of Santander, but the port of Santander and the loading place at that port. Modesto, Pinciro & Co. v. Dupre, 86 L. T. 560; 7 Com. Cas. 105; 9 Asp. M.C. 297—Kennedy, J.

A shipowner who has a lien on the cargo for freight or demurrage, when he has the opportunity of unloading the cargo, cannot keep the cargo on the ship and then claim for the detention of the ship. Id.

Contract to Load “cargo of say about 2,800 tons.”]—Where a charterparty provides that the ship shall load “a cargo of ore say about 2,800 tons, not exceeding what she can reasonably stow and carry,” 2,880 tons being the amount she can reasonably carry, the charterer fulfils the obligation imposed upon him by providing a cargo of 2,840 tons. Morris v. Levison (45 L. J. C.P. 409; 1 C.P. D. 155) distinguished. Miller v. Borner, 69 L. J. Q.B. 429; [1900] 1 Q.B. 691; 82 L. T. 258; 48 W. R. 588; 9 Asp. M.C. 31; 5 Com. Cas. 175—D.

(g) Discharging.

Ship to be Discharged “with all dispatch as customary”—Duty to take Delivery—Delay at Port of Discharge—Pressure of Work.]—Where a charterparty provides that the ship is to be discharged “with all dispatch as customary,” the obligation of the holder of a bill of lading embodying the terms of the charterparty is to take delivery of the cargo with all reasonable dispatch, having regard to the circumstances which actually exist at the port of discharge and in particular to the customs of that port. Lyle Shipping Co. v. Cardiff Corporation, 69 L. J. Q.B. 889; [1900] 2 Q.B. 638; 83 L. T. 329; 49 W. R. 85; 5 Com. Cas. 397; 9 Asp. M.C. 128—C.A.

By the custom of a port cargoes were discharged into railway waggons, and it was usual for consignees of cargo to contract with some one railway company for their supply. Consignees of cargo, under a bill of lading providing for discharge "with all dispatch as customary," made a contract with a railway company for the supply of waggons, but, owing to pressure of work on the railway, the company could not supply sufficient waggons, and the discharge of the ship was thereby delayed:—Held, that the consignees were not liable for the detention of the ship. Postlethwaite v. Freeland (49 L. J. Ex. 630; 5 App. Cas. 855) and Hick v. Raymond (62 L. J. Q.B. 98; [1893] A.C. 22) followed. Wright v. New Zealand Shipping Co. (4 Ex. D. 165) observed upon. Ib.

"With all dispatch as fast as steamer can deliver, as customary"—Alternative Methods—Duty of Receiver of Cargo.—A charterparty provided that a cargo of Danzig oak logs should be discharged at Millwall Dock "with all dispatch as fast as steamer can deliver, as customary." The more usual method at that dock is to discharge such a cargo into railway trucks, but it is practicable to discharge into lighters:—Held, that it was the duty of the receivers of the cargo, if railway trucks could not be obtained, to discharge into lighters. Rodenacker v. May & Hassell, 6 Com. Cas. 37—Mathew, J.

Cargo to be Discharged "as fast as steamer can deliver"—Strike Clause Included—Unavoidable Delay—Liability for Delay.—A stipulation in a charterparty that the cargo is to be discharged "with customary steamship despatch as fast as the steamer can deliver during the ordinary working hours, according to the custom of the respective ports," is not equivalent to an absolute stipulation to discharge within the time in which a ship could discharge in the ordinary course of things, without regard to the exceptional circumstances which may exist at the time. The stipulation is fulfilled if the discharge is effected with the utmost despatch possible in all the circumstances, not being circumstances brought about by or under the control of the person whose duty it is to take delivery. Hultthen v. Stewart, 72 L. J. K.B. 917; [1903] A.C. 389; 89 L. T. 702; 8 Com. Cas. 297; 9 Asp. M.C. 403—H.L. (E.) Affirming, 50 W. R. 538—C.A.

The construction of the stipulation is not affected by there being a clause in the charterparty relieving the charterer from liability in the event of a strike, lock-out, or epidemic. Ib.

Discharge According to Custom of Port—Rate of Discharge—Unreasonableness of Custom—Altered Circumstances since Origin of Custom.—A bill of lading (incorporating conditions of a charterparty) provided "Time for discharging at destination shall be according to the custom of the port for steamers at port of discharge, demurrage, if incurred, to be paid by consignees at the rate of fourpence sterling per gross register ton per day." An alleged custom was set up to the effect that the consignee could not be required to take delivery at a faster rate than about five hundred tons per day at the port of Bristol for River Plate grain cargoes. A vessel discharged a grain cargo, under the above bill of lading, at Avonmouth Dock, Bristol. The alleged custom had been a matter of dispute for years. The facilities of discharge as regards ships and the three docks in the port of Bristol had increased since the origin of the alleged custom. The rate of discharge, in fact, was often in excess of five hundred tons per day:—Held, that no such custom now existed at Bristol for grain steamers generally or for River Plate grain steamers. The charterparty must be read as "custom, if any, at the port of discharge."

Where a custom relates directly to the obligations of parties under certain circumstances, it must, in order to be valid and to be binding on parties who do not know of the existence of the custom as a fact, be reasonable. The custom was quite inapplicable to the state of things at present existing, and that there was no such settled and established practice in the port as to satisfy the words of the charterparty. If the custom applied to the altered circumstances, it was unreasonable. Contracting out of a custom may become so general as to destroy the custom. When a custom becomes the exception and not the rule, there is no longer a custom. Ropner v. Stote, 92 L. T. 328; 10 Com. Cas. 73; 10 Asp. M.C. 32; 21 T. L. R. 245—Channell, J.

Custom—Port of Sharpness—Wood Trade—Discharge of Steamer at Average Rate of 90 Standards per Weather Working Day—Reasonableness.—There is no proved custom at the port of Sharpness that a steamer with a cargo of wood under a Baltic Steam Bristol Channel charterparty (containing provisions that "Cargo to be loaded and discharged with the customary steamer dispatch of the port, and in the ordinary working hours thereof" and "The usual custom of the wood trade of each port is to be observed by each party in cases where not specially expressed") is properly discharged if the cargo is discharged at an average rate of 90 standards per weather working day. Such a custom would be unreasonable. Sea Steamship Co. v. Price, Walker & Co., 8 Com. Cas. 292—Kennedy, J.

Demurrage—Discharging Subject to Lien—Reasonable Conduct of Shipowner.—The consignees of a cargo, loaded under a charterparty which provided that the cargo should be discharged "in the manner and at the rate customary at each port," did not take any steps before the arrival of the ship to secure an unloading berth. When the vessel arrived, all the usual places for unloading such a cargo were occupied; but, after a delay of eight days, the discharge was commenced at a place not before used for the purpose. A usual place could not have been secured any earlier if the consignees had applied before the arrival of the ship. After the discharge had commenced, the shipowners refused to continue the discharge until the freight was paid; and, after a delay of eight days, the cargo was landed subject to a lien for freight and demurrage, under the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894. The Judge held that the shipowners were entitled to substantial damages for the earlier delay, and to demurrage at the agreed rate for the later delay:—Held (varying that judgment)—first, that the shipowners were entitled only to nominal damages for the earlier delay; and secondly, that they had in the circumstances of the case acted reasonably in not landing the cargo subject to lien at an earlier date than they did, and were therefore entitled to demurrage for all the later delay. The Court of Appeal expressed no opinion upon the point of law decided by the Court below upon the construction of sections 493 and 494 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894. Smailes v. Hans Dessen, 95 L. T. 809; 10 Asp. M.C. 319; 12 Com. Cas. 117—C.A.

— Port of London—Grain Cargo in Bags—Discharge over Side—Liability of Consignee to Pay Dock Company's Charges for Weighing.—The plaintiffs, shipowners, alleged that, by a custom of the Port of London, where a grain cargo in bags was discharged over side, it was the duty of the consignee to give an order to the dock company to weigh the cargo on board and to pay the dock company's charges for so doing.—Held, that there was no such custom as alleged. Marwood v. Taylor, 6 Com. Cas. 178—C.A.

Delay in Procuring a Discharging Berth—Harbour Regulations—Liability of Charterers for Delay—Cargo to be delivered "as customary where and as directed by consignee."—Under a charterparty the defendants, in fulfilment of a contract for the sale of Spanish ore, shipped a cargo of ore on board a steamship, to be delivered at Maryport, as customary, where and as directed by consignee. At Maryport, by the harbour regulations, consignees having one vessel already discharging for them cannot have another vessel berthed to discharge for them if a vessel of any other consignee is awaiting a berth. The defendants, on the arrival of the ship, had four other vessels chartered by them, with cargoes of ore for the same purchasers, who were treated by the harbour authorities as the consignees, awaiting a berth, and many vessels for other consignees were also waiting. The ship was consequently unable to get a berth for twenty days after the arrival.—Held, that the delay was not the fault of the charterers, and that where, under such a charterparty, the delay complained of is such as ought to have been in the contemplation of both parties at the time of the contract, the shipowner has no cause of action against the charterer. Ashcroft v. Crow Orchard Colliery Co. (43 L. J. Q.B. 194; L. R. 9 Q.B. 540) and Ogmore Steamship Co v. Borner (6 Com. Cas. 104) considered. Harrowing v. Dupré, 7 Com. Cas. 157—Bigham, J.

Grain Cargoes—London Corn Trade Association Contract—Number of Days Allowed.—The London Corn Trade Association Contract, No. 22, provided as to the discharge of grain cargoes from vessels, "Sufficient days to be left for unloading," and, by clause 4, "Sufficient days (counting quarter days) shall be as follows: One running day for every 400 tons up to 2,800 tons of grain, and for all quantities in excess 500 tons per day (as provisionally invoiced)," but in no case were less than five days to be allowed.—Held, upon the construction of this clause, that for all vessels of whatever size the time to be allowed for discharging the cargo was one day for every 400 tons of cargo up to 2,800 tons, and one day for every 500 tons above 2,800 tons, subject in every case to the minimum of five days; and that consequently, in discharging a grain cargo of 3,800 tons, one day was to be allowed for every 400 tons up to 2,800 tons—that is, seven days—and one day for every 500 tons for the excess above 2,800 tons—namely, 1,000 tons—making in all nine days. Turner v. Brightman & Co. v. Bannatyne, 91 L. T. 618; 9 Com. Cas. 306; 20 T. L. R. 782—C.A. Affirming, 9 Asp. M.C. 495—Walton, J.

Consignees to Take Cargo "from alongside ship"—Custom for Ship to Place Cargo in Lighters.—A custom in the wood trade in the Port of London which imposes an obligation on a shipowner to discharge a cargo of long lengths of timber into lighters, is not inconsistent with a clause in a charterparty under which the cargo is to be taken from alongside the ship at merchant's risk and expense. Aktieselskab Helios v. Ekman, 66 L. J. Q.B. 538; [1897] 2 Q.B. 83; 76 L. T. 537; 8 Asp. M.C. 244—C.A.

Delivery of Cargo at Named Wharf—Wharf under Control of Purchasers of Cargo—Responsibility for Delay.—The plaintiffs' steamship was chartered to the defendants, who sold a cargo ex ship, R. Dock. The purchasers of the cargo were lessees of a wharf in the R. Dock, and had sole control over the wharf and the berthing of vessels there. The charterparty provided that the vessel should proceed to the purchasers' wharf, and there deliver her cargo, "Time for discharge to count from 6 A.M. after ship is in every respect ready in berth." The vessel arrived in R. Dock on February 8, and was then ready to discharge. Other vessels, which arrived at the dock after the plaintiffs' vessel, were given preference to suit the business arrangements of the purchasers, who did not give the plaintiffs' vessel a berth until February 14. By a contract between the charterers and the purchasers the cargo was to be discharged at the rate of 300 tons per working day from the time when the ship was ready to discharge, otherwise the purchasers were to pay demurrage as per charterparty.—Held, that the lay days did not begin to run until 6 A.M. on February 15, and that the charterers were not responsible for the delay in getting into berth, though they did not insist on their rights under their contract with the purchasers. Watson v. Borner, 5 Com. Cas. 377—C.A.

Charterers' Option as to Port of Delivery.—A charterparty was expressed to be for "about six calendar months"; hire to be paid per month or part of a month, and to continue until re-delivery of the steamer to the owner at a port in the United Kingdom or the United States. If the vessel was upon a voyage at the expiration of the named period, the charterers were to have the use of steamer until completion of the voyage and in order to bring her to a port of re-delivery. If the charterers re-delivered the steamer in the United Kingdom they were to pay a penalty of 500*l.* At the expiration of six calendar months the vessel was on a voyage to a port in the United States.—Held, that the owner was entitled to re-delivery of the steamer on completion of her voyage to such port, and that charterers were not entitled to send her on a fresh voyage to, and to re-deliver her in, the United Kingdom. Bucknall v. Murray, 5 Com. Cas. 312—Mathew, J.

Non-delivery—Bill of Lading specifying Quantitles of Each Class of Timber Cargo—Conclusiveness of Bill of Lading—Short Delivery in certain Classes of Timber and Over-Delivery in other Classes—Calculation of Freight—Damages for Short Delivery.]—A cargo of timber was consigned to the defendants under a charterparty, by which freight was to be paid on deals, battens, &c., at the rate of 2*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* per St. Petersburg standard hundred of 1,980 superficial feet, and on deal-ends at the rate of 1*l.* 15*s.* per the like hundred, nine feet and under. Freight was payable on the intake measure of quantity delivered as ascertained at port of discharge, less value of cargo short delivered (if any). It was also provided by the charterparty that the bill of lading should be conclusive against the owners as establishing the quantity delivered to the ship. The bill of lading described the four classes of timber, of which the cargo consisted, as deals, scantlings, deal-ends, and boards, and specified the number of pieces in, and the measurement in superficial feet of, each class, besides giving the total number of pieces and the measurement of the cargo over all. At the port of discharge it was found that there was a shortage in the number of deals and deal-ends, while there was an over-livery of scantlings and boards:—Held, that the bill of lading was conclusive as to the number of pieces in, and the measurement of each class of, timber, and that therefore the defendants were entitled to damages in respect of the pieces short delivered, and also to deduct from the freight payable by the charterparty an amount proportionate to the freight attributable to the shortage. Mediterranean and New York Steamship Co. v. Mackay, 72 L. J. K.B. 147; [1903] 1 K.B. 297—C.A.

Cost of Discharging Cargo from Ship's Rail into Barges—"Taken from alongside"—"At charterer's risk and expense, any custom of the port to the contrary notwithstanding."—A charterparty provided that the ship, being loaded with a timber cargo, should therewith proceed to the Port of London and deliver the same, "the cargo to be brought to and taken from alongside the steamer at charterer's risk and expense, any custom of the port to the contrary notwithstanding":—Held, that the charterparty excluded the custom of the Port of London, by which, in the case of a timber cargo, the duty of a shipowner under an obligation to deliver alongside is to deliver into barges or on to a quay, and that the duty of the shipowner was completely performed by delivery over the ship's rail. Brenda Steamship Co. v. Green, 69 L. J. Q.B. 445; [1900] 1 Q.B. 518; 82 L. T. 66; 48 W. R. 321; 9 Asp. M.C. 55; 5 Com. Cas. 195—C.A.

(h) Lay Days.

"Working day."—A charterparty provided that the ship was to be loaded in nine "working-days," and to be discharged as customary "per like working day . . . loading time to count from 6 A.M. after the ship is at the Custom House and ready . . . Demurrage over and above the said lying-days at 16*s.* 8*d.* per hour. . . . The steamer to work day and night, if required to do so" at the port of discharge:—Held, that the "working day" at the port of loading was a day of twelve hours from 6 A.M., and not a day of twenty-four hours, and consequently that the ship was on demurrage from 6 P.M. of the last lay-day. Mein v. Ottmann, 6 F. 276—Ct. of Sess.

"Working day of twenty-four consecutive hours."—A charterparty provided that the ship was to be loaded and discharged "at the rate of 500 tons per working day of twenty-four consecutive hours (weather permitting), Sundays and holidays always excepted":—Held, that a "working day of twenty-four consecutive hours" meant a period of twenty-four actually consecutive hours (that is, including the hours of night), and not an artificial period made up of twenty-four working hours (that is, excluding the hours of night). Turnbull, Scott & Co. v. Cruickshank & Co., 7 F. 265—Ct. of Sess.

"Seven weather working days"—"Sundays and holidays excepted"—Loading on Holidays—"Sundays saved in loading."—A charterparty provided: "Seven weather working days (Sundays and holidays excepted) to be allowed by owners to charterers for loading," and that for any time beyond these periods the charterers should pay to the owners demurrage at a certain rate per day. Loading took place on two holidays, but there was no evidence as to the terms upon which the parties worked:—Held (FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J., dissenting), that the inference to be drawn from the fact that the holidays were worked upon was that the parties had agreed to treat them as working days, and that therefore they should be included in the lay days. Branchelow Steamship Co. v. Lamport (76 L. J. K.B. 534*n.*; [1907] 1 K.B. 787*n.*) applied. Nelson v. Nelson Line (No. 3), 77 L. J. K.B. 97; [1907] 2 K.B. 705; 23 T. L. R. 656—C.A. Affirming, 12 Com. Cas. 185—Channell, J.

A charterparty provided: "Seven weather working days (Sundays and holidays excepted) to be allowed by owners to charterers for loading. . . . For each clear day saved in loading the charterers shall be paid or allowed by the owners the sum of 20*l.*" Loading was completed before the expiration of seven weather working days, and the period between the completion of loading and the expiration of such days comprised a Sunday:—Held (FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J., dissenting), that the charterers were not entitled to despatch money in respect of that Sunday. The Glendevon (62 L. J. P. 123; [1893] P. 269) followed. Ib.

"Working days of twenty-four hours."—The appellant shipowners agreed by charterparty to provide the respondents with ships for the carriage of iron ore during a period of twelve months. The charterparty contained a clause as follows: "Charterers or their agents to be allowed 350 tons per working day of twenty-four hours, weather permitting (Sundays and holidays excepted), for loading and discharging . . . to count from 6 A.M. of the day following the day when steamer is reported, unless she be reported before noon. . . . Steamer to work at night if required, also on Sundays and holidays, such time not to count as lay days unless used." Held, that the charterers were entitled to twenty-four hours in which to load or discharge each 350 tons. Forest Steamship Co. v. Iberian

Iron Co., 81 L. T. 563; 9 Asp. M.C. 1; 5 Com. Cas. 83—H.L. (E.). Affirming Rhymney Steamship Co. v. Iberian Iron Ore Co., 79 L. T. 240; 8 Asp. M.C. 438—C.A.

—By a charterparty, shipowners agreed to provide the charterers with ships for the carriage of fifty thousand tons of iron ore during a period of twelve months. In the charterparty there was a clause as follows: "Charterers or their agents to be allowed three hundred and fifty tons per working day of twenty-four hours, weather permitting (Sundays and holidays excepted), for loading and discharging, . . . and to count from 6 A.M. of the day following the day when the steamer is reported, unless she be reported before noon, in which case time to count from notice of readiness. . . . Steamer to work at night if required, also on Sundays and holidays, such time not to count as lay days unless used":—Held, that the charterers were entitled to have twenty-four working hours to load or discharge each three hundred and fifty tons. Rhymney Steamship Co. v. Iberian Iron Ore Co., 79 L. T. 240—C.A.

"Thirty-six running hours on terms of usual colliery guarantee."—By a charterparty between the plaintiffs and defendants it was provided that the plaintiffs' vessel should proceed to Grimsby, and there load a cargo of coal, in the usual manner according to the custom of the place, from such colliery as the charterers might direct; and that the loading time should be thirty-six running hours "on terms of usual colliery guarantee." The vessel arrived at the usual loading dock at Grimsby, and was ready to load on July 19. Owing to the coal strike in South Wales, a very large number of vessels were waiting to load coal at Grimsby, and the plaintiff's vessel was unable to get a berth at a coal tip until July 29, when she was loaded within thirty-six hours. The coal was loaded from collieries at which no "colliery guarantee" was in use:—Held, that the defendants were not liable to pay demurrage, because there was a "usual colliery guarantee" in use at Grimsby, by which the time for loading did not commence until the vessel came under a coal tip. Shamrock Steamship Co. v. Storey, 81 L. T. 413; 8 Asp. M.C. 590; 5 Com. Cas. 21—C.A.

"Sundays and holidays excepted"—Sunday and Holiday Used for Loading—Time Occupied in Shifting Ports—Demurrage—"Port charges"—Pilotage Dues.]—Charterers by clause 8 of a charterparty were "to have the option of using one or two additional neighbouring loading ports or places in Smyrna district, paying all port charges, and time shifting ports to count as lay days"; and by clause 9: "Thirteen running days, Sundays and holidays excepted, are to be allowed . . . for loading the cargo as above, to commence when the steamer is moored and ready, having received pratique, and so reported by the master, and the time so employed, part days counting as part days, to be agreed by the master and charterers or their agents." The vessel on arriving at Smyrna was ordered to a neighbouring port before she was "moored and ready, having received pratique, and so reported by the master." Subsequently at the request of the charterers loading proceeded on a Sunday and also on a local holiday:—Held, that the exceptions in clause 9 could not be read into clause 8, and that therefore the time occupied in shifting the vessel must be reckoned in the lay days, and also the Sunday and holiday on which work proceeded, as an agreement must be inferred between the parties to treat those days as working days. Whittall v. Rahtkens Shipping Co., 76 L. J. K.B. 538; [1907] 1 K.B. 783; 96 L. T. 885; 12 Com. Cas. 226; 23 T. L. R. 346—Bray, J.

Held, further, that the dues paid for pilotage in shifting ports could not be recovered from the charterers, as they did not fall within the term "port charges." Ib.

Fractions of Day to be taken into Account.]

—A charterparty provided that the cargo should be "discharged at the average rate of not less than 210 tons per working day, weather permitting; the time to commence in accordance with the custom of the port; Sundays and all holidays and time lost through strikes or lock-outs of workmen, accidents, frosts, floods, rains, winds, rollers, or any cause whatever beyond the control of the consignee of the cargo not to count as discharging time"; "Demurrage to be paid at the rate of 4d. per net register ton per day, and pro rata employed beyond the time allowed for discharging." At the average rate of 210 tons per working day the time occupied in discharging the cargo would have been 11½ days. The charterers contended that, being entitled according to the terms of the charterparty to break into the twelfth day, they were entitled to the whole of the day as a lay day, and that demurrage did not begin to run until midnight of that day:—Held, that upon the true construction of the charterparty fractions of a day were to be taken into account, and that demurrage began to run upon the expiration of the 11½ days. Yeoman v. Regem, 73 L. J. K.B. 904; [1904] 2 K.B. 429; 52 W. R. 627; 9 Com. Cas. 269; 20 T. L. R. 524—C.A.

"Two weekly service at intervals of fourteen days"—Sailings at Irregular Intervals—Periods of Twenty-four Hours.]—A charterparty of the steamers of two lines for the carriage of frozen meat from the River Plate to Liverpool provided that: "The owners engage as from the date when their respective vessels arrive in the River Plate and are ready to load outwards to place the vessels of the line . . . from time to time sailing in the lines . . . or other vessels of equal capacity at the disposal of the charterers for the carriage [in their insulating chambers] . . . of . . . frozen meat. . . . And the charterers agree to ship in each vessel so much frozen meat and offal as will fill such insulating chambers. . . . The service of the lines hereunder is, subject as hereinafter provided, to be a two weekly one . . . having the sailings at intervals of 14 days . . . and to last for one year. . . . On arrival of each steamer at her loading berth in the River Plate notice shall be given to the charterers or their agents in writing of their readiness to load. . . . Twelve hours after the receipt of such notice the lay days of the steamer shall commence, provided the . . . temperature of 22 degrees Fahrenheit shall have been maintained in the insulated chambers . . . since the beginning of such notice or as soon thereafter as the temperature may have been maintained at that temperature for a period of twelve hours. As soon as each steamer is loaded the captain shall proceed with all convenient speed (subject to any exceptions or liberties contained in this charter) to her port of discharge. . . . The charterers hereby covenant and agree that during the continuance of this contract they . . . will not directly or indirectly ship or cause to be shipped . . . otherwise than by the owners' steamers under this contract":—Held (FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J., dissenting), as to the provision relating to the sailing intervals, that a strict observance of the intervals mentioned was not a condition precedent to the charterers' obligation to load, but that an approximate and substantial observance of those intervals was sufficient; and therefore that, where a steamer arrived within fourteen days after the preceding steamer, the charterers were not entitled to refuse to load her until that period had elapsed. Ib.

Discharge—Fractions of a Day—Sundays used in Discharging—Delays caused by Ballasting—Demurrage.—By the terms of a charterparty the ship was to discharge a cargo of 3,483 tons of coal at the average rate of not less than 120 tons per weather working day, Sundays and holidays excepted; and demurrage was to be paid at the rate of 4*d.* per net registered ton per running day. At the stipulated rate of not less than 120 tons per weather working day the cargo could have been discharged in twenty-nine and one-fortieth days:—Held (distinguishing Yeoman v. Regem, 73 L. J. K.B. 904; [1904] 2 K.B. 429), that the charterers were entitled to thirty lay days in which to discharge the cargo. Houlder v. Weir, 74 L. J. K.B. 729; [1905] 2 K.B. 267; 92 L. T. 861; 10 Com. Cas. 228; 10 Asp. M.C. 21; 21 T. L. R. 503—Channell, J.

On two Sundays cargo was in fact discharged:—Held, in the absence of any agreement between shipowners and charterers modifying the terms of the charterparty, that these Sundays were not to be counted as lay days. Ib.

Incorporated Colliery Guarantee—Strike at Colliery—"Colliery working day."—A charterparty provided that the chartered vessel should load a cargo of coal at a certain port subject to the conditions of the colliery guarantee in use at the colliery, and that demurrage should be "as per colliery guarantee." The guarantee contained a stipulation that any time lost through strikes should not be computed as part of the loading time, and provided that demurrage in accordance with a given scale was to be payable "per colliery working day." After the expiration of the lay days a strike occurred at the colliery which prevented the charterers from loading the vessel. In an action by the shipowners for demurrage,—Held, that the expression "colliery working day" did not exclude from the computation of demurrage ordinary working days on which in fact no work was done at the colliery by reason of the strike, and that the shipowners were therefore entitled to demurrage during the whole time of detention. Saxon Steamship Co. v. Union Steamship Co., 69 L. J. Q.B. 907; 83 L. T. 106; 5 Com. Cas. 381; 9 Asp. M.C. 114—H.L. (E.) And see next column.

(i) Detention of Ship and Demurrage.

Obligation to have Cargo • Ready.—In a charterparty, in the absence of qualification, the undertaking of the merchant to furnish a cargo is absolute, and the mere existence of circumstances, beyond the control of the shipper, which make it impracticable for him to have his cargo ready will not relieve him from paying damages for breach of his obligation. Arden Steamship Co. v. Weir, 74 L. J. P.C. 143; [1905] A.C. 501; 93 L. T. 559; 11 Com. Cas. 26; 10 Asp. M.C. 135; 21 T. L. R. 723—H.L. (Sc.)

By a charterparty, which did not fix a date for the completion of the loading, a ship of the appellants was chartered by the respondents to proceed to a loading berth selected by the respondents, and then to load a cargo "in the usual and customary manner . . . as ordered by charterers, which they bind themselves to ship," subject to exceptions which did not arise. By the custom of the port a vessel was not allowed to occupy a loading berth until she had received a loading order from a colliery. When the vessel arrived there was no cargo ready to load, and a month's delay intervened before a full cargo was loaded:—Held, that the respondents were liable in damages for the detention of the ship. Ib.

Charterer's Obligation to have Cargo Ready—Option to Name Colliery.—The defendants chartered the plaintiffs' vessel to load in the usual and customary manner in regular turn a cargo of coals at Newcastle, New South Wales, from a colliery to be named by the charterers, who named a particular colliery whose coal was in great demand. By the custom of the port a berth cannot be obtained until a coaling order from the colliery is produced. These facts were known to both parties, and no time for loading was fixed. Owing to the charterers not being able to obtain a berth earlier, a delay of some eighty days occurred. In an action by the shipowners for damages,—Held, that the obligation of the charterers to have a cargo ready was discharged if the vessel got her due turn from the particular colliery, and that under the charterparty and the circumstances within the knowledge of both parties at the date of the charterparty the charterers had not acted unreasonably and were not liable for the vessel's detention. Little v. Stevenson (65 L. J. P.C. 69; [1896] A.C. 108) followed. Grant v. Coverdale (53 L. J. Q.B. 462; 9 App. Cas. 470) distinguished. Jones v. Green, 73 L. J. K.B. 601; [1904] 2 K.B. 275; 90 L. T. 768; 9 Com. Cas. 20; 9 Asp. M.C. 600—C.A.

Detention by Ice—Breakdown of Steamer.—By a charterparty a steamship was let for two calendar months to be employed on a voyage to Spain, thence to the Baltic, and back to the United Kingdom; and it was provided that detention by ice should be for the account of the charterers, unless caused by breakdown of steamer. The ship proceeded to a port in Spain, where she loaded a cargo for St. Petersburg. On her voyage there she stranded in the Baltic, and put back to Copenhagen for repairs. When repaired she proceeded on her voyage, but put into Revel at the entrance to the Gulf of Finland, and remained there, because she was unable to proceed further towards St. Petersburg by reason of ice. If she had not stranded and been damaged she could have reached St. Petersburg and got out again before that port was closed by ice:—Held, that the detention at Revel was a detention by ice caused by the breakdown of the steamer, and that the hire ceased during its continuance. Rikard Nordraak & Lennard, In re, 8 Com. Cas. 239—Ridley, J.

Ship to Proceed to Port to "loading place as ordered"—Order to Ship to go to Particular Loading Wharf at Port—Commencement of Lay Days.]—A charterparty made between the plaintiffs and defendants provided that the plaintiffs' steamship was to proceed to Santander, excluding San Salvador old tip, "to a loading place as ordered," and there take on board a full and complete cargo. The merchants were to be allowed one working day for loading every 400 tons of cargo. The period for loading was "not to commence . . . until after a true written notice has been given . . . that the vessel is wholly unballasted . . . and in every other respect ready to load . . . and that she has been duly entered inwards at the Custom House, and is in free pratique." It was also provided that the charterers were to be advised of the steamer's departure from the last port within twenty-four hours of sailing for Santander if proceeding direct; or, should the steamer take outward cargo to a port on the way, the captain to telegraph from such port to the shippers at Santander the probable date the steamer would be there ready to load; and further, if she should not have arrived in Santander and be ready to load within twenty-seven days of the date of the charterparty, the charterers were to have the option of cancelling the charterparty. The ship arrived at Santander on November 18, and notice under the charterparty of free pratique was given on November 19, but in consequence of having, by the custom of the port of Santander, to wait her turn until a berth was ready for her the ship did not arrive at the loading berth to which she was ordered till December 7, 1900:—Held, that the lay days began to run from the time she reached the loading berth to which she was ordered, and not from the time notice of free pratique was given, inasmuch as the place described in the charterparty as that at which she would be arrived for the purpose of being at the charterer's disposal was not merely the port of Santander, but the port of Santander and the loading place at that port. Modesto, Pineiro & Co. v. Dupre, 86 L. T. 560; 7 Com. Cas. 105—Kennedy, J.

Chance Vacancy at Loading Berth—Delay in Providing Cargo—Demurrage.]—Under a charterparty the s.s. Avis was bound to proceed to Methil, and there load a full cargo of coals "from such colliery or collieries as charterers may elect, steamer to be loaded in 72 running hours, commencing to count when ready to receive cargo, reported at Custom House, berthed, and written notice given to charterers' agents, . . . If longer detained, demurrage to be paid" at a certain rate per ton, "unless such delay is caused by general and colliery holidays, . . . idle days, strikes, lock-outs, idle time, or restriction of output at the colliery or collieries with which the steamer is booked to load . . . or any other cause beyond the control of the charterers, whether specified herein or not, which may prevent the obtaining or providing of a cargo." The Avis arrived at Methil at 6 A.M. on July 28, and notice was given to the charterers' agent that she was ready to receive cargo. At the time of the arrival of the Avis ten vessels were before her, and none of the five crane berths was vacant. A chance vacancy occurred on July 29 at a berth at which the Avis could not have completed her loading, and another at a suitable berth at 12 noon on July 30, owing to the cargoes of earlier vessels not being forward. No cargo was ready for the Avis, and in consequence she was not berthed. Eventually she was berthed on August 3, loaded at 9 P.M. on August 5, and sailed on August 6. On July 18 the charterers had ordered a cargo for the Avis from the B. Coal Co. for delivery on July 28 and 29, but had been informed by the coal company that they could not book coal for July 28 or 29. To this the charterers replied that the Avis must "take her turn with the rest." July 28 was the last day of the miners' holidays, but very little work was done on July 29. On the 30th the output was reasonably normal, but the coal company had to supply earlier orders. In an action for demurrage on the assumption that the lay days commenced at 9 A.M. on July 28, the defenders contended—first, that they were entitled to assume that their vessel would only be berthed in regular turn, and were not bound to have the cargo ready for chance vacancies; and secondly, that if there had been undue delay in providing a cargo it was due to delay at the colliery, over which they had no control:—Held, first, that in the circumstances the charterers were bound to have considered the probabilities of chance vacancies in the loading berths, and to have had a cargo ready for the vacancy which occurred on July 30; and secondly, that the delay in the supply of coals from the colliery did not fall within the exceptions in the charterparty, as the charterers knew when they gave the order to the B. Co. that it could not undertake to supply the coal at the time required, and had therefore taken the risk of delay. Little v. Stevenson (65 L. J. P.C. 69; [1896] A.C. 108) distinguished. Krog v. Burns & Lindemann, 5 F. 1189—Ct. of Sess.

Despatch-money—Option to Average Days for Loading and Discharge.]—A charterparty provided that the charterers were to have "the option of averaging days for loading and discharging . . . despatch-money at the rate of ten shillings per hour to be paid for any time saved in loading or discharging, to be settled in loading or discharging ports respectively." The vessel was loaded in the time allowed, and the charterers claimed despatch-money for the days saved, and the amount so due to them was indorsed on the charterparty. At the port of discharge the lay days were exceeded, and the shipowners claimed demurrage:—Held, that the charterers could not exercise their option of averaging days of loading and discharge, because the question of how the time saved at port of loading was to be treated must be considered as closed when the vessel sailed from port, and therefore the shipowners were entitled to claim demurrage in full. Oakville

Steamship Co. v. Holmes, 48 W. R. 152; 5 Com. Cas. 48—Bigham, J.

Delay Owing to Consignee Having Other Vessels Discharging—Liability for Acts of Consignee.—A vessel was chartered to proceed to the S. dock, Maryport, and there unload her cargo. Owing to the fact that the consignee, who had bought the cargo from the charterers, had other vessels discharging in the dock at the time of her arrival, she was unable to get a berth and unload within the time agreed by the charterparty:—Held, that the charterers were not responsible for the delay. The Deerhound, 84 L. T. 360; 49 W. R. 511; 6 Com. Cas. 104; 9 Asp. M.C. 189—D.

Exceptions—"Stoppage of trains or any cause beyond the personal control" of Charterers—Delivery of Cargo "as customary."—By a charterparty the ship was bound to deliver the cargo consisting of iron ore "as customary" at the port of discharge where and as directed by the consignees. The charterers were exempt from liability for demurrage in case of delay, inter alia, through "stoppage of trains or any cause beyond the personal control" of the charterers. The time taken for loading and discharging having exceeded the lay-days, the shipowners brought an action for demurrage against the charterers, who pleaded the exemption clause. It was proved that the customary mode of discharging iron ore at Ardrossan, the port of discharge, when the cargo had been sold (as the cargo in question had been), was direct into railway waggons, although in special circumstances the harbour authorities might give permission for part of a cargo being discharged on the quay. It was also proved that delay in discharging the cargo had been caused by the railway company failing to supply a sufficient number of waggons per day. The charterparty took the ship bound to work at night if requested, but the charterers did not request the harbour authorities for permission to work at night:—Held—first, that the customary mode at Ardrossan of discharging a cargo of iron ore which had been sold was into railway waggons direct; secondly, that the charterers were not liable for demurrage in respect of ordinary working hours where the delay was caused by want of railway waggons; but, thirdly, that the absence of waggons during the hours of night did not exempt them from demurrage, as the railway company could not be expected to supply waggons at night without notice. Turnbull, Scott & Co. v. Cruickshank & Co., 7 F. 265—Ct. of Sess.

Strike Clause—Discharge of Ship Thrown into Strike Period by Delay of Consignee—Right of Consignee to Set up Strike Clause.—A consignee sued for demurrage is not entitled to rely on a clause in the charterparty which provides that the time during which the discharge of the ship is prevented or delayed by strikes, lock-outs, or similar causes is not to be counted in reckoning the lay days, if by his own delay the discharging has been thrown into the strike period, except to the extent that the discharge would have been prevented or delayed by such strike, even had he not been in default. Elswick Steamship Co. v. Montaldi, 76 L. J. K.B. 672; [1907] 1 K.B. 626; 96 L. T. 845; 12 Com. Cas. 240; 23 T. L. R. 322—Bigham, J.

Fire—Exception Enuring for Benefit of Charterer.—A charterparty provided that a certain number of days should be allowed for loading and discharging the cargo, after which demurrage was to be paid at a specified rate per running day. The charterparty also contained an exception clause excepting, amongst other things, fire. While the vessel was discharging, a fire broke out in the cargo, and it became necessary to remove her for a time from her discharging berth. There was a necessary delay of seven days in consequence of the fire:—Held, upon the authority of Barrie v. Peruvian Corporation (2 Com. Cas. 50), that the exception of fire applied to the obligation of the charterers to discharge, and that they were excused from demurrage in respect of the seven days' delay caused by the fire. Newman and Dale Steamship Co. and British and South American Steamship Co., In re, 72 L. J. K.B. 110; [1903] 1 K.B. 262; 87 L. T. 614; 8 Com. Cas. 87; 9 Asp. M.C. 351—Bigham, J.

Stoppage "continuing for the period of six running days from the time of the vessel being ready to load"—Stoppage occurring after Ship on Demurrage—Repudiation—Breach.—A charterparty provided that in the event of any stoppage arising from certain causes, "continuing for the period of six running days from the time of the vessel being ready to load, this charter shall become null and void, provided, however, that no cargo shall have been shipped on board the steamer previous to such stoppage." Notice of readiness to load was given on August 8, and the loading time expired on August 15. Such a stoppage occurred on August 20 and continued for more than six running days, at the expiration of which time no cargo had been loaded:—Held, that the charterparty had become null and void as from August 26, without prejudice to any causes of action which had accrued prior to that date. Steel, Young & Co. v. Grand Canary Coaling Co., 87 L. T. 321; 7 Com. Cas. 213—C.A.

Customary Discharge—Discharging Subject to Lien—When to be Exercised.—Where a charterparty provides for discharge "in the manner and at the rate customary at each port during the customary working hours, and, if the ship be further detained through the fault of the charterers, ten days on demurrage over and above the said laying days at twenty pounds per day," the shipowner cannot land the goods subject to lien under the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, until it is evident that the ship cannot be discharged within the time allowed. Smailes v. Hans Dessen, 94 L. T. 492; 54 W. R. 471; 11 Com. Cas. 74; 10 Asp. M.C. 225—Channell, J.

Part of the time allowed for discharging was occupied in the reasonable and necessary process of ballasting the ship, and the discharge was delayed in consequence:—Held, that the time so occupied was not to be excluded from the time allowed for discharging. Ib.

(j) Cesser Clause.

Detention by Ice caused by "breakdown of steamer"—Non-liability of Charterer during

Period of Detention.]—By a charterparty the charterers hired a steamship for two calendar months to be employed on a voyage to Spain, thence to the Baltic, and back to the United Kingdom or the Continent, as the charterers should direct. The charterparty provided that detention by ice should be for account of the charterers unless caused by breakdown of steamer. The steamer having proceeded to Spain, there loaded a cargo for St. Petersburg, and on her voyage there grounded in the Baltic, and put back to Copenhagen for the necessary repairs. Subsequently she proceeded on her voyage, and put into Revel, where she was detained in consequence of the port of St. Petersburg being closed by ice. If the ship had not grounded and received damage she could have reached St. Petersburg, discharged her cargo, and left the port before it was closed by ice:—Held, that the detention at Revel was a detention by ice caused by “breakdown of steamer,” and that upon the true construction of the charterparty the hire ceased during the period of such detention. Rikard Nordraak (Steamship) and Lennard, In re, 73 L. J. K.B. 553; [1904] 2 K.B. 377; 90 L. T. 407; 9 Com. Cas. 235; 9 Asp. M.C. 553; 20 T. L. R. 394—C.A.

Detention by Accident.]—A charterparty provided that, in the event of loss of time from “detention by average accidents to ship,” the payment of hire should cease for the time thereby lost. An average accident having occurred to the ship while on a voyage from Hamburg to New York, she put back to Queens-town for repairs. After being repaired the voyage was resumed:—Held, that the charterer was liable to pay hire during the time occupied after leaving Queens-town in arriving back at the place where the accident had occurred. Vogemann v. Zanzibar Steamship Co., 7 Com. Cas. 254—C.A.

Incorporation of Terms of Charterparty in Bill of Lading—Arbitration Clause—Bill of Lading—Action by Shipowner against Charterer Holding Bill of Lading.]—The distinction between the position of a charterer who ships and takes a bill of lading and an ordinary holder of a bill of lading is that in the former case the underlying contract of the charterparty remains until it is cancelled, and taking a bill of lading does not cancel it in whole or in part, unless it can be inferred from the inconsistency of the terms of the two documents that it was intended to do so; while, in the case of a holder of a bill of lading who is not the charterer, there is no presumption that he contracts in any terms but those of the bill of lading, and, if the bill of lading purports to import the charterparty, the presumption is that it incorporates only those clauses which relate to the conditions to be performed by the receiver of the goods. Temperley Steam Shipping Co. v. Smyth, 74 L. J. K.B. 876; [1905] 2 K.B. 791; 93 L. T. 471; 54 W. R. 150; 10 Asp. M.C. 123; 10 Com. Cas. 301; 21 T. L. R. 739—C.A.

A charterparty by which a ship was chartered for the carriage of a cargo of wheat provided that all time on demurrage over and above the laying days allowed for loading should be paid for by charterers to the ship at a specified rate; and, by a further clause, that if the cargo could not be loaded by reason of any dispute between masters and men occasioning a strike, the time lost was not to be counted as part of the lay days; and, should any dispute arise under this clause in the loading of the steamer, same to be settled by arbitration. There was also a cesser clause by which charterers' liability was to cease upon shipment of cargo, vessel to have a lien on cargo for recovery of bill of lading freight, dead freight, demurrage, and all other charges whatsoever. A bill of lading was signed whereby the goods were made deliverable to the charterers at the port of discharge, all the terms and exceptions contained in the charterparty being incorporated therewith and forming part thereof, the owner of the vessel to have an absolute lien and charge upon the cargo for the recovery of freight and demurrage and all other charges whatsoever. The lay days at the port of loading having been exceeded, the shipowners brought an action for a declaration that they had a lien on the cargo for demurrage. The charterers applied under section 4 of the Arbitration Act, 1889, that the action should be stayed in order that the dispute might be referred to arbitration under the arbitration clause in the charterparty, alleging that the delay in loading was due to a strike within the meaning of that clause:—Held, that, as between the shipowners and the charterers, the bill of lading did not annul the arbitration clause of the charterparty, which was still subsisting, and binding upon the parties. Runciman v. Smyth (20 T. L. R. 625) overruled. Id.

(k) Hire and Freight.

Payment in Advance—Breach—Right of Shipowner to Withdraw Vessel—Waiver.]—A steamer was chartered for about nine months, payment of hire to be made fortnightly in advance, and in default of payment the owners to have the right to withdraw the steamer from the service of the charterers. On June 21, during the currency of the charterparty, a fortnight's hire became due, but was not paid. At that date the steamer was on a voyage to Stockholm, where she arrived on June 25, and on June 27 proceeded to Helsingfors to load a cargo. On June 28 the owners gave notice to the charterers that, the hire not having been paid, they withdrew the steamer from the charterers' service:—Held, that the right of the owners to withdraw the steamer on the ground of non-payment of hire must be exercised within a reasonable time after the failure to pay; that it had not been so exercised, having regard to the fact that after the right to withdraw accrued the owners had permitted the charterers to incur expense in dealing with the steamer. Nova Scotia Steel Co. v. Sutherland Steam Shipping Co. (5 Com. Cas. 106) considered. Tyrer & Hessler, In re, 84 L. T. 653; 6 Com. Cas. 143; 9 Asp. M.C. 186—D.

—Liability—Termination of Hiring.]—By a charterparty it was provided that the charterer should pay freight “at the rate of 709L. per calendar month, . . . and at or after the same rate for any part of the month, hire to continue until her re-delivery to the owner, payment for the said hire to be made in cash monthly in advance.” It was also provided that the owner should have a lien upon cargoes and sub-freight for any amount due to him under the charter, and that the charterer should have a lien on the ship for all moneys paid in advance and not earned:—Held, that the charterer was bound to pay the full freight in advance at the beginning of each month, although it might be probable that the hire would not continue for the whole month. Tonnelier v. Smith, 77 L. T. 277; 8 Asp. M.C. 327—C.A.

—Aliquot Part of Freight—Freight Payable on Fixed Tonnage—Destruction of Part of Cargo by Excepted Peril Before Advance Freight Payable—Basis of Calculation of Advance Freight.—A charterparty, by which the charterers agreed to load a full and complete cargo upon a ship, contained the following clause as to freight: "Freight for the said cargo to be paid on final discharge at the rate of . . . on the quantity to be delivered to the consignees. The freight to be due and paid as follows: Two-thirds in cash . . . three days after sailing . . . ship lost or not lost, and the balance on unloading and right delivery of the said cargo," and also a marginal clause that "in the event of charterers not loading vessel to her marks it is agreed that freight shall be paid on the basis of 4,350 tons, which the owners hereby guarantee to be vessel's capacity for the voyage, less pro rata freight on any quantity of cargo short delivered." When 1,478 tons had been loaded, they were destroyed by fire, which was a peril excepted by the charterparty. The charterers then shipped 2,590 tons more cargo, being, with the amount destroyed, 292 tons less than the agreed basis of 4,350 tons and insufficient to load the vessel to her marks. The ship then sailed, and after three days the shipowners claimed payment of advance freight on 4,350 tons:—Held, that the advance freight must be calculated on the basis of 4,350 tons, deducting therefrom the amount of cargo destroyed by the excepted peril. Weir v. Girvin, 69 L. J. Q.B. 168; [1900] 1 Q.B. 45; 81 L. T. 687; 48 W. R. 179; 9 Asp. M.C. 7; 5 Com. Cas. 40—C.A.

Punctual and Ready Payment—Breach—Waiver.—A steamer was chartered for three months at a monthly hire, payment to be made monthly in advance, and, "failing the punctual and regular payment of the hire," the owners were to be at liberty to withdraw the vessel from the service of the charterers. The second month's hire became due on July 12, but was not then paid. The vessel arrived on that day at Wabana, Nova Scotia, where she loaded a cargo, and sailed on July 14. The owners, on July 14, gave notice to the charterers that they withdrew the ship, the hire not having been paid. The charterers, on receipt of the notice, tendered the amount of the hire, which the owners refused to accept:—Held, there had been a punctual and regular payment of the hire, and, if not, that the act of the captain in taking cargo on board when the hire was due and unpaid amounted to a waiver by the owners of their right to withdraw the steamer. Nova Scotia Steel Co. v. Sutherland Steam Shipping Co., 5 Com. Cas. 106—Bigham, J.

Overdue Hire—Withdrawal of Ship—Damages.—A charterparty contained a clause providing "Payment of the said hire to be made in cash monthly in advance, . . . and in default of such payment or payments as herein specified, the owners shall have the faculty of withdrawing the said steamer from the service of the charterers." A month's hire became due on September 11. On October 1 it was still unpaid, and the owners gave notice that they withdrew the ship, which was at that time at sea. On October 2 the month's hire was paid, and on the same day the ship arrived in port. On October 4 the master, under instructions from the owners, withdrew the ship:—Held, that there was a breach of the charterparty for which the owners were liable in damages. Langford Steamship Owners v. Canadian Forwarding Co., 96 L. T. 559—P.C.

Coal Cargo—Cost of Discharging Cargo.—Clause 1 of a charterparty provided that the steamer should "load a full and complete cargo of Lambton gas-coal, . . . and, being so loaded, shall therewith proceed . . . to Port de Bouc and there deliver her cargo . . . on being paid freight at the rate of 9s. per ton of 20 cwt. or 1,015 kilos, delivered, or on bill of lading quantity, less 2 per cent., at receivers' option." Clause 8 dealt with the discharge of the cargo, and contained the following: "Consignee to effect the discharge of the cargo." "Steamer paying one franc per ton of 20 cwt. or 1,015 kilos." The consignees elected to receive the cargo without weighing. In an action by the shipowners against the charterers to recover a balance of freight remaining unpaid, the defendants counterclaimed to be entitled (under clause 8) to be paid one franc per ton on the bill of lading quantity without deduction:—Held, that clauses 1 and 8 were to be read together, and that in ascertaining the number of tons upon which the shipowner was liable for the expense of discharging, a deduction of 2 per cent. must be made from the bill of lading weight. The Hollinside, 67 L. J. P. 45; [1898] P. 131; 46 W. R. 639—D.

Option to Pay Freight on Weight Delivered or Intake Weight—Time to Exercise Option.—By the terms of a charterparty cargo was to be delivered "on payment of freight at the rate of 6s. 3d. per ton delivered or intake weight less 2 per cent. at charterers' option." The shipowners not having required the charterers to declare their option as soon as the cargo was delivered, the latter elected to pay on the intake weight less 2 per cent.:—Held, that the charterers could elect to pay the lesser—that is, the intake-freight, as they were not bound to exercise their option until the time for payment of the freight had arrived, the shipowners having waived their right to require the charterers to declare their option as soon as the cargo had been delivered. The Dowlais, 51 W. R. 88—C.A.

Freight Payable at Certain Rate per Ton on Gross Weight Shipped on Right and True Delivery—Part of Cargo Lost—Whether Lump-sum Freight.—By the terms of a charterparty a vessel was to load at Fiume a full and complete cargo of sugar in bags, and proceed to Boston, and there deliver same agreeably to bills of lading on being paid freight "at the rate of ten shillings and sixpence per ton of 20 cwt. gross weight shipped payable on right and true delivery of the cargo in cash." By another clause it was provided that "any difference between the charterparty and bills of lading freight shall be settled at Fiume on clearance of vessel if required by master":—Held (ROMER, L.J., dissenting), that this was a contract not for a lump-sum freight, but for the payment of freight in the ordinary way—namely, on the cargo actually delivered, and therefore that no freight was payable in respect of a portion of the cargo which was lost on the voyage. London Transport Co. v. Trechmann, 73 L. J. K.B. 253; [1904] 1 K.B. 635; 90 L. T. 132; 9 Com. Cas. 133; 9 Asp. M.C. 518—C.A.

Pilot Paid by Charterers—Damage to Vessel Due to Pilot—Payment of Hire during Repairs.]

—The plaintiffs chartered the defendant's ship for the period of twenty-five years, with the option of purchase, the ship to be employed "between safe ports of the Continent of Europe where she may always safely lie." By the charterparty the charterers were to pay for pilotages, and in the event of loss of time from damage preventing the working of the vessel the payment of hire should cease until the vessel should be again in an efficient state to resume her services. The negligence of the pilot, master, mariners, and other servants of the owner was mutually excepted. While under charge of a pilot the ship grounded in getting to her berth in a harbour, and in consequence she was prevented working for three weeks. The berth was a safe berth, and the grounding was due to the negligence of the pilot:—Held, that the pilot, though paid by the charterers, was not their servant, and therefore the charterers were not bound to pay hire during the period that the ship was in dock undergoing repairs. Fraser v. Bee, 49 W. R. 336—Mathew, J. And see PILOTAGE.

Right of Master to Maintain Action for.]

The owner of a vessel chartered her to the defendants to bring a cargo of timber from Australia to London, the defendants undertaking to provide the cargo. The charterparty contained the usual exceptions, and the freight was to be paid on unloading and right delivery of the cargo. It was further provided that the master should sign bills of lading at the port of loading, and that the charterer's liability under the charter should cease on the vessel being loaded. The defendants loaded the cargo, and presented bills of lading to the plaintiff, who signed them as master of the vessel. They provided that the cargo should be delivered to the shippers or their assigns, "they paying freight for the same as per charterparty." On the arrival of the ship at the port of discharge, the cargo was delivered to the defendants against presentation of the bills of lading. In an action by the plaintiff to recover a balance due for freight,—Held, that the plaintiff, having signed the bills of lading merely as agent for the shipowner, was not entitled to maintain the action. Repetto v. Millar's Karri and Jarrah Forests, 70 L. J. K.B. 561; [1901] 2 K.B. 306; 84 L. T. 836; 49 W. R. 526; 6 Com. Cas. 129; 9 Asp. M.C. 215—Bigham, J.

Lien for Freight—Sums Due under Charterparty—Assignees of Charterer—Freight Received in Lump Sum before Whole Amount Due—Damages for Breach of Charterparty—Set-off and Counterclaim.]—On November 2, 1900, the defendants chartered their vessel to one Perry for a term of 24 calendar months at the rate of 1,550*l.* (less 2½ per cent. commission) a month, payable in advance. The vessel came on hire on March 18, 1901, and was employed by the charterer to carry a cargo from the United States to Japan. The cargo was carried under a contract made between the shippers and the charterer. Under the bill of lading there was a lien against the shippers for the bill of lading freight payable at Nagasaki, in Japan, and by the charterparty the defendants had a lien upon cargoes and sub-freights for amounts due under the charterparty. On the arrival of the vessel at Nagasaki on June 9, 1901, there was due in respect of bill of lading freight 5,258*l.* 7*s.* 11*d.*, which the master, acting on the defendants' instructions, collected on June 15. That amount was paid to him in a lump sum. It was admitted that of that amount the defendants were entitled to retain the sum of 3,100*l.* for chartered hire due and unpaid upon the vessel's arrival, together with certain other small amounts for disbursements, &c. On June 18 a further month's hire, amounting to 1,511*l.* 5*s.*, became due. On June 26 the owners withdrew the vessel from the chartered service without prejudice to their claim against the charterer for breach of the charterparty, and it was agreed for the purposes of the case that the defendants were entitled to 3,000*l.* in respect of such breach. The plaintiffs, who were the equitable assignees of the freight, and stood in the shoes of the charterer, but who had not given notice of that fact before the receipt of the freight by the master either to the consignees or to the defendants, claimed that, of the 5,258*l.* 7*s.* 11*d.* collected by the master on June 15, the defendants were not entitled to retain the amount of chartered hire (1,511*l.* 5*s.*), which only became due on June 18, as they had no lien in respect of that sum, and further that the defendants were not entitled to set up against the plaintiffs their claim against the charterer for the 3,000*l.* damages:—Held, that the master was acting within his rights in receiving the 5,258*l.* 7*s.* 11*d.* from the consignees, who were at liberty to pay the freight in one sum instead of paying freight day by day as the cargo was discharged, and that although the plaintiffs had a right under the charterparty to call upon the defendants to account, the latter were entitled to bring into the account by way of set-off or counterclaim the 1,511*l.* 5*s.* and the 3,000*l.* Samuel v. West Hartlepool Steam Navigation Co., 12 Com. Cas. 203—Walton, J.

(1) Salvage.

For Owners and Charterers' "equal benefit"—Division of Sum Awarded by Admiralty Court—Shipowners' Deduction of Losses Attributable to Salvage Services.]

—Where a chartered ship has succeeded in rendering salvage services to another ship, and has obtained from the Admiralty Court a salvage award, a clause in the charterparty that "all derelicts and salvage shall be for owners and charterers' equal benefit" entitles the shipowners, before dividing the salvage award with the charterers, to deduct sums spent in repairs to their ship attributable to salvage services and loss of hire whilst their ship is under repair. Booker v. Pocklington

7. CARRIAGE OF PERSONS.

Passenger's Contract—"Passage broker"—Person who "receives money for or in respect of a passage in any ship."—A "passage broker" within the meaning of section 341, sub-section 1 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, is one who sells or lets a passage in a named ship to commence at a definite time for a specified voyage. A person who, by way of business, agrees to place farm pupils in the colonies in consideration of a lump sum which includes ship's passage fare, but without specifying any particular ship, and who out of that sum subsequently pays for and obtains from a duly qualified passage broker a contract ticket for a second-class passage in a particular ship, is not a "passage broker" within the meaning of section 341, sub-section 1 of the Act of 1894; nor is he a person who "receives money for and in respect of a passage in any ship" within the meaning of section 320, sub-section 1 of the same Act. Morriss v. Howden, 66 L. J. Q.B. 264; [1897] 1 Q.B. 378; 76 L. T. 156; 45 W. R. 221; 61 J. P. 246; 18 Cox C.C. 501; 8 Asp. M.C. 249—D.

Money Paid for Steerage Passage—No Contract Ticket Given—Money not Stated to have been Received in Respect of a Specified Passage.—Per the LORD JUSTICE-GENERAL: Where money is paid to a person, who is not acting for or under the authority of the Board of Trade, in respect of a steerage passage or other passage in an emigrant ship to a port out of Europe and not in the Mediterranean, and no contract ticket in a form approved by the Board of Trade is at the same time supplied, an offence is committed under section 320 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, by the person receiving the money, although the passage covenanted for is for a passage generally, without mention of the exact ship or time of voyage. Morriss v. Howden (66 L. J. Q.B. 264; [1897] 1 Q.B. 378) commented on. Hart v. Hunter, 8 F. (Just. Cas.) 84—Ct. of Justy.

Passengers' Luggage.—A shipowner is entitled to limit his liability in respect of the loss of passengers' personal effects. The Stella, 81 L. T. 235—Bucknill, J.

Theft from Cabin—Negligence—Conditions on Ticket—No Declaration of Value—"Fault or privity."—A passenger on a steamer placed his watch, with gold cigar cutter and sovereign purse (containing 5*l.*) attached, on retiring for the night in a canvas pocket suspended from a hook over the top bunk which he occupied in a cabin on the main deck. The pocket was placed where it was under the superintendence of the shipowner's marine superintendent. Above the pocket was a fanlight, which the passenger left open, leading into the ventilating shaft which opened on the spar deck. A small man by putting his head and shoulders into the opening of the ventilating shaft could, by stretching his arm downwards, reach the pocket. The contents of the pocket had disappeared by the following morning. Finger-marks were found round the pocket and in the ventilating shaft. The passenger's ticket contained a condition that "the owners will not be responsible for and shall be exempt from all liability in respect of . . . any loss . . . of . . . any baggage, property, goods, effects, articles, matters, or things belonging to or carried by or with any passenger, whether the same shall arise from or be occasioned by thefts . . . by persons in the employment of the owners, or by others . . . or any other acts, defaults, or negligence of the owner's agents or servants of any kind whatsoever. . . ." The passenger had not declared the value of the articles. On an action for damages for negligence or alternatively for breach of warranty of seaworthiness,—Held, that the liability of the carrier as regards articles carried on the person or in the passenger's personal custody was the same as that towards the passenger—namely, to take reasonable care. If the articles by being placed in the pocket changed their character, then the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, s. 502, applied. There was no "fault or privity" of the shipowners. The condition on the ticket protected the shipowners. The shipowners were not liable for the loss. Smitton v. Orient Steam Navigation Co., 96 L. T. 848; 12 Com. Cas. 270; 23 T. L. R. 359—Channell, J.

8. CARRIAGE OF GOODS—BILL OF LADING.

(a) The Contract.

Incorporation of Conditions of Charterparty—"Paying freight . . . all other terms, conditions, and clauses as per charterparty."—Goods, forming part of a cargo loaded under a charterparty of the plaintiff's ship, were shipped under a bill of lading to be delivered to the order of M. or assigns, "he or they paying freight for the goods . . . all other terms, conditions, and clauses as per charterparty." The charterparty contained the following clause: "The ship to discharge in such berth or dock as ordered by charterers or their agents." On the arrival of the ship at the port of discharge the defendant, the indorsee of the bill of lading, he being also the charterers' agent, ordered her to discharge in a certain dock, but she discharged in a different dock from that ordered, whereby the defendant suffered damage:—Held, that the clause in the charterparty was incorporated into the bill of lading, and that the plaintiffs were liable to the defendant for the damage suffered by him. East Yorkshire Steamship Co. v. Hancock, 5 Com. Cas. 266—Mathew, J.

— "Freight and all other conditions as per charterparty"—"Deck cargo at merchant's risk."—Wood was shipped under a bill of lading in good order and well conditioned, to be delivered in like good order and condition at a port named unto orders, "freight and all other conditions as per charterparty." By the charterparty it was agreed that the ship should load a full and complete cargo of battens, including a deck cargo at merchant's risk. A part of the wood so shipped having been delivered to the indorsees of the bill of lading discoloured in consequence of being carried on deck, the indorsees claimed the damage so caused from the shipowner:—Held (RIGBY, L.J., dissentiente), that the words "freight and all other conditions as per charterparty" in the bill of lading did not incorporate into the bill of lading the term of the charterparty "deck cargo at merchant's risk," and that the bill of lading holders were entitled to recover. Diederichsen v. Farquharson, 67 L. J. Q.B. 103; [1898] 1 Q.B. 150; 77 L. T. 543; 46 W. R. 162; 8 Asp. M.C. 333—C.A.

"All other conditions as per charterparty"—Submission to Arbitration—Incorporation of Arbitration Clause in Bill of Lading.—Where by a charterparty any dispute arising under the charter was to be settled by arbitration, and the charterer's liability was to cease on completion of shipment, the captain having a lien for freight, and goods were shipped under a bill of lading to be delivered to the charterer at the port of discharge, the bill of lading containing a clause, "all other conditions as per charterparty,"—Held, that the arbitration clause was not incorporated in the bill of lading. Runciman v. Smyth, 20 T. L. R. 625—D.

Legal Proceedings.—The expression "legal proceedings" in section 496, sub-section 3 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, means legal process taken to enforce the rights of the shipowner. Ib.

"All other conditions as per charterparty including negligence clause"—Meaning of "negligence clause."—The plaintiffs' goods, while being carried in winter across the Atlantic in the defendants' ship, were damaged owing to a crack in one of the deck plates. The bills of lading for the goods excepted the usual perils, including accidents of the seas, and provided "all other conditions as per charterparty, including negligence clause." The charterparty contained in clause 11 the two following sentences printed together as one set of words: "The steamer is in no way liable for the consequences of the act of God, perils of the seas . . . strandings or other accidents or errors of navigation, even when occasioned by negligence, default or error in judgment of the pilot, master, mariners or other servants of the shipowners. Neither is the steamer answerable for losses occasioned by . . . unseaworthiness . . . whether existing or not before or after the commencement of the voyage. . . ." The County Court Judge found that on the evidence the vessel had not met with exceptional weather during the voyage, and therefore that the crack in the plate was due to unseaworthiness, though without any fault on the part of the defendants; and decided that the term "negligence clause" in the bill of lading incorporated only the first sentence of clause 11 of the charterparty containing the word "negligence," and not the second sentence as regards "unseaworthiness"; and gave judgment for the plaintiffs:—Held (allowing the appeal)—first, that on the evidence the vessel had met with exceptionally severe weather during the voyage, and that the crack in the plate was caused thereby and was due to perils of the seas for which the defendants were not responsible; and secondly, that even if the damage had been due to unseaworthiness, the defendants were not liable, because the term "negligence clause" in the bill of lading incorporated the whole set of words in clause 11 of the charterparty, including the sentence regarding "unseaworthiness." The Northumbria, 75 L. J. P. 101; [1906] P. 292; 95 L. T. 618—D.

Time Charter—Sub-charter—Owner's Lien—Sub-charterer's Cargo.—Notice to a shipper of a charterparty has not the effect of incorporating into the bill of lading any terms inconsistent therewith which the captain was not bound by the charterparty to embody in the bill of lading. Turner v. Haji Goolam Mahomed Azam, 74 L. J. P.C. 17; [1904] A.C. 826; 91 L. T. 216; 9 Asp. M.C. 588; 20 T. L. R. 599—P.C.

Under a time charter, bills of lading were to be signed at any rate of freight the charterers might direct, "without prejudice to this charter"; the charterers were to be at liberty to sub-let the ship, and the owners were to have a lien upon all cargoes for freight or charter money due under the charter:—Held, that the owners were not entitled to a lien on the cargo of a sub-charterer, who had notice of the existence but not of the contents of the time charter, for moneys due under the time charter, the words "without prejudice to this charter" referring only to the shipowners' rights against the time charterer; and that the owners must be held to have contracted with the sub-charterer for the carriage of his goods in terms of the bill of lading. Colvin v. Newberry (1 Cl. & F. 283) distinguished. Ib.

A right to seize one person's goods for another's debt must be clearly and distinctly conferred before a Court can recognise it. Ib.

Alteration of Destination—"Bound for London"—Condition—Liberty to Call at any Ports whatsoever, to Tranship by any other Steamer, to Forward to Port of Destination by any Steamer either of Owners or any other Line—Goods Damaged by Excepted Perils.—Under a bill of lading goods were shipped on board a steamship "bound, subject to the liberties hereinafter mentioned, for London . . . with liberty to proceed to or call in any order for any purpose at any port or ports whatsoever, although in a contrary direction to or out of or beyond the ordinary route . . . with liberty either before shipment or at any period of the voyage, and so often as may be deemed expedient, at any port or place, to ship the whole or any part by any other steamship (whether belonging to the company or not), or tranship or land and store . . . and thence reship on the said steamship or any other steamship (whether belonging to the company or not) to be carried and delivered (subject to certain exceptions, limitations, and conditions) at the port of London." Among the excepted perils set out in the bill of lading was the following clause numbered 16: "Should the ship for any cause whatever not call at the port for which goods have been shipped, the owners or agents of the ship are at liberty to forward the goods from any port at which they may call to their port of destination by any steamer or steamers, either of their own or any other line. Should the goods for any cause be forwarded by a steamer of any other line, shippers and consignees are to be bound by all clauses and conditions of the usual bill of lading of such steamer." During the voyage the destination of the vessel on which the goods were shipped was changed from London to Cardiff, where the goods were transhipped into a small steamer, and by it the goods were carried to London.

In an action by the consignees claiming damages on the ground that by abandoning the voyage to London the shipowners lost the protection of all exceptions in their favour in the bill of lading,—Held, that the exceptions were wide enough to cover the total abandonment of the final destination to London, and were reasonable and did not defeat the object of the bill of lading contract to carry the goods to London. Held, also, that the words "other line" in clause 16 of the bill of lading meant merely another steamer, and did not therefore compel the shipowners to tranship the goods into a "liner" as distinguished from a small trading steamer. Hadji Ali Akbar v. Anglo-Arabian Steamship Co., 95 L. T. 610; 11 Com. Cas. 219; 22 T. L. R. 600—Bigham, J.

Deviation.—By a charterparty the ship was to proceed to Marianople and there load a cargo of wheat, and being so loaded was to proceed therewith to a safe port in the United Kingdom or on the Continent between Havre and Hamburg, as ordered at Gibraltar. The charterparty also contained the following clause: "Should frost ensue . . . after the steamer has arrived at port of loading and the vessel is compelled to leave to avoid being frozen in, the master is at liberty to leave . . . with part cargo, and to fill up for steamer's benefit at any open Black Sea, Azof, or Mediterranean port for United Kingdom, Continent, or Mediterranean; but in case of leaving with part cargo the steamer shall complete the voyage as if a full cargo had been loaded, or shall forward such part cargo to its destination, provided that no extra expense be thereby caused to the receivers." Frost ensued, and, to avoid being frozen in, the ship left Marianople with a part cargo of wheat, shipped under bills of lading which incorporated all the conditions and exceptions contained in the charterparty, and proceeded to Novorissisk, where she filled up with linseed under bills of lading for delivery at King's Lynn Docks. Upon the ship's arrival at Gibraltar she was ordered by the consignees of the wheat to proceed therewith to Cardiff; but instead of going there direct, she went in the first instance to King's Lynn, and there delivered the linseed before proceeding to Cardiff. On the voyage from King's Lynn to Cardiff the wheat was seriously damaged by one of the perils excepted in the bill of lading and charterparty. In an action by the holders of the bill of lading against the shipowners for breach of contract,—Held, that, by proceeding to King's Lynn, the ship had deviated from the voyage, and that her owners were therefore liable. The Dunbeth, 66 L. J. P. 66; [1897] P. 133; 76 L. T. 658; 8 Asp. M.C. 284—Goroll Barnes, J.

Custom—Charges to be Paid by the Ship—Charges for Stowing in Transit-shed—Inconsistency—Mersey Docks Act and By-laws.—Bills of lading provided that certain currants were "to be delivered from the ship's deck when the ship's responsibility shall cease . . . Simultaneously with the ship being ready to unload the said goods . . . the consignee is hereby bound to be ready to receive the goods from the ship's side, and in default thereof the master or the agent of the ship is authorised" to enter, land, and warehouse them at the expense of the consignee:—Held, that a custom, that in the discharge of dried-fruit cargoes the charges for trucking from the shed and piling in the transit-shed are to be paid for by the ship, was good, as it did not contradict the bills of lading, but merely annexed an incident to them. Held, further, that these charges were not included in the all-round charge made by the master porters under the Mersey Docks Acts and the by-laws of the Mersey Docks and Harbour Board. Cardiff Steamship Co. v. Jameson, 88 L. T. 87; 9 Asp. M.C. 367—D.

"At merchant's risk"—Exception of Negligence or Error of Judgment—Goods Damaged by Recklessness in Discharge—Liability of Shipowner.—Goods were shipped under a contract which contained exceptions of liability for damage or loss, whether on shore, or ship, lighter, or hulk, arising from negligence, barratry, or error of judgment of the master, mariners, engineers, or any other persons in the employment of the shipowner. In the margin of the contract the words "Carried entirely at merchant's risk" were written. The goods were damaged through the reckless conduct of the stevedores, who were employed by the shipowner, in discharging the goods into lighters:—Held, that the words "at merchant's risk" did not cut down the special exceptions; that damage caused by recklessness, which was an error of judgment or negligence of a bad kind, came within the exceptions; and that therefore the shipowner was not liable. Briscoe v. Powell, 22 T. L. R. 128—Channell, J.

Exemption of Insurable Losses—Negligence of Defendants and their Servants—Liability of Carrier.—A cargo of frozen meat belonging to the plaintiffs was carried in one of the defendants' steamers from the River Plate to the United Kingdom, under a contract containing a clause that the defendants would not be liable "for any damage or detriment to the goods which is capable of being covered by insurance or which has been wholly or in part paid for by insurance." The cargo was damaged owing to the neglect of the defendants to provide refrigerating machinery which would keep the temperature low enough, in consequence of which the ship was unfit to carry the cargo safely to its destination. In an action for damages for breach of contract,—Held, that the exception being in general terms did not relieve the defendants from their obligation to provide a ship fit for the cargo at the commencement of the voyage, and that they were therefore liable. Nelson & Sons, Lim. v. Nelson Line (No. 2), 75 L. J. K.B. 921; [1906] 2 K.B. 804; 11 Com. Cas. 305; 22 T. L. R. 826—Bray, J.

The bill of lading, the clauses of which were incorporated in the agreement, contained a clause that the owners were "not accountable in any case beyond nett invoice price of the goods damaged":—Held, that that clause was not intended to form part of the agreement, and that the intention of the parties was that only the profit on the goods damaged should be excluded from the amount for which the defendants should be liable. Id.

Bill of Lading incorporating Harter Act—Fault or Error in the Management of the Ship.—In the course of a voyage, during bad weather, a drainage pipe in the fore-castle of the ship became choked, and the forecabin was flooded with water. In trying to clear the pipe with a hammer and poker the boatswain drove a hole through the syphon trap of the pipe, and the water running into the hold damaged the cargo. The bill of lading incorporated the provisions of the Harter Act. In an action brought by the shipowner to recover the balance of freight retained by the owner of the cargo to cover damage,—Held, that the act of the boatswain was an act done "in the management" of the ship, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover. The Rodney, 69 L. J. P. 29; [1900] P. 112; 82 L. T. 27; 48 W. R. 527; 9 Asp. M.C. 39—D.

Live-stock—Contract to Carry—Force Majeure—Deterioration of Cargo—Liability of Shipowner.—By a live-stock contract and bill of lading the defendants undertook to carry in their ship the plaintiff's cattle from the dock at Buenos Ayres to Deptford. The contract and bill of lading each contained the following clauses: "The . . . owners of the vessel shall not be responsible for any loss or injury arising from force majeure . . . or from any . . . negligence default or error in judgment of the . . . master . . . engineers or other persons in the service of the shipowner . . . whether occurring previously or subsequently to the vessel's sailing or by unseaworthiness or unfitness of the ship or any part of her . . . equipment at or after the commencement of the voyage." "The vessel to have liberty to sail without pilots and to tow and be towed and assist vessels in distress and to deviate for the purpose of saving life or property but not to call at any port or ports before landing her live-stock except in case of force majeure":—Held, that the latter clause amounted to an absolute undertaking by the shipowners that the vessel should not, before landing her live-stock, call at any port, whether in or out of the ordinary course of the voyage, except in case of force majeure. Yrazu v. Astral Shipping Co., 9 Com. Cas. 100; 20 T. L. R. 153—Walton, J.

By a miscalculation of the master and engineer the ship left Buenos Ayres with insufficient coals to take her to St. Vincent—a customary coaling port on the voyage from the River Plate to the United Kingdom at which the master intended to coal, being in some way led to suppose that there was nothing in the contract which would prevent him from so doing. The ship was in consequence compelled to call at Pernambuco for coals, and in consequence the delivery of the cattle at Deptford was delayed and they suffered depreciation:—Held, that there was no case of force majeure, and that the defendants were liable for the damages suffered by the plaintiffs in consequence of the vessel calling at Pernambuco. Sembla, it would have been a case of force majeure if the deficiency of coals had arisen from some accident as, for example, jettison. And, under the contract, such a case would be one of force majeure even though the accident which rendered the jettison necessary was caused or contributed to by some negligence in the navigation of the ship. Id.

Shipping Order—Charterparty—Chartered Freight—Payment of Difference—Right of Shipper to Withdraw Goods after Shipment.—By a forward freight contract, contained in a shipping order, C. D. & Co. agreed to provide tonnage at 16s. 6d. a ton for the carriage of 3,000 tons of wheat of the plaintiffs from Bombay to Liverpool. C. D. & Co. declared for the shipment of the wheat a steamer of the defendants, which had been chartered by M. & Co. to carry a cargo from Bombay to Liverpool at a freight of 30s. per ton, and half the space of which had been sub-let by M. & Co. to C. D. & Co. The plaintiffs knew that there was a charterparty, but not its terms. After 2,100 tons of the wheat had been loaded, the plaintiffs tendered to the captain for his signature bills of lading in which the freight was 16s. 6d. The captain refused to sign the bills of lading unless the difference between 30s. and 16s. 6d. was paid to him, in accordance with the terms of the charterparty. The plaintiffs declined to pay this, and demanded the return of their wheat. The captain retained the wheat, and sailed without signing any bills of lading for it. In order to get delivery the plaintiffs, under protest, took bills of lading in which the freight was 30s. At the time of the loading the captain had an opportunity of seeing the shipping order, but did not, in fact, do so:—Held, that there was no contract by the defendants to carry the wheat at 16s. 6d.; that the defendants were not bound to return the wheat to the plaintiffs; and that the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover from the defendants the excess of freight above 16s. 6d. Ralli v. Paddington Steamship Co., 5 Com. Cas. 124—Mathew, J.

Bulk Cargo—Undivided Portions of Bulk—Each bill of lading to bear its proportion of damage—Error in Apportioning—Short Delivery.—Bills of lading for undivided portions of a bulk cargo of grain contained the following clause and note in margin: "If the parcel herein signed for constitutes part of a larger bulk shipped without separation into parcels, as per bills of lading, each bill of lading shall bear its due proportion of shortage or damage and (or) sweepings, if any": "Part of a parcel, shipped without separation. Each bill of lading to bear its proportion of shortage and damage, if any." By an error in apportioning damaged grain one consignee received a full consignment of sound grain. One of the other consignees, refusing to accept more than his proportionate share of damaged grain, received a consignment which was 108 quarters short:—Held, in an action for short delivery, that the error was caused by the consignees' agents, and that the clause in the bills of lading cast no duty on the shipowner to apportion the good and unsound grain. Grange v. Taylor, 90 L. T. 486; 52 W. R. 429; 9 Com. Cas. 223; 9 Asp. M.C. 559; 20 T. L. R. 386—Bigham, J.

Stipulation as to Discharge—Intended Breach—Interim Injunction.—An interim injunction granted restraining shipowners from discharging part of a cargo in a particular dock contrary to the terms of the bills of lading. Wood v. Atlantic Transport Co., 5 Com. Cas. 121—Mathew, J.

(b) Through Bill of Lading.

Inland and Ocean Carrier—Bill of Lading Weight greater than Gross Weight Delivered.

Payment of Freight on Bill of Lading Weight—Recovery of Over-payment in Respect of Inland Freight.—Certain parcels of hay, of which the plaintiff was consignee, were respectively delivered to railway companies at certain places in the United States of America to be carried to New York and thence by the defendants to London under through bills of lading signed by an agent on behalf of carriers "severally but not jointly." By the terms of the through bills of lading with respect to the service until delivery at New York, all liability under the contract terminated on delivery of the property to the steamship at New York, and the inland freight was a first lien, due and payable by the defendants; and with respect to the service after delivery at New York and until delivery at London, payment of freight was to be made on the gross weight landed from ocean steamship unless otherwise agreed or so provided in the bill of lading, or unless the carriers elected to take the freight on the bill of lading weight. The through freight was made up by the railway companies in America after the transport rates of the defendants had been ascertained:—Held, first, upon the construction of the bills of lading, that if there was no election to take the bill of lading freight, and if the defendants demanded too much before the goods could be obtained by the plaintiff, they would be liable to be sued for the return of the excess of freight paid, and would not be entitled to say to the plaintiff that he must recover from the land carriers in America so much as represented the overcharge for the inland carriage. Secondly, upon the facts that as the plaintiff, although he objected, had paid the bill of lading through freight, and had accepted a rebate of the ocean freight only, in all cases where the bill of lading freight was greater than the quantity delivered, he was not entitled to recover the over-payment for inland freight as having been made under a mistake of fact. Kitts v. Atlantic Transport Co., 7 Com. Cas. 227—Kennedy, J.

Property Covered by Through Bill of Lading Subject to Conditions in Ocean Bill of Lading—Contract in Through Bill of Lading to Notify Consignee—Condition in Ocean Bill of Lading that no Claims to Attach to Shipowner for Failure to Notify—Lien for Interest on Freight.—A through bill of lading contained the clause "Party to be notified; E. Clemens Horst":—Held—first, that the words were words of contract; secondly, that notification by post would have been sufficient, even though the letter did not arrive. Held, further, that a "notification clause" in an ocean bill of lading incorporated by the through bill of lading to the effect that "no claim shall, under any circumstances whatever, attach to the steamer, her owners or agents, for failure to notify consignees of arrival of goods" does not contradict the through bill of lading containing the contract to notify, but relieves the shipowner from liability to pay damages if he fails to carry out the obligation to notify. Where there is no express contract for a lien for interest on freight it cannot be implied. Clemens Horst Co. v. Norfolk and North American Steam Shipping Co., 11 Com. Cas. 141; 22 T. L. R. 403—Kennedy, J.

Inland Charges—Payment by Steamship Company—Non-delivery of Part of Goods—"Lien on goods in whole and in part until payment" of Inland Charges.—Certain sacks of flour were received by an American railway company to be carried under three similar through bills of lading from inland in the United States to London, part of the transit being by railway to the port and the rest by the defendants' steamships to London, to be there delivered upon payment of the through freight. Each through bill of lading was signed on behalf of the railway company and the defendants severally and not jointly. By a clause in the through bill of lading it was provided that, as regards the inland service, the contract was executed and accomplished, and all liability thereunder terminated, on delivery of the property to the steamship, and that the inland freight charges should be a first lien due and payable by the steamship company. By a clause in the through bill of lading as regards the carriage by sea, freight was to be paid on gross weight landed from the steamship unless otherwise agreed to or therein otherwise provided, or unless the carrier elected to take the freight on the bill of lading weight. By a clause in the defendants' regular bill of lading, which was incorporated in the through bill of lading, it was provided that, "When the goods are carried at a through rate of freight, the inland proportion thereof, together with the other charges of every kind (if any), are due on delivery of the goods to the ocean steamship, and the shipowner or his agent shall have a first lien on the goods in whole and in part until payment thereof." The defendants paid the railway company the inland charges on all the sacks of flour and shipped them; but afterwards the ship ran aground, and some of the flour was damaged and sold, and the rest had to be transhipped. On arrival of the rest of the sacks in London, the defendants were paid the through freight thereon, but claimed also against the plaintiffs, the indorsees of the through bills of lading, a lien on this flour for the inland charges paid on the sacks sold and not delivered. The plaintiffs paid the claim under protest, and brought an action to recover the amount:—Held, that the defendants had a lien on the flour delivered in London under any one bill of lading for the amount of the inland charges which they had paid in respect of the flour under that bill of lading which was sold and not delivered, and that they were entitled to judgment. The Iibernian, 76 L. J. P. 122; [1907] P. 277; 97 L. T. 363; 23 T. L. R. 519—C.A.

(c) Conclusiveness.

As against Persons Signing—Description of Goods—"Marked and numbered as in margin"—Goods Incorrectly Marked.—By a bill of lading the goods shipped were described as being "marked and numbered as in margin," and it was provided that the ship should not be responsible for correct delivery or loss, unless each packet was distinctly, correctly and permanently marked by the merchant before shipment with the mark and number or address. Upon the arrival of the ship goods marked differently from the markings in the margin were tendered to the indorsee of the bill of lading as part of the shipment. The difference between the markings on the goods tendered and the markings in the margin of the bill of lading was in respect of certain figures used for the shippers' own purposes, and which did not affect or denote the substance, quality, or commercial value of the goods. The goods tendered, in fact, formed part of the goods shipped under the bill of lading, but by the shippers' error were incorrectly described in the margin. The indorsee of the bill of lading refused to accept the goods tendered, and brought an action against the signers of the bill of lading for damages for short delivery, contending that by section 3 of the Bills of Lading Act, 1855, the bill of lading was conclusive of the shipment of goods marked as described in the margin, and that the defendants could not be allowed to prove an error in the statement in the margin of the bill of lading as to the markings of the goods:—Held, that the defendants were entitled to judgment: Per A. L. SMITH, M.R., upon the ground that as the goods in question were not correctly marked by the shippers, the defendants were entitled to rely, as an answer to the plaintiff's claim, upon the clause in the bill of lading that the ship should not be responsible for correct delivery or loss unless each packet was distinctly, correctly, and permanently marked by the merchant before shipment. Per COLLINS, L.J., and ROMER, L.J. (A. L. SMITH, M.R., dissenting), upon the ground that the defendants were not precluded by section 3 of the Bills of Lading Act from proving the identity of the goods tendered with those shipped under the bill of lading, and that as in fact the goods tendered were shipped under and comprised in the bill of lading the plaintiff was bound to accept them. Parsons v. New Zealand Shipping Co., 70 L. J. K.B. 404; [1901] 1 K.B. 548; 84 L. T. 218; 49 W. R. 355; 6 Com. Cas. 41; 9 Asp. M.C. 170—C.A.

Evidence of Shipment against Person Signing—Marks on Goods Material to Consignee.]—Section 3 of the Bills of Lading Act, 1855, does not operate to make a bill of lading conclusive as to the statement of marks upon the goods shipped, when those marks do not affect or denote substance, quality, or commercial value. Parsons v. New Zealand Shipping Co., 69 L. J. Q.B. 419; [1900] 1 Q.B. 714; 82 L. T. 327; 9 Asp. M.C. 33; 5 Com. Cas. 179—Kennedy, J.

Misstatement as to Condition of Goods—Harter Act—Authority of Master—Indorsee of Bill of Lading—Estoppel—"Shipped in good order and condition"—"Quality and measure unknown"—Measure of Damages.]—Purchasers of certain timber paid to the vendors, who were foreign shippers, the contract price thereof, relying on a statement in a bill of lading indorsed to them that the goods had been "shipped in good order and condition . . . quality and measure unknown." The bill of lading incorporated the terms of a charterparty by which the master of the ship was to sign bills of lading in a form indorsed upon the charterparty. This form contained the words "Shipped in good order and condition . . . quality and measure unknown"; it also incorporated an Act of Congress of the United States dated February, 1893, and known as the Harter Act, by section 4 of which a duty is imposed upon the shipowner or master to issue bills of lading stating the apparent order and condition of the merchandise to which they relate. The timber had been damaged before shipment, and was not, in fact, shipped in good order or condition. In an arbitration between the purchasers and the shippers the former obtained an award in their favour for the difference between the contract price paid and the value of the goods when delivered in their damaged condition, upon which, however, they did not proceed further. In an action by the purchasers against the shipowners upon the bill of lading for not delivering in good order and condition,—Held, first, that the words "Shipped in good order and condition" did not import a warranty by the shipowners as to the condition of the goods when shipped, but that they did amount to a representation that the goods had been shipped in good order and condition; secondly, that the effect of those words was not altered by the words "quality and measure unknown"; thirdly, that, notwithstanding the terms of the charterparty, the master was bound to state truly the apparent order and condition of the goods when shipped; fourthly, that the statement as to the order and condition of the goods was made by the master within the scope of his employment and bound the shipowners; fifthly, that the shipowners were estopped from denying the statement that the goods when shipped were in good order and condition, assuming that the purchasers had altered their position upon the faith of it; sixthly, that the actual payment of the contract price by the purchasers, and the difficulty which they might experience in recovering it from foreign shippers, were a sufficient alteration of position to entitle them to rely upon the estoppel, even though it did not appear that they might not recover the price paid; and seventhly, that the measure of damages was the difference between the price paid and the value of the goods when delivered in their damaged condition, together with other expenses reasonably incurred by reason of the condition in which they were delivered. Compania Naviera Vascongada v. Churchill & Sims, 75 L. J. K.B. 94; [1906] 1 K.B. 237; 94 L. T. 59; 54 W. R. 406; 11 Com. Cas. 49; 10 Asp. M.C. 177; 22 T. L. R. 85—Channell, J.

(d) Exceptions.

"Accidents of the seas"—Damage caused by Baking—Engine and Boiler Space—Bulkheads—Ventilators Closed during Exceptionally Bad Weather.]—A cargo of maize and oats shipped on the defendants' steamship was damaged by heat proceeding from the bulkheads enclosing the engine and boiler space, which was unable to escape owing to the necessary closing of the ventilators for a period of seven days during a storm of exceptional severity and duration:—Held, that the loss was occasioned by "accidents of the seas." The Thrunscoc, 66 L. J. P. 172; [1897] P. 301; 77 L. T. 407; 46 W. R. 175; 8 Asp. M.C. 313—D.

Peril of the Seas or Navigation—Admission of Sea-water by Negligence of Engineer.]—A cargo of sugar was shipped under bills of lading which exempted the shipowners from liability for loss or damage from certain specified perils whether arising from the negligence, default, or error in judgment of the pilot, master, mariners, engineers, or others of the crew, or otherwise however, inter alia, "peril of the seas, rivers, or navigation of whatever nature or kind soever." The chief engineer, desiring to fill a ballast tank with sea-water for boiler use while discharging, opened the sea cock, but then, instead of opening the valve of the ballast tank as he intended, he by mistake opened the valve of the deep tank in which the sugar was carried, with the result that the sugar was damaged by sea-water:—Held, that the damage was caused by a peril of the sea or navigation within the meaning of the exception in the bills of lading, and that the shipowners were not liable. Blackburn v. Liverpool, Brazil, and River Plate Steam Navigation Co., 71 L. J. K.B. 177; [1902] 1 K.B. 290; 85 L. T. 783; 50 W.R. 272; 7 Com. Cas. 10; 9 Asp. M.C. 263—Walton, J.

Bill of Lading not Incorporating Negligence Clause—Loss of Ship and Cargo by Master's Negligence—Payment of Damages by Shipowners to Holders of Bills of Lading—Indemnity of Shipowners by Charterers.—Merchants chartered a ship by a charterparty, one of the terms of which was that the owners should not be liable for loss caused by the master's negligence. The charterers presented to the master, and the master signed, a bill of lading which did not incorporate this term of the charter. The ship and cargo were lost through the master's negligence, and the owners were compelled to pay to the holders of the bill of lading the damages sustained. The owners, by their action, claimed to be indemnified by the charterers:—Held, that they were entitled to be so indemnified. Decision of the COURT OF APPEAL (76 L. J. K.B. 550; [1907] 1 K.B. 809) affirmed. It is the charterers' duty to present for the master's signature such a bill of lading as is not inconsistent with and not to the prejudice of the charterparty. Kruger v. Moel Tryvan Ship Co., 76 L. J. K.B. 985; [1907] A.C. 272; 97 L. T. 143; 13 Com. Cas. 1; 23 T. L. R. 677—H.L. (E.)

R. 821.—In the particular trade (the Burma rice trade) acceptance of an "address commission" did not constitute the defendants agents to the plaintiffs so as to impose on them the duty to exercise care in the presentation of bills of lading to the plaintiffs' master. Id.

Non-liability for "Sweating" or "Heat."—The plaintiffs were indorsees of bills of lading under which bags of maize were shipped on board the defendants' ship to be delivered subject to the exceptions, "That the . . . owners . . . of the vessel . . . shall not be responsible for . . . damage . . . arising from sweating . . . explosion, heat, fire at sea or on shore." The plaintiffs claimed for damage to the maize by general heating and by contact of the bags with the ironwork of the ship:—Held, that the defendants were liable, as, "sweating" meant moisture which evaporated and then condensed in the hold and dropped on to the bags of maize, and did not include the general heating of the maize, though accompanied by moisture, or the wet which had come to the bags from contact with the iron of the ship; and "heat," having regard to its position between "explosion" and "fire at sea or on shore," referred to some extraneous source of heat, and not to heating of the maize from moisture coming against it or its own moisture causing it to develop heat. The Pearlmoor, 73 L. "Restraint of princes"—Importation of Goods—Alleged Prohibition by Law—Partial Performance of Contract of Carriage—Premature Refusal by Shipowner to Complete Voyage.—Rice was shipped at Rangoon on board the defendants' steamship for carriage to Galatz under bills of lading which contained the exception "restraint of princes." On June 18, the ship being then at Beyrout, the defendants were informed by a Government official at Galatz that the importation of rice from Rangoon into Roumania was prohibited by the law of that country, and that if the ship came to Galatz the discharge of the rice would not be permitted. The law of Roumania did not, in fact, prohibit the importation of rice. On June 23, by the orders of the defendants and contrary to the expressed wish of the plaintiffs, the indorsees of the bills of lading, the ship proceeded to London, where the rice was discharged and sold at a loss:—Held, that the defendants were not justified in treating the contract as being, on June 23, impossible of performance, and were liable in damages for the non-delivery of the rice at Galatz. Brunner v. Webster, 5 Com. Cas. 167—Kennedy, J.

Seaworthiness—Ship Fit to Carry Cargo—Bad Stowage—Defect in Refrigerating Machinery.

—Fruit was shipped under a bill of lading which excepted (inter alia) loss or damage from decay resulting from bad stowage, insufficiency of ventilation or temperature of holds, whether occasioned by any act or omission, negligence, or error in judgment of the master, officers, engineers, crew, stevedores, or other persons in the service of the shipowners, and whether before or after the commencement of or during the voyage, or from defects, latent or otherwise, in hull, tackle, machinery, refrigerating or otherwise (whether or not existing at the time of the goods being loaded or at the commencement of the voyage), or from failure or breakdown of machinery, insulation, or other appliances, refrigerating or otherwise, or from any other cause whatsoever, whether arising from a defect existing at the commencement of the voyage or at the time of shipment of the goods or not, nor for the consequences of any act, neglect, default, or error of judgment of the master, officers, refrigerating engineers, crew, or other persons in the service of the owners, nor from any other cause whatsoever. On the voyage the fruit was damaged owing to the cases having been stowed by persons, for whose acts the shipowners were responsible, too close to the top of the hold, which made it impossible for the refrigerating machinery to ventilate the hold and to keep it at the proper temperature:—Held, that the damage was caused by bad stowage within the exceptions, and that therefore the shipowners were not liable. Bond, Defects "latent on beginning voyage or otherwise"—Patent Defect.]—A clause in a bill of lading excepting the shipowner from liability for "defects latent on beginning voyage or otherwise" does not except him from liability for a defect patent at the beginning of the voyage. Waikato (Cargo ex) v. New Zealand Shipping Co., 68 L. J. Q.B. 1; [1899] 1 Q.B. 56; 79 L. T. 326; 8 Asp. M.C. 442—G.A., affirming Bigham, J. See next case.

Exceptions in a bill of lading purported to relieve shipowners from liability for loss or damage to cargo arising from defects in the ship "latent on beginning of voyage or otherwise." The ship's holds had been insulated for the carriage of frozen meat. A cargo of wool was stowed in these holds, and, owing to the want of proper ventilation, became heated and was damaged:—Held, that "latent on beginning of voyage or otherwise" did not cover a defect in ventilation patent to the shipowners themselves, nor relieve them from liability for damage to cargo. Waikato (Cargo ex) v. New Zealand Shipping Co., 67 L. J. Q.B. 514; [1898] 1 Q.B. 645; 78 L. T. 197; 8 Asp. M.C. 351.

Ship not Fit to Carry Cargo owing to Shipowner's Negligence—Exemption of Shipowner from Liability for Loss Arising from Breakdown of Machinery, Insulation, or other Appliances, "or from any other cause whatsoever."—A cargo of meat was shipped under several bills of lading, each being headed "Refrigerator Bill of Lading," and each containing two clauses. The first, printed in large type, exempted the shipowners from liability "for any loss or damage (to the goods) whether arising from failure or breakdown of machinery, insulation or other appliances, refrigerating or otherwise, or from any other cause whatsoever whether arising from a defect existing at the commencement of the voyage, or at the time of shipment of the goods or not," and "for the consequences of any act, neglect, default, or error of judgment of the master, officers, engineers, crew, or other persons in the service of the owners or charterers," or "from any cause whatsoever." The other clause, which was printed in small type, contained numerous exceptions exempting the shipowners from liability for defects "if reasonable means have been taken to provide against such defects or unseaworthiness." During the voyage the meat was damaged in consequence of the tainted condition of the ship at the commencement of the voyage, arising from the use of carbolic acid, which would not have occurred if proper skill and care had been used by the shipowners before the ship started on her voyage: Held, that the shipowners were liable, as the instrument had to be construed as a whole, and that effect must be given to the qualifications in the second clause of the general immunity conferred by the first. Elderslie Steamship Co. v. Borthwick (No. 1), 74 L. J. K.B. 334; [1905] A.C. 93; 92 L. T. 274; 53 W. L. 401; 10 Com. Cas. 109; 10 A. P. M.C. 24; 21 T. L. R. 277—H.L. (E.).

Absolute and Qualified Exceptions—Clauses Printed in Different Types.—Meat was shipped under several bills of lading all in the same form, each being headed "Refrigerator Bill of Lading." The bills of lading respectively contained two clauses, of which the first was printed in Roman type and contained exceptions of the widest possible kind in perfectly clear language, including damage arising from a defect existing at the commencement of the voyage. The second clause was printed in small italics and contained exceptions, many of which were not very applicable to the carriage of a cargo of meat, and the clause expressly provided that the exceptions were only to apply "if reasonable means have been taken to provide against such defects and unseaworthiness." During the voyage damage arose to the meat in consequence of the tainted condition of the ship at the commencement of the voyage, caused by the improper use of carbolic acid by the shipowners:—Held, that the shipowners were exempted from liability for the damage to the meat, upon the ground that, although not much importance was to be attached to the fact that the two clauses were in different types, the clause in the larger type was inserted for the purpose of giving a wider scope to the clause in the smaller type, and was therefore the governing clause. Borthwick v. Elderslie Steamship Co., 8 Com. Cas. 150—Walton, J.

Excepted Port—Port of Manchester—Meaning—Immaterial Addition.]—A contract for the sale of a cargo of wheat per Vauduara provided that the vessel should discharge at any safe port in the United Kingdom. The vessel was chartered by the sellers to discharge at any safe port in the United Kingdom (Manchester excepted), and the bill of lading was in the same terms. By the Manchester Ship Canal Act, 1885, and by the Customs regulations, the port of Manchester included the whole of the ship canal, but in the ordinary commercial meaning it included only Manchester and the waters adjacent thereto. In the wider meaning Manchester was, but in the more limited meaning was not, a safe port for the Vauduara:—Held, that Manchester, within the meaning of the charterparty and bill of lading, was not a safe port for the Vauduara, and that therefore the addition of the words "Manchester excepted" was not a material alteration of the contract of sale so as to release the buyers. Goodbody and Balfour, Williamson & Co., In re, 82 L. T. 484; 9 Asp. M.C. 69; 5 Com. Cas. 59—G.A.

Alteration of Destination—"Bound for London"—Condition—Liberty to Call at any Ports whatsoever, to Tranship to any other Steamer, to Forward to Port of Destination by any Steamer either of Owners or any other Line—Goods Damaged by Excepted Perils.]—Under a bill of lading goods were shipped on board a steamship "bound, subject to the liberties hereinafter mentioned, for London . . . with liberty to proceed to or call in any order for any purpose at any port or ports whatsoever, although in a contrary direction to or out of or beyond the ordinary route . . . with liberty either before shipment or at any period of the voyage, and so often as may be deemed expedient, at any port or place, to ship the whole or any part by any other steamship (whether belonging to the company or not), or tranship or land and store . . . and thence re-ship on the said steamship or any other steamship (whether belonging to the company or not) to be carried and delivered (subject to certain exceptions, limitations, and conditions) at the port of London." Among the excepted perils set out in the bill of lading was the following clause numbered 16: "Should the ship for any cause whatever not call at the port for which goods have been shipped, the owners or agents of the ship are at liberty to forward the goods from any port at which they may call to their port of destination by any steamer or steamers, either of their own or any other line. Should the goods for any cause be forwarded by a steamer of any other line, shippers and consignees are to be bound by all clauses and conditions of the usual bill of lading of such steamer." During the voyage the destination of the vessel on which the goods were shipped was changed from London to Cardiff, where the goods were transhipped into a small steamer, and by it the goods were carried to London. In an action by the consignees claiming damages on the ground that by abandoning the voyage to London the shipowners lost the protection of all exceptions in their favour in the bill of lading,—Held, that the exceptions were wide enough to cover the total abandonment of the final destination to London, and were reasonable and did not defeat the object of the bill of lading contract to carry the goods to London. Held, also, that the words "other line" in clause 16 of the bill of lading meant merely another steamer, and did not therefore compel the shipowners to tranship the goods into a "liner" as distinguished from a small trading steamer. Hadj Ali Akbar v. Anglo-Arabian Steamship Co., 95 L. T. 610; 11 Com. Cas. 219; 10 Asp. M.C. 307; 22 T. L. R. 600—Bigham, J.

"Faults or errors in management of vessel"—Refrigerating Apparatus—Negligent User—Harter Act Incorporated.—The defendants were owners of a vessel intended for the carriage of butter and other perishable goods, and fitted with refrigerating apparatus necessary for the safe carriage of such goods, and also used for the ship's provisions. Butter was shipped upon the defendants' vessel for carriage under bills of lading incorporating section 3 of the Harter Act, which exempts a shipowner who exercises due diligence in the equipment of his vessel from responsibility for "damage or loss resulting from faults or errors . . . in the management of the said vessel." The butter was damaged on the voyage through negligent user of the refrigerating apparatus by some of the crew:—Held, that the refrigerating apparatus was part of the vessel, and that negligence in its management was a "fault or error in the management of the vessel," and that, therefore, the defendants were relieved from liability by section 3 of the Harter Act. Rowson v. Atlantic Transport Co., 72 L. J. K.B. 811; [1903] 2 K.B. 666; 89 L. T. 204; 52 W. R. 85; 9 Com. Cas. 33; 9 Asp. M.C. 458—C.A.

"Neglect or default of master"—Part Owner Acting as Master.—Goods were shipped under a bill of lading which provided that the shipowners were not to be liable for damage caused by the neglect or default of the master. The master was also part owner of the vessel. The goods were lost by the master's negligence. In an action against the shipowners under the bill of lading,—Held, that the fact that one of the owners was also master and that the loss was caused by his personal negligence did not disentitle him to avail himself of the exception in the bill of lading. Westport Coal Co. v. McPhail, 67 L. J. Q.B. 674; [1898] 2 Q.B. 130; 78 L. T. 490; 46 W. R. 566; 8 Asp. M.C. 378—C.A.

"Strikes, lock-outs, accidents to railway"—"Other causes beyond charterer's control."—By charterparty it was agreed that the ship should load from charterers' agents a cargo of petroleum in cases, lay days for loading to commence twenty-four hours after the receipt by the charterers' agents of written notice of steamer's readiness in berth to receive, strikes, lock-outs, accidents to railway, . . . or other causes beyond charterers' control, excepted. The railway which brought the oil in tanks to the port of loading being partially destroyed by floods, the charterers' agents dismissed the men employed at their factory in packing the oil in cases. On the re-opening of the railway sufficient supplies of oil were received at the factory, but owing to the absence of men the production of filled cases was delayed. The charterers' agents, also, in accordance with the practice of shippers at the port, deferred the loading of the ship until they had loaded other ships which had arrived previously, and been delayed in loading by the same causes. The lay days having been exceeded,—Held, that the lay days commenced to run as soon as sufficient oil had arrived to enable the work of filling cases to be resumed; that the failure to load the ship within the lay days was not owing to "strikes, lock-outs, accidents to railway, . . . or other causes beyond the charterers' control" within the meaning of the charterparty; and that the shipowners were entitled to damages for detention. In re Richardson and Samuel & Co., 66 L. J. Q.B. 868; [1898] 1 Q.B. 261—C.A.

Demurrage—Exception of Fire—Exception Enuring for Benefit of Charterer.—A charterparty provided that a certain number of days should be allowed for loading and discharging the cargo, after which demurrage was to be paid at a specified rate per running day. The charterparty also contained an exception clause excepting, amongst other things, fire. While the vessel was discharging, a fire broke out in the cargo, and it became necessary to remove her for a time from her discharging berth. There was a necessary delay of seven days in consequence of the fire:—Held, that the exception of fire applied to the obligation of the charterers to discharge, and that they were excused from demurrage in respect of the seven days' delay caused by the fire. In re Newman and Dale Steamship Co. and British and South American Steamship Co., 72 L. J. K.B. 110; [1903] 1 K.B. 262—Bigham, J.

"All other conditions as per charterparty including negligence clause"—Meaning of "Negligence clause."—The plaintiffs' goods, while being carried in winter across the Atlantic in the defendants' ship, were damaged owing to a crack in one of the deck plates. The bills of lading for the goods excepted the usual perils, including accidents of the seas, and provided "all other conditions as per charterparty, including negligence clause." The charterparty contained in clause 11 the two following sentences printed together as one set of words: "The steamer is in no way liable for the consequences of the act of God, perils of the seas . . . strandings or other accidents or errors of navigation, even when occasioned by negligence, default or error in judgment of the pilot, master, mariners or other servants of the shipowners. Neither is the steamer answerable for losses occasioned by . . . unseaworthiness . . . whether existing or not before or after the commencement of the voyage. . . ." The County Court Judge found that on the evidence the vessel had not met with exceptional weather during the voyage, and therefore that the crack in the plate was due to unseaworthiness, though without any fault on the part of the defendants; and decided that the term "negligence clause" in the bill of lading incorporated only the first sentence of clause 11 of the charterparty containing the word "negligence," and not the second sentence as regards "unseaworthiness"; and gave judgment for the plaintiffs:—Held (allowing the appeal)—first, that on the evidence the vessel had met with exceptionally severe weather during the voyage, and that the crack in the plate was caused thereby and was due to perils of the seas for which the defendants were not responsible; and secondly, that even if the damage had been due to unseaworthiness, the defendants were not liable, because the term "negligence clause" in the bill of lading incorporated the whole set of words in clause 11 of the charterparty, including the sentence regarding "unseaworthiness." The Northumbria, 75 L. J. P. 101; [1906] P. 292; 95 L. T. 618; 10 Asp. M.C. 814—D.

Default of Stevedores in Loading, Stowing, or Discharging—Damage at Port of Discharge by Shipowners' Stevedores—Effect of Deviation.—Shipowners who, by the bill of lading, are exempted from liability for loss arising from the default of their stevedores in the loading, stowing, or discharging of the ship, lose the benefit of that exemption where the ship has deviated, even although the damage in respect of which the action is brought has occurred by the default of the shipowners' stevedores entirely at the port of discharge. Balian v. Joly, Victoria & Co. (6 T. L. R. 345) applied. Thorley v. Orchis Steamship Co., 76 L. J. K.B. 595; [1907] 1 K.B. 660; 96 L. T. 488; 12 Com. Cas. 251; 23 T. L. R. 338; 10 Asp. M.C. 431—C.A.

Carriage of Dog—Damage arising from Negligence—"Providing, despatching, and navigating the vessel or otherwise."—A dog was shipped under a bill of lading which excepted the shipowner from liability for loss or damage arising from any act, neglect, or default of the master, officers, crew, or any servant of the shipowner "in providing, despatching, and navigating the vessel or otherwise." The dog was lost on the voyage owing to the negligence of the shipowner's servants in letting it loose:—Held, that the words "or otherwise" protected the shipowner from liability. Packwood v. Union-Castle Mail Steamship Co., 20 T. L. R. 59—Walton, J.

(e) Warranty of Seaworthiness.

What is—Unfitness of Ship to Receive Cargo—Implied Warranty of Shipowner.—A bill of lading contained, amongst other exceptions, "loss or damage resulting from . . . the consequence of any . . . injury to or defect in hull, tackle, boilers, or machinery, or their appurtenances . . . notwithstanding that the same may have existed at or at any time before the loading or sailing of the vessel . . . and whether any of the perils, causes or things above mentioned, or the loss or injury arising therefrom be occasioned by . . . unseaworthiness of the ship at the beginning or at any period of the voyage, provided all reasonable means have been taken to provide against such unseaworthiness." A cargo of sheepskins shipped under this bill of lading was damaged while on board by fresh water from a pipe used for the supply of water to a tank for domestic purposes, which was broken when the cargo was put on board. It was admitted that the ship was not fit to receive the cargo when it was put on board, and that reasonable means had not been taken to provide against such unfitness:—Held, that the warranty on the part of a shipowner implied at common law to provide a ship reasonably fit to carry the cargo which he undertakes to carry was not excluded by the exceptions in the bill of lading, whether that warranty was included in the warranty of seaworthiness or was a separate warranty; and the shipowners were liable for the damage to the cargo. Held also, though not absolutely decided, that "unseaworthiness" in the bill of lading included not only the fitness of the ship as a ship to meet the perils of the sea, but also its fitness to carry the cargo which the shipowners know would have to be carried. Rathbone v. McIver, 72 L. J. K.B. 703; [1903] 2 K.B. 378; 89 L. T. 378; 52 W. R. 63; 8 Com. Cas. 303; 9 Asp. M.C. 467—C.A.

Per ROMER, L.J.—In the absence of anything to limit it, the warranty of "seaworthiness" in a bill of lading would include fitness of the ship and her equipment to safely carry the cargo contracted to be carried. Id.

Fitness of Ship to Receive Cargo—Period of Loading.—At the time of loading there is an absolute warranty by the shipowner, who has agreed to take a particular cargo, that his ship is fit to receive the cargo, but this warranty is not a continuing warranty, and defaults occurring after the period of loading are not breaches of this warranty. McFadden v. Blue Star Line, 74 L. J. K.B. 423; [1905] 1 K.B. 697; 93 L. T. 52; 53 W. R. 576; 10 Com. Cas. 123; 10 Asp. M.C. 55; 21 T. L. R. 345—Channell, J.

Breach—Exemptions—Perils of the Sea—Navigation—Management—Harter Act.—After loading a cargo, and before sailing, the servants of a shipowner, in order to drain the ship's bilges, opened a sluice door in a water-tight bulkhead separating the bilges from the stoke hold. Having drained the bilges, they negligently omitted to close the sluice door completely. They then opened the sea-cock to fill a ballast tank. Having filled the tank, they failed (but without negligence) to close the sea-cock completely. Owing to the pressure of water a joint in the tube communicating with the ballast tank, having been insufficiently packed before the loading was commenced, gave way, and water flowed into the stoke hold, from thence into the bilges, and then into a cargo hold, where it damaged the plaintiff's cargo. The bills of lading under which the cargo had been shipped purported to exempt the shipowners from liability for damage through perils of the sea or accidents of navigation, even when occasioned by the negligence of their servants; they also incorporated an Act of the Fifty-second Congress of the United States, sess. 2, c. 105, known as the Harter Act. "By that Act every clause in a bill of lading relieving shipowners from liability for damage from negligence in the proper custody or care of lawful merchandise committed to their charge shall be null and void; but if a shipowner exercises due diligence to make his vessel seaworthy he is not responsible for damage resulting from faults or errors in the navigation or management of the vessel:—Held, first, that the insufficient packing of the joint in the tube communicating with the ballast tank was a breach of the warranty of seaworthiness, as that defect existed before the loading was commenced; secondly, that the failure to close the sluice door in the bulkhead was not a breach of this warranty, as the door had not been opened until after the cargo had been loaded; thirdly, that neither the bills of lading nor the Harter Act affected the shipowners' liability for breach of the warranty. Ib.

Semble, that the damage was due to an error in the management of the vessel, and that the owners would have been protected if the vessel had been seaworthy. Semble, also, that if a bill of lading incorporating the Harter Act contains any terms inconsistent with that Act, those terms are to be considered null and void. Ib.

Cargo of Bullion—Bullion Room.—Under a bill of lading for the carriage of bullion, which is to be stowed in a bullion room upon the carrying ship, the shipowner impliedly warrants that the bullion room is so constructed as to be reasonably fit to resist thieves. Queensland and National Bank v. Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Co., 67 L. J. Q.B. 402; [1898] 1 Q.B. 567; 78 L. T. 67; 46 W. R. 324; 8 Asp. M.C. 338—C.A.

Ship not Fit to properly Carry Cargo owing to Shipowners' Negligence—Exemption of Shipowner from Liability for Loss arising from Breakdown of Machinery, Insulation or other Appliances, "or from any other cause whatsoever."—A cargo of meat was shipped under several bills of lading, each being headed "Refrigerator Bill of Lading," and each containing two clauses. The first, printed in large type, exempted the shipowners from liability "for any loss or damage [to the goods] whether arising from failure or breakdown of machinery, insulation or other appliances, refrigerating or otherwise, or from any other cause whatsoever, whether arising from a defect existing at the commencement of the voyage or at the time of shipment of the goods or not . . ." and "for the consequences of any act, neglect, default, or error of judgment of the master, officers, engineers, refrigerating engineers, crew, or other persons in the service of the owners or charterers," or "from any other cause whatsoever." The other clause, which was printed in small type, contained numerous exceptions exempting the shipowners from liability for defects, "if reasonable means have been taken to provide against such defects and unseaworthiness." During the voyage the meat was damaged in consequence of the tainted condition of the ship at the commencement of the voyage in consequence of the use of carbolic acid, which would not have occurred if proper skill and care had been used by the shipowners before the ship started on her voyage:—Held, that the defendants were liable, as the large-type clause must be read as protecting them only from loss or damage arising from failure or breakdown of machinery, insulation or other appliances, refrigerating or otherwise, or from any other similar cause and not as a general exception protecting them from unseaworthiness. Borthwick v. Elderslie Steamship Co., 73 L. J. K.B. 240; [1904] 1 K.B. 319; 90 L. T. 187; 52 W. R. 439; 9 Com. Cas. 126; 9 Asp. M.C. 513; 20 T. L. R. 184—C.A.

Bad Stowage—Defect in Refrigerating Machinery.—Fruit was shipped under a bill of lading which excepted (inter alia) loss or damage from decay resulting from bad stowage, insufficiency of ventilation or temperature of holds, whether occasioned by the negligence or error in judgment of the master, officers, engineers, crew, or other persons in the service of the shipowners, and whether before or after the commencement of or during the voyage, or from defects, latent or otherwise, in hull, tackle, machinery, refrigerating or otherwise (whether or not existing at the time of the goods being loaded or at the commencement of the voyage), or from failure or breakdown of machinery, insulation, or other appliances, refrigerating or otherwise, or from any other cause whatsoever, whether arising from a defect existing at the commencement of the voyage or at the time of shipment of the goods or not, nor for the consequences of any act, neglect, default, or error of judgment of the master, officers, refrigerating engineers, crew, or other persons in the service of the owners, nor from any other cause whatsoever. On the voyage the fruit was damaged owing to the cases having been stowed by persons, for whose acts the shipowners were responsible, too close to the top of the hold, which made it impossible for the refrigerating machinery to ventilate the hold and to keep it at the proper temperature:—Held, that the damage was caused by bad stowage within the exceptions, owing either to an error of judgment or to an act of negligence, and that therefore the shipowners were not liable. Bond, Connolly & Co. v. Federal Steam Navigation Co., 21 T. L. R. 438—Channell, J.

(f) Delivery and Discharge.

Delivery to be "at any safe port (Manchester excepted)"—"Port of Manchester."—By section 3 of the Manchester Ship Canal Act, 1885, the port of Manchester is defined to include the whole of the Manchester Ship Canal above Eastham Locks, and the former port of Runcorn is abolished. Nevertheless, on its being proved that in commercial matters it was customary for the words "Port of Manchester" to be used as referring only to Manchester and the waters adjacent thereto, and to treat Runcorn Lay-bye, which is on the Manchester Ship Canal, but about twenty-four miles from Manchester, as a separate port,—Held, that in interpreting shipping documents these words were to be read in that sense, and not in their legal significance. B., W. & Co. sold a cargo of grain by the ship V. to G. & Co., delivery to be given "at any safe port in the United Kingdom." When the bills of lading arrived it was found that by them—as by the charterparty—delivery was to be given "at any safe port in the United Kingdom (Manchester excepted)." G. & Co. notified B., W. & Co., that they would not accept the documents with this variance. B., W. & Co. then, by arrangement with the owner of the V., had the words "Manchester excepted" erased. At the proper time the documents were presented to G. & Co. so altered, when they refused to accept them, on the ground that they had been altered without their consent or the consent of the master of the V. On the dispute being referred to arbitration, the arbitrators found that for a vessel of the V.'s tonnage the Manchester Ship Canal above bridges was not a safe port; that Runcorn Lay-bye, the last dock below bridges, was a safe port; that under a charterparty to proceed to a safe port (Manchester excepted) the ship could be compelled to go to Runcorn Lay-bye, and that, though the port of Manchester was defined by section 3 of the Manchester Ship Canal Act, 1885, as including the whole ship canal and the port of Runcorn was abolished as a separate port, yet the weight of evidence was that in commercial matters "Port of Manchester" was used as meaning Manchester itself and the waters adjacent thereto, and Runcorn Lay-bye was treated as a separate port:—Held, on these findings, "Manchester excepted" here meant Manchester and the adjacent waters only excepted; that, so read, Manchester was not a safe port for the V., and that accordingly its insertion in the bills of lading was an immaterial variation in the contract of sale, and its erasure was also immaterial; and that therefore G. & Co. were bound to accept the documents. Goodbody and Balfour, Williamson & Co., In re, 80 L. T. 188; 8 Asp. M.C. 503—D.

Port of Belfast—Custom of Port—"Whipping" or "Hoisting."—The plaintiffs' steamship Aboukir, loaded with Bombay wheat in bags, arrived at Belfast on Thursday, December 28. The defendant was the indorsee of the bill of lading, which contained a provision that if the consignee did not take delivery as soon as the ship was ready to discharge the goods should be landed and warehoused at expense of their owner. The discharge of this cargo commenced on Friday, December 29. For four days, up to Tuesday night, the cargo was discharged by whipping—a process by which one bag at a time is hoisted from the hold by the ship's tackle to a point above a weighing machine, placed at the height of a man's shoulder on an elevated staging on the deck near the hatch. It is then, when weighed, taken by the merchant's stevedore. The plaintiffs having complained to their agent of the slowness of the discharge, and insisting that the cargo should be hurried out at top speed, the plaintiffs' agent informed the defendant's stevedore that he would discharge the rest of the cargo by hoisting—a process by which five bags at a time are raised from the vessel's hold and placed on deck, from which they are trucked to the weighbridge, which is only a few inches above the deck. The defendant refused to take delivery by hoisting, or to accept delivery from the ship's rail of bags so hoisted, and the remainder of the cargo was discharged by the plaintiffs' men into a warehouse. An action having been brought by the plaintiffs to recover the cost of landing and warehousing this part of the cargo, the defendant relied upon (inter alia) a custom of the port of Belfast that cargoes of Bombay wheat in bags should be discharged by whipping:—Held, that the alleged custom of whipping, even if there was sufficient evidence to prove it, was unreasonable, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover as damages the cost of landing and warehousing the portion of the cargo in question. Clydesdale Shipowners' Co. v. Gallaher, [1907] 2 Ir. R. 578—C.A.

Discharge at Customary Place in Port—Ship Carrying Explosives—Place Appointed by Port for Discharge of Ship Carrying Explosives—Expense of Lighterage.—By a charterparty a ship was to load a cargo, including explosives and machinery, and proceed to certain ports, among others Buenos Ayres (including Boca), and there deliver the cargo in regular turn at the customary discharging places named by the charterers' agents into lighters or alongside the wharf according to the custom of the port; the owners authorised the charterers to sign bills of lading for the cargo as usual, and agreed to abide by all the conditions thereof, and the cargo was to be brought to and taken from alongside at the charterers' risk and expense. By the bill of lading the cargo was to be discharged at the consignees' wharf at Boca, provided the same was available, otherwise lighters were to be provided by the consignees. At Boca a ship carrying explosives was only allowed to discharge at a certain wharf, and the ship therefore could not go to the consignees' wharf (which was available), and the consignees' goods had to be lightered there. In an action by the shipowner against the charterers to recover the expense of lightering,—Held, that the shipowner was entitled to recover, either upon the ground that the charterers, when they signed the bill of lading, knew that the explosives were on board and that they could not perform the contract without breaking the port regulations, and were therefore imposing a liability on the shipowner which did not come within the above clause in the charterparty authorising the charterers to sign bills of lading; or upon the ground that the charterers had only the right to direct the ship to go to such discharging places as were customary, and that the customary place at Boca for discharging a ship with explosives was the wharf appointed by the port regulations. Hull Steam Shipping Co. v. Transport and Holt, 23 T. L. R. 445—Channell, J.

Delay in Delivery—Measure of Damages—Loading Enemies' Goods—Breach of Duty—Negligence.—The plaintiffs shipped on board the defendants' vessel goods intended to arrive at Algoa Bay in December, 1899, and to be sold to the British Government as supplies for British troops at war with the Transvaal. The bills of lading exempted the defendants from loss through restraint of princes. The defendants, without the plaintiffs' knowledge, loaded goods consigned to the Transvaal Government or to residents in the Transvaal, which led to the vessel being arrested in Algoa Bay and detained with her cargo until March, 1900, when the market value of the plaintiffs' goods in South Africa was lower than in the preceding December:—Held, that the defendants were liable for breach of duty towards the plaintiffs. Held, also, that the measure of damages was the difference between the market value of the plaintiffs' goods at the port of discharge in December, 1899, the date of due delivery, and their market value at that port in March, 1900, the date of actual delivery. The Parana (2 P. D. 118) discussed. Dunn v. Donald Currie & Co. or Bucknall, 71 L. J. K.B. 963; [1902] 2 K.B. 614; 87 L. T. 497; 51 W. R. 100; 8 Com. Cas. 33; 9 Asp. M.C. 336—C.A.

Liberty to Over-carry Goods if Discharge cannot be Effected without Undue Detention—Discharge prevented by Delay at Previous Port—Delay caused by Negligence of Shipowner's Agent—Remoteness of Damage—Liability of Shipowner.—A bill of lading contained the following clause: "If in the opinion of the master discharge cannot be effected without undue detention, the steamer shall have liberty to over-carry the cargo to London at merchant's risk, and deliver there to consignees or their assigns." The ship was delayed at a port of call in the course of her voyage by the negligence of the shipowner's agents, with the result that, on her arrival at the port where the goods were to be discharged, the master found that the discharge could not be effected without undue detention, and he therefore over-carried the goods to London. In an action by the consignee to recover damages for the over-carriage of the goods,—Held, that the damage was not so remote from the negligence of the shipowner's agents as to disentitle the consignee from succeeding in the action. Searle v. Lund, 90 L. T. 529; 9 Asp. M.C. 557; 20 T. L. R. 390—C.A.

(g) Conversion of Goods.

Property Passing—Measure of Damages.—H. was a shipowner, and L. loaded a quantity of barley on his ship and received bills of lading. The ship was unable to load the whole of the barley, and L. agreed to indemnify the holder of the bills of lading. One bill of lading came into the hands of B., who handed it to M., and M. advanced 5,057*l.* 16*s.* 4*d.* upon it. M. received less than the quantity of barley covered by his bill of lading, as the holders of the other bills took delivery first from the agents of H., and he called upon B. to make good the deficiency, which he did by making certain payments and delivering some barley. M. sold the barley, and rendered B. an account shewing a balance remaining due on the transaction from B. of 12*l.* 1*s.* 9*d.* Afterwards B. failed, owing M. some 1,651*l.*:—Held, that, as between M. and H., M. had the full property in the barley covered by his bill of lading, and that H. had been guilty of a conversion, but that M. could only recover 12*l.* 1*s.* 9*d.* as damages. Montgomery v. Hutchins, 94 L. T. 207; 10 Asp. M.C. 223—Bray, J.

(h) Indorsement.

Goods in Store—Store Warrants.—A flour merchant having borrowed money from A and B handed to them as security therefor bills of lading for a certain number of sacks of flour of a certain brand which had been shipped to him from America. The bills of lading were blank, indorsed by the consignee named therein. In A's case the bills of lading were handed over to him while the sacks of flour were still on board ship, but they were afterwards landed and stored in ship's name in a neutral store where there was a large quantity of sacks of flour of the same brand belonging to the flour merchant, with which they were mixed so as to be indistinguishable therefrom. In B's case the bill of lading was handed over to him after the sacks of flour had been placed in the store in ship's name, and had become mixed with other sacks of flour belonging to the merchant. One of the lenders also received as additional security store warrants signed by the storekeeper, but addressed to no one, stating that he had received a certain number of sacks which were only deliverable on production of these warrants. The flour merchant became bankrupt and the trustee claimed the whole of the flour in store. At the date of the bankruptcy the bankrupt was still indebted to the lenders in sums exceeding the value of the goods mentioned in the bills of lading and store warrants:—Held, that a good security in favour of the lenders was constituted by the transfer of the indorsed bills of lading, and that they were entitled to delivery from the store of the number of sacks of flour covered by the bills. Held, further, that the store warrants alone did not confer on the lenders a right preferable to that of the trustee in bankruptcy. Hayman v. M'Lintock, [1907] S.C. 936—Ct. of Sess.

(i) Consignee.

Duty of Consignee—"Continuously."—A bill of lading provided that the goods were to be received by the consignee "immediately the vessel is ready to discharge and continuously at all such hours as the Custom House authorities may give permission for this ship to work, any custom of the port to the contrary notwithstanding":—Held, that immediately the ship was ready to discharge there was an absolute obligation on the consignee to receive the cargo continuously, even though the appliances of the port were not then available. Maclay v. Spillers, 6 Com. Cas. 217—C.A.

Goods to be Received by the Consignees "immediately after arrival of steamer"—Delay in Making Report at Custom House—Obligation of Consignees to Receive Goods before Report.—Goods were shipped from Messina to London under bills of lading which provided that they should "be received by the consignees . . . immediately after the arrival of steamer, or the same will be warehoused by the agent of the ship at the expense and risk of the owner of the goods." The ship arrived, and before she was reported at the Custom House in accordance with the Customs Consolidation Act, 1876, the goods, the consignees not being present to receive the same, were landed and warehoused.

The practice in the Port of London is that when a Custom-house officer is present upon the quay the permission of the Customs authorities to discharge the cargo before report is assumed by the master, unless such permission is actually refused or the discharge forbidden. The consignees subsequently paid the warehouse charges under protest, and claimed to recover them from the shipowner:—Held, that, inasmuch as the possibility that the goods would be permitted to be landed before the ship was reported must be taken to have been within the contemplation of the parties at the time the contracts were made, there was an obligation upon the consignees under the bill of lading to be ready to receive the goods before the ship was reported, and that, therefore, they were not entitled to recover the amount of the warehouse charges. Major v. Grant, 7 Com. Cas. 231—Kennedy, J.

"Goods to be taken by consignees as fast as steamer can deliver or the same will be warehoused"—Right of Action for Detention.—A bill of lading given by the charterers of a ship provided: "The goods to be taken from the ship by the consignees . . . immediately after arrival, and as fast as steamer can deliver, or the same will be transhipped into lighters or landed or warehoused at the expense and risk of the proprietors of such goods." In an action by the charterers against the consignees for detention of the ship during the discharge,—Held, that the consignees were liable, because the terms of the bill of lading empowering the charterers to tranship, land, or warehouse the goods did not take away their ordinary right to bring an action for detention, if delivery of the goods was not taken by the consignees as fast as was provided by the bill of lading. The Arne, 73 L. J. P. 34; [1904] P. 154; 90 L. T. 517; 9 Asp. M.C. 565; 20 T. L. R. 221—D.

(j) Freight.

Payment of—Cost of Weighing—Custom—Wool Cargo—Liability of Consignee.—Wool was shipped in Australia for delivery in this country under bills of lading which provided that freight was "to be paid on delivery in cash, without deduction, on gross weight at Queen's beam." The shipowner alleged that by the custom of the trade the consignee had the option of having the goods weighed at his own expense, or of taking the goods without weighing at the bill of lading weight, plus 2 per cent.:—Held, that there was no such custom as alleged, and that, if there had been such a custom, it would have been bad in law as contradicting the express terms of the bill of lading. Gulf Line v. Laycock, 7 Com. Cas. 1—Kennedy, J.

Freight Payable "for every load of English cubic feet"—"All other conditions as per charterparty"—Provision in Charterparty that Freight Payable "for every intaken load of 50 English cubic feet"—Bill of Lading made Conclusive as to Quantity of Cargo Shipped—Incorporation of Conditions of Charterparty in Bill of Lading—Excess Cargo Delivered.—A bill of lading was signed in respect of 284,690 pieces of pitprops measuring 55,782·32 cubic feet to be delivered in right number of pieces, on payment of freight at 9s. 6d. "for every load of 50 English cubic feet and all other conditions as per charterparty." The bill of lading contained the following clause: "Responsible for number of pieces, but not for quality and measure." By the charterparty it was provided that the cargo was to be delivered at the rate of 9s. 6d. "for every intaken load of 50 English cubic feet," and that bills of lading were to be conclusive evidence against the owners as to the quantity of cargo shipped. At the port of discharge an excess number of pieces beyond that specified in the bill of lading was delivered:—Held, in a question between the consignees of the cargo and the shipowners, that the conditions in the charterparty as to freight being payable at 9s. 6d. on every intaken load was incorporated in the bill of lading, and therefore that freight was only payable on the number of pieces specified in the bill of lading. Oostzee Stoomvaart Maats v. Bell, 11 Com. Cas. 214; 22 T. L. R. 643—Bray, J.

Short Delivery.]—A merchant in Dundee, having bought a quantity of jute in Liverpool, contracted with shipowners for the conveyance of the goods from the store in Liverpool to Dundee at a certain rate per ton. The shipowners removed the goods from the store and shipped them on board their ships at Liverpool. No bills of lading were granted nor were any receipts given for the quantities received; but the goods were weighed as they were shipped, and a note kept of the gross weights. On arrival at Dundee the merchant, who was duly informed of the arrival, sent carts to receive the goods and convey them to a calender, but the unloading proceeded faster than the removal by the carts, and the goods were unloaded into sheds on the quay, and removed thence by the carts. No complete series of receipts was taken from the carters for the goods unshipped, nor was any tally kept as they were put over the ship's side. The goods as received at the calender were short of the quantities purchased at Liverpool. The shipowners sued the merchant for the balance of freight due, and the merchant claimed to set off the value of the missing goods:—Held, that the shipowners having established by evidence that all the goods received by them at Liverpool were put on board their ships, and that all the goods put on board their ships were put over the ships' side at Dundee, had discharged their onus of proving due fulfilment of their contract, and were entitled to payment of the freight claimed. Langlands v. M'Master, [1907] S.C. 1090—Ct. of Sess.

Lien for Freight—Right of Shipowner and Charterer Respectively to Collect—Lien on Bill of Lading Freight—Sums Due under Charterparty—Necessary Disbursements—Damages for Breach of Charterparty.]—The question whether shipowners are, when the bill of lading freight is paid to the master, entitled as against the charterer to collect and receive it is one of fact, depending upon the documents and circumstances in each case. The apparent conflict in the authorities arises mainly from the fact that the documents and circumstances are different in different cases. There are certain more or less typical cases. For instance, there is the case, very often referred to, but in practice rather uncommon, where the charterparty amounts to what is called a demise of the vessel. In such a case it is reasonably clear that the contract with the shippers under the bill of lading is between them and the charterers, and not between them and the owners. Again, there is another class of cases in which the charterers by the charterparty do no more than undertake that a full cargo shall be shipped, and guarantee payment of a certain freight. In such cases it is very often stipulated that upon shipment of a full cargo, and upon the charterers paying or securing payment in the manner agreed upon of the excess (if any) of chartered freight over and above the bill of lading freight, the charterer's liability under the charterparty is to cease. In such cases the contract of carriage under the bill of lading would ordinarily be between the owners and the shippers. But even in cases of this kind it is scarcely safe to lay down a hard-and-fast rule. The circumstances and terms of the documents may differ in different cases belonging to this class. And between the two types or classes there is a great variety of intermediate cases. Samuel v. West Hartlepool Steam Navigation Co., 11 Com. Cas. 115—Walton, J.

9. COLLISION.

Statute.—63 & 64 Vict. c. 32 is the Merchant Shipping (Liability of Shipowners and others) Act, 1900.

(a) Regulations for Preventing.

Sound Signals—Engines at Full Speed Astern—Regulations, 1897, art. 28.—A breach of an article of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, 1897, will not make the vessel committing the breach to blame for a collision when the guilty vessel was aware of all the circumstances, and the breach could not by any possibility have contributed to the collision. The Bellanoch, 76 L. J. P. 160; [1907] A.C. 269; 97 L. T. 315—H.L. (E.)

The steamship C. was leaving the port of Monte Video, her course lying southwards between the breakwaters and along a dredged channel half a mile in length, the end of which was marked by two buoys. At the same time the steamship B. was bound on an easterly voyage, her course lying almost at right-angles to that of the C., and about a quarter of a mile south of the buoys. From the time the C. reached the breakwaters the two vessels were in sight of one another. The B. was of such a draught that she was dragging through the mud, and during the time that the C. was passing down the dredged channel the engines of the B. were on two occasions going full speed astern for the purpose of freeing her and enabling her to continue on her voyage. A collision eventually took place between the vessels, and the C. was held to blame:—Held (by SIR GORELL BARNES (THE PRESIDENT) and by the COURT OF APPEAL; FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J., dissenting), that the B. on the occasions when her engines were going astern was not bound to give the corresponding sound signal under article 28, inasmuch as she was not on these occasions taking a course authorised or prescribed by the Rules, and therefore that she was not to blame for the collision by reason of her not having given these signals. Id.

Sound Signals for Vessels in Sight of One Another—“Authorised by these Rules.”—In article 28 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, the words “course authorised . . . by these rules” refer to any course which, by the rules of good seamanship, it is necessary and proper to take in order to manœuvre for another vessel, and are not limited to cases where a course is taken in the performance of a duty imposed by any specific regulation. The Uskmoor, 71 L. J. P. 103; [1902] P. 250; 87 L. T. 55; 51 W. R. 93; 9 Asp. M.C. 316—Jeune, P.

The words “any course authorised . . . by these rules” in article 28 of the Regulations for the Prevention of Collisions at Sea, which provides for certain sound signals being given by vessels in sight of one another, refer to any course which, by the rules of good seamanship, it is necessary and proper to take in order to manœuvre for another vessel, and are not limited to cases where a course is taken in the performance of a duty imposed by any specific regulation. Decision of SIR F. H. JEUNE in The Uskmoor (71 L. J. P. 103; [1902] P. 250) approved and adopted. The Anselm, 76 L. J. P. 54; [1907] P. 151; 97 L. T. 16; 23 T. L. R. 378—C.A. Reversing, 10 Asp. M.C. 257—Bargrave Deane, J.

Application of Sea Rules to River Amazon.—The Regulations for the Prevention of Collisions at Sea apply to collisions taking place between vessels in the River Amazon. Id.

Whistle Signals—Steamer Acting under a Starboard Helm—Course “authorised or required.”—A steamship which is directing her course in any particular direction by means of her helm for the purposes of her own voyage, and without reference to other vessels which may be in sight of her, is not taking a course “authorised or required” by the rules, and is not, therefore, bound under article 28 to indicate the course she is taking by means of her whistle. The Mourne, 70 L. J. P. 7; [1901] P. 68; 83 L. T. 748; 9 Asp. M.C. 155—Jeune, P.

Departure from Collision Regulations—Onus.—The s.s. Kyanite, finding herself in dangerous proximity to the Buccleruch, a ship under sail, whose lights were inadequate, and being unable to tell what the course of the sailing ship was, starboarded her helm in order to turn away from the sailing ship, and continued to go full speed ahead. This brought the Kyanite across the course of the Buccleruch, and two or three minutes after the Buccleruch was first sighted by the Kyanite a collision took place, the stem of the Buccleruch striking the Kyanite on the starboard side, nearly amidships. In cross-actions of damages, —Held—first, that, although the Kyanite did in fact depart from the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea by crossing the course of the Buccleruch, she, being wholly unaware of the course of the latter owing to her inadequate lights, was not chargeable with fault in respect of this departure from the Regulations; but secondly, that the Kyanite was in fault in respect that she had infringed article 23 of the Regulations by failing to stop and reverse in the short space of time after she sighted the sailing ship, and had failed to discharge the onus which lay on her of shewing that her failure to comply with this article of the Regulations was excusable by proving either that her departure from the Regulations was the only chance of escaping a collision, or that the risk of collision would have been increased by obeying the Regulations. Windram v. Robertson, 7 F. 665—Ct. of Sess.

Squadron of Warships—Sailing Vessel Passing through Fleet—King's Regulations and Admiralty Instructions, art. 597 (2) (6) (12)—Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, 1897, arts. 20, 21, 22, 27.]—A squadron of warships were steaming N.N.W. in two columns, each column consisting of four ships. Each ship was two cables distant from the ship next ahead of her measured from foremast to foremast. The wind was southerly. A sailing vessel was seen on the port bow approaching the port column of the squadron, and shewing her green light. The second and third ships in the port column ported in order to pass clear ahead of the sailing vessel, and as the third ship ported the fourth ship in the column—the Sutlej—starboarded in order to pass under the stern of the sailing vessel, which she would have done if the sailing vessel had kept her course. Just as the Sutlej began to answer her starboard helm, the sailing vessel suddenly came up into the wind and altered her course eight points, exposing her red light to the Sutlej. The latter thereupon put her helm hard a-port and reversed her starboard engine, but immediately afterwards she came into collision with the sailing vessel:—Held, that the Sutlej acted rightly in starboarding her helm, as she would thereby have passed clear of the sailing vessel if the latter had kept her course; that, having regard to the obligation under article 597 of the King's Regulations as to ships in a squadron keeping station as much as possible, she did not act wrongly in not starboarding sooner; and that therefore the Sutlej was not to blame for the collision. H.M.S. Sutlej, 21 T. L. R. 325—C.A.

Steam Vessel Lying-to—Crossing Rule—Duty of Steam Vessel when Lying-to to Keep Out of the Way.]—The L., a steam trawler, was lying-to heading to the N. with engines stopped, waiting for the tide, when she was ran into and damaged by the steamship B., which was proceeding on a course of W. $\frac{1}{2}$ S. magnetic. Those on the B. saw the masthead and green lights of the L. on their port bow, and kept their course and speed until just before the collision, when they slowed, stopped, and reversed their engines. Those on the L. did nothing:—Held, that article 19 of the Collision Regulations applied, and that the L. was alone to blame for the collision, as it was her duty to keep out of the way. The Helvetia (3 Asp. M.C. 43) explained. The Broomfield, 94 L. T. 109; 10 Asp. M.C. 194—D.

Crossing Vessels—Canadian Regulations.]—Vessels converging on a spot on courses and at speeds which present danger of collision are crossing vessels, and in the event of collision the vessel which has the other on the starboard side, and has failed to keep out of the way of the other, is to blame under article 19 of the Canadian Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea. The Albano v. Allan Line Steamship

Co., 76 L. J. P.C. 33; [1907] A.C. 193; 96 L. T. 335; 10 Asp. M.C. 365; 23 T. L. R. 344—P.C.

Steam Trawler—Sailing Vessel—Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, art. 27.]—A sailing vessel came into collision on a clear night with a steam trawler which had her trawl down, and was making about one and a-half mile an hour, and was exhibiting her proper lights:—Held, that there were "special circumstances" within the meaning of article 27 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, and that the sailing vessel ought to have kept out of the way. Held, however, on the facts, that both vessels were to blame. The King's County, 20 T. L. R. 202—Gorell Barnes, J.

Breach of Article 18—Questions for Nautical Assessors.]—In an action for collision, where both vessels were held to blame for breach of the provisions of article 18 of the Rules for Preventing Collisions at Sea, the Court of Appeal asked the nautical assessors the questions asked in The Beryl (53 L. J. P. 75; 9 P. D. 137), and upon their being answered in the negative dismissed the appeal. The Oporto, 66 L. J. P. 49; [1897] P. 249—C.A.

Delay.]—Instantaneous compliance with article 18 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, by which "every steamship when approaching another ship so as to involve risk of collision shall slacken her speed or stop and reverse if necessary," is not necessary; a man for the exercise of his judgment must be allowed a short, but a very short, time. The Emmy Haase (53 L. J. P. 43; 9 P. D. 81) approved. The Ngapoota, 66 L. J. P.C. 88; [1897] A.C. 391—P.C.

Vessel from any Accident not under Command—Duty of Vessel to Keep her Course.]—A vessel shewing the signal that she is not under command ought to act accordingly and keep her course if she can, when another vessel has to keep out of her way. Circumstances considered in which a vessel "from any accident is not under command" within article 4 of the Sea Regulations, 1897. The Hawthornbank, 73 L. J. P. 18; [1904] P. 120; 90 L. T. 298; 9 Asp. M.C. 535—Gorell Barnes, J.

(b) Negligence.

Effect of.]—Where a ship is pursuing a wrong course and has notice from another vessel that the latter is continuing on her course, the former must be held solely to blame for a resultant collision, and it is no defence to say that the other vessel by observing lights and heeding blasts might have deviated from the right course which she was pursuing and thereby avoided the collision. The Chittagony, 70 L. J. P.C. 121; [1901] A.C. 597; 85 L. T. 430; 9 Asp. M.C. 252—P.C.

Dragging Anchor—Slipping Anchor and Putting to Sea by another Vessel to Avoid Collision—Expenses so Incurred—Liability.]—A vessel which negligently dragged her anchor down upon another so as to cause danger of collision, held liable for expenses reasonably incurred by the latter to avoid collision, such as the value of the anchor and chain lost, and coals and other stores consumed. The Port Victoria, 71 L. J. P. 36; [1902] P. 25; 86 L. T. 804; 50 W. R. 383; 9 Asp. M.C. 314—Jeune, P.

Damage by Anchor—"Ring awash."—The fact that a vessel carrying her anchor hanging from the bows has the ring awash in the position indicated by rule 11 of the Thames Rules does not exempt her owners from liability for damage done by her anchor to other vessels with which, in the circumstances and without negligence, she is likely to come in contact, and which are likely to be damaged by her anchor, if so carried. The Six Sisters, 69 L. J. P. 139; [1900] P. 302—Gorell Barnes, J.

Barge Moored in Barge Roads—Necessity for Watchman—Test of Negligence.—The barge G., moored in the barge roads in the river Thames near Greenwich Pier, was left unattended. The ketch W. B. fouled the barges at the roads and then grounded on the road mooring chains. The W. B. got clear of the roads on next flood tide, and at the same time the G. and other barges got adrift. The G. ultimately caught under a dolphin, and some of her cargo was lost and some damaged. The cargo-owners brought an action to recover their damage against the owners of the W. B., who alleged that the owners of the G. had been negligent in leaving her unattended:—Held, that the question of whether it was negligent to leave a barge unattended was a question of fact, but that it was not negligent to leave a barge unattended in a river or a dock if there was no reasonable ground to anticipate danger to the barge, and the fact that if a man had been in attendance he might have prevented the damage was no evidence of negligence. The Western Belle, 95 L. T. 864; 10 Asp. M.C. 279—Gorell Barnes, P.

Barge Unattended and Swung Across Fairway at Night—Duty to Shew Light—"The special circumstances of the case"—Thames By-laws.—In Greenwich reach on a dark night the plaintiffs' dumb barge, fastened only by her headfast to the side of another barge which was alongside a steamship, had swung out on the turn of the tide across the fairway, and was struck and sunk by the defendants' steamer; those on board the steamer, there being other traffic about, did not see the barge until it was under her bows. The man in charge of the barge was on board the steamship, and the barge was left unlighted and unattended:—Held, that there was negligence under the preliminary paragraph in the Thames By-laws, 1898, having regard to "the special circumstances of the case," in not having a man on board the plaintiffs' barge with a light ready to shew to the steamer. The barge was held alone to blame for the collision. The St. Aubin, 76 L. J. P. 25; [1907] P. 60; 95 L. T. 586; 10 Asp. M.C. 298—Bargrave Deane, J.

Towage Contract—Supply of Tug by Dock Company—Liability of Shipowner for Negligence of Tug in Connection with Towage—Duration of Liability.—A dock company supplied two tugs under a towage contract to assist in transporting a steamship from the entrance of the dock to her berth. By the conditions of the towage contract the masters and crews of the tugs were to cease to be under the company's control in connection with the towage or transport, and to become subject to the control of the master or person in charge of the steamship, and to be the servants of the owners thereof, who undertook to indemnify the dock company against any claim for injury to any vessel of any other person occasioned by any neglect of such masters or crews, or by any defect or insufficiency of the tugs, or by any other cause of any kind in connection with the towage or transport. The two tugs brought the steamship close to her berth, where she was moored fast stem and stern, and she had only to haul back a few feet by her winches to get into her berth, which she could not yet do owing to a barge lying astern of her. The dock master desired to remove the barge, and he ordered a man from each of the tugs to cast off certain other barges which were fastened to a buoy, in order to make room, and this was done negligently, causing damage to one of those barges. In an action of damage by collision brought by the owners of the damaged barge against the dock company, the defendants admitted liability, but brought in the owners of the steamship as third parties, claiming indemnity from them under the towage contract against the plaintiff's claim:—Held, that the third parties were not liable to indemnify the defendants, because, at the time of the negligent act complained of, the operation of towage or transport was finished, and the negligence did not occur in connection with the towage or transport. The Kate, 76 L. J. P. 184; [1907] P. 296; 97 L. T. 502—C.A. Affirming, 10 Asp. M.C. 347—Bargrave Deane, J.

Failure of Steam Steering Gear in River—Duty to have Hand Gear Available.—It is the duty of those in charge of a steamship steered by steam gear in a narrow river, where the navigation is difficult and other vessels are likely to be met, to have the hand gear available for use in case of the failure of the steam steering gear, even where there is no reason to apprehend the failure of the steam gear. The Turret Court, 69 L. J. P. 117—Jeune, P.

Loss of Mails by Collision—Locus Standi of Postmaster-General as Bailee—Negligence of Stranger.—The Postmaster-General, being under no liability to his bailors for property bailed to him as Postmaster-General, cannot on behalf of the bailors recover for the loss of the property bailed, the loss being caused by the negligence of a stranger. Claridge v. South Staffordshire Tramway Co. (61 L. J. Q.B. 503; [1892] 1 Q.B. 422) followed. The Winkfield, 49 W. R. 685—Jeune, P.

(c) Compulsory Pilotage.

"Into harbour"—In Itinere—Trinity House Outport District—Harwich Harbour.—The defendants' steamship Ole Bull, bound from a foreign port to Harwich, was boarded outside the harbour by a pilot duly licensed to pilot vessels into and out of Harwich harbour at rates fixed for the Harwich district. He took charge, and brought her to anchor in the harbour, to wait for the tide to flow to go to her berth at a quay. When the tide flowed he navigated her towards her berth, and during such navigation she collided with the plaintiff's vessel. Her place of anchorage was a usual and proper place for vessels to discharge cargo when unable to discharge at a quay. For navigating her into her berth the pilot received an extra fee, which had arisen by usage and was sanctioned by the Trinity House. It was admitted that pilotage was compulsory into the harbour; but the plaintiff contended that on the facts the compulsion ceased when the Ole Bull came to anchor, and that therefore the defendants were liable for the damage caused by the collision:—Held, that the Ole Bull was compulsorily in charge of a pilot at the time of the collision, and the defendants were not liable, because compulsory pilotage into a harbour, generally speaking, must be determined by the place in the harbour to which the vessel was destined to go, and if she was temporarily interrupted in getting there because of tide, wind, fog, or the like, she was still in itinere towards that place, and therefore under compulsory pilotage. The Ole Bull, 74 L. J. P. 75; [1905] P. 52; 92 L. T. 807; 53 W. R. 590; 10 Asp. M.C. 84; 21 T. L. R. 133—Gorell Barnes, J.

Port of Bristol—Vessel Bound from Newport to Bristol—Vessel in Newport Pilotage District, but within Port of Bristol—Necessity of Bristol Pilot.—By the Bristol Wharfrage Act, 1807, it was provided in section 9 that all vessels navigating or passing up, down, or upon the Bristol Channel to the eastward of Lundy Island, except coasting vessels and Irish traders, should be piloted and navigated by pilots licensed by the Bristol Corporation. By the Bristol Channel Pilotage Act, 1861, it was provided in section 4 that so much of the 9th section of the Bristol Wharfrage Act, 1807, as related to vessels navigating or passing up or down the Bristol Channel, bound to or from either of the ports of Cardiff, Newport, or Gloucester should be repealed, and by the same Act pilotage boards and pilotage districts—which in some cases overlapped the port of Bristol—were created for the ports of Cardiff, Newport, and Gloucester, and power was given to these boards to license pilots for their districts. By the Pilotage Order Confirmation (No. 1) Act, 1891, it was provided that, notwithstanding anything contained in the Bristol Wharfrage Act, 1807, a vessel navigating or passing up or down the Bristol Channel to or from the port of Bristol should be exempted from all obligation to be piloted by pilots licensed by the Bristol Corporation, except when within the limits of that port, which were therein defined:—Held, that the Act of 1861 was not intended to deal with and did not deal with or include vessels going to or from the port of Bristol, although such vessels were bound from or to one of the ports of Cardiff, Newport, or Gloucester, and that therefore in the case of a vessel which is not exempt from compulsory pilotage in the port of Bristol there is still the obligation under the Bristol Wharfrage Act, 1807, to have a compulsory pilot licensed by the Corporation of Bristol, when the vessel bound to the port of Bristol gets within the limits of that port, although the vessel may be bound from Cardiff, Newport, or Gloucester, and may still be within one of those three pilotage districts which overlaps the port of Bristol. Consequently, when a vessel* on her voyage puts into Newport, and then proceeds from Newport with a Newport pilot on board to the port of Bristol, as soon as the vessel gets within the limits of the port of Bristol the Newport pilot is bound to give up the charge of the vessel to a Bristol pilot demanding such charge, although the vessel is still within the Newport pilotage district, and within the district for which the Newport pilot is licensed. Reed v. Goldsworthy, 90 L. T. 126; 9 Asp. M.C. 529—D.

Pilotage Certificate Held by Master—Validity of Certificate.—A pilotage certificate granted in 1891 to a master mariner (under section 355 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, now section 599 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894) incorrectly described the ship in respect of which it was granted as being owned by a certain firm. The certificate purported to enable the holder of it to pilot "the said ship or any other ship or ships belonging to the same owners of which he shall be acting as master." The certificate was renewed from year to year and, in 1901, another ship belonging to the same line (of which the holder of the certificate was master), but which was neither owned by the firm named in the certificate nor by the persons who in fact owned the vessel in respect of which it was originally granted, came into collision with another vessel within the pilotage district covered by the certificate:—Held, that the certificate was bad, and the holder of it not entitled to act as pilot for the ship of which he was then master. The Bristol City, 71 L. J. P. 5; [1902] P. 10; 85 L. T. 694; 50 W. R. 383; 9 Asp. M.C. 274—Jeune, P.

Ship Carrying Passengers — Exemptions — Vessel "trading to ports between Boulogne (inclusive) and Baltic" — "Constant trader."—The Order in Council of February 18, 1854, extending the exemptions from compulsory pilotage contained in section 59 of the Pilotage Act, 1825, has not been annulled by the Merchant Shipping Acts, 1854 or 1894. To come within the exemptions from compulsory pilotage given by the Order in Council, it is sufficient if the vessel trades to the ports or countries mentioned; it is not necessary that she should be a "constant" trader to those ports or countries. Nor, to constitute the vessel a trader "to ports between Boulogne (inclusive) and the Baltic," is it necessary that she should trade exclusively to a port or ports within those limits. The Cayo Bonito (No. 1), 72 L. J. P. 70; [1903] P. 203; 89 L. T. 260; 52 W. R. 183; 9 Asp. M.C. 445—C.A.

Implied Repeal of Local Act Granting Exemption.—The general exemption from the obligation of carrying a qualified pilot within the limits of the Trinity House, Leith, granted by section 35 of 1 Geo. 4, c. xxxvii. is impliedly repealed by section 604 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894; therefore the master of a ship carrying passengers between places in the British Islands must employ a qualified pilot within the district for which the Leith Trinity House is entitled to license pilots. Randall v. Renton, 5 F. (Just. Cas.) 16—Ct. of Justy.

Outward Pilotage Limit.—The compulsory pilotage of a vessel sailing out of the port of Liverpool by the Queen's Channel extends as far as the Bar Lightship, which, though further out, is to be considered as substituted for the old Fairway Buoy, prescribed as the outward pilotage limit by the Mersey Dock Acts Consolidation Act, 1858, s. 127. The Sussex, 73 L. J. P. 73; [1904] P. 236; 90 L. T. 549; 9 Asp. M.C. 578; 20 T. L. R. 381—Gorell Barnes, J.

Failure of Master to Stay by—Collision “deemed to have been caused” by Default of Master—“Proof to the contrary.”—Where it has been found that a collision was caused solely by the fault of the pilot compulsorily in charge of a ship, and that the master of that ship failed to stay by the other ship and comply with section 422 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, the collision is not to be “deemed to have been caused” by the wrongful act, neglect, or default of such master because “proof to the contrary” has been given within the meaning of the said section. The Queen (38 L. J. Adm. 39; L. R. 2 A. & E. 354) followed. Ib.

Moving and Stationary Vessels—Liability for Defective Equipment of Ship.—When a vessel in motion collides with a vessel at rest the presumption is that the former is in fault, and this presumption will not be overcome by proof that the colliding vessel was compulsorily in charge of a pilot, unless it is also proved that the collision was due to the fault of the pilot. Mann, Macneal & Co. v. Ellerman Lines, 7 F. 213—Ct. of Sess.

The steamship City of Edinburgh, while being towed out of dock by two tugs and while compulsorily in charge of a pilot, collided with the Glassford, which was lying moored to the quay. At the time of the collision the City of Edinburgh's anchors were not available for use, as the windlass was under repair. In an action for damages by the owners of the Glassford against the owners of the City of Edinburgh, the defenders maintained that the pilot was in fault in moving the ship when her anchors were not available for use. It was proved that the pilot was aware of the want of anchors, but was not consulted as to whether it was safe to move the ship without them. The evidence was conflicting as to whether the use of anchors would have averted the collision:—Held, that the defenders had not overcome the presumption of fault against them as the owners of a moving ship colliding with one that was stationary by proving that their ship was compulsorily in charge of a pilot at the time, as they had not proved that the collision was due to the fault of the pilot. Ib.

Semble, if the pilot was in fault in moving the vessel without having available anchors, the defenders were also in fault in not having the vessel duly equipped. Ib.

Fault of Pilot—Liability of Shipowners.—The Assyria, when coming up the river Clyde, compulsorily in charge of a licensed pilot, collided with the Monmouth, which was being fitted out at a wharf on the river. The owners of the Monmouth sued the owners of the Assyria, alleging that the collision was due to the fault of the defenders, in respect that the Assyria was not in trim for navigating in narrow waters, and that she was recklessly and carelessly navigated. The defenders pleaded that the Assyria was fifteen inches down by the head owing to her aft-tanks having been pumped out, that the master of the Assyria, before the pilot took charge, informed the pilot of the vessel's trim and offered to refill the tanks, and that the pilot after asking the master if she would be all right, and being told that she would, elected to proceed up the river without altering the trim. The evidence as to the precise cause of the collision was conflicting:—Held, first, that if the collision was due to the defective trim of the Assyria the defenders were not responsible, the pilot having elected to proceed up the river without altering her trim; and secondly, that if the collision was due to faulty navigation the defenders had sufficiently discharged the onus on them by proving that the pilot was in charge and that all his orders were obeyed. London and Glasgow Engineering Co. v. Anchor Line, 5 F. 1089—Ct. of Sess.

Duty of Master to Assist Pilot—Interference with Pilot.—A vessel in charge of a compulsory pilot entering the mouth of the River Thames at night came into collision with a vessel which was lying at anchor and which was properly exhibiting her regulation forward and after anchor lights. The collision was due to the fact that the pilot mistook the lights of the vessel at anchor for the lights of a moving vessel coming out of the river, and navigated his vessel accordingly. The circumstances of the navigation were such that any competent mariner on board ought to have seen that the lights in question were stationary, and not those of a moving vessel:—Held, that the pilot was entitled to receive from the master assistance in having his attention called to anything which a competent mariner would see that he ought to know; and that, as the evidence showed that the master failed to give the pilot such assistance by sufficiently calling his attention to the fact that the lights were stationary, the owners, notwithstanding the compulsory pilotage, were liable for the results of the collision. The Tactician, 76 L. J. P. 80; [1907] P. 244; 97 L. T. 621; 23 T. L. R. 869—C.A.

Opinions expressed in The Christiana (7 Moore P.C. 160), The Argo (Swabey, 462), and The Peerless (Lush. 30), as to the danger of allowing any interference with the authority of a pilot, considered. Ib.

Compulsory Pilotage—Failure to Prove that Collision was Due to Fault or Incapacity of Pilot.—A steamship in charge of a compulsory pilot collided with and damaged a tug moored at a wharf in the Clyde at a place where it was usual and proper for tugs to lie, and where there was sufficient room left for other vessels to navigate the river. In an action by the tug owners against the steamship owners the defenders averred that the collision was caused by the fault of the pilot in failing to navigate the vessel in a proper manner, and pleaded that therefore they were not liable. It was proved that the steamship had a considerable list, and that, whether owing to this list or other causes, she did not in fact answer her helm. No fault on the part of the pilot was proved:—Held, first, that the steamship was prima facie in fault; secondly that the steamship owners had not discharged the onus which lay on them of proving that the collision was occasioned by the fault or incapacity of the pilot so as to bring them within the exemption of section 633 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894; and thirdly, that, accordingly, the steamship owners were liable to the tug owners for the loss and damage caused by the collision. Clyde Shipping Co. v. Miller, [1907] S.C. 1145—Ct. of Sess.

Liability of Pilot—Non-effective Control of Vessel.—When a licensed pilot is employed on board a vessel in a place where pilotage is compulsory, it is his duty to insist on having the effective control of the vessel, or to decline to act as pilot; and if he is ordered by the master to place himself in a position disadvantageous for the effective control of the vessel, and he acquiesces in the arrangement and continues to act as pilot, he will not escape responsibility for damages to another vessel. Greenock Towing Co. v. Hardie, 4 F. 215—Ct. of Sess.

Isle of Wight and Southampton Districts—“Pilotage district”—Trinity House of Deptford Strond.]—Neither the Isle of Wight district nor the Southampton district, created in 1875 by the Trinity House of Deptford Strond, is a “pilotage district” within section 605 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, but they are subdivisions of such a district. The Assaye, 74 L. J. P. 145; [1905] P. 289; 94 L. T. 102; 54 W. R. 203; 10 Asp. M.C. 183; 21 T. L. R. 677—Bargrave Deane, J.

Pilotage is compulsory, special exemptions excepted, in the Isle of Wight district on vessels bound inwards to or outwards from Southampton. Ib.

A collision occurred in the Isle of Wight district, by the fault of the respective pilots alone, between a vessel bound from New York via Cherbourg to Southampton in charge of a pilot licensed to take charge of vessels from Peverell to the Owers Lightship, excepting within the Southampton and one other district, and a vessel bound from Southampton to Queenstown and Bombay in charge of a pilot licensed to take charge of vessels from Southampton to sea:—Held, that both vessels were under compulsory pilotage, so that their owners were exempt from liability for the collision. Ib.

Practice.—Where in a collision action the defendants, while denying that the collision was caused or contributed to by the negligence of themselves or their servants, pleaded that the negligence, if any (which was denied), was solely that of a compulsory pilot, the Court, having found that the collision was caused by the negligent navigation of the compulsory pilot alone, ordered the action to be dismissed with costs. The Burma (No. 1), 80 L. T. 808; 8 Asp. M.C. 547—Bucknill, J.

— Onus of Proof.—Those who rely on a plea of compulsory pilotage must establish the fact that the fault of the pilot was the fault of the pilot alone, otherwise the Court will not act in finding that the fault was that of the pilot. The Velasquez (36 L. J. Adm. 19; L. R. 1 P.C. 494) approved. The Benmohr, 52 W. R. 686—Gorell Barnes, J. And see col. 2412.

(d) Tug and Tow.

Stopping—Steam Vessel—Duty of Tug with Vessel in Tow.—A tug towing another vessel is not necessarily exempt from the duty which rests on a steam vessel in a fog to stop her engines under article 16 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, 1897, and is to blame for not stopping so as to let the way run off her tow, when there is no difficulty in doing so, and when the circumstances are such as to require the greatest precaution. The Challenge and The Duc d'Aumale (No. 1), 74 L. J. P. 55; [1905] P. 198; 93 L. T. 390; 10 Asp. M.C. 105—C.A.

Pilot-Cutter Lashed Alongside Tow—Risk of Collision—Duty of Vessel Alongside.—While a sailing ship in tow of two tugs was proceeding down the Bristol Channel, with a pilot cutter waiting to take off the pilot lashed alongside, a collision occurred with a schooner, whereby the cutter was sunk. If those in charge of the cutter had seen the side-light of the schooner as soon as they ought to have done, there would have been time to have slipped the rope attaching the cutter to the ship, and that would have been a reasonable course:—Held, in an action of damage by the owners of the cutter against the owners of the tug, that, while the tugs were in the circumstances to blame for having infringed the collision regulation which directed them to avoid crossing ahead of the schooner, those on board the cutter were not emancipated from the duty of keeping a good look-out and taking all reasonable and proper steps to avoid a collision, and therefore the cutter was also to blame. The Harvest Home, 74 L. J. P. 65; [1905] P. 177; 93 L. T. 895; 10 Asp. M.C. 118—C.A.

Joint Tort-feasors—Judgment against One by Default—Judgment against the Other for Half Damages.—Where damages have been assessed on a judgment in an action of tort, as to part against two tort-feasors, and as to the balance against one of them, no amount actually recovered against the latter goes in relief of the liability of his co-defendant, unless and until, and then only to the extent to which, that amount exceeds such balance. The Morgengry, 69 L. J. P. 8; [1900] P. 1; 81 L. T. 417; 48 W. R. 121; 8 Asp. M.C. 591—C.A.

The owners of a steamer sued the owners of a barque and the owners of its tug in one action for damages sustained in a collision between all three vessels. Against the owners of the barque judgment was recovered by default for the whole amount of the damage sustained, and the barque was sold and the proceeds paid into Court. Against the owners of the tug judgment was recovered for half the damage, this sum exceeding the proceeds of the barque:—Held, that the owners of the steamer were entitled to recover half the damages from the owners of the tug without giving credit for the proceeds of the barque. Ib.

Tug and Tow and a Ship of War—Duty of Single Vessels to Avoid Crossing Course of Large Fleet—Exemption of her Majesty's Ships from Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea—Order in Council.—The statutory sanction imposed by section 419 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, for a breach of the Collision Regulations has no application to a merchant trader which is crossing the course of one of her Majesty's ships from starboard to port, because the obligations imposed by articles 21 and 27 are only applicable to ships both of which are bound to obey the regulations. Under ordinary circumstances a tug and tow are not justified in crossing ahead of a fleet of warships which has the tug and tow on the starboard hand, and the tug and tow ought not to keep their course and speed under article 21 of the Collision Regulations. A vessel which neglects, in disregard of articles 27 and 29 of the Collision Regulations, to depart from any of the Collision Regulations is not to be deemed in fault under section 419 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894. The Sanspareil, 69 L. J. P. 127; [1900] P. 267; 82 L. T. 606; 9 Asp. M.C. 78—C.A.

Right of Tug which Caused Collision to Reward for Towing Vessel Damaged by Collision.—After the collision one of the tugs towed the schooner into port, and claimed salvage, or alternatively towage:—Held, that, though the tug was disentitled to salvage, as she was to blame for the collision, yet she was not bound under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, s. 422, to tow the schooner to the port where she was towed, and was therefore entitled to towage remuneration. The Harvest Home, 74 L. J. P. 3; [1904] P. 409; 92 L. T. 173; 10 Asp. M.C. 18—Jeune, P.

Salvage Arising from Collision—Tug Towing Vessel up to Her Anchor.—Tugs towing a vessel, which has her anchor on the ground, up to her anchor are steam vessels towing another vessel within the meaning of article 3 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, and must carry their side lights and their towing lights:—Sembla, a vessel, which is held by her anchor, in the course of being towed up to it by steam tugs, is not a vessel being towed within the meaning of article 5 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, but is a vessel at anchor, and must exhibit only her anchor light. The Romance, [1901] P. 15; 83 L. T. 488—Gorell Barnes, J.

(e) Fog.

Duty to Keep Course and Speed—Whistle.—The steamship C., while proceeding at the rate of about three knots an hour in a thick fog, heard the whistle of another steamship about four points on the port bow. The C. kept her course and speed, and the whistle of the other vessel was heard to be apparently broadening. Shortly afterwards the other steamship was seen close to and bearing five or six points on the port bow of the C. The engines of the C. were then at once stopped and reversed, but a collision occurred:—Held, that the C. was in part to blame for the collision for having failed, in accordance with article 16 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions, when the whistle of the other steamship was first heard, to stop her engines and afterwards to navigate with caution until all danger of collision was over, and was not justified in continuing her speed under article 21. Although article 21 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea directing a ship to keep her course and speed is a general rule, it is qualified by article 16, and hence, where two steamships in a fog are crossing, each ought to stop her engines if she hears the whistle of the other forward of her beam. The Cathay (No. 1), 81 L. T. 391; 9 Asp. M.C. 35—Gorell Barnes, J.

Speed—Considerations Affecting.—A passenger steamship, fitted with twin screws, which was proceeding at the rate of nine and a-half knots an hour in a dense fog, was held not to be going at a moderate speed, and to have committed a breach of article 16 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, although it was proved that her engines were so constructed that she could not go slower. That article is imperative, and therefore, although such consequences as loss of handiness and the risk of loss of position may result from proceeding at a lower rate of speed, which may be attained by occasionally stopping her engines, considerations of that nature do not justify a vessel in proceeding at more than a moderate speed. As a general rule, speed such that another vessel cannot be avoided after being seen is excessive. The Campania, 83 L. T. 511—Gorell Barnes, J.

“Moderate Speed”—What is.—The power of stopping in a short space is one of the circumstances which ought to be taken into consideration in deciding whether a vessel is proceeding at a moderate speed or not; but article 16 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea is imperative, and therefore if the Court is of opinion that in fact a vessel was not going at a moderate speed in a fog under the existing circumstances, the fact that she could stop very quickly, or that a slower rate of speed would lead to unhandiness or loss of position, will not exempt her from liability should a collision occur. The Oceanic, 88 L. T. 303; 9 Asp. M.C. 378—H.L. (E.)

—Fog Signal Forward of the Beam—Duty of Vessel Hearing it to Stop—Ascertained Position—Right of Vessel to Proceed.—The steamship O., while on a voyage from Liverpool to Monte Video, was off Lobos Island, River Plate, proceeding at ten knots on a course of W.½N. The weather was fine, with passing banks of fog, and shortly after entering the fog she came into collision with another steamship, the N., which had been heard on the starboard bow after the fog was entered. The N. was on a course of E. by S. and had first seen the O. about three miles off in a position to pass all clear port to port, had watched her broaden on the port bow, and saw her hidden by the fog which came on. Shortly afterwards, while still on a course of E. by S., those on the N. heard a short blast sounded on the whistle of the O. The N. answered it with a short blast, her helm was ported, and, as the fog was beginning to envelop the N., her engines were put to slow, and, on further signals being heard from the O., were put full speed astern, and shortly afterwards the collision occurred:—Held, that the N. was not to blame for not stopping her engines on hearing the whistle of the O., as under the circumstances the position of the O. was ascertained. The Oravia, 97 L. T. 523; 23 T. L. R. 663—H.L. (E.)

—Article 16 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, 1897, is imperative, and a vessel is not justified—except in a case of paramount necessity, arising for instance from narrow channels or cross currents, for the safety of the vessel to go at a higher rate of speed—in proceeding at more than a moderate speed, although a slow speed obtained by stopping her engines from time to time may involve a loss of handiness and a danger of losing her position; and a vessel which it is alleged cannot go at a less speed than from nine to ten knots an hour, so as to be readily handled to avoid other vessels, is not, when proceeding at that speed in a dense fog, going at a moderate speed in the existing circumstances and conditions within the meaning of article 16. The Campana, 70 L. J. P. 101; [1901] P. 239; 84 L. T. 673; 9 Asp. M.C. 177—C.A.

Fog Signal Heard Forward of Beam—Position of Vessel not Ascertained—Duty to Stop Engines.]

—The plaintiffs' and defendants' steamships, proceeding at slow speed on nearly opposite courses, came into collision in a dense fog, and neither had stopped her engines under article 16 of the Sea Regulations, on hearing, forward of her beam, the fog signal of the other vessel. The plaintiffs' excuse was that they were afraid to stop their engines, because they had another steamship sounding her whistle on the port quarter, apparently overtaking them. The defendants' excuses were that the whistle of the other vessel was a long way off, and its position as regards bearing and distance was ascertained by means of two other ships which were approaching on each bow, and that the defendants' ship afterwards stopped for ten or fifteen minutes, so that the non-stopping at first could not have contributed to the collision:—Held, that none of these excuses was valid, and that both vessels were to blame for breach of article 16. The Britannia, 74 L. J. P. 46; [1905] P. 98; 92 L. T. 634; 10 Asp. M.C. 65; 21 T. L. R. 119—Gorell Barnes, J.

“Shall stop her engines and then navigate with caution.”]—The master of the steamship O. in a fog heard the whistle of a vessel fine (about a point and a-half) on his bow, and stopped his engines. Afterwards, when his vessel had lost steerage way and was falling off her course, and when he had heard the whistle about three times and judged it to have broadened (to about two and a-half points), he put his engines dead slow, and so proceeded for about twenty minutes before the collision, the whistle appearing to get closer, but broadening. The Court asked the Elder Brethren whether, when the O. continued on her course, the indications were such as to shew to her master distinctly and unequivocally that, if both vessels continued to do what they appeared to be doing, they would pass clear without risk of collision. The Elder Brethren answered “No,” and in reply to a further question, said that the O. ought to have stopped, if only from time to time, and even at the risk of falling somewhat off her course:—Held, that the O. had broken that part of article 16 of the Sea Regulations, 1897, which provides that a steam vessel in such a case “shall . . . stop her engines, and then navigate with caution until danger of collision is over.” The O. was held alone to blame for the collision. The Aras, 76 L. J. P. 37; [1907] P. 28; 96 L. T. 956; 10 Asp. M.C. 358—Gorell Barnes, P.

Failing to Stop Engines.]—In cross-actions arising out of a collision between two steam vessels, the Warsaw and the Linn o' Dee, it was proved that in a dense fog, when neither vessel could see the other, the Warsaw's whistle was heard on the Linn o' Dee's starboard bow, that thereupon the Linn o' Dee's engines were stopped. It was maintained for the Warsaw that the Linn o' Dee was to blame in respect that she ought to have acted on the assumption that the Warsaw was a crossing ship, and should have reversed her engines and kept out of the Warsaw's way, and that by failing to do so she was in breach of articles 19 and 23 of the Collision Regulations:—Held, that the Linn o' Dee was not to blame upon that ground, in respect that by stopping her engines and navigating with caution she had conformed to article 16 of the Regulations, and that that article was the only one applicable in a fog so long as the position and course of the other vessel was not accurately ascertained. Held, further, that the Warsaw was to blame, as she had failed to stop her engines when she heard the Linn o' Dee's whistle, and was kept at a considerable speed till the Linn o' Dee came in sight. Observations as to the application of the Steering and Sailing Rules in Fog. Crawford v. Granite City Steamship Co., 8 F. 1013—Ct. of Sess.

Hearing Whistle apparently Forward of Beam—Stopping Engines.]

—In order to comply with the provisions of the second part of article 16, a steamer in a fog must stop her engines on first hearing—apparently forward of the beam—the whistle of another steamer, and must keep them stopped until by hearing further signals she is able to ascertain the position of that other vessel. The Rondane, 69 L. J. P. 114; 82 L. T. 828; 9 Asp. M.C. 106—Jeune, P.

Steam Trawler—Fog Signals—Duty of Steam Vessel to Stop Engines in Fog.]—Article 10 (g) of the Sea Regulations, 1884 (which remains in force until article 9 of the Sea Regulations, 1897, is promulgated), applies to a steam trawler trawling in a fog, and such a vessel should sound a foghorn and bell as therein provided. The London (No. 1), 73 L. J. P. 125; [1904] P. 355; 91 L. T. 327; 10 Asp. M.C. 12—Jeune, P.

Article 15 (a) of the Sea Regulations, 1897, providing that in fog a steam vessel having way upon her shall sound a prolonged blast, does not apply to such a trawler. Id.

Steamer, not Herself in a Fog, Hearing Whistle of another Steamer Proceeding from a Bank of Fog on her Bow—Stopping—Moderate Speed.]—It is the duty of a steamer, not herself in a fog, upon hearing the whistle of another steamer proceeding from a bank of fog on her bow, to stop her engines, under the second part of article 16 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea. The Bernard Hall, 71 L. J. P. 72; 86 L. T. 658; 9 Asp. M.C. 300—Jeune, P.

Semble, that there is no obligation upon a steamer when in the vicinity of a fog, she not being in the fog nor running into it, to go at a moderate speed. Id.

Duty of Tug with Vessel in Tow.]—A tug towing another vessel is not necessarily exempt from the duty which rests on a steam vessel in a fog to stop her engines under articles 16 of the Sea Regulations, 1897, and is to blame for not stopping so as to let the way run off her tow, when there is no difficulty in doing so, and when the circumstances are such as to require the greatest precaution. The Challenge and the Duc d'Aumale, 73 L. J. P. 2; [1904] P. 41; 89 L. T. 481; 9 Asp. M.C. 497—Gorell Barnes, J.

Steamship and Sailing Ship—Duty to Slacken Speed, or Stop or Reverse if Necessary.—A steamship on a N. by W. $\frac{1}{2}$ W. course, in a dense fog, the wind being about south, heard a single blast of a fog-horn on her port bow, whereupon her engines were at once stopped. Shortly afterwards another blast of the fog-horn was heard closer to and nearer on the bow, and her engines were then reversed full speed and her helm put hard aport, but a collision occurred:—Held, that the steamship was to blame for not reversing when she stopped her engines, since those on board of her ought to have known that the fog-horn they heard came from a sailing vessel on the starboard tack not far off, and that with the wind where it was the sailing vessel must be on a course crossing that of the steamship from port to starboard, that it was the duty of the steamship under articles 20 and 22 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea to avoid passing ahead of the sailing vessel, and, to enable her to perform that duty, it was necessary for her under article 23 to reverse her engines. The Merthyr, 79 L. T. 676; 8 Asp. M.C. 475—Gorell Barnes, J.

Vessel Moored to Pontoon—At Anchor—Duty to Ring Bell—River Tyne.—The steam-tug T. was lying in the river Tyne, moored at a pontoon connected with the bank by a bridge, when she was run into by the steam trawler R. The pontoon and bridge were the property of the Tyne General Ferry Co. The pontoon, the bridge, and the R. were all damaged by the collision. The owners of the pontoon and bridge sued the owners of the T. for the damage they had sustained, and the owners of the T. sued the owners of the R. for the damages sustained by the T. The owners of the R. then agreed with the Tyne Ferry Co. that if the Ferry Co. would bring an action against the T. for the damage sustained by the Ferry Co. they would indemnify the Ferry Co. against the costs of the action, and make good the difference between the sum recovered and the total amount of the damage sustained, and if the action proved unsuccessful would pay them the amount of their damage. The two actions were heard together. The owners of the R. charged the T. with not sounding her bell when anchored in the fog:—Held, that the action by the Ferry Co. against the T. should be dismissed, for the damage to the pier and pontoon were not caused by the T. being at the pontoon. Held, further, that the R. was liable for the damage for being improperly under way and for excessive speed, and that the T. was not to blame for not sounding her bell in accordance with article 18 (a) of the Tyne By-laws, 1884, as she was not at anchor. The Titan; The Rambler, 96 L. T. 93; 10 Asp. M.C. 350—Gorell Barnes, P.

(f) Lights.

Breach of Article 5 of Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea.—Where a steamer collided with a sailing ship which after sunset was shewing no lights the Court held that, although there was some look-out on the steamer, nevertheless the absence of the lights could not in the circumstances have possibly caused or contributed to the collision; and that therefore the sailing ship was not to be deemed to be in fault under section 419, subsection 4 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894. The Argo, 82 L. T. 602; 9 Asp. M.C. 74—C.A.

Anchor Light—Vessel exceeding 150 feet in Length.—“In the forward part of the vessel.”—A vessel of 813 feet in length, at anchor, had her forward anchor light placed on the forward shroud of the starboard forerigging at a distance of sixty or seventy feet from the stem:—Held, that the light was carried “in the forward part of the vessel” within the meaning of article 11 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea. The Philadelphia, 69 L. J. P. 101; [1900] P. 262; 82 L. T. 601; 48 W. R. 514; 9 Asp. M.C. 72—C.A.

—“At or near the stern”—Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, art. 11.—A steamship, 455 feet long, at anchor in a river at night, was heading across the channel while swinging with the tide, when a vessel proceeding down the river ran into her on her starboard side twenty feet forward of the mainmast. The steamship had two masts only, and her after anchor light was hung inside the port foreshroud of the main rigging 120 feet from the stern. The evidence shewed that the vessel which ran into her had not a proper look-out. Article 11 of the Regulations for the Prevention of Collisions at Sea requires the after anchor light to be carried “at or near the stern”:—Held, that the position of the after anchor light of the steamship was not in accordance with article 11, and that, notwithstanding that the vessel coming down the river had not a proper look-out, and that the steamship was struck forward of the after anchor light, it could not be said that the breach of the rule might not possibly have contributed to the collision, and both vessels were therefore to blame. The Gannet, 68 L. J. P. 99; [1899] P. 230—C.A. The decision of the Court of Appeal (68 L. J. P. 99; [1899] P. 230) reversed on the facts, and the judgment of BUCKNILL, J., who found the Alcoa alone to blame, restored. The Gannet, 69 L. J. P. 49; [1900] A.C. 234; 82 L. T. 329; 8 Asp. M.C. 43—H.L. (E.)

Ship at Anchor—Torpedo-boat Destroyer—Masts not Capable of Carrying Proper Riding Lights—King's Regulations, Art. 1,069.—A torpedo-boat destroyer, over 150 feet in length, was lying at anchor in a harbour at night with her forward riding light on the jack-staff six feet above the deck and her after light on the ensign-staff five feet above the deck. There were no masts in the vessel upon which lights could be placed in the positions prescribed by article 1,069 of the King's Regulations (which was the same as article 11 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, 1897). She had an awning up, which was about three feet higher than the after light. Another vessel coming down the harbour saw only one light, and thinking that the vessel carrying the light was less than 150 feet in length, she came into collision with her. If the destroyer had not exceeded 150 feet in length, the other vessel would have passed clear. In an action by the Admiralty to recover the amount of the damage, the Judge found that the awning of the Haughty obscured the after light, and that this was the cause of the collision, and that therefore the other vessel was not to blame for the collision, and he gave judgment for the defendants:—Held, upon appeal, that there was evidence upon which the Judge could so find, and that, as the plaintiffs had not proved that the collision was caused by the negligence of the defendants, the judgment must be affirmed. The Hiron-delle, 22 T. L. R. 146—C.A.

Sailing Vessel and Steam Trawler Meeting—Lights of Steam Trawler.—A collision occurred at night between a sailing vessel and a steam trawler, which was carrying not the ordinary lights for a steam vessel under way, but the alternative lights permitted to her under article 10 of the Sea Regulations, 1884, and certain Orders in Council, if engaged in trawling and having her trawl in the water. The trawler had been getting her trawl in, and having got it in just before the collision, and not keeping a good look-out, went full speed ahead across the bows of the sailing vessel, which kept her course:—Held, that the trawler was to blame—not only for a bad look-out, but also because when she went full speed ahead she was under command, and it was her duty to keep out of the way of the sailing vessel, and because, when she was under command and in a position to go full speed ahead, she ought to have shifted her lights and put up the ordinary lights for a steam vessel under way; and that the sailing vessel was right in keeping her course. The Tweedsdale (58 L. J. P. 41; 14 P. D. 164) followed. The Upton Castle, 75 L. J. P. 77; [1906] P. 147; 93 L. T. 814; 10 Asp. M.C. 153—Bargrave Deane, J.

Tug made Fast Alongside Ship to Keep her to her Anchor if Necessary—Liability for Absence of Towing Light.—By rule 4 (a) of the Mersey Rules, 1900, a steam vessel when towing another vessel or attached for the purpose of towing or manœuvring such vessel shall carry certain prescribed lights. By section 419, sub-section 4 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, where in a case of collision it is proved to the Court before whom the case is tried that any of the collision regulations have been infringed, the ship by which the regulation has been infringed shall be deemed to be in fault. A steamship at anchor in the Mersey with engines broken down engaged a tug to stop alongside her to keep her to her anchor if she should go adrift. At 7 P.M. the tug was made fast fore and aft to the side of the ship by a rope which was sufficiently strong to serve as a towing hawser if necessary. Shortly before 11 P.M. the ship was run into by a vessel coming up the river, and sunk. The tug was not at the time of the collision carrying the lights prescribed by rule 4 (a) of the Mersey Rules:—Held, first, that the tug was attached to the ship "for the purpose of towing or manœuvring" within the meaning of the rule, and that a breach of the rule had been committed by the tug not carrying the lights prescribed; and secondly, that, the tug and the tow being so attached and under such control as to be regarded as one vessel, the rule had been infringed by the tow within the meaning of section 419, sub-section 4 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, by the neglect of those in charge of her to see that the tug carried the prescribed lights, and that consequently the tow must under that section be deemed to be in fault. The Devonian, 70 L. J. P. 66; [1901] P. 221; 84 L. T. 675; 49 W. R. 565; 9 Asp. M.C. 179—C.A.

Towing Anchored Vessel up to her Anchor.—A steamtug made fast alongside a vessel at anchor and steaming ahead so as to move her up to her anchor, in order that she may get it, is "towing another vessel" within the meaning of article 3 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, although the ship herself, being still under the control of her anchor, may not be a vessel "being towed" within the meaning of article 5. The Romance, 70 L. J. P. 1; [1901] P. 115; 83 L. T. 488; 9 Asp. M.C. 149—Gorell Barnes, J.

Injury to Lightship—Damages.—The plaintiffs, the Mersey Docks and Harbour Board, were charged by Act of Parliament with the duty of lighting the river Mersey. For this purpose they kept a lightship in reserve in case of injury to any of the lightships actually in use. The defendants negligently injured one of the lightships in use, which was immediately replaced by that in reserve:—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover substantial damages for the use of the reserve lightship, though but for such use she would have been moored in the river lying idle. The Clarence (3 Wm. Rob. 283), The Rutland ([1896] P. 195n. (2)), and The Emerald (65 L. J. P. 169; [1896] P. 192) are overruled, so far as they are inconsistent with The Greta Holme (66 L. J. P. 166; [1897] A.C. 596). The Mediana, 69 L. J. P. 35; [1900] A.C. 118; 82 L. T. 95; 48 W. R. 398; 9 Asp. M.C. 41.

Vessel "not under command"—Vessel "aground near a fairway"—Vessel Dragging in Mud.—A steam vessel which has left her anchorage outside a harbour on a voyage, her course lying at right-angles to, and about a quarter of a mile from the entrance to, a dredged channel leading into the harbour, and which, by reason of her draught, is dragging in the mud so that her engines have from time to time to be put full steam astern for the purpose of freeing her, her average speed ahead being only about three-quarters of a mile an hour, is not a vessel which from any accident is "not under command" within the meaning of article 4 (A), and is not, therefore, bound to carry the lights or shapes therein specified. The Bellanoch, 76 L. J. P. 88; [1907] P. 170; 97 L. T. 315—C.A. Affirmed infra.

A steam vessel in the circumstances last above mentioned is not "aground near a fairway" within the meaning of article 11, and is not, therefore, bound to carry the lights therein specified. Ib.

The effect of article 27 considered. Ib.

(g) Rivers.

Crossing Vessels in Rivers, Art. 22.]—The crossing of vessels referred to in article 22 is "crossing so as to involve risk of collision," and the considerations which arise in regard to vessels in the open sea are not the same as those which apply to the reaches of a winding river. Whether or not vessels are "crossing vessels" in a river depends on their presumable courses, and the question, therefore, always turns on the reasonable inference to be drawn as to a vessel's future course from her position at a particular moment, and this greatly depends upon the nature of the locality where she is at that moment. The Leverington (55 L. J. P. 78; 11 P. D. 117) distinguished. The Pekin, 66 L. J. P. C. 97; [1897] A.C. 532; 77 L. T. 443; 8 Asp. M.C. 367—P.C.

Thames—Collision—By-law 47—Contributory Negligence.]—A steamship which by breach of by-law 47 of the Thames By-laws put another vessel in such a difficulty that the latter could not, except by the exercise of more than ordinary skill and care, avoid a collision.—Pronounced to blame for the collision which ensued. The Ovingdean Grange, 71 L. J. P. 105; [1902] P. 208; 87 L. T. 15; 9 Asp. M.C. 295—C.A.

— Application of Sea Rules to that River—Vessel Aground — "Not under command."]—A vessel hard and fast aground is not a vessel "not under command" within the meaning of article 4 (a) of the Sea Rules and by-law 40 of the Thames Rules. But assuming that the Sea Rules apply generally to the river Thames, and that a vessel aground is a "vessel not under command" within those rules, still a vessel aground in the Thames in the daytime is not bound to exhibit the two black balls prescribed in article 4 (a), as to make that rule apply would have the effect of interfering with by-law 40 of the Thames Rules, contrary to the provisions of article 30 of the Sea Rules. The Carlotta, 68 L. J. P. 87; [1899] P. 223; 80 L. T. 664; 47 W. R. 702; 8 Asp. M.C. 544—Gorell Barnes, J.

— Steamer Turning Round—Crossing from one Side of the River towards the other.]—It is a question of fact in each case whether a steamer turning round in the river Thames is or is not a "steam vessel crossing from one side of the river towards the other" within the meaning of the 48th of the Thames By-laws. The John Holloway, 69 L. J. P. 15; [1900] P. 37; 81 L. T. 726; 48 W. R. 416; 9 Asp. M.C. 36—Bucknill, J.

A steamer which had been navigating up on the south side of mid-channel, and was turning round on the south side, so far as her length would allow, in order to go into dock on the south side of the river, having her anchor down and holding, and making no movement through the water, but merely swinging slowly to her anchor with her head to the northward,—Held, not to be within by-law 48. Id.

— Barge Swinging at Tier—Turn of Tide—Duty to have Man on Board—Duty to Shew Light.]—The barge G. laden with a cargo of pitch was fastened by means of her headfast to the port bow of the barge J., which was moored head and stern to the steamship V. lying at the tiers at Greenwich. The tide at the time was flood, and when the man in charge of the G. had made her headfast secure he went on board the V., leaving the G. unattended. When the tide ebbed the barge, which was eighty feet long and had a free-board of fifteen inches, swung out athwart the stream, and the steamship St. A., proceeding down the river during the night, collided with the G., which shortly afterwards sank. Shortly before the collision those on the St. A. had slowed and stopped their engines and ported to allow some sailing barges to pass ahead of their vessel, and when the G. was seen close to and ahead the St. A. was making about two knots, and the engines of the St. A. were then reversed. The owners of the G. sued the owners of the St. A. for the damage sustained by the negligent navigation of the St. A.:—Held, that the action should be dismissed, as the look-out on the St. A. was not defective and her speed was not excessive, and that the G. should have had some one on board her at the turn of the tide to give notice of the position of the G., and to shew a light to vessels as they approached, and that the absence of any signal was a breach of the preliminary article of the Thames By-laws, 1898. The St. Aubyn, 95 L. T. 586—Bargrave Deane, J.

— Vessel at Anchor in Fairway of—Ringling Bell.]—Semble, that the obligation on steamers and sailing vessels under the 38th Thames By-law, when in the fairway and not under way, to ring a bell, does not apply in clear weather. The Rhein, 86 L. T. 265; 9 Asp. M.C. 278—Gorell Barnes, J.

Humber—Crossing Ships.]—The part of the river Humber opposite Cleve Ness buoy off Grimsby is a "narrow channel" within article 25 of the Sea Regulations, and the crossing rules in articles 19 and 22 (and therefore the keeping-course rule in article 21) also apply there. The Ashton, 74 L. J. P. 28; [1905] P. 21; 92 L. T. 811; 53 W. R. 639; 10 Asp. M.C. 88; 21 T. L. R. 126—Gorell Barnes, J.

A collision took place in the river Humber close to Cleve Ness buoy between a steam trawler coming up the river from the North Sea to Grimsby and a steamship proceeding down river from Grimsby to Hamburg. The trawler had the steamship on her port bow, and the steamship had the trawler on her starboard bow:—Held, that the trawler was to blame under article 25 of the Sea Regulations for being on the wrong side of the channel and under article 21 for not keeping her course, and that the steamship was to blame under articles 19 and 22 for starboarding and so attempting to cross ahead of the other, and also for not reversing her engines. Id.

Mersey—Crossing Rule—Steamer—Vessel Coming out of Dock Entrance into River.]—A collision occurred in the river Mersey, about off the north end of the Liverpool landing stage, between a steamship which was proceeding down, without steam up, in tow of two tugs at a distance of about one-third of the river from the landing stage, and another steamer which had been lying just before the collision in the Prince's Half-tide Dock entrance, and which came out into the river during a strong flood tide at full speed under hard a-port helm on the starboard side of the first steamship:—Held, that the crossing rule, article 19 of the Sea Regulations, 1897, as introduced by article 1 of the Mersey Regulations, did not apply so as to bind the first steamship to keep out of the way of the other. The Sunlight, 73 L. J. P. 25; [1904] P. 100; 90 L. T. 32; 9 Asp. M.C. 509—Bucknill, J.

Scheldt—Liability of Shipowner.—Although pilotage is compulsory in the river Scheldt, in the sense that vessels are compelled either to take a pilot or to pay the pilotage fees, the master is not compelled by the Belgian law to surrender the charge of his ship to the pilot; and therefore, where a master puts the pilot in charge of the navigation of his vessel, and a collision occurs through the negligence of such pilot, the owners are liable for the damages occasioned thereby. The Dallington and the Socotra, 72 L. J. P. 17; [1903] P. 77; 88 L. T. 128; 51 W. R. 607; 9 Asp. M.C. 377—Bucknill, J.

Tyne—Steamship Coming out of Dock and Crossing River—Duty to Indicate Intention.—The meaning of articles 21 and 22 of the Tyne By-laws, 1884, is that a vessel crossing the river may cross if there is time and opportunity to do so without hampering another vessel, and the vessel which sees a vessel about to cross must act reasonably and give her a little more room if she requires it, but the burden of the operation at the beginning is upon the vessel crossing. The Skipssea, 74 L. J. P. 34; [1905] P. 32; 93 L. T. 181; 53 W. R. 558; 10 Asp. M.C. 91—Gorell Barnes, J.

A steamship, V., coming out of dock, was moving slowly out of the lock entrance on the north side of the Tyne to cross and go down the river, when another steamship, S., came in sight on the port bow about four hundred yards off, coming up the river on the other side with a tug ahead of her. The V. continued to go ahead, and gave two short blasts and hard a-starboarded, but shortly afterwards stopped her engines; the S. gave one short blast and ported slightly and reversed her engines for a time, and after other manœuvres the vessels collided:—Held, that the vessels were at first in such a position that it was the duty of the V. to elect to cross ahead of the other vessel or to wait till she had passed, and to indicate in an unmistakable way what her action was to be, and she had not done so, and this had caused the collision; and that if she had meant to wait she ought to have blown three blasts at once and reversed her engines and remained near the lock entrance; and that the V. was alone to blame. Ib.

(h) Narrow Channels.

Harbour Entrance—"Narrow channel"—Duty to Keep to Starboard Side—Duty of Incoming Vessel to Wait till Outgoing Vessel is Clear—Duty to Stop and Reverse.—A harbour entrance which consists of an opening about half a mile wide between the ends of two breakwaters is a "narrow channel" within the meaning of article 25 of the Regulations for preventing Collisions at Sea, 1897. Where a harbour entrance is about half a mile wide, a steam vessel which is approaching the entrance with a view to entering the harbour is under no obligation to lie outside the entrance until an outgoing vessel gets clear. Taylor v. Burger (78 L. T. 93; 8 Asp. M.C. 364) distinguished. The Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse, 76 L. J. P. 138; [1907] P. 259; 97 L. T. 366; 23 T. L. R. 554—C.A. Affirming, 10 Asp. M.C. 361—Gorell Barnes, P.

The west entrance to the harbour of Cherbourg, which opens towards the north, lies between the ends of two breakwaters and is about half a mile wide. The steamship O. was approaching the entrance from the north with a view to enter the harbour, and was keeping to her starboard side of the fairway. The steamship K. had left the harbour on a westerly voyage and was pursuing a north-westerly course across the harbour entrance. The O. gave one short blast on her whistle (the porting sound signal) and ported slightly to keep well over to the starboard side. The K. gave two short blasts (the starboarding signal) and continued on her course, trusting to her speed to pass in front of the O. The O. gave a second short blast, to which the K. replied with a second two short-blast signal. Both vessels then stopped and reversed, but a collision ensued, the stem of the O. striking the starboard bow of the K.:—Held, first, that the K. was to blame, inasmuch as the harbour entrance was a "narrow channel" within the meaning of article 25, and she ought, in passing through it, to have kept to her starboard side of the fairway. Held, secondly, that, in the circumstances, the O. was not to blame, either because she had not waited outside the harbour entrance until the K. got clear, or because she had not stopped and reversed sooner than she did, or because she ported after hearing the signals of the K. Ib.

Uniform System of Buoyage.—In certain water in Sea Reach of the River Thames, which had been hitherto a channel between a row of buoys on the north and a row of buoys on the south side, the Trinity House placed four new lighted buoys at certain points not in a line, but more or less north of the centre line of what had been the channel. The new buoys, according to a notice issued by the Trinity House, marked the northern side of the deepest water through Sea Reach, but by their colour and shape indicated, according to the uniform system of buoyage, that a vessel coming in should pass them on her starboard hand:—Held, that a vessel coming in at night had sufficient justification for treating the narrow-channel rule (article 25 of the Sea Regulations) as applying not to the old channel as a whole, but to the water between the new buoys and the buoys on the south side, and passing on her own starboard side of the new buoys, and therefore was not to blame for a collision with another vessel which occurred while she was in that position. The Gustafsberg, 74 L. J. P. 42; [1905] P. 10; 92 L. T. 630; 53 W. R. 350; 10 Asp. M.C. 61; 21 T. L. R. 79—Gorell Barnes, J.

Semble, the effect of the placing of the new buoys was to constitute a new narrow channel within article 25 of the Sea Regulations between the new buoys and the buoys on the south side. Id.

Vessel Turning Round—Art. 25.]—Article 25 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea is not infringed by a vessel turning round in a narrow channel whereby some portion of her length must necessarily during the process fail to remain on that side of the fairway or mid-channel which lies on her starboard side. The Whittleburn, 83 L. T. 748; 9 Asp. M.C. 154—Gorell Barnes, J.

Narrow Channel—Queenstown Harbour—Fairway.]—The navigable water in Queenstown Harbour is a "narrow channel" within article 25 of the Sea Regulations; and although vessels are not bound to navigate in the fairway buoyed by the harbour authorities, they should keep on entering or leaving the harbour, when it is safe and practicable, to their starboard side of the middle of the buoyed fairway. The Giengariff, 74 L. J. P. 90; [1905] P. 106; 93 L. T. 281; 53 W. R. 537; 10 Asp. M.C. 103; 21 T. L. R. 299—Bargrave Deane, J.

(i) Manchester Ship Canal.

Duty as to Stopping.]—The plaintiffs' steamship was proceeding down the Manchester Ship Canal in foggy weather, with another steamship going down ahead, when those on board heard the whistle of defendants' steamship, which was coming up the canal (and with which they afterwards came into collision), and did not immediately stop their engines:—Held, that the plaintiffs' steamship was not to blame for breach of article 16 of the Sea Regulations, because the Sea Regulations could not apply to the Manchester Ship Canal; and because, even if they could apply, the position of the defendants' vessel, as coming up the canal and below the steamship ahead, was ascertained within article 16. The Hare, 73 L. J. P. 47; [1904] P. 331; 90 L. T. 323; 9 Asp. M.C. 547; 20 T. L. R. 291—Gorell Barnes, J.

(j) Suez Canal.

Regulations for Navigation.]—A collision occurred at night-time in the northern part of the Suez Canal between the plaintiffs' vessel which was going south and the defendants' vessel which was going north. By the Suez Canal Regulations and the practice, it was the duty of the plaintiffs' vessel to tie up, and make certain changes in her lights in doing so, and it was the duty of the defendants' vessel to keep on past her, both acting reasonably. The evidence shewed that both vessels had been going at a greater speed than that allowed by the regulation, that the plaintiffs' vessel duly manœuvred in tying up and changing her lights, and that the collision was attributable to the fact that the defendants' vessel came on at too great a speed and neglected to keep herself under proper command so as to be able to pass the plaintiffs' vessel safely:—Held, that, on this evidence, the defendants' vessel was solely to blame. The Clan Cumming, 77 L. J. P. 1; [1907] P. 311; 97 L. T. 14—C.A.

Incoming and Outgoing Ship—Order of Harbour-master.]—The T., a screw steamer, was approaching a lock leading from a basin into a dock at the time when two paddle-tugs were coming out. The first tug passed out safely. The master of the second thought that there was not room to pass between the T. and the lock wall, and stopped. The harbour-master, whose orders he was bound to obey, ordered him to go ahead, and at the same time ordered the T. to go astern. The T. reversed her engines, but only sufficiently to keep her stationary, as the wind and tide were drifting her towards the lock. A collision took place between the port sponson of the tug and the port bow of the T.:—Held, that the tug was not to blame, because—first, an incoming ship should give way to an outgoing ship; secondly, the master of the tug was bound to obey the order of the harbour-master to go ahead; and thirdly, the T. had disobeyed the order to go astern. Taylor v. Burger, 78 L. T. 93; 8 Asp. M.C. 364—H.L. (Sc.)

Port Natal—Regulations—Moving Ship in Berth.]—By regulation 17 of the Regulations of Port Natal, in which pilotage was compulsory except for certain exempted ships, "no master or person in charge of an exempted vessel shall cross the bar in such a vessel or shift the berth of such vessel in the harbour without a pilot or otherwise without permission." By regulation 29 "the master of every vessel shall occupy the berth assigned to such vessel and change the berth if so directed; in default whereof the removal may be effected by the port authorities at the risk and expense of vessel and owners." The port authorities directed a vessel, which was not within the exemption from compulsory pilotage, to change her berth, and, as the master failed to comply with the direction, the port authorities sent a pilot with a tug to shift her. While being so shifted she came into collision with another vessel solely through the fault of the pilot:—Held, that under the above regulations the pilot was at the time acting as a pilot compulsorily in charge, and the shipowners were not liable for the collision. The Suffolk, 21 T. L. R. 267—Bargrave Deane, J.

Vessel taking Cargo at Port in United Kingdom to be Discharged at another Port in United Kingdom.]—A ship sailing under foreign-going articles left Swansea and went to various ports within and without the United Kingdom. She went from Dieppe to Hull in ballast and at Hull she took in a cargo to be discharged at Bristol, and went from Hull with such cargo to Bristol, where she discharged her cargo, still sailing under the same articles. When on the voyage from Hull to Bristol, the ship was proceeding up the Bristol Channel, and was within the limits of the port of Bristol, within which, by section 9 of the Bristol Wharfrage Act, 1807, pilotage by a Bristol pilot is compulsory for all vessels except "coasting vessels and Irish traders." The master refused to take a compulsory pilot on board, on the ground that the ship during the voyage from Hull to Bristol was a "coasting vessel" within the meaning of the exemption by reason of her having taken in cargo at Hull destined to be discharged at Bristol, both ports being within the United Kingdom:—Held, that the ship was not a "coasting vessel" at the time in question, and the fact that she took in cargo at Hull, a port in the United Kingdom, which she was going to discharge at Bristol, another port in the United Kingdom, did not make her a "coasting vessel" on the voyage from Hull to Bristol, and that the master was properly convicted under section 603, sub-section 2 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, for having, within a district where pilotage was compulsory, refused to take a pilot on board. The Ravensworth; Phillips v. Born, 93 L. T. 634; 10 Asp. M.C. 131—D.

Vessel Bound to Manchester—Coming into the Port of Liverpool—Anchorage in Itinere—Termination.—Pilotage is compulsory subject to special exemptions on all vessels bound to Manchester and coming into the port of Liverpool, and, semble, on all vessels bound from Manchester and going out of the port of Liverpool. The Mercedes de Larrinaga, 73 L. J. P. 65; [1904] P. 215; 90 L. T. 520; 9 Asp. M.C. 571; 20 T. L. R. 375—Gorell Barnes, J.

When a vessel is under compulsory pilotage, as being bound to Manchester by way of the Manchester Ship Canal and coming into the port of Liverpool, and not specially exempted, the compulsion does not terminate under section 123 of the Mersey Dock Acts Consolidation Act, 1858, if her pilot brings her to anchor, not finally, but only temporarily and in itinere. The Servia and the Carinthia (67 L. J. P. 36; [1898] P. 36) considered. Ib.

(1) Damages.

Both Ships to Blame—Rule of Division of Loss—Seamen Drowned—Payments to their Relatives—Spanish Accidents Act, 1900—Claim against other Ship for Half the Payments.—Some seamen on board a Spanish ship were drowned in a collision with another ship, and the Spanish shipowners were compelled by the Spanish Accidents Act, 1900, without proof of any negligence, to make payments to the relatives of these seamen. The action arising out of the collision was settled on the basis of both ships being to blame. Under the Admiralty rule of division of loss, the Spanish shipowners claimed to recover from the owners of the other ship half the amount of these payments:—Held, that the claim must be rejected—first, because it was in respect not of damages at all, but of an accident payment not recognised by English law, but arising out of a foreign statute; and secondly, because it was not such a claim for damages as could be made under Admiralty jurisdiction, or could have been taken into consideration in the Admiralty Court, and therefore the Admiralty rule of division of loss could not apply to it. The Circe, 74 L. J. P. 106; [1906] P. 1; 93 L. T. 640; 10 Asp. M.C. 149; 21 T. L. R. 525—Gorell Barnes, P.

Valuation of Ships—Res inter alios Acta.—In the case of a collision in which both ships are to blame the cargo-owner is not bound by the valuation of the ships estimated in an action between the owners of the two vessels to which he was not a party, but is entitled to an independent valuation in ulterior proceedings. Van Eijck & Zoon v. Somerville & Gibson, 75 L. J. P.C. 67; [1906] A.C. 489; 95 L. T. 161; 22 T. L. R. 715; 10 Asp. M.C. 268—H.L. (Sc.)

Consequential Damage to Third Vessel—Admiralty Rule as to Division of Damages—Joint Tortfeasors.—Where, by the negligence of both, two ships come into collision, and the consequence of such collision is that one of the said ships afterwards comes into collision with and damages a third vessel, a moiety of the damages recovered by the owners of the third ship from the owners of the ship which actually did the damage may be recovered by the owners of such last-mentioned ship from the owners of the other wrongdoing ship, as part of the damages arising out of the original collision, notwithstanding the rule of law that there is no contribution between joint tortfeasors. The Frankland, 70 L. J. P. 42; [1901] P. 161; 84 L. T. 395; 9 Asp. M.C. 196—Jeune, P.

Personal Injuries.—The plaintiff sustained personal injuries in a collision at sea that occurred between a schooner in his charge as pilot, and the defendants' steamer. In an action in personam against the defendants claiming damages for such injuries caused, as alleged, by the defendants' negligence, the jury found that the defendants were negligent in not getting out of the way of the schooner, or stopping; and awarded the plaintiff 500*l.* It was admitted that the schooner, which was being overtaken by the steamer, displayed no stern light as required by article 10 of the statutory regulations:—Held, that section 419, sub-section 4 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, is not confined to Admiralty cases, but applies to all Courts; that the schooner was in fault in respect of the said breach of the collision regulations; and (BOYD, J., dissenting) that the Admiralty rule as to division of loss applied; and that the plaintiff was duly entitled to half the damages assessed by the jury. Boucher v. Clyde Shipping Co., [1904] 2 Ir. R. 129—K.B. D.

Total loss—Loss of Profit under Charterparty.—Where a collision results in the total loss of a vessel which is on a voyage under a charterparty, the owners of the wrong-doing vessel are liable for the loss of profit which would have accrued to the owners of the injured ship had the chartered voyage been accomplished. In such a case the value of the ship must be calculated as at the date when the voyage under the charterparty would have been completed. The Kate, 68 L. J. P. 41; [1899] P. 165; 80 L. T. 423; 47 W. R. 663; 8 Asp. M.C. 539—Jeune, P.

Successive Charterparties—Assessment of Damages—Loss of Profit under Charterparties.—Where a collision results in the total loss of a vessel which is under successive charterparties, the measure of damages properly includes the profit which the owners would have made if the chartered voyages had been accomplished, less a reasonable sum to cover contingencies. The Kate (68 L. J. P. 41; [1899] P. 165) affirmed. Principle of The Argentino (59 L. J. P. 17; 14 App. Cas. 519) applied. The Racine, 75 L. J. P. 83; [1906] P. 273; 95 L. T. 597; 22 T. L. R. 575; 10 Asp. M.C. 300—C.A.

Loss of Vessel—Amount—How Ascertained.]—Where a ship has been sunk by collision, and there is no market from which she can be replaced, the value of the ship to her owners as a going concern is the proper test of their loss. The Harmonides, 72 L. J. P. 9; [1903] P. 1; 87 L. T. 448; 51 W. R. 303; 9 Asp. M.C. 354—Gorell Barnes, J.

Passenger Ship—Proper Method of Assessing Value of Vessel Sunk by Collision.]—In assessing the value of a passenger steamship running in a regular line, the test in a collision action is, not what she would fetch if sold in the market, but what was her value to the owners as a going concern at the time she was sunk. Ib.

Injury to Chattel—Owner.]—The owner of a chattel who is wrongfully deprived of its use may recover substantial damages for the deprivation, though he may have incurred no out-of-pocket expenses consequent thereon. Where, therefore, a vessel is disabled by a collision with another, which is to blame, the owners of the latter are liable in substantial damages in respect of the withdrawal from service of the disabled ship, notwithstanding that the owners of the latter have a vessel in constant readiness to supply the place of any which may happen to be injured. The City of Pekin (59 L. J. P.C. 88; 15 App. Cas. 438) distinguished. The Mediana, 69 L. J. P. 35; [1900] A.C. 113; 89 L. T. 95; 48 W. R. 398; 9 Asp. M.C. 41—H.L. (E.)

Loss of Use of Vessel During Repairs—Working at a Loss to Establish New Trade—Remoteness—Special and General Damages.]—A steamship, at the time of collision, was being employed by her owners as one of a small fleet of steamers carrying full cargoes at unremunerative rates to establish a new line, though she had previously and might still have been employed in immediately profitable voyages. In the collision action, the owners of the steamship claimed (besides their out-of-pocket expenses for repairs and so forth, to which they were admittedly entitled) damages for loss of the use of the vessel during her detention for repairs, and gave evidence that certain cargo, engaged for her months ahead and which she could not take owing to her detention, would have to be carried later at the unremunerative prices contracted for, and the expected time of remunerative freights would thereby be postponed:—Held, that the consideration that the steamship at some future time might make a profit in the new line was too remote to take into account; and that in the circumstances the owners were not entitled to any special or general damages beyond their out-of-pocket expenses. The Bodlewell, 76 L. J. P. 61; [1907] P. 286; 96 L. T. 854; 23 T. L. R. 356—Bargrave Deane, J.

Demurrage of Dredger.]—The House declined to interfere with the award of damages by the District Registrar, assisted by Merchants, in a case in which errors had been made on both sides, and in which their Lordships held that, after the correction of such errors, the Registrar might have arrived at substantially the same result as was reached in the award delivered. The Marpessa, 76 L. J. P. 128; [1907] A.C. 241; 97 L. T. 1; 23 T. L. R. 572—H.L. (E.)

Repatriation Expenses—Payment by Consul—Norwegian Maritime Law, 1893—Vessel “Lost.”]—A Norwegian vessel belonging to the plaintiffs was holed and almost submerged in a foreign harbour by a collision, for which the defendants admitted liability. The plaintiffs and their underwriters abandoned the vessel to the local authority. The expenses of sending home the master and crew were paid by the Norwegian Consul; but the plaintiffs alleged that by Norwegian law they were liable to repay these expenses, and claimed to recover them from the defendants:—Held, that the vessel was “lost” within section 98 of the Norwegian Maritime Law, 1893, and that the repatriation expenses were payable under Norwegian law by the Norwegian State and not by the plaintiffs, and the plaintiffs could not recover them from the defendants. The Craftsman, 75 L. J. P. 87; [1906] P. 153; 95 L. T. 157; 10 Asp. M.C. 274—Bargrave Deane, J.

Damages by Two Collisions—Simultaneous Repairs—Damages Caused by Second Collision—Dry Dock Dues—Demurrage.]—The plaintiff's ship met with two collisions on successive days, for each of which it was necessary that she should be dry docked and repaired. The repairs of the damages from the second collision were shorter than, and were carried on in dry dock simultaneously with, the other repairs, without increasing the dry dock dues or the time occupied by the other repairs. The defendants admitted liability for the damages caused by the second collision. The plaintiffs claimed to recover from the defendants a proportion of the dry dock dues and similar expenses, and also a proportion of the demurrage during the repairs:—Held, first, as regards the dry dock dues and other similar expenses (reversing the decision of the PRESIDENT), that on the principle laid down in The Vancouver (56 L. J. Q.B. 100; 11 App. Cas. 573), the defendants were liable to pay to the plaintiffs a proportion of those expenses; but secondly, as regards the demurrage (affirming the decision of the PRESIDENT), that the defendants were not liable, for the damage caused by the second collision had not in fact caused any detention of the plaintiffs' ship. The Haversham Grange, 74 L. J. P. 115; [1905] P. 307; 93 L. T. 733; 53 W. R. 675; 10 Asp. M.C. 156; 21 T. L. R. 628—C.A.

Valued Policy on Ship—Partial Insurance—Total Loss by Collision—Payment by Underwriters—Subrogation—Recovery from Owners of Wrongdoing Vessel of Amount of Damage—Ascertained Value of Ship not Greater than Sum Paid on Policy—Fund in Court Representing Ascertained Value—Distribution of Fund between Owners and Underwriters.]—A schooner, which was insured for 1,000*l.* by a policy in which she was valued at 1,350*l.*, was run into and sunk by a steamship. The owners of the schooner were paid 1,000*l.* by the underwriters, who subsequently took proceedings in the name of the owners of the schooner against the owners of the steamship, who admitted liability. The amount of damage was referred to the Registrar, who found that 1,348*l.* 6*s.* was recoverable from the owners of the steamship, and that of that sum 1,000*l.* represented the value of the schooner. The owners of the steamship having paid the total sum into Court, the underwriters claimed that they were entitled to the whole of the 1,000*l.* representing the value of the schooner:—Held, that the owners of the schooner were entitled to $\frac{3}{4}$ of the 1,000*l.*, and the underwriters to the balance. The Commonwealth, 76 L. J. P. 106; [1907] P. 216; 97 L. T. 625; 23 T. L. R. 420—C.A.

Maritime Lien—Damage to Stage—Priorities—Insufficient Proceeds—Damage—Salvage.—A maritime lien attaches to a ship in respect of damage done by her to a landing stage, whether such damage occurs on the high seas or within the body of a county. Damage claimants are entitled to be paid out of proceeds in Court in priority to salvors whose services are rendered before the damage accrued; and semble that this would be so even if there were no maritime lien for the damage. The Veritas, 70 L. J. P. 75; [1901] P. 304; 85 L. T. 136; 50 W. R. 30; 9 Asp. M.C. 237—Gorell Barnes, J.

Ship put into Dry Dock for Repairs—Opportunity taken by Owner to effect Certain Work upon Ship—Dock Charges—By whom Borne.—Where a ship damaged by collision has to be dry docked for the purpose of effecting the necessary repairs, and the owner, taking advantage of the opportunity thus offered, does certain work of his own upon the ship—he being under no obligation to do it—there can, in assessing the damages caused by the collision, be no apportionment of the dry dock charges between the owner and the wrongdoer, but the whole of them must be borne by the latter. The Acanthus, 71 L. J. P. 14; [1902] P. 17; 85 L. T. 696; 9 Asp. M.C. 276—Jeune, F.

Claim by Cargo-owner—Agreement between Cargo-owner and Owner of Carrying Vessel—Abandonment of Voyage—Sum Paid by Cargo-owner by way of Compromise—Reasonableness of Compromise.—A collier, under charter to the plaintiffs, and carrying a cargo of coal belonging to them, came into collision with the defendants' steamship, and put back for repairs, which necessitated the discharge of the cargo. The plaintiffs, desiring to sell the cargo at once, and thus avoid its deterioration and their share of the hire of barges for warehousing till it could be re-shipped, agreed with the owners of the collier for the voyage to be abandoned on condition that the plaintiffs would charter the collier for another cargo, on completion of the repairs, at a freight not less than before, and would pay to the owners of the collier a sum in lieu of and less than their share of the barge hire thus rendered unnecessary. In cross-actions of damage by collision between the owners of the collier and the defendants as owners of the steamship, both vessels were held to blame, and the owners of the collier recovered from the defendants a half of the damage which they had sustained in consequence of the collision. The plaintiffs claimed to recover from the defendants half the sum payable by themselves under the said agreement with the owners of the collier. The Registrar reported that no part of the present claim had been dealt with in the ship's reference:—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover the sum claimed. The Minnetonka, 74 L. J. P. 97; [1905] P. 206; 93 L. T. 581; 53 W. R. 521; 10 Asp. M.C. 142; 21 T. L. R. 407—C.A.

Damages to be Borne Equally—Liability for Payments to Crew.—A collision having occurred between two vessels, an agreement was made between the owners of the vessels that each was to blame and that "the damages rising therefrom ought to be borne equally by the owners of both." Subsequently the representatives of the seamen, who were drowned owing to the collision on board one of the vessels, made claims against the owners of the other vessel, and these claims were settled by the payment of a sum of money. The owners who paid the claims sought to recover one-half thereof from the owners of the other vessel under the agreement:—Held, that the sum so paid was not damage arising out of the collision, that the representatives of the seamen could not have recovered against the owners of the vessel on which the seamen were serving, inasmuch as the collision was caused by the negligence of a fellow-servant, and that therefore one-half of the sum so paid could not be recovered from the owners of that vessel. The General Havellock, 21 T. L. R. 438—Bargrave Deane, J.

(m) Limitation of Liability.

"Owner"—Charterer by Demise.—Charterers who have hired a vessel for a period, the master and crew to be their servants, the vessel to be repaired and insured by them and the owners to be indemnified by them against all claims in consequence of collision or accident, are not the "owners" of the vessel within sections 503 and 504 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, and therefore are not entitled to any statutory limitation of liability in respect of loss or damage to person or property. The Steam Hopper No. 66, 76 L. J. P. 110; [1907] P. 254; 97 L. T. 360; 23 T. L. R. 414—C.A.

Retrospective Operation of Statute.—Section 69 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1906, has no retrospective operation. On July 25, 1906, a decree was made in a collision action pronouncing the steamship L. alone to blame for a collision with the F. In May, 1907, the reference to assess damages was heard, and on June 3, 1907, the Registrar issued his report as to the amounts of the claims against the L. arising out of the collision. On June 7, 1907, the owners of the L. issued a writ for limitation of their liability, and claimed that the tonnage of the L. for this purpose should be calculated according to section 69 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1906, which came into operation on June 1, 1907. This section provides that for the purpose of limitation of liability the tonnage of a steamship shall be her "registered tonnage with the addition of any engine-room space deducted for the purpose of ascertaining that tonnage," and that these words shall be substituted for certain other words in section 503 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894:—Held, that section 69 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1906, was not retrospective, and that the owners of the L. must limit their liability according to the original words of section 503 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894. The Langdale, 76 L. J. P. 154; 23 T. L. R. 683—Bargrave Deane, J.

Loss Due to Shipowner's Negligence.—The plaintiffs shipped goods on board the defendants' ship for carriage from London to Buenos Ayres under a bill of lading containing a clause which provided that the defendants should not be accountable to any extent for certain specified goods, which did not include goods of the kind shipped by the plaintiffs, "nor for any other goods of whatever description beyond the amount of 2½. per cubic foot for any one package." The plaintiffs' goods were lost in the course of the voyage through the negligence of the defendants. In an action to recover the full value of the goods,—Held, that, notwithstanding that the loss was due to the defendants' negligence, they were only liable to the limited extent provided by the bill of lading. Baxter's Leather Co. v. Royal Mail Steam Packet Co., 77 L. J. K.B. 417; [1908] 1 K.B. 796—Bigham, J.

Gross Tonnage—Certificate of Registry—Certificate respecting Double Bottom.—In an action for limitation of liability, the gross tonnage in the case of a British vessel will be taken as shewn by her certificate of registry, or in the case of a foreign vessel, to which an Order in Council made under section 84, sub-section (1) of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, applies, by her certificate of registry or other national papers, without any necessity for adducing a certificate under section 81 respecting the double bottom for water ballast. The Zanzibar (61 L. J. P. 81; [1892] P. 233) considered. The Cordilleras, 73 L. J. P. 13; [1904] P. 90; 89 L. T. 673; 9 Asp. M.C. 506—Gorell Barnes, J.

Ship not Registered—Not Exceeding Fifteen Tons Burden—Exemption from Registration.—The words "tons burden" in section 3, sub-section 1 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, do not mean "gross" tonnage, but the "net" tonnage which is arrived at after deducting from the gross tonnage the allowances sanctioned by the Act. The Brunel, 69 L. J. P. 8; [1900] P. 24; 81 L. T. 500; 48 W. R. 243; 9 Asp. M.C. 10—C.A.

In calculating the tonnage (for the purposes of limitation of liability) of an unregistered vessel which has not been measured under the provisions of the Act, but which is exempt from registration under the above-mentioned sub-section, crew space must be included. Id.

Deduction of Crew Space—Danish Ship.—The effect of the words "certified under the regulations scheduled to this Act with regard thereto" in section 503, sub-section 2 (a) of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, is, in cases of limitation of liability, to limit the right to deduct crew space from the gross tonnage of the ship, whose owners are seeking to limit their liability, to cases where the certificate mentioned in the third paragraph of the Sixth Schedule to the Act has been given by a surveyor of ships under the Act to the Collector of Customs, at the time when the ship is registered or re-registered as a British ship. The Cathay (No. 2), 69 L. J. P. 89; 82 L. T. 823; 9 Asp. M.C. 100—Gorell Barnes, J.

Certificate of Board of Trade—Foreign Vessel.—Danish vessels are, by virtue of Order in Council of November 21, 1895, issued under section 84 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, to be deemed of the tonnage denoted in their certificate of registry in the same manner and to the same effect and for the same purposes as the tonnage denoted in the certificate of registry of a British ship is deemed to be the tonnage of that ship. The owners of a Danish vessel with a Danish certificate were held not entitled, in ascertaining the tonnage of their vessel for the purposes of section 503 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, to deduct the tonnage set forth in the certificate as taken up by crew space, where such space had not been inspected and certified by one of the surveyors under the Act, as required by Schedule VI. Olga (Owners) v. Anglia (Owners), 7 F. 730—Ct. of Sess.

Title of Suit—Description of Plaintiffs—Life Claims—Bail in Lieu of Payment into Court.—Where the owners of a vessel seek to limit their liability in respect of a collision under the provisions of sections 503 and 504 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, it is not sufficient to describe the plaintiffs on the writ as "The owners of the ship or vessel," for, the action being one for personal relief, the names of the owners of the vessel at the time of the collision should be set out on the face of the writ. Where the owners of the vessel at fault institute a suit for the purpose of limiting their liability in respect of a collision which has caused loss of life, and in respect of which loss of life the claims made do not amount to the total limit of the owners' statutory liability, the Court may grant a decree on their giving bail for an amount to be fixed by the Court and an undertaking to give bail if required for the balance of their statutory liability, instead of requiring them to pay into Court the total amount of their statutory liability in respect of the life claims. The Inventor, 93 L. T. 189—Gorell Barnes, J.

Names of Owners of Ship.—In an action for limitation of liability, though strictly the names of all the plaintiffs who are seeking to limit their liability should be stated in the writ, it is sufficient in the writ to describe the plaintiffs as the owners of the vessel, provided that the affidavit made in support of the claim and the certified copy of the ship's register exhibited thereto shew clearly who are the owners at the date of the collision. The Blanche, 21 T. L. R. 145—Gorell Barnes, J.

Claims in Respect of Loss of Life—Interest.—In actions for limitation of liability for a collision, where loss of life has occurred, the wrongdoer is liable, in addition to the 7½. per ton payable in respect of such loss of life, to pay interest thereon from the date of the collision until payment into Court. The Crathie, 66 L. J. P. 93; [1897] P. 178; 76 L. T. 534; 45 W. R. 631; 8 Asp. M.C. 256—Gorell Barnes, J.

Time fixed for Bringing in Claims—Lord Campbell's Act—Certain Claims not made within Time Fixed—Payment out of Court before Expiration of Year from Death.—In a suit for limitation of liability in respect of a collision involving loss of life no claims were made within the time fixed by the limitation decree in respect of certain seamen who were drowned. The Court ordered the balance of the fund in Court, after satisfying those claims which had been brought in, to be paid out to the plaintiffs in the limitation suit, although the twelve calendar months from the death of the deceased person mentioned in section 3 of the Fatal Accidents Act, 1846, within which actions might be brought, had not expired. The Alma, 72 L. J. P. 21; [1903] P. 55; 88 L. T. 64; 51 W. R. 415; 9 Asp. M.C. 375—Jeune, P.

— Proof of Ownership at Date of Collision.]

—Where the owners of a vessel seek to limit their liability in respect of a collision under the provisions of sections 503 and 504 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, and the evidence in support of their claim is given by affidavit, the affidavit as to whether loss of life or personal injury was occasioned by the collision should be made by some person having knowledge of the facts, and the certified copy of the register proving the ownership of the vessel should be a certified copy of the register at the date of the collision. The Rosslyn, 92 L. T. 177; 10 Asp. M.C. 24—Gorell Barnes, J.

Passengers' Luggage.—A shipowner is entitled to limit his liability in respect of the loss of passengers' personal effects. The Stella (No. 1), 81 L. T. 235; 8 Asp. M.C. 605—Bucknill, J.

Cross-actions of Damages between the Two Shipowners—Decree in Favour of one of the Shipowners—Petition for Limitation of Liability at the Instance of the other Shipowner—Competency of Re-opening the Question of Damages at the Instance of Cargo-owners.—A collision between the s.s. Anglia and the s.s. Olga resulted in the sinking of the Anglia and in the Olga being slightly damaged. In cross-actions of damages between the owners of the Anglia and the owners of the Olga, both vessels were found to be in fault, and the owners of the Anglia obtained decree against the owners of the Olga for 7,149l. 14s. 7d., being one-half of the value of the Anglia under deduction of one-half of the damage to the Olga. The owners of the Olga then presented a petition under sections 503 and 504 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, for limitation of their liability to 6,215l. 4s., being 8l. per ton on a tonnage of 776.90, the tonnage of the Olga. The owners of the Anglia lodged a claim in the petition claiming to be ranked on the sum of 6,215l. 4s. for 7,149l. 14s. 7d., the sum in the decree obtained by them in the cross-actions of damages. The owners of the cargo of the Anglia also lodged a claim in which, besides claiming to be ranked in respect of the value of the cargo, they maintained that the decree for 7,149l. 14s. 7d. was not binding on them; that the value of the Anglia, on the basis of which that decree was reached, was a gross over-estimate of her true value; that the owners of the Olga had no interest to contest, and had not in fact contested, the question of the value of the Anglia, in respect that, once it was decided that both vessels were to blame, the question of exact values became immaterial to the owners of the Olga, whose limit of 8l. per ton was reached by the finding that both vessels were to blame. The cargo-owners of the Anglia did not aver that the decree for 7,149l. 14s. 7d. had been obtained collusively or of consent or by way of compromise:—Held, that the claim of the owners of the Anglia, having been duly constituted against the debtor by a decree in foro, must be taken at the amount fixed in the decree. Olga (Owners) v. Anglia (Owners), 7 F. 739—Ct. of Sess.

Costs.—The owners of the Olga petitioned under sections 503 and 504 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, for limitation of their liability for loss caused by a collision (with the Anglia) in which both vessels were found to be in fault. Claims were lodged for the owners of the Anglia, and for the owners of the cargo on board the Anglia:—Held, that the claimants were entitled to the costs of their respective claims and relative procedure against the petitioners, the owners of the Olga. Olga (Owners) v. Anglia (Owners), [1907] S.C. 1045—Ct. of Sess.

(m) Foreign Ship.

Action in Personam—Foreign Plaintiff—Counterclaim—Security for Judgment therein.]

—Where the foreign owners of a foreign vessel bring an action in personam against the owners of an English vessel to recover damages for collision, and the defendants counterclaim for the damages sustained by them in respect of the same collision, there is no jurisdiction either under section 34 of the Admiralty Court Act, 1861, or under section 24, sub-sections 5 and 7 of the Judicature Act, 1873, to order the plaintiffs to give security to answer judgment upon the counterclaim. The James Westoll, 74 L. High Seas—Breach of Regulations—Presumption of Fault—Application of section 419, sub-section 4 of Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, to Foreign Ships.—In a case of collision outside the territorial waters of the United Kingdom, a point, raised on behalf of the defendants, that the statutory presumption of fault created by section 419, sub-section 4 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, did not apply in the case of a foreign ship, and that such ship could not, therefore, be held to blame for a breach of article 16, unless the Court should be of opinion that the breach of the regulation in fact contributed to the collision, was not decided, the defendants' ship being found to blame upon the facts. The Koning Willem I., 72 L. J. P. 28; [1903] P. 114; 88 L. T. 807; 9 Asp. M.C. 425—Bucknill, J.

Cross-Actions—High Court and County Court Actions—Transfer of County Court Action to High Court—Conduct of Consolidated Actions.]

—Where cross-actions for collision have been commenced, the one in the High Court and the other in a County Court, and the County Court action is transferred to the High Court and consolidated with the High Court action, the conduct of the consolidated actions will be given to the plaintiffs in the action commenced in the High Court, unless it is clear that in point of time the County Court action was commenced first. The Mersey, 70 L. J. P. 100; [1901] P. 369; 85 L. T. 584—Jeune, P.

Title of Suit—Description of Plaintiffs—Life Claims—Bail in Lieu of Payment into Court.]

—Where the owners of a vessel seek to limit their liability in respect of a collision under the provisions of sections 503 and 504 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, it is not sufficient to describe the plaintiffs on the writ as "The owners of the ship or vessel," for the action being one for personal relief, the names of the owners of the vessel at the time of the collision should be set out on the face of the writ. Where the owners of the vessel at fault institute a suit for the purpose of limiting their liability in respect of a collision which has caused loss of life and in respect of which loss of life the claims made do not amount to the total limit of the owners' statutory liability, the Court may grant a decree on their giving bail for an amount to be fixed by the Court and an undertaking to give bail if required for the balance of their statutory liability, instead of requiring them to pay into Court the total amount of their statutory liability in respect of the life claims. The Inventor, 93 L. T. 189; 10 Asp. M.C. 99—Gorell Barnes, J.

Foreign Court—Proceedings in—Sale of Ship—Receipt of Proceeds—Right to Claim against Fund in Court.]—Where in the limitation proceedings the fund paid into Court in respect of loss of ship, goods, &c., amount to the full 8l. per ton of the ship's tonnage, persons who have taken proceedings in respect of those matters in a foreign Court and received the proceeds of the sale of the wrongdoer's ship in those proceedings, but whose claims have not been thereby satisfied, are not debarred from claiming against the fund in Court, but will be compelled to give credit for any sums they have received in the proceedings abroad. Ib.

Action in Rem—Release on Bail—Judgment for Amount Exceeding Bail—Seizure of Ship Released on Bail.]—Where bail has been given by the owners of a ship arrested in an action in rem to recover damages for a collision, and the ship is then released, such ship can again be seized under a writ of fi. fa. for any amount found by the Court to be due from the owners in excess of the amount for which bail was given. The Gemma, 68 L. J. P. 110; [1899] P. 285; 81 L. T. 379; 8 Asp. M.C. 585—C.A.

(p) Costs.

Discretion.]—In a limitation of liability suit the plaintiffs objected to certain items of the defendants' claim for damage to cargo sustained in consequence of the collision, upon the ground that a large proportion of the damage was owing to the defendants' failure to use due diligence after the collision to minimise the damage. The Registrar found that the plaintiffs' objections were well founded and allowed only a portion of the defendants' claim, and ordered each party to pay their own costs of the reference. From this order the defendants appealed by motion:—Held, that, though there is a general rule of practice that the plaintiff in a limitation of liability suit must pay the costs, that practice is not invariable; that the Registrar has discretion in a proper case to make such order as to costs as he thinks just; and that his order was right. The Rijnstroom, 80 L. T. 422; 8 Asp. M.C. 538—Bucknill, J.

—Amount Recovered not Exceeding 300l.]—In an action of collision in the Admiralty Division the defendants gave bail in the sum of 600l., and after the pleadings had been closed they admitted liability. The plaintiffs then filed a claim in the Registry for 330l., and the action was eventually settled for 218l. The Court, in its discretion, allowed the plaintiffs costs on the High Court scale, though the amount recovered did not exceed 300l., as it thought that the case was rightly brought in the High Court. The Emden, 23 T. L. R. 546—Bucknill, J.

Admission by Successful Appellants that their Vessel in Fault—Both Vessels Found to Blame.]—An appellant in a collision action who, admitting that his own ship was in fault, is successful on the appeal in obtaining judgment that the other vessel was also to blame, is entitled to the costs of the appeal. Order in The Ceto (14 App. Cas. 670) followed. The London (No. 2), 74 L. J. P. 71; [1905] P. 152; 93 L. T. 393; 53 W. R. 419; 10 Asp. M.C. 109; 21 T. L. R. 339—C.A.

Action of Damage—Co-defendants Each Alleging Negligence on the Part of the Other—Successful Defendant.]—In an action in the City of London Court for damage by collision the plaintiffs sued the owners of a ketch, the vessel which did the damage, and the dock company, in obedience to the orders of whose dockmaster it was alleged by the first-named defendants that the action was taken which caused the collision. The dock company alleged that the collision was solely caused by the negligence of those on board the ketch. The County Court Judge gave judgment against both defendants; but on appeal the Divisional Court held the dock company was alone responsible, and, following the case of The River Lagan (57 L. J. P. 28), condemned the dock company in the costs of the owners of the ketch both in the Court below and upon the appeal. The Mystery, 71 L. J. P. 39; [1902] P. 115; 86 L. T. 359; 9 Asp. 10. PILOTAGE.

When Compulsory — Trinity House Outport District—Voyage—Beyrout to Ipswich and Leith—Part Cargo Discharged at Ipswich—Ship Proceeding with Remainder of Cargo to Leith.]—A ship with a cargo from a port in Turkey, which has discharged part of that cargo in Great Britain, and is proceeding to another port in Great Britain to deliver the rest of her cargo, is not a "ship employed in the coasting trade of the United Kingdom" within the meaning of sub-section 1 of section 625 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894; nor is she a "ship trading from any port in Great Britain . . . to . . . any port in Europe north and east of Brest" within the meaning of sub-section 3 of the same section. The Glanystwyth, 68 L. J. P. 87; [1899] P. 118; 80 L. T. 204; 8 Asp. M.C. 513—Jeune, P.

—River Tyne—Vessel Carrying Passengers between Two Ports in the British Islands.]—Pilotage is compulsory in the river Tyne for vessels carrying passengers between two ports in the British Islands. The Johann Sverdrup (56 L. J. P. 63; 12 P. D. 43) distinguished. The Warsaw, 67 L. J. P. 50; [1898] P. 127; 78 L. T. 327; 46 W. R. 638; 8 Asp. M.C. 399—Gorell Barnes, J.

— River Scheldt—Liability of Shipowner.—Although pilotage is compulsory in the River Scheldt in the sense that by Dutch law vessels are obliged to take a pilot on board and pay pilotage dues, the charge of the ship is not surrendered to him so as to free the owners from liability for a collision caused by his negligence. The Prins Hendrik, 68 L. J. P. 86; [1899] P. 177; 80 L. T. 838; 8 Asp. M.C. 548—Gorell Barnes, J.

— Blyth Harbour—Foreign Ship.—The port of Blyth being—within the meaning of section 6 of 41 Geo. 3, c. 86 (local)—one of the “creeks or members” of the port of Newcastle, which has not been affected by subsequent legislation, remains—as regards pilotage—under the jurisdiction of the Trinity House of Newcastle-on-Tyne, and pilotage is compulsory on foreign ships within its limits under that section. The Holar, 69 L. J. P. 140; [1901] P. 7; 83 L. T. 436; 49 W. R. 224; 9 Asp. M.C. 143—Gorell Barnes, J.

— Liverpool—Rates—Extra Remuneration.—In the port of Liverpool, pilots who pilot outward bound vessels from the docks to a landing stage, in order to take on board passengers and their baggage and the mails, are entitled to extra remuneration for so doing; and pilots who pilot inward bound vessels to the cattle stages for the purpose of landing cattle or sheep before entering dock or anchoring in the river, are entitled to extra remuneration for so doing, as in neither case are such services covered by the compulsory pilotage rates fixed under the Mersey Docks Acts Consolidation Act, 1858. The Servia. The Corinthia, 67 L. J. P. 36; [1898] P. 36; 78 L. T. 54; 46 W. R. 492; 8 Asp. M.C. 353—Gorell Barnes, J.

Pilotage Dues—Collier Carrying Coal for the Navy—King's Ship.—A vessel owned by his Majesty's Government, and appearing in the Navy List, was exclusively engaged in going to and from various ports carrying coal for the Navy. The appellant, the master of the vessel, held a Board of Trade certificate, and was employed by the Devonport dockyard authorities under the Admiralty. He was not an officer of the Royal Navy. The crew were engaged at the dockyard under articles of agreement. The respondent, a licensed pilot, at the request of the appellant, piloted the vessel into the port of Cardiff. Upon proceedings by the respondent against the appellant for the recovery of the pilotage dues authorised by by-laws made pursuant to the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, and the Bristol Channel Pilotage Act, 1861, the magistrate gave judgment for the respondent for the amount claimed:—Held, that the vessel was a King's ship, and that the appellant was not liable for the payment of the pilotage dues. Symons v. Baker, 74 L. J. K.B. 965; [1905] 2 K.B. 723; 93 L. T. 548; 54 W. R. 159; 10 Asp. M.C. 129; 21 T. L. R. 734—D.

Exemption—“Ship trading from any port in the London district to any port of Europe north and east of Brest.”—A ship carrying a cargo from a foreign port to London, and thence, without taking any fresh cargo on board, proceeding to Rotterdam, is a “ship trading from” a “port in Great Britain within the London district to” a “port in Europe north and east of Brest,” within the meaning of section 625 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, and therefore exempt from compulsory pilotage. The Rutland, 66 L. J. P. 105; [1897] A.C. 333; 76 L. T. 662; 8 Asp. M.C. 270—H.L. (E.)

— Ship Navigating within Limits of Port—Passengers—Distressed Seamen.—Distressed seamen taken on board a ship to be brought home under the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, are not “passengers” within the meaning of section 625 of that Act; and therefore a vessel, which is in other respects within the provisions of that section, is not by reason of having such persons on board excluded from the exemptions from compulsory pilotage contained therein. The Clymene, 66 L. J. P. 152; [1897] P. 295; 76 L. T. 811; 46 W. R. 109; 8 Asp. M.C. 237—Gorell Barnes, J.

Vessel Bound from Norway or Sweden—Port North and East of Brest.—The provisions of section 1 of the Merchant Shipping (Exemption from Pilotage) Act, 1897, abolishing exemptions from compulsory pilotage contained in 6 Geo. 4, c. 125, s. 59, and an Order in Council dated February 18, 1854, do not abolish the exemptions from compulsory pilotage contained in section 625 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894. A vessel bound from Norway or Sweden to this country is a vessel trading from a port in Europe north and east of Brest within the meaning of section 625 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, and is consequently, when not carrying passengers, exempt from compulsory pilotage. The Columbus, 80 L. T. 203; 8 Asp. M.C. 488—Jeune, P.

Decision of Pilotage Authority—Appeal—Power of Magistrate to Extend Time.—By rule 1 of the Pilotage Appeal Rules (Stipendiary and Metropolitan Police Magistrates), 1890, notice of appeal to a magistrate from the decision of a pilotage authority is to be given in writing to the magistrate and to the pilotage authority by the person aggrieved within seven days after he shall have received a notification of such decision “or within such further time as may be allowed by the magistrate”:—Held, that a magistrate has power under the rule to extend the time for appealing, although the prescribed time has expired before the date of the application for the extension. *Re v. 11. TOWAGE.

Contract to Dock Ship.—The Court implied, in a contract by tugs to take a ship from her anchorage in Grimsby Roads and dock her at Grimsby, a term that if difficulties arose which prevented the ship from being docked the tugs would take her back to her anchorage again. The Aboukir, 21 T. L. R. 200—Gorell Barnes, J.

Failure to Render Material Benefit—Engaged Services—Failure to Accomplish the Service—

Engagement to Tow—Right to Reward.]—The steamship N. fell in with the steamship D. in the North Atlantic Ocean. The D., which was flying the signal "N C," engaged the N. to tow her. The weather was very bad. The N. succeeded in making fast to the D., and towed her a short distance. Shortly afterwards the tow-rope parted, and the N., after standing by for some time, continued her course, and did not attempt to render further assistance. The D. was subsequently saved by another steamship, the P. Upon the owners, master, and crew of the N. claiming salvage reward, Held, that the action must be dismissed, upon the grounds that the N. had not rendered any material benefit to the D., and that she had not accomplished the service she was engaged to perform—namely, to tow; an engagement to tow is only fulfilled by the vessel engaged towing the other into a port of safety. The Melpomene (L. Contract to Tow from One Place to Another for a Fixed Sum—Part Performance—Complete Performance becoming Impossible—Indivisibility of Contract.]—A contract to tow a vessel for a fixed sum from one place to another, the complete performance of which becomes impossible through no fault of either party, is an indivisible contract, and the owners of a tug rendering towage services under such a contract are not entitled to be paid pro rata, or any sum, for the towage actually performed. The Madras, 67 L. 13. SALVAGE.

Subject-matter of Salvage Services.]—Salvage (apart from life salvage) is by the maritime law of England confined to ship, apparel, and cargo, or what has formed part of these, and to freight earned by carriage of cargo, and is not applicable to a gas float used as a floating beacon, which, though capable of being moved on the face of the water, is not "a ship or vessel" in the sense in which the Merchant Shipping Act uses these terms, or in any fair sense of the words. Gas Float Whiffon (No. 2), 66 L. J. P. 99; [1897] A.C. 337; 76 L. T. 663; 8 Asp. M.C. 272—H.L. (E.). Affirming, 44 W. R. 263—C.A.

Services Rendered by Request—No Actual Benefit Resulting Therefrom—Principle upon which Awards will be Made.]—Where a vessel stands by or renders services to another upon request, even though no benefit results from her so doing, she is entitled to salvage remuneration. The Cambrian, 76 L. T. 504; 8 Asp. M.C. 263—Gorell Barnes, J.

Signals of Distress Exhibited—Steamtug

Going out to Assistance of Vessel—Services no Longer Required.]—A vessel which goes to the assistance of another in distress, in answer to signals of distress made by the latter, is not entitled to salvage remuneration if the vessel which made the signals no longer requires her services when they are offered. The Elswick Park, 72 L. J. P. 79; [1904] P. 76; 89 L. T. 217; 9 Asp. M.C. 481—Bucknill, J.

Vessel in Distress—Telegram Sent—Receivers already Aware of Fact and Sending Assistance.]—The mere sending of a telegram to the effect that a vessel is in distress to persons who are already aware of the fact and are preparing to send to her assistance does not entitle the sender to salvage remuneration. The Marguerite Molinos, 72 L. J. P. 56; [1903] P. 160; 89 L. T. 192; 9 Asp. M.C. 421—Bucknill, J.

Agreement to Render Services, not knowing Services already Partly Rendered by Servants—Performance of Agreement.]—Where one party to an agreement agrees to render certain services by his servants at a time when, without his knowing it, his servants have already partly rendered these services, he is none the less bound to treat the acts so done by his servants as in performance of, and done upon the terms of, the agreement. The Friesland, 78 L. J. P. 121; [1904] P. 345; 91 L. T. 324; 20 T. L. R. 699; 10 Asp. M.C. 9—Jeune, P.

The owners of a vessel may bind the master and crew without their assent by an agreement with other parties as to future but not as to past salvage services. Ib.

Agreement of Owners of a Tug and a Disabled Vessel for Services on Towage Terms—Salvage Services Rendered before Agreement—Rights of Owners, Master, and Crew to Salvage.]—Where tug-owners agreed with the owners of a disabled vessel that their tug should render services to her on towage terms, not knowing that, before the agreement was made, a substantial part of the services (in themselves salvage services) had been performed, the tug-master having previously sighted the vessel, and gone to her assistance, Held, that the tug-owners were bound by the agreement that the services should be rendered on towage terms and could not recover salvage reward, but that the master and crew were not so bound and were entitled to salvage reward. The Inchmaree (68 L. J. P. 30; [1899] P. 111), col. 2417, followed. Ib.

Agreement to Attempt to Tow.]—A vessel which contracts to do her best to tow another to a named port, and, after honestly attempting so to do, fails through no fault of her own, is entitled to remuneration. The Benlariq (58 L. J. P. 24; 14 P. D. 3) followed. The August Korff, 72 L. J. P. 53; [1903] P. 166; 89 L. T. 194; 9 Asp. M.C. 428—Bucknill, J.

Interrupted Services Contributing to Ultimate Safety.]—Services unavoidably interrupted before completion, which nevertheless materially contribute to the ultimate safety of the saved property, entitle those performing them to salvage remuneration. The Atlas (Lush. 513) followed. Ib.

Agreement on "no cure no pay" Principle—Reasonableness—Existence of Alternative Agreement—Agreement with Ship's Agents.]—A steamship of the defendants having run on a reef, the master sent a message to the plaintiffs, who had acted as the ship's agents at a neighbouring port, asking them to engage a tug to get the ship off on the "no cure no pay" principle. The plaintiffs hired a tug at the rate of 60*l.* a day, making themselves personally responsible, and informed the defendants by telegraph of what they were doing. The tug proceeded to the ship having on board a representative of the plaintiffs, who took with him a letter from the plaintiffs to the master stating that it was impracticable to get assistance on the "no cure no pay" principle. The master refused to accept the services of the tug on the footing on which she was engaged, and eventually entered into an agreement on behalf of his owners with the plaintiffs' representative to pay the plaintiffs, on the "no cure no pay" principle, the sum of 4,000*l.* if they succeeded in getting the ship off. The tug got the ship off in two days. The plaintiffs claimed 4,000*l.*:—Held, that the agreement for 4,000*l.* was one which ought not to be enforced, because it was unreasonable for the master to enter into any such agreement when he was in a position to get, under the existing agreement for 60*l.* a day, practically all that he got under the new agreement. The Crusader, 76 L. J. P. 102; [1907] P. 196; 97 L. T. 20; 23 T. L. R. 382—C.A. Affirming, 10 Asp. M.C. 353—Gorell Barnes, P.

Agreement—Services already Performed—Authority of Master of Salving Vessel.]—The master of a salving vessel has no authority to make an agreement binding his owners and crew as to the remuneration to be paid for a salvage service already performed, except where such service is merely some slight step in one continuous salvage operation, and would, by itself, give no right to salvage remuneration. The Inchmaree, 68 L. J. P. 30; [1899] P. 111; 80 L. T. 201; 8 Asp. M.C. 486—Phillimore, J.

Extortionate Agreement for Salvage.]—A sailing vessel dragged her anchors in Holyhead Harbour during a gale of wind towards another sailing vessel, which was also at anchor. In answer to signals made by the vessel which had dragged, a steamtug came out, but her master refused to put a rope on board unless he was paid 1,000*l.* for his services. This sum the master of the sailing ship eventually agreed to give him, and the tug, having held the ship till she had weighed her anchors, towed her away. In an action brought by the owners, master, and crew of the tug against both sailing ships, claiming 1,000*l.* under the agreement against the ship whose anchors had dragged, and salvage against the other,—THE COURT in the one case set aside the agreement as inequitable, and awarded a sum of 200*l.* to the plaintiffs, with costs on the County Court scale, and in the other dismissed the action, the Elder Brethren having advised the Court that the circumstances were not such as to have led a prudent master himself to engage a tug to tow the other ship away. The Port Caledonia and the Anna, 72 L. J. P. 60; [1903] P. 184; 89 L. T. 216; 52 W. R. 223; 9 Asp. M.C. 479—Bucknill, J.

Services Rendered by Vessels Specially

Equipped for Salvage Purposes.]—The Court, in order to encourage the maintenance of vessels specially built and equipped for, and solely employed in, rendering salvage services, will take that factor into consideration and will be liberal in awarding salvage remuneration for services rendered by such vessels to a vessel which but for such services would have become a total loss. The Glengyle, 67 L. J. P. 48; [1898] P. 97; 78 L. T. 139; 46 W. R. 308; 8 Asp. M.C. 341—C.A. Affirmed, next case.

Services Rendered by Steamtug Kept by National Lifeboat Institution expressly to Tow Lifeboat—No Actual Services Rendered by Crew of Lifeboat—Identification of Lifeboat Crew with Tug.]—A steamtug belonging to the National Lifeboat Institution, and kept expressly to tow the lifeboat, proceeded with the lifeboat in tow to a vessel in distress. The tug took the vessel in tow, the lifeboat during the towage being made fast astern of the vessel. The lifeboat crew did not render any actual service. It was proved that the tug and lifeboat were obliged to remain together:—Held, that the crew of the lifeboat were entitled to be rewarded as salvors of property. The Auguste Legembre, 71 L. J. P. 53; [1902] P. 123; 86 L. T. 358; 50 W. R. 622; 9 Asp. M.C. 279—Gorell Barnes, J.

Services of Steamtug declined by Vessel in Distress, but accepted as a Precaution by another Tug engaged in rendering Services—Award.]—The master of a vessel already in tow of two steamtugs which were rendering salvage services, declined to accept the assistance of a third tug which offered her services. One of the tugs already towing, however, directed the third tug to make fast ahead of her, in case further assistance should be required. The services of the third tug were not in fact required, but she assisted in towing the vessel to a place of safety:—Held, that the third tug was entitled to a salvage award. Id.

Service by Steam-tugs—Vessel in Tow—Towing Clear of another Vessel—Claim against other Vessel.]—A steamship, whilst leaving the Alexandra Dock at Hull in charge of two steam-tugs, fouled her propeller and drove foul of a French barque which, with tugs in attendance upon her, was waiting to enter the dock. The vessels drove together until the barque went ashore. The tugs in attendance on the steamer subsequently towed her away clear of the barque. In an action in which the tugs in attendance on the steamer claimed salvage against the barque,—THE COURT dismissed the claim on the ground that it was not satisfied that, in the circumstances of the case, a reasonably prudent man in the position of the master of the barque would have engaged the tugs on his own behalf to tow the steamer clear. The Annapolis (Lush. 355) and The Vandyc (7 P. D. 42) followed. The Emilie Galline, 72 L. J. P. 39; [1903] P. 106; 88 L. T. 743; 9 Asp. M.C. 401—Bucknill, J.

Tug and Tow—Collision of Tow with another Vessel—Negligence of both Tow and Master of Tug—Subsequent Services to Tow by Tug—Claims for Salvage by Owners and Crew of Tug.]—Where a collision or other occurrence has originated in the negligence of both a tug and her tow, and that occurrence requires services of a salvage nature to be rendered by the tug to the tow, the tug cannot claim salvage remuneration. The Duc d'Aumale (No. 2), 73 L. J. P. 8; [1904] P. 60; 89 L. T. 486; 52 W. R. 319; 9 Asp. M.C. 502; 20 T. L. R. 14—Gorell Barnes, J.

A collision occurred between two vessels, one in tow of a tug, caused by the negligence of both the tow and the tug, and the negligence of the tug was that of her master alone. Owing to the collision the tug subsequently rendered services of a salvage nature to the tow, but the crew of the tug incurred no risk, and did nothing more than their ordinary duties on the tug. The towage contract provided "that to all intents and purposes whatsoever the master and crew of the tug . . . shall be deemed . . . to be the servants of the owners of the vessel . . . towed," and was to the effect that the owners of the tug should not be answerable, and the owners of the tow should indemnify them against all liability for any loss or damage to the tow arising from the negligence of the master of the tug, and that the hiring of the tug was not to prejudice any claim of the tug-owners to salvage.—Held, that neither the owners of the tug nor her crew could recover salvage remuneration. Ib.

Towage Contract—Counterclaim—Contributory Negligence—Pilot.—Where a ship in tow of a steam-tug suffers damage by reason of the negligence of those on board the tug, her owners are entitled to recover in respect of that damage from the owners of the tug, notwithstanding the fact that the negligence of a pilot in charge of the ship by compulsion of law contributed to the mischief. The Adam W. Spies, 70 L. J. P. 25—Jeune, P.

Damage Sustained by Salvaging Ship in Rendering Service—Liability of Vessel Salvaged—Burden of Proof.—Where a vessel is injured or lost in rendering salvage services the presumption is that the injury or loss was caused by the necessities of the service and not by the default of the salvors, to whom compensation may be awarded in respect thereof. The Baku Standard, 70 L. J. P.C. 98; [1901] A.C. 549; 84 L. T. 738; 9 Asp. M.C. 197—P.C.

Cargo of Government Stores—Action in Personam—Salved Vessel on Time Charter—Charterers Responsible for Safe Delivery.—Charterers of a ship on a time charter who receive goods on board the ship for purposes of delivery in consideration of freight, and who are responsible for their safe delivery, have such an interest in the goods as will support a claim for salvage services rendered in respect of them. The salvors may recover in an action in personam. The Steel Barges (59 L. J. P. 77; 15 P. D. 142) followed. Port Victor (Cargo ex), 70 L. J. P. 52; [1901] P. 243; 84 L. T. 677; 49 W. R. 578; 9 Asp. M.C. 182—C.A.

Claim by Master and Crew—Vessels Insured in Mutual Insurance Clubs—Agreement by Owners to Determine all Questions of Salvage by Arbitration—Proof.—In an action for salvage brought by the master and crew of one fishing vessel against the owner of another such vessel the defendant sought to prove that the plaintiffs had, by acquiescence, agreed to be bound by an arrangement alleged to have been arrived at by the respective owners, by which all questions of salvage were to be referred to the arbitration of the committee of the mutual insurance clubs, in which the vessels were respectively insured. THE COURT found that the plaintiffs had not so agreed to be bound. The Margery, 71 L. J. P. 83; [1902] P. 157; 86 L. T. 863; 50 W. R. 654; 9 Asp. M.C. 304—D.

Claim by Pilot on Board Salvaging Ship.—A pilot employed to pilot a vessel which is towing another vessel in distress is entitled as against the salved property to be remunerated as a salvor in respect of his services to that property, if in the performance of them he runs risk outside what can reasonably be considered to have been within the ordinary scope of his employment as pilot. The Santiago, 70 L. J. P. 12; 83 L. T. 439; 9 Asp. M.C. 147—Gorell Barnes, J.

Perishable Cargo—Danger to Cargo and Freight—Separate Award against Cargo.—Where salvage services have been rendered in circumstances in which the danger to a perishable cargo and the freight is much more serious than that to the ship, a separate salvage award may be made against the cargo and freight. The Velox, 75 L. J. P. 81; [1906] P. 263; 95 L. T. 271; 10 Asp. M.C. 277—Gorell Barnes, P.

A Norwegian steamship with a cargo of herrings, having practically exhausted her coal, was towed by a steam trawler from the edge of the Dogger Bank to off Grimsby, and brought safely into port. The cargo of herrings if kept out even two days longer would have become useless. The value of the steamship was 1,875*l.*, of the cargo 1,060*l.*, and of the freight 136*l.* The Court made an award of 180*l.* against the steamship, and of 420*l.* against the cargo and freight. Ib.

Amount of Award—Powers of Court of Appeal.—In the absence of exceptional or extraordinary circumstances the House will not interfere with the amount of an award for salvage services made by the Court of first instance and confirmed by the Court of Appeal, even though the award be larger than their Lordships would have granted if the question had come before them for assessment in the first instance. The Glengyle, 67 L. J. P. 87; [1898] A.C. 519; 78 L. T. 801; 8 Asp. M.C. 436—H.L. (E.)

Derelict—Award of Whole Proceeds to Salvors.—A dismasted barque, on fire and abandoned by her crew, was about twenty miles from port, when the tug D. went out to her, and, taking her in tow with some difficulty, brought her into harbour, and with the help of another tug put out the fire by pumping water on her, and then stood by for two days. The vessel and her cargo were sold, but the total net proceeds, after deducted expenses and payments to the other tug and fishermen for assistance, amounted only to about 37*l.* In the salvage action by the owners, master, and crew of the tug D., the Court gave judgment by default, and awarded the total net proceeds to the salvors without a reference. The Louisa, 75 L. J. P. 76; [1906] P. 145; 94 L. T. 553; 10 Asp. M.C. 256—Bargrave Deane, J.

— Appeal as to.—A Danish schooner of ninety tons was found derelict about ninety miles from Iceland by a steam trawler, which towed it to Aberdeen, 500 miles distant. The salvage was effected without material risk at a cost of about 150*l.* The vessel was valued at 800*l.*, and the cargo at 300*l.* In the Sheriff Court the salvage was fixed at 400*l.* On appeal, the Court, while indicating the opinion that the award was, in the circumstances, very liberal, refused to interfere with it, on the ground that it was not so extravagant as to warrant interference by a Court of Appeal. Jørgensen v. Neptune Steam Fishing Co., 4 F. 992—Ct. of Sess.

— Alteration on Appeal.—It is not the practice of the Judicial Committee to vary the decision of a Court below on a question of amount merely on the ground that if the case had come before them in the first instance they might have awarded a different sum. The Baku Standard, 70 L. J. P. C. 98; [1901] A.C. 549; 84 L. T. 788; 9 Asp. M.C. 197—P.C.

Value of Salvaged Vessel—Reduced Value Due to Salvaged Vessel Refusing Sufficient Assistance.—The plaintiffs' steam trawler rendered salvage services to the defendants' steamship and towed her in bad weather close to port, where the steamship improperly refused to employ a tug which would have taken her in safely, and in consequence went ashore and was badly damaged, and incurred heavy expenses for other salvage assistance to get into port. In an action for salvage, Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to an award based on the value of the steamship as she lay close to port before the stranding, without deduction for the damage by stranding or the subsequent salvage expenses. The Germania, 73 L. J. P. 59; [1904] P. 181; 90 L. T. 296; 9 Asp. M.C. 538—Gorell Barnes, J.

— Practice—Appraisement—Conclusiveness—Market Value—Value to Owners.—In an action of salvage, when the salvaged property has been appraised under a commission of appraisement, the appraised value in ordinary cases is conclusive. For the purpose of appraisement, when there is a divergence between the market value of the salvaged vessel and her value to her owners, the proper value to be taken is the value to the owners. The Hohenzollern, 76 L. J. P. 17; [1906] P. 339; 95 L. T. 585; 10 Asp. M.C. 296—Bargrave Deane, J.

Apportionment of Award—Members of Crew of Salvaging Ship—Distinction in Apportioning Award.—In apportioning a salvage award the Court has regard both to the actual services rendered and risks run by individual members of the crew of the salvaging ship; and also discriminates between those members of the crew who are actually engaged in working the ship and those whose duty it is to attend on passengers or to look after livestock or other matters not connected with the navigation of the vessel. The Minneapolis, 71 L. J. P. 28; [1902] P. 30; 86 L. T. 263; 9 Asp. M.C. 270—Gorell Barnes, J.

— Navigation and Engineer Officers' Ratings—Separate Representation of Some Members of Crew—Costs.—The tank steamship L. fell in with the disabled twin-screw steamship B. in the North Atlantic and towed her into Halifax, a distance of about 280 miles. The B.'s boat was employed in passing the hawsers and making the vessels fast. No member of the crew of the L. performed any special service. On December 1, 1905, the solicitors acting for the owners of the L., without any direct authority from the crew, who numbered thirty-six, issued a writ on behalf of the owners, master, and crew of the L., claiming salvage for services rendered to the B., her cargo and freight, and on December 12, 1905, delivered a statement of claim on behalf of the owners, master, and crew of the L., to which on December 27 the owners of the B. delivered a defence. On December 18 twelve of the crew of the L., four able seamen and eight firemen—gave notice to the defendants' solicitors of a change of solicitors, and on January 5, 1906, a further statement of claim was delivered on behalf of the twelve, and on January 10 the owners of the B. delivered a defence to that claim. On the hearing of the salvage suits the owners, master, and twenty-four of the crew were represented by two counsel, and the remaining twelve of the crew were also separately represented by two counsel. Counsel for the owners, master, and twenty-four of the crew, when asking for an apportionment, stated that if the usual practice was followed of apportioning the salvage among the crew according to their rating, the effect would be that the engineer officers would receive more than the navigating officers, who probably had had harder work in consequence of the salvage than the engineer officers had had:—Held, that, as the navigating officers had not taken any extraordinary part in the salvage service, they were not entitled to an increased share in the award, which would be apportioned amongst the crew according to their rating. The Bremen, 94 L. T. 380; 10 Asp. M.C. 229—Bargrave Deane, J.

Counsel for the twelve seamen asked for costs. The twelve seamen had recovered salvage, and were entitled to be represented; they had given no retainer to the owners' solicitors to appear for them. The owners of the B. opposed the application on the ground that, as the interests of the twelve seamen were exactly similar to that of the rest of the crew, who were represented by counsel for the owners, there was no necessity for separate representation. The owners of the B. asked that the twelve seamen should be ordered to pay the extra costs to which they had been put by reason of the separate representation:—Held, that the twelve seamen were not entitled to costs, but that they were not to be condemned in costs. Id.

— Navigating and Engineer Officers.—On the hearing of a salvage suit brought by the owners, master, and crew of the steamship E. to recover salvage for services rendered to the I., an apportionment between the owners, master, and crew of the salvaging vessel was asked for. The navigating officers on the I. were rated at a lower rating than the engineer officers; and if the salvage was distributed among the crew according to their ratings, the navigating officers would have received less than the engineer officers:—Held, that the salvage should be distributed among the officers as though the navigating officers were rated at the same rate as the engineer officers of the same grade. The Bremen (94 L. T. 381) not followed. The Italia, 95 L. T. 398; 10 Asp. M.C. 284—Gorell Barnes, P.

— Rating of Navigating Officers.—In the apportionment of a salvage award it is now an established rule, as regards the portion awarded to the crew of the salving ship according to their ratings—that is to say, salaries—that the rating of each of the navigating officers shall be treated as equal to that of the corresponding grade of engineer officer—the chief officer's rating being treated as equal to that of the chief engineer, the second officer's to that of the second engineer, and so on. The Birnam, 76 L. J. P. 28; 96 L. T. 792—Bargrave Deane, J.

Life Salvage—Foreign Ship—Outside Limit of British Jurisdiction—Services Rendered “wholly or in part” within British Waters.—Salvors rendered services in saving the lives of the crew of a foreign ship which was in distress outside British waters by taking them off the ship and bringing them to an English port, where they were landed. The ship was subsequently salvaged by other salvors. In an action brought by the first-named salvors for life salvage, Held, that the services rendered in saving life were so rendered “in part” in British waters, and that the plaintiffs were therefore entitled to an award. The Pacific, 67 L. J. P. 65; [1898] P. 170; 79 L. T. 125; 46 W. R. 686; 8 Asp. M.C. 422—Jeune, P.

— Vessel—Salvage on High Seas.—A British steam trawler rescued seamen from a disabled foreign vessel on the high seas at a point 200 miles distant from the nearest land. The salvors landed the seamen at Hull, the port for which the trawler was bound:—Held, that no salvage award was payable, as the salvage was complete when the seamen were taken on board a seaworthy vessel, and was therefore “not rendered wholly or in part in British waters” within section 544, sub-section 1 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894. Jørgensen v. Neptune Steam Fishing Co., 4 F. 992—Ct. of Sess.

Misconduct of Salvors—Agreement to Pay Master of Salvaged Vessel a Share of Salvage Award—Forfeiture of Right to Salvage.—In a case arising out of an alleged agreement for the apportionment of a salvage award, evidence, to some extent conflicting, was given that before the salvage services were rendered an arrangement was made between the master of the vessel to be salvaged and the salvors that the master should be paid 5 per cent. of the salvage award:—Seemle, if an agreement to this effect were proved, it would amount to misconduct on the part of the salvors, for which in all probability they would forfeit all rights to salvage whatever. The Kolpino, 73 L. J. P. 29—Gorell Barnes, J.

Power of Receiver of Wreck to Detain Salvaged Property—“Salvage due under this Act.”—The receiver of wreck has power to detain property until payment made or process issued, wherever a claim for salvage recoverable under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, is made in respect thereof. The Fulham, 68 L. J. P. 75;

[1899] P. 251; 81 L. T. 19; 47 W. R. 598; 8 Asp. M.C. 559—C.A.

The words “due under this Act” in section 552 mean recoverable under the Act, and are not confined to salvage due under sections 544 to 546. Ib.

Where a claim was made for salvage services rendered to a vessel at a distance of twenty miles from shore, Held, that the receiver of wreck had power to detain the vessel till payment made or process issued. Ib.

Right of Action for Salvage—Lifeboat—Launchers.—Launchers who launch a lifeboat contemplating that it will render either life salvage only, in which case they will look to be paid by the Lifeboat Institution, or property salvage, in which case they will look to be paid out of the sum recovered for the salvage service, are entitled, if property is in fact salvaged, to bring an action for salvage. The Cayo Bonito (No. 2), 73 L. J. P. 93; [1904] P. 310; 91 L. T. 102; 9 Asp. M.C. 603; 20 T. L. R. 576—Gorell Barnes, J.

Consolidation of Actions—Costs—Country Solicitor.—In a consolidated salvage suit the two sets of plaintiffs were at issue at the trial as to the merits of the services performed by them respectively, and the Judge at the trial directed that the costs of two counsel should be allowed to both sets of plaintiffs. The district registrar, upon taxation, disallowed the costs of the attendance at the trial in London of the country solicitor to that set of plaintiffs who had not had the conduct of the consolidated suit. Those plaintiffs appealed:—Held, that, inasmuch as the Judge at the trial had considered it reasonably necessary for the elucidation of the true state of the facts that both sets of plaintiffs should be represented by two counsel, it was also reasonably necessary that the country solicitor should be in attendance at the trial, and he ought to be allowed the costs of attendance. The Metropolis, 81 L. T. 236; 8 Asp. M.C. 583—Bucknill, J.

Co-salvors—Consolidated Suits—Separate Representation by Counsel—Costs.—The P., a four-masted steel barque of 2,138 tons register, while on a voyage from Belfast to Antwerp in tow of the tug H., which was under contract to tow her to Flushing, met with heavy weather, and, while running for shelter, broke adrift from the H., but managed to bring up near Pladda Island with a full scope of chain out on both her anchors. When the H. came up to the P. it was found that the anchor chains of the latter were foul, that the anchors could not be raised, and that they would have to be slipped. The master of the P. then sent the H. for further assistance, and the H. brought back the tug F. S. The H. and F. S. then took the P. to Greenock, where she was safely moored. The owners, masters, and crews of both tugs instituted proceedings for salvage, the owners of the H. claiming that the towage contract had been superseded by the events which had happened. The salvage suits were consolidated, the conduct of the action being given to the owners of the F. S. At the trial of the action the H. was represented by a leading and junior counsel. The F. S. was also represented by two counsel. The Court awarded each salvor 300*l*. Counsel for the H. asked for a certificate for the separate representation of the H. by two counsel:—Held, that as the defendants had alleged that the H. was not entitled to salvage, but was only fulfilling her agreement, the owners of the H. were entitled to be separately represented by two counsel. The Pollalloch, 94 L. T. 556; 10 Asp. M. C. 255—Bargrave Deane, J.

Costs.—There is no hard-and-fast rule as to the costs of a successful appeal in a salvage action. Where the defendants succeeded on appeal in getting the amount of the award considerably reduced,—Held, that they were entitled to the costs of the appeal, the costs in the Court below remaining as they were. The Prince Llewellyn, 89 L. T. 489—D.

Costs of Salvage Action—Salvage Rendered Necessary by Negligence of Tug—Recovery of Costs from Wrongdoer as Damages.—A ship while being towed by the tug Teign suffered damage. Salvage services were rendered by the Teign and also by the tug Regia. In an action by the owners, masters, and crew of these tugs it was found that the salvage services were necessary owing to the negligent towage by the Teign in the first instance. The claim on behalf of the owners, &c., of the Teign was accordingly dismissed with costs, and those owners were ordered to pay to the owners of the salvaged vessel the damage she sustained and the amount awarded as salvage to the Regia:—Held, that the costs of the action by the Regia should be added to and be recoverable as damages by the owners of the salvaged vessel against the owners of the Teign. The Kauss, 20 T. L. R. 326—Gorell Barnes, J.

Appeal in Salvage Action—Award Reduced on Appeal—Costs.—On appeals to salvage actions there is no hard-and-fast rule of practice that appellants who succeed in reducing the award will not get costs. Costs allowed to successful appellants under the circumstances. The Prince Llewellyn, 73 L. J. P. 22; [1904] P. 83; 89 L. T. 489; 9 Asp. M.C. 505—D.

Amount of Award Reduced—Costs.—There is no hard-and-fast rule of practice that on appeals in salvage actions an appellant who succeeds in getting the amount of an award reduced will not be allowed the costs of the appeal. The Prince Llewellyn (73 L. 14. HARBOURS, DOCKS, AND PIERS.

“Limits of port”—Fiscal or Local—Inland Docks above High-water Mark—Admissibility of Evidence—“Contemporanea expositio”—Entries in Course of Duty—Reputation.—The trustees under the Carnarvon Harbour Acts, 1793 and 1809, are entitled to levy tolls on vessels loading or unloading within the limits of the port of Carnarvon. The plaintiff constructed docks and quays above the old high-water mark and artificially connected with the sea on his own land at Dinorwic, four miles north of Carnarvon, but within the area of the customs or fiscal port of Carnarvon, and at these docks and quays he loaded ships owned or chartered by him with slates from the Dinorwic quarries. These ships generally sailed through the north end of the Menai Straits, and on their return also unloaded goods for the plaintiff's use at Dinorwic. In the view of the Court the plaintiff participated in the benefit of the works done by the trustees under the Acts for the better navigation of the Straits:—Held, that the trustees were entitled to levy tolls under the Acts on the plaintiff's ships loading or unloading at Dinorwic; STIRLING, L.J., and COZENS-HARDY, L.J., being of opinion that on the true construction of the Acts, and having regard to the usage which had always prevailed, the “limits of the port” denoted the fiscal port of Carnarvon; VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., being of opinion that (whether or not such words extended to the whole fiscal port) they did extend at least to a port having an area which covered Dinorwic. Assheton-Smith v. Owen, 75 L. J. Ch. 181; [1906] 1 Ch. 179; 94 L. T. 42; 10 Asp. M.C. 164; 22 T. L. R. 182—C.A.

Held also, that the limits of the port extended to the plaintiff's docks, though more inland than the old high-water mark, the limits following the line of high water for the time being. Ib.

Per VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—The meaning of the words “port” or “limits of the port” in Acts passed in 1793 and 1809 for improving and regulating the harbour of Carnarvon ought not to be determined by the definition of the port of Carnarvon in a certificate made in 1723 by Commissioners under 13 & 14 Car. 2, c. 11, an Act passed for preventing frauds and regulating abuses in the Customs. Ib.

Per VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—The words “limits of a port” have not acquired a recognised technical meaning as denoting a fiscal port, and Kingston-upon-Hull Dock Co. v. Browne (2 B. & Ald. 43) is no authority for such a proposition. Ib.

Per VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—In the absence of any definition, evidence is admissible to shew what was reputed amongst the officers administering the Carnarvon Harbour Acts in past times to be the port of Carnarvon; and evidence of the collection of rates from people well able to resist an unjust imposition may be evidence of a contemporanea expositio shewing that these Acts had always been applied to a port outside the limits of the local port. Per COZENS-HARDY, L.J.—The doctrine of contemporanea expositio cannot be applied in construing these comparatively modern Acts. Ib.

On appeal to the House of Lords, the House held that Port Dinorwic, the property of the appellants, formed part of the port of Carnarvon within the meaning of the Carnarvon Harbour Acts of 1793 and 1809, and that the dues imposed by those Acts were payable in respect of the use of Port Dinorwic. Assheton-Smith v. Owen, 76 L. J. Ch. 308; [1907] A.C. 124; 96 L. T. 478; 23 T. L. R. 385—H.L. (E.)

Harbour Authority—Duty to Provide Efficient Tugs—Liability.—The appellants, a port and harbour authority, undertook the towage of the respondents' vessel up their river by a particular tide. The respondents' vessel was preceded by two smaller vessels each in charge of a tug, and the leading tug, from some cause not explained by the appellants, was so long in accomplishing the journey that the respondents' vessel was stranded and damaged by reason of the fall in the tide. The tugs were hired for the purpose by the appellants. The time and order of departure of the several vessels were arranged by the harbour-master, the servant of the appellants:—Held, that the appellants were liable for the damage caused to the respondents' vessel. The Ratata, 67 L. J. P. 73; [1898] A.C. 513; 78 L. T. 797; 47 W. R. 156; 8 Asp. M.C. 427—H.L. (E.)

Tolls—Duty to Provide Buoys, Beacons, and Lights—Power to Borrow Money for this Purpose—Money not wholly Expended in Providing Buoys, &c.—The plaintiffs, as the harbour authority of Q., were empowered by statute to levy tolls on every vessel stopping in the harbour more than one tide. By the same Act they were authorised to borrow a certain sum for the purpose of providing such buoys, beacons, and lights as might be necessary for the guidance of vessels using the harbour, and a like sum for maintaining the sea and river walls, quays, &c. The limits of their borrowing powers in each case were reached. The larger portion of the amount borrowed had been expended in maintaining the sea walls, &c., and not in providing buoys, &c. A substantial sum had, however, been paid out of revenue for this latter purpose:—Held, in an action for tolls, that the fact that the whole of the amount borrowed for the purpose of providing buoys, &c., had not been expended for that purpose was no defence to the claim. Queenborough Corporation v. Sneed, Dean & Co., 68 J. P. 244; 20 T. L. R. 279—Walton, J.

Wharf in Harbour—Defective Berth—Damage to Vessel—Statutory Duty of Harbour Authority to Render Berth Safe and Commodious—Liability of Harbour Authority for Neglect of Statutory Duty—Duty of Wharfowner to take Reasonable Care to Ascertain Condition of Berth Alongside Wharf—Duty to Warn Vessel—Liability for Damage to Vessel from Breach of Duty.—A harbour authority, upon whom the duty is imposed by statute to do all such works as should be necessary for preserving the navigation and use of the harbour by persons trading thereto and rendering it safe and commodious, cannot relieve themselves from the performance of that duty by relying upon its being performed by some one else, and will therefore be liable for damage sustained by a vessel in consequence of the bed of a berth in the harbour being in a dangerous condition owing to a failure on their part to take soundings to ascertain its condition, having relied on soundings being taken by the Trinity House pilots, who were not their servants, but the servants of, and only responsible for the performance of their duties as pilots to, the Trinity House; and wharfingers, who are the owners of a wharf in the harbour which they invite the owners of vessels to use for the purpose of loading and discharging cargoes on payment of dues to them, being bound—within the rule laid down in The Moorcock (58 L. J. P. 73; 14 P. D. 64)—to take reasonable care to ascertain whether a berth lying alongside their wharf is in a safe and proper condition, and, if not, to warn the owners of a ship about to use the berth that they have not done so, are not entitled to rely solely upon the harbour authority performing their statutory duties in connection with the berth, and consequently will be liable, as well as the harbour authority, for damage sustained by a vessel owing to the defective condition of the berth. The Bearn, 75 L. J. P. 9; [1906] P. 28; 94 L. T. 265; 10 Asp. M.C. 208; 22 T. L. R. 165—C.A.

Steam Tug—Tug for Moving Steam Trawlers in Dock—Right of Owners of Steam Trawlers to have their Own Tug.—The owners of steam trawlers are not entitled under section 33 of the Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act, 1847, and section 247 of the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway Co. Act, 1849, to have one of their own tugs in the Grimsby Docks for the purpose of moving the trawlers to different parts of the dock as required. Great Central Railway v. North-Eastern Steam Fishing Co., 22 T. L. R. 520—Walton, J.

Defective Welding of Ring on Buoy—Omission of Adequate Test—Liability of Harbour Commissioners.—Owing to its defective welding the ring of a buoy broke off, and a ship which was attached thereto by a cable parted from her moorings and sustained damage. The buoy had been in use a short time only; it had been purchased by the harbour commissioners from a first-class manufacturer, and the defect in the welding could not have been discovered by inspection or by the ordinary test of hammering. It is not usual for manufacturers to submit such rings to any test unless required to do so by the specification; but if so required (which is frequently but not universally done), they are tested by a public department in a well-known and recognised manner analogous to the testing of cable chains. This precaution had not been taken by the harbour commissioners:—Held, that the omission was actionable negligence rendering the commissioners responsible for the result of the accident. Burrell v. Tuohy, [1898] 2 Ir. R. 271—Q.B. D.

Rates—Goods Imported “from parts beyond the seas”—Goods Imported “coastwise”—Goods Transhipped at English Port in Course of Transit.—Goods shipped from a foreign port under a through bill of lading to Liverpool, landed in London, and sent thence to Liverpool in another ship, are imported into Liverpool “from parts beyond the seas,” within the meaning of section 234 of the Mersey Dock Acts Consolidation Act, 1858. Mersey Docks and Harbour Board v. Twigge, 67 L. J. Q.B. 604—Mathew, J.

Maximum Sum—Lease from Harbour Company—Power of Lessee to Raise Rates.—Under sections 78 and 79 of the Paignton Harbour Act, 1838, the harbour company are entitled to levy quay dues on goods landed in the harbour, which are not specified in Schedule D to the Act, at the rate of one shilling per ton, or at the option of the company to fix quay dues at a sum not exceeding one tenth part of the freight, so that such rate does not exceed one shilling per ton. Under section 83 of the Act the company only, and not the lessee of the rates, can raise and reduce the rates. Millman v. Renwick, Willon & Co., 22 T. L. R. 168—Swinfen Eady, J.

— Vessels Loading in the Port—Port of Carnarvon.—"Within the limits of the said port."—The village of Port Dinorwic, situated on the Menai Straits, about four miles north of Carnarvon, is within the limits of the port of Carnarvon, so as to make vessels loading at Dinorwic liable to pay dues to the trustees of the Carnarvon Harbour Trust under section 16 of the Carnarvon Harbour Act, 1793. Held also that certain docks and quays constructed at Dinorwic on land which was above high-water mark at the date of the Act of 1793, but to which now by artificial means the sea has access, are within the limits of the port of Carnarvon within the meaning of the Act. Assheton Smith v. Owen, 20 T. L. R. 755—Kekewich, J.

— Exemption—Barge Entering Dock with Cargo for Vessel in Dock—Barge Leaving Dock without having Discharged Cargo.—"Bona fide engaged in discharging."—The West India Dock Act, 1831, by section 76, empowers the dock company to take in respect of every lighter or barge entering into any of their docks or lying therein reasonable tonnage rates; and by section 83 provides that all lighters and craft entering into the docks to discharge or receive ballast or goods to or from any ship or vessel lying therein shall be exempt from rates "so long as such lighter or craft shall be bona fide engaged in discharging or receiving such ballast or goods." Two barges entered the East India Dock laden with goods intended to be discharged into a vessel then lying in the dock. The barges lay alongside until it was found that the vessel was full and unable to take any more goods, and the barges then left the dock without having discharged any part of their cargoes. The dock company claimed the dock rates upon the barges, contending that, as the barges had not discharged their cargoes or any part thereof into a vessel lying in the dock, the barges were not within the exemption in section 83:—Held, that, as the barges had entered the dock with the bona fide intention of discharging into a vessel then lying therein, they were "bona fide engaged in discharging" within the meaning of section 83, and were exempt from rates, although no actual discharge had taken place, and, as they had left the dock as soon as it became known that they could not discharge the goods into the vessel, they were exempt from the time they entered until they left the dock. London and India Docks v. Thames Lighterage Co., 97 L. T. 357; 23 T. L. R. 590—C.A.

— Mersey Docks—"Town dues."—By section 17 of the Upper Mersey Dues Act, 1860, the right to collect "town dues" was transferred from the Mersey Docks and Harbour Board to a separate body of trustees in respect of all goods "carried or conveyed upon, over, or along any part of the Upper Mersey," as therein defined:—Held, that the section applied to goods carried over any part of the Upper Mersey in the ordinary course of a voyage, not only to goods landed at some port in the Upper Mersey. Mersey Docks v. Hunter, 80 L. T. 96; 8 Asp. M.C. 489—H.L. (E.)

— Cessation from Work—Sunday Lighter.—Rules of a dock company providing that vessels are not allowed to pass from one basin to another on Sundays, and that no cargo shall be loaded or unloaded, nor shall any unnecessary work be done or permitted to be done on Sunday, do not exempt a barge which, after completing her discharge, might have left the dock by the Sunday tide, but has remained till the following tide, from payment of a dock rate in respect of her delay. The powers conferred upon the London and India Docks Co. by the London and St. Katharine's Docks Act, 1864, ss. 132, 133, and 136, and the East and West India Dock Co.'s Extension Act, 1882, ss. 25 and 26, and Schedule, Part I., and the London and St. Katharine and East and West India Docks Act, 1888, s. 57, do not entitle the company to impose upon any lighter with ballast or goods for or from a ship, and entering the dock before the arrival of such ship, a rate of 6d. per ton register for entering the dock and lying therein for a period not exceeding one week from the date of entrance; or upon any lighter which, having discharged or received ballast or goods to or from on board of a ship, remains in the dock, a rate of 6d. per ton register, for any period not exceeding one week from the tide next following the completion of the discharge or receipt of the ballast or goods. Section 136 of the London and St. Katharine Docks Act, 1864, provides that "All lighters and craft entering into the docks . . . to discharge or receive ballast or goods to or from on board of any ship or vessel lying therein, shall be exempt from the payment of any rates so long as the lighter or craft is bona fide engaged in so discharging or receiving the ballast or goods":—Held, that under that section a lighter is not disentitled to claim exemption because at the time when she enters the dock the vessel into which she ultimately discharges has not yet arrived there. McDougall v. London and India Docks Co., 96 L. T. 13; 12 Com. Cas. 56; 10 Asp. M.C. 394—Walton, J. Affirmed, 23 T. L. R. 765—C.A.

— Ship Entering Harbour "only for convenience"—Ship Entering Harbour to be Placed at Disposal of Charterer.—By the Leith Harbour and Docks Act, 1892, the harbour commissioners are empowered to levy rates from the owners of every ship coming into or going out of the harbour and docks of Leith; and the statutory regulations provide that all vessels entering the harbour "only for safety, convenience, or repairs, shall be charged half rates, but if they shall land or take on board goods or remain in the harbour or docks above one month they shall be charged full rates." By a charterparty it was provided that the owners should let the vessel to the charterers for a period of six calendar months commencing from May 5 to 10, 1905, "at which date she is to be placed, with clear holds, at the disposal of the charterers at Leith," in such dock, wharf, or place as the charterers might direct, to be employed in such lawful trades between such specified ports in the United Kingdom and on the Continent as the charterers should direct, the charterers to pay all port charges. The vessel arrived at Leith on May 8 in ballast, and was there handed over to the charterers, who loaded her at Leith for one of the specified ports. She paid the full harbour rates for entry at Leith, and the charterers deducted the full rates on paying the stipulated hire to the owners. The owners admitted liability for half the rates, but sued the charterers for the other half:—Held, that, as the vessel had entered Leith docks under a contract between the owners and the charterers that she should be delivered there to the charterers, she had not entered "for convenience only," within the meaning of section 58 of the Leith Docks and Harbours Act, and that the owners were liable for the full rates due for her entry. Aktieselskabet Lina v. Turnbull, [1907] S.C. 507—Ct. of Sess.

Access to Harbour—Representation by Harbour Authority as to Depth of Water at Gate of Dock—Less Depth at Bar of Harbour—Detention of Ship—Liability of Authority—Implied Warranty.—Where a harbour authority, having by statute a right to charge dues in respect of vessels using the harbour and a duty to render the harbour safe and commodious, advertise that there is a certain depth of water on the sill of a dock within the harbour, they incur at common law an obligation to take all reasonable care to secure that there shall be free and unobstructed access to the dock from the open sea and egress from the dock to the open sea for a vessel whose draught is the greatest that the dock sill will admit of; and where by reason of their failure to perform this obligation a vessel is detained in the harbour, they are liable to her owners for damages for her detention. Bede Steam Shipping Co. v. Wear River Commissioners, 76 L. J. K.B. 434; [1907] 1 K.B. 310; 96 L. T. 370; 10 Asp. M.C. 370—C.A.

Semble, that where a harbour authority advertise that there is a certain depth of water on the sill of a dock in the harbour they become bound on an implied warranty to the owner of a vessel who in reliance on the advertisement has sent his vessel to the dock that there is at least an equal depth of water throughout the entire channel of communication between the dock and the open sea, including the bar, if any, at the entrance to the harbour. Williams v. Swansea Harbour Board (14 C.B. (N.S.) 845) discussed. Ib.

Obligations of Harbour Commissioners—Injury to Vessel from Defects of Berth.—A vessel sustained injuries while lying grounded in a tidal river at a quay under the control of harbour commissioners. The commissioners had laid the berth at the quay with skids in the form of a grid, on which vessels would rest at low tide. The injuries were due to the berth having been allowed to become defective by the skids not being in a uniform gradient and by several of them, at the part where the forward portion of the vessel would rest as she was berthed, being wanting. These defects could have been ascertained by the harbour commissioners by the exercise of reasonable care:—Held, that the harbour commissioners were bound to use reasonable diligence to keep the berth safe, that they had failed to use such reasonable diligence, and that consequently they were liable to the shipowners for the injuries sustained by their vessel. Steamship Fulwood v. Dumfries Harbour Commissioners, [1907] S.C. 456—Ct. of Sess.

The Flying Venus, a fishing-boat, was laid up for the winter in S. harbour, moored to a quay at a place where the bottom slopes rapidly downwards from the quay wall. Another fishing-boat, the Victoria, which was lying in the harbour in a waterlogged condition, was ordered by the harbour-master to be removed to a certain place. Instead of removing her to that place, those in charge of the Victoria took her alongside and moored her to the Flying Venus. Next day at low tide, when both sides were resting on the bottom, one of the crew of the Victoria removed the plug from her and allowed the water to escape, and then replaced the plug. The result of this lightening of the Victoria was that at next low tide she failed to take the bottom at the same time as the Flying Venus, and by straining at her moorings capsized the latter and damaged her. The owner of the Flying Venus sued the harbour authority, alleging negligence on their part in allowing the Victoria either to take up or remain in the position alongside the Flying Venus:—Held, that the facts did not import fault on the part of the harbour authority or of those for whom they were responsible and that they were not liable. Mackenzie v. Stornoway Pier and Harbour Commission, [1907] S.C. 435—Ct. of Sess.

Piers on River Thames—Acquisition by London County Council—Power to Levy Tolls—Transference—"Rights and privileges"—"Rights and powers."—By two private Acts of William 4 the G. Pier Co. was authorised to make and maintain a pier, and also to take certain rates, duties, and tolls prescribed by such Acts. W. pier was constructed as a private undertaking, and the lease became vested in the T. S. Co., who made certain charges for the use of such pier. Under the Thames River Steamboat Service Act, 1904, the L. County Council bought from the G. Pier Co. "their undertaking (including therein all the property, estates, rights, and privileges . . . of the Greenwich Co.), and they also purchased the W. Pier "and any rights and powers connected therewith." By section 15 of the Act of 1904 the L. County Council could "charge and levy in respect of vessels calling at the piers and landing places a toll not exceeding the amount stated in the schedule to this Act":—Held, that the L. County Council had no statutory right to charge any tolls in respect of G. pier or W. Pier beyond those chargeable by virtue of section 15 of the Act of 1904; and that they were not entitled to charge the tolls prescribed by the private Acts of William 4 in respect of G. Pier, or any reasonable sum in addition to the tolls prescribed by the Act of 1904 in respect of W. Pier. Any facilities, however, provided by the L. County Council which they were not bound to provide under the Act of 1904 would have to be paid for by the person at whose request, express or implied, they were provided. London County Council v. General Steam Navigation Co., 96 L. T. 57; 10 Asp. M.C. 340—Bray, J.

15. LIGHT DUES.

"Deck cargo" — Freight-earning Cargo — "Timber, stores, or other goods" — Bunker Coal Carried on Deck.]—By section 85, sub-section 1 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, "If any ship . . . carries as deck cargo, that is to say, in any uncovered space upon deck, or in any covered space not included in the cubical contents forming the ship's registered tonnage, timber, stores, or other goods, all duties payable on the ship's tonnage shall be payable as if there were added to the ship's registered tonnage the tonnage of the space occupied by those goods at the time at which the dues become payable":—Held, that, upon the natural construction of the language of the section, the expression "deck cargo" was wide enough to include goods which were not freight-earning. Cairn Line v. Trinity House Corporation, 76 L. J. K.B. 377; [1907] 1 K.B. 604; 96 L. T. 846; 12 Com. Cas. 244; 23 T. L. R. 341—Bray, J. Affirmed in C.A.

A vessel belonging to the plaintiffs took on board a quantity of coal which the plaintiffs had bought for use in the ship's fires during a voyage. Some of the coal was stored on the awning deck, but was afterwards transferred into the thwartship bunkers and consumed in the boiler fires. The coal was not shipped under bills of lading:—Held, that the coal so stored on the deck, although it was not freight-earning, came within the words "stores, or other goods" carried as "deck cargo," and that therefore light dues were properly payable by the plaintiffs in respect of the space which it occupied under the provisions of section 85, sub-section 1. Richmond Hill Steamship Co. v. Trinity House Corporation (65 L. J. Q.B. 561; [1896] 2 Q.B. 134) discussed. Ib.

16. WRECKS.

Removal by Navigation Authority—Abandonment by Owners—Tidal Water—Liability of Shipowners for Expenses.]—Section 47 of the Aire and Calder Navigation Act, 1889, provides that if any vessel shall be sunk in the river Ouse within the limits of the jurisdiction of the undertakers, and the owners shall not forthwith remove the same, it shall be lawful for the undertakers to remove such vessel, and to detain the same until payment be made of all the expenses relating thereto, or to sell such vessel and thereout to pay such expenses and the expenses of the sale, returning to the owner of such vessel the overplus:—Held, that, upon the true construction of the section, the time when the expenses were incurred, and not the time when the vessel sank, is the period at which the ownership is to be ascertained, and that the owners of a vessel which sank in tidal water in the river Ouse within the statutory limits, who abandoned her sine animo recuperandi, were not liable to pay to the undertakers of the navigation the expenses, incurred by the undertakers after the abandonment, of unsuccessfully attempting to raise the vessel and of destroying her by explosives. Barraclough v. Brown, 66 L. J. Q.B. 672; [1897] A.C. 615; 76 L. T. 797; 62 J. P. 275; 8 Asp. M.C. 290—H.L. (E.)

Raising — Public Body not Making Profit — Remoteness of Damage.]—A public body, with statutory public duties to discharge and power to levy rates for the purpose of discharging those duties, is entitled, though it is not a profit-earning body, to substantial damages in respect of the loss of the use of property injured by the negligence of another, and for the recovery of such damages it is not necessary to prove direct pecuniary loss. The Greta Holme, 66 L. J. P. 166; [1897] A.C. 596; 77 L. T. 231; 8 Asp. M.C. 317—H.L. (E.)

A dredger, the property of the Mersey Docks and Harbour Board, the Conservancy authority of the port of Liverpool, was sunk by the negligence of those in charge of the Greta Holme. The wreck was raised, and in addition to other items the Board claimed 1,500*l.* damages for the loss of the use of the dredger during the fifteen weeks she was under repair. There was evidence that the dredger might have been let at the rate of 100*l.* a week, and that during its disablement the work of deepening the river had been retarded:—Held (Lord Morris dissenting), that the Board were entitled to substantial damages, which the House of Lords assessed at 500*l.* Ib.

— Priority — Thames Conservators — Expenses of—Maritime Lien for Collision Damage.]—The statutory lien for expenses in connection with raising a sunken vessel, given by the Thames Conservancy Act, 1894, to the Conservators, takes priority of the claim of the plaintiffs in an action in which the vessel has been arrested to enforce a maritime lien for collision damage. The Sea Spray, 76 L. J. P. 48; [1907] P. 183; 96 L. T. 792—Bargrave Deane, J.

Wreck in Navigable River—Duty of Owner to Warn other Vessels.]—The owner of a vessel, sunk in the fairway of a navigable river, so as to be a danger to other vessels, who retains the possession, management, and control of the wreck, is under an obligation to take reasonable care to warn other vessels of its position, and is liable for damage to another vessel occasioned by the neglect to give proper warning, though such neglect was that of an independent contractor employed by him. The Snark, 69 L. J. P. 41; [1900] P. 105; 82 L. T. 42; 48 W. R. 279; 9 Asp. M.C. 50—C.A.

Independent Contractor — Abandonment of Possession, Management, and Control.]—An owner does not abandon or properly transfer the possession, management, and control of a wreck by employing an independent contractor to raise it, although the person so employed be placed in the actual physical custody of the wreck. Ib.

Vessel Sunk in Thames—Abandonment by the Owners—Thames Conservators—Recovery from the Owners.]—Under section 77 of the Thames Conservancy Act, 1894, the Conservators of the River Thames, when they have incurred expenses in raising a sunken vessel, can recover the expenses from the owners of the vessel, although the owners have abandoned her before such expenses were incurred. The plaintiffs' vessel sank in the River Thames, owing to a collision with the defendants' vessel, and in the collision action the defendants admitted liability. The Thames Conservators incurred expenses in raising the plaintiffs' vessel, sold her, and, after deducting the proceeds from their expenses, brought an action for the balance against the plaintiffs under section 77 of the Thames Conservancy Act, 1894, and recovered judgment. At the reference in the collision action, the plaintiffs claimed to recover against the defendants the amount due to the Conservators. The managing owner of the plaintiffs' vessel admitted at the reference that (before the expenses of raising were incurred) the intention was to abandon her, and the Registrar reported in effect that the plaintiffs had abandoned her:—Held, first, that the Registrar's report was not an order of the Court, and was not binding on the Court; secondly, that the Court was not satisfied that the plaintiffs had abandoned the vessel; and thirdly, that, even if the plaintiffs had abandoned the vessel, this was no defence to the claim by the Conservators against them as the owners of the vessel under section 77 of the Thames Conservancy Act, 1894, for the expenses of raising her; and that the defendants must pay the amount claimed. The Wallsend, 76 L. J. P. 181; [1907] P. 302; 96 L. T. 851; 23 T. L. R. 356—Bargrave Deane, J.

Duty to Deliver to Wreck Receiver of District.]—Salvors found a derelict ship, with a cargo, off the coast of Pembrokeshire, and beached her, and communicated with the coast-guard there, the chief officer of whom was the receiver of wrecks for the district. The salvors then, with the knowledge of the coastguard, emptied her of water and took her into port:—Held, that the salvors were entitled to salvage, as they had "reasonable cause" for their failure, if there was any failure, to comply with section 518 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, in not delivering the wreck to the receiver of the district. The Glynoeron, 21 T. L. R. 648—Bargrave Deane, J.

17. AVERAGE.

Ship and Cargo in Peril—Tipping Ship Head Down to Repair Propeller—Damage to Cargo—General Average Act—General Average Contribution.]—A ship, laden with a perishable cargo which could not by any means be discharged, having on her voyage become unnavigable and incapable of moving through damage to her propeller, is, with her cargo, in peril, although the ship be tight and strong and the cargo sound. If tipping the ship head down to repair her propeller be resorted to, and in the course of the operation a portion of the cargo be damaged by salt water, the cargo-owners have a right to a general average contribution. The operation of so tipping the ship is under the circumstances a general average act, and the loss a general average and not a particular average loss. McCall v. Houlder, 66 L. J. Q.B. 408; 76 L. T. 469; 8 Asp. M.C. 252—Mathew, J.

Sacrifice of Mast Dangerous to Whole Adventure—Unfounded Belief that Mast Hopelessly Lost.]—Where in the course of a voyage the master of a vessel, with a view to prevent it from being lost, cuts away a mast in the belief that it is already a hopeless wreck, there is a general average sacrifice if such belief proves to have been unfounded. Montgomery v. Indemnity Mutual Marine Assurance Co., 70 L. J. K.B. 45; [1901] 1 K.B. 147; 84 L. T. 57; 49 W. R. 221; 9 Asp. M.C. 141; 6 Com. Cas. 19—Mathew, J.

Heating of Cargo—Sacrifice of Freight—Deviation to Port of Refuge—Abandonment of Voyage.]—A ship was chartered to carry a cargo of coals from Cardiff to Esquimalt. During the voyage the coals began to heat, and the captain decided for the safety of the ship, freight, and cargo to bear up for Buenos Ayres. Upon examination it was found that the condition of the coals was such that the cargo could not be carried with safety to Esquimalt, and it was condemned and ultimately sold. While at Buenos Ayres the ship and cargo were in safety:—Held, that under the circumstances the sale of the cargo constituted the abandonment of the voyage, and that as at that time the common danger had ceased there was no such general average sacrifice of the freight as would form the subject of general average contribution. Iredale v. China Traders' Insurance Co., 69 L. J. Q.B. 783; [1900] 2 Q.B. 515; 83 L. T. 299; 49 W. R. 107; 5 Com. Cas. 397; 9 Asp. M.C. 119—C.A.

Ship Putting into Port of Refuge—Consequential Loss to Cargo-owner—Wages of Cattle-men—Cost of Fodder and Water—Contribution.]—The plaintiffs shipped on board one of the defendants' steamers at Buenos Ayres a cargo of sheep and cattle for carriage to Deptford. The contract provided that the steamer should not call at Brazilian ports before landing her livestock, and that average, if any, should be adjusted according to the York-Antwerp Rules, 1890. In the course of the voyage the vessel sprang a leak, and, for the safety of all concerned, the captain put into Bahia, a Brazilian port, for repairs. The landing of the plaintiffs' cattle at Deptford was by this act rendered impossible, by reason of the Foreign Animals Order, 1896, which prohibits the landing of foreign animals in the United Kingdom if the steamer conveying them has touched at a Brazilian port. The cattle were therefore sent on to Antwerp, where they were sold at a less price than they would have realised at Deptford. The plaintiffs also incurred expense in respect of extra wages for their cattlemen and the cost of fodder and water for the cattle while at Bahia:—Held, that the putting into Bahia was a general average act, and that the loss upon the sale of the cattle, being the direct consequence of that act, was admissible in general average. But held, that the wages of the cattlemen and the cost of the fodder and water were not subjects for general average contribution either under the York-Antwerp Rules, 1890, or at common law. Anglo-Argentine Livestock and Produce Agency v. Temperley Steam Shipping Co., 63 L. J. Q.B. 900; [1899] 2 Q.B. 403; 81 L. T. 296; 49 W. R. 64; 8 Asp. M.C. 595—Bigham, J.

Contribution—Adjustment—General Average

Sacrifice on Outward Voyage—Liability of Homeward Freight to Contribute.]—Homeward freight payable under a charterparty is liable to contribute to a general average sacrifice made on the outward voyage. Carisbrook Steamship Co. v. London and Provincial Marine and General Insurance Co., 70 L. J. K.B. 930; [1901] 2 K.B. 861; 50 W. R. 42; 6 Com. Cas. 291—Mathew, J.

A ship was insured upon hull, materials, engines, and machinery, and chartered to proceed from Fleetwood to Savannah, and there load for her charterers a cargo of cotton, which she was to deliver at a specified port of discharge on being paid freight. She proceeded to Savannah in ballast, but before her arrival grounded and sustained injuries to her propeller. These were repaired, and she subsequently loaded her cargo at Savannah, delivered it at the port of discharge, and earned the freight under the charterparty:—Held, that the freight so earned on the homeward voyage must contribute to the general average sacrifice on the outward voyage. Williams v. London Assurance Co. (1 M. & S. 318) approved. Ib.

Exception of Negligence—Expense Owing to Negligence—Bill of Lading Signed by Charterers' Direction—No Exception of Negligence—Indemnity.]—Expenses incurred by the ship for the benefit of the adventure, though rendered necessary through the master's negligence, may be the subject of a general average contribution from the holders of bills of lading containing a clause excepting the master's negligence. Milburn v. Jamaica Fruit-importing and Trading Co., 69 L. J. Q.B. 860; [1900] 2 Q.B. 540; 83 L. T. 321; 5 Com. Cas. 346; 9 Asp. M.C. 122—C.A.

A charterparty, containing a clause excepting the master's negligence, provided that the master should sign bills of lading without prejudice to the stipulations of the charterparty, and that the charterers should indemnify the shipowners from the consequences of signing bills of lading under their instructions. The master, by the charterers' direction, signed bills of lading containing no exception of negligence. Expenses on behalf of the adventure having been incurred by the ship owing to the master's negligence, the cargo-owners refused to contribute in general average:—Held (VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., dissenting), that if the bills of lading had contained a negligence clause the cargo-owners would have been bound to contribute; and consequently, that the charterers were bound to indemnify the shipowners for general average contribution not recovered from the cargo-owners. The Carron Park (59 L. J. P. 74; 15 P. D. 203) followed. Ib.

Bond—Average Statement—Duty to Obtain.]—Where by an average bond executed at the port of discharge consignees of cargo undertook to furnish to the shipowners a correct account and particulars of the value of the goods delivered, in order that the amount of average contribution to which they were liable might be ascertained and adjusted "in the usual manner,"—Held, that these words did not imply as a condition of the obligation that the shipowners should employ an average stater at the port of discharge. Simonds v. White (2 B. & C. 305) explained. A shipowner may make out his own average statement, and is not bound to employ an average stater either at the port of discharge or elsewhere. Waver-tree Sailing Ship Co. v. Love, 66 L. J. 18. SHIPPING CASUALTIES.

Board of Trade Enquiry—Suspension of Certificate—Duty of Board of Trade to Express Opinion—Appeal to High Court—Costs.]—On a Board of Trade enquiry, when a formal investigation is being held under section 466 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, and when the evidence has been given and the questions are put to the Court, and there is a liability for the master or other officer of the ship to have his certificate suspended, the Board of Trade should state whether in their opinion such certificate should be suspended or not. The Carlisle, 75 L. 19. NECESSARIES—BOTTOMRY BOND.

Master's Bill of Exchange—Personal Liability.]—The master of a vessel is personally liable on a bill of exchange drawn by him upon the owners in payment of necessities ordered by him, for which he purports by the terms of the bill to hold his vessel, owners, and freight responsible. The Ripon City (66 L. J. P. 110; [1897] P. 226) followed. Ceylon Coaling Co. v. Goodrich, 73 L. J. P. 104; [1904] P. 319; 91 L. T. 151—Gorell Barnes, J.

Bond on Ship, Freight, and Cargo—Claim by Material Men to have Assets Marshalled.]—The Court, acting upon equitable principles, will not direct assets to be marshalled except in cases where the two funds to which one of the creditors can resort belong to the same person. The Edward Oliver (36 L. J. Adm. 13; L. R. 1 A. & E. 379) distinguished. The Chioggia, 66 L. J. P. 174; [1898] P. 1; 77 L. T. 472; 46 W. R. 253; 8 Asp. M.C. 352—Gorell Barnes, J.

—Validity of—Maritime Risk—Stipulation for Immediate Payment—Going into Port of Refuge to Repair.]—A stipulation in a bottomry bond, providing that, in the event of the ship in the course of the voyage putting into any port of refuge to repair, all moneys for the payment of which the ship, &c., has been pledged shall forthwith become due and payable, does not invalidate the bond provided that a maritime risk is in the contemplation of the parties. The Huabet, 68 L. J. P. 121; [1899] P. 295; 81 L. T. 463; 48 W. R. 223; 8 Asp. M. C. 605—Bucknill, J.

Recovery of Insurance Premiums—Payment by Brokers—Right of Broker and Underwriter to Recover by Action in Rem.]—Sums paid by a broker as insurance premiums for the purpose of effecting insurances on the hull and safe arrival of a vessel or sums due to underwriters as premiums cannot be recovered by the broker or by the underwriters as necessities within the meaning of section 6 of the Admiralty Court Act, 1840; and, as such sums are not necessities, the broker and underwriters have no right to proceed against the ship in rem. The André Théodore, 93 L. T. 184; 10 Asp. M.C. 94; 21 T. L. R. 158—Gorell Barnes, J.

Priorities — Conflicting Liens — Wages — Possessory Lien of Shipwright.—A shipwright, into whose dry dock a vessel is placed for the purpose of being repaired, has a possessory lien for all work done by him upon the ship, which attaches from the time the vessel enters his dock, notwithstanding that the master and the crew remain on board the ship and that all the work ordered to be done is not completed. The Tergeste, 72 L. J. P. 18; [1903] P. 26; 87 L. T. 567; 9 Asp. M.C. 356—Phillimore, J.

20. MORTGAGE.

Register of Mortgages — Entry Improperly Made — Jurisdiction of Court to Expunge.—The Court has jurisdiction to make an order that the entry of an invalid mortgage of a ship be expunged from the register. Brond v. Broomhall, 75 L. J. K.B. 548; [1906] 1 K.B. 571—Phillimore, J.

Unregistered Mortgage of Shares of Ship — Subsequent Sale of Same Shares to Another Owner — Registered Bill of Sale — Application of the Purchase-money by the Purchaser in Discharging Vendor's Debt to Ship — Mortgagee's Claim on Purchase-money.—An owner of shares of a ship mortgaged his shares to mortgagees, who did not register the mortgage. Subsequently, having misappropriated part of the ship's money, he entered into an agreement for the sale of the same shares to two other owners of shares of the ship. By this agreement the purchase price was to be applied by the purchaser in paying the vendor's debt to the ship, and the purchasers, as owners of shares thereof, were peculiarly interested in this being done. The agreement provided that any balance of purchase-money remaining was to be paid to the vendor. The vendor executed a bill of sale transferring his shares to the purchasers, and the bill of sale was duly registered. Up to then the purchasers had no knowledge of the unregistered mortgage. The mortgagees, on learning what had happened, gave notice to the purchasers that they claimed to have a prior right to the purchase-money in respect of their mortgage:—Held, that, notwithstanding this notice, the purchasers were entitled to apply the purchase-money in paying the vendor's debts to the ship, and that the mortgagees could only claim any balance of the purchase-money remaining. Barclay v. Poole, 76 L. J. Ch. 488; [1907] 2 Ch. 284; 97 L. T. 632—Swinfen Eady, J.

Mortgagor in Possession — Charterparty Impairing Security — Not Binding on Mortgagees.—Mortgagors in possession of a ship agreed by charterparty that the ship should carry a cargo of coal to a port of a belligerent country. The voyage entailed great risk of capture, and the ship was not insured against it:—Held, in an action by the mortgagees against the mortgagors and the holders of the bills of lading, that the mortgagees were entitled to a declaration that the charterparty was not binding upon them, since it impaired their security. The rule in Collins v. Lamport (34 L. J. Ch. 196; 4 De G. J. & S. 500) followed. Law Guarantee and Trust Society v. Russian Bank for Foreign Trade, 74 L. J. K.B. 577; [1905] 1 K.B. 815; 92 L. T. 435; 10 Com. Cas. 159; 10 Asp. M.C. 41; 21 T. L. R. 383—C.A.

— Circumstances Impairing Security of Mortgagee — Right of Mortgagee to take Possession.—A mortgagee of a ship is entitled to take possession of her, although there has been no actual default under the mortgage, if the mortgagor is working the ship in such a way as to materially impair the security of the mortgagee. The Manor, 77 L. J. P. 10; [1907] P. 339; 96 L. T. 871; 10 Asp. M.C. 446—C.A.

Agent Receiving Profits — Notice by Mortgagee — Periodical Distributions of Profits by Agent.—E. was the mortgagee of certain shares in two ships. The profits were received by Messrs. B., A. & Co., who made periodical distributions, once a year in March, amongst the persons entitled. E. gave notice in November of the mortgage:—Held, that E. was only entitled to the freight earned and received by Messrs. B., A. & Co. after the notice, and that before that date the mortgagor was entitled, as the fact that the agents only accounted to the persons entitled at stated periods made no difference. Essarts v. Whinney, 88 L. T. 191; 9 Asp. M.C. 363—C.A.

Action Brought by Mortgagees in Possession — Claim for Declarations for Use in an Action in France — Stay of Proceedings.—Mortgagees of a ship, having taken possession under their mortgage, chartered the ship on a voyage to a French port. On her arrival at her destination she was arrested in an action brought in the French Courts by material men who had supplied necessities at the order of the mortgagors—a limited company which had since gone into liquidation—and the freight in the hands of the consignees was also attached. The mortgagees, having given the necessary security in France to obtain the release of the ship, commenced actions in the High Court against the material men and the mortgagors, claiming declarations as to the validity of the mortgage and their rights as mortgagees in possession, in order to make use of such declarations in the litigation in France. On motions by the material men and the mortgagors to stay proceedings or dismiss these actions,—The Court dismissed the motion on behalf of the material men, but stayed proceedings in the action against the mortgagors, on the ground that as against them—they having taken no step antagonistic to the mortgagees—the action was oppressive and vexatious. The Manar (No. 1), 72 L. J. P. 41; [1903] P. 95; 89 L. T. 26; 51 W. R. 687—Bucknill, J.

 Mortgagee taking Possession — Right to Freight — Freight Earned but not Paid before Possession taken.—The mortgagee of a ship, upon taking possession of the vessel, is entitled to all unpaid freight which the ship is then in the course of earning, but is not entitled to freight previously earned, and due and payable, but unpaid at the time of his taking possession.

21. TRANSFER OF SHARES.

Transfer—Bill of Sale—Fees.]—Where several owners of shares in a ship by separate bills of sale transfer their shares to the same person, on registration of the transfers a separate fee is payable upon the scale set forth in the First Schedule to the Merchant Shipping (Mercantile Marine Fund) Act, 1898, and adopted by the Board of Trade with the consent of the Treasury, pursuant to section 3 of the Act, according to the gross tonnage represented by the shares transferred by each separate bill of sale. Harrowing Steamship Co. v. Toohey, 69 L. J. Q.B. 447; [1900] 2 Q.B. 28; 82 L. T. 677; 9 Asp. M.C. 91—Kennedy, J.

22. SHIPBROKER.

Ships to Load Cargo in Rotation—Interposing Ship—Duty of Broker—Delay to Ship in Rotation List.]—The defendants, who were shipbrokers, had for several years combined with firms in Australia to work together in providing ships for loading wool during the season, which lasts from June to February. For this purpose a programme was arranged by which ships were to load at regular intervals of about a week. The plaintiffs had had steamers on such programmes for some years. In the programme for 1901-1902, the plaintiffs' vessel, the Anglo-Chilian, was arranged to arrive at Sydney to load on December 17. That vessel was, in the course of another voyage, detained in South Africa, and the defendants, fearing that they would be left without tonnage, arranged, on November 12, that a ship called the Winchester, which was expected to arrive at Sydney about December 1, should come into the wool berth. The Winchester being late, the Eskdale was put in before her, and the Eskdale was loaded and despatched before, and without interfering with, the Anglo-Chilian. The Winchester arrived at Sydney on December 13, but had to be docked, and so did not commence loading till December 17, and she left Sydney on December 24. The last wool sale before Christmas was on December 18. The Anglo-Chilian arrived on December 20, but, owing to the presence of the Winchester, she got no cargo out of the sales before Christmas, and it was not till January 28 that she could get a cargo and sail. By that time the freight market was bad. The defendants did not inform the plaintiffs that they had arranged for the Winchester and Eskdale to go to Sydney to ship wool, nor did they arrange that they might refuse to load these interpolated ships if they should not be up to time and should clash with the programme ships. In an action by the plaintiffs to recover damages for breach by the defendants of their duty as shipbrokers,—Held, that the shipbrokers had not committed a breach of contract to use their best endeavours to load the ship in rotation on or about a specified day, the ship not having arrived at the port of loading until too late to load on or about that date, and that therefore the shipbrokers were not liable to the shipowners for the delay. Nitrate Producers' Steamship Co. v. Wills, 21 T. L. R. 699—H.L. (E.)

Disbursement by, on Account of Ship—Liability of Shipowner to Shipbroker Employed by Charterer.]—The charterers of a foreign ship instructed a shipbroker to do the ship's business at the port of loading. The shipbroker, having made disbursements and rendered services, brought an action against the foreign shipowners for the amount of his outlays and his commission. The owners, who did not dispute the charges, but had a counterclaim against the charterers, pleaded that they were not liable to the pursuer in respect that he had been employed by the charterers:—Held, that the defendants' master having accepted the pursuer's services as shipbroker, and the defendants having got the benefit of the pursuer's services, they were liable to him for his disbursements and services on account of the ship. Barnetson v. Peterson, 5 F. 86—Ct. of Sess.

23. FOREIGN SHIP.

Order for—Service of, on Consul "forthwith."]—An order for the provisional detention of a foreign ship is regular, although it bears to proceed under section 459 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, only, and makes no reference to section 462. A copy of such an order served on the foreign consul by registered letter, delivered on the day after that on which the detention order was served on the master, is served "forthwith" on the consul within the meaning of section 462. Larsen v. Hart, 2 F. (Just. Cas.) 54—Ct. of Justy. See CORLISON, col. 2410, and INTERNATIONAL LAW.

24. THAMES.

River Regulations—Barge Moored within Certain Distance of Dock Entrance—Dockmaster's Requisition to Remove—Sufficiency—Actual Obstruction.]—A notice to unmoor and remove a barge from within two hundred yards of an entrance to a dock in the Thames, served by the dockmaster's assistant, in pursuance of general instructions, upon the master or person in charge, is a proper and sufficient requisition by the dockmaster within section 101 of 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. lii., notwithstanding that it had been signed by him beforehand, and that the name of the barge was inserted, in a space purposely left blank, by the assistant immediately before service. Duckham v. Gibbs, 69 L. J. Q.B. 127; [1900] 1 Q.B. 394; 48 W. R. 239—D.

Evidence of actual obstruction, by a barge so moored, to a vessel entering or leaving the dock is not essential to proof of an offence under the latter part of the section. Id.

Conservancy—Duty to Keep the River Thames Free from Obstructions to Navigation—Negligence—Evidence.—The plaintiffs' steamer, while navigating the river Thames near Kew Bridge, was damaged by a baulk of timber which had been at one time apparently used as a pile, and which was afterwards found to have its blunt end stuck in the bed of the river and its pointed end slanting upwards and only a few inches below the surface of the water:—Held, upon the facts, assuming that a duty lay upon the Thames Conservators to keep the river Thames free from obstructions to navigation, that there was no evidence that the Conservators had been guilty of any neglect of such duty causing the damage to the plaintiffs' steamer. Queens of the River Steamship Co. v. Thames Conservators, 96 L. T. 901; 12 Com. Jas. 278; 23 T. L. R. 478—C.A. And see WRECK, supra.

Waterman—Lighter Navigating River—Men on Board—Licensed Waterman—"Competent"—"Navigating."—By by-law 27 of the Thames Conservancy By-laws, 1898, "Any lighter navigating the river shall when under way have at least one competent man constantly on board for the navigation and management thereof, and all such craft exceeding 50 tons out of not more than 150 tons burden shall when under way have one man in addition . . . on board to assist in the navigation and management of the same . . .":—Held, that in the case of a lighter exceeding fifty tons, but of not more than one hundred and fifty tons burden, it was necessary that both the men on board should be "competent" in the sense of being licensed by the Watermen's Company. Fardner, Locket & Hinton v. Doe, 75 L. J. K.B. 114; [1906] 2 K.B. 171; 95 L. T. 492—D.

Three lighters, the property of the appellants, or the purpose of being taken out of a dock were lashed together with ropes. A line was attached to one of them, and they were hauled through the lock of the dock out into the river by one of the appellants' watchmen, who stood with the line in his hand on a pierhead of the dock entrance. When the lighters were clear of the pierhead the watchman placed the end of the line round a post on the pierhead, and by slackening the line allowed the lighters to be carried up by the tide as far as the line would allow. Another watchman on board one of the lighters then released the line, and pushed the lighters by means of a staff along the shore until they reached a barge which was moored about ninety-five yards from the post on the pierhead. The lighters were then made fast to the barge and left to await the arrival of a tug:—Held, that the lighters were not being "navigated" within the meaning of section 66 of the Watermen's and Lightermen's Amendment Act, 1859. Ib.

The owners of a lighter exceeding fifty tons burden, lying in dock, put it in charge of a licensed lighterman with instructions that it was to leave the dock and anchor outside in the river to await a tug. The lighter, which had no additional man on board, was then hauled by machinery from the dock and through the entrance into the river. The tug not having arrived, the lighterman cast anchor, but it failed to hold, and the lighter was carried up the river a distance of five hundred yards, when it was secured at some barge roads:—Held, that the lighter was not "navigating" the river within the meaning of by-law 27. Ib.

— Licensed — Steamboat Navigated on Thames—Towage of Barges—By-law—Validity.—A by-law, purporting to be made under the Watermen's and Lightermen's Amendment Act, 1859, providing that every steamboat navigated in the River Thames within the limits of the Act, in the towage of barges, "shall have one licensed waterman on board . . . for the purpose of assisting in the management and navigation thereof" is ultra vires and void, inasmuch as it subverts no provision or purpose of the Act. Kennaird v. Cory, 67 L. J. Q.B. 809; [1898] 2 Q.B. 578; 78 L. T. 816; 47 W. R. 30; 62 J. P. 580; 19 Cox C.C. 145—D.

Authorised Toll—Illegal Charges—Right to Recover Excess.—There is nothing in the Thames Conservancy Act, 1894, giving the Conservators the right to levy more than the sixpence toll authorised by section 165 on a vessel merely because she is more than a few minutes alongside a pier embarking or disembarking her passengers or goods. An extra charge having been demanded in respect of this and paid,—Held, that, being unauthorised, it was paid without consideration, and could be recovered back. Queen of the River Steamship Co. v. Thames Conservators, 47 W. R. 685—Phillimore, J. And see THAMES.

25. JURISDICTION AND PRACTICE.

Action in Rem—"For wages as ship's husband."—Section 10 of the Admiralty Court Act, 1861, does not extend to give the Court jurisdiction to entertain a suit in rem "for wages as ship's husband." The Ruby (No. 2), 67 L. J. P. 28; [1898] P. 59; 78 L. T. 235; 46 W. R. 687; 8 Asp. M.C. 421—Jeune, P.

— Sale of Ship—Writ of Execution—Mortgagee.—County Courts with Admiralty jurisdiction have jurisdiction, in actions in rem, to condemn the res by their judgments, and to give effect to such condemnation by the sale of the res by way of execution. In a damage action in rem, the sale of the wrongdoing ship by the high bailiff under a warrant of execution issued from the County Court is a good sale as against a registered mortgagee of the ship, and passes to the purchaser the property in the ship free from incumbrances. The Ruby (No. 1), 67 L. J. P. 25; [1898] P. 52; 78 L. T. 267; 46 W. R. 464; 8 Asp. M.C. 389—Jeune, P.

— Negligent Grounding of Ship upon Oyster Bed—Damage done to Oysters and Oyster Beds.—The fact that the Sea Fisheries Act, 1868, ss. 51 to 53, gives a property in oysters to the owners of oyster fisheries under the Act, and provides a remedy for damage done thereto against the person doing the damage, does not prevent the owners of the fishery from proceeding in rem against the owner of a ship which has negligently been allowed to take the ground upon their oyster beds, thereby doing damage both to the oysters and the oyster beds. The Swift, 70 L. J. P. 47; [1901] P. 168; 85 L. T. 346; 9 Asp. M.C. 244—Jeune, P.

— Single Individual Suing in Name of Firm—Right to Sue “as owner of” Cargo—Indorsement on Writ—Irregularity.—In an action in rem for damage to cargo the plaintiff (one L. L. D.) sued as L. D. & Co. (the name of the firm under which he carried on business). From the indorsement on the writ, it appeared that L. D. & Co. were suing “as owners of” the cargo in question. On a motion to set aside the writ,—Held, that Order XLVIII. a rule 1 did not operate to abrogate the old practice of the Admiralty Court which enabled plaintiffs to sue as “owners of” a ship or cargo; and that, having regard to that practice and to the fact that the indorsement shewed that the action was brought by the “owners of” the cargo in question, the mistake on the face of the writ was a mere irregularity which might be amended. The Assunta, 71 L. J. P. 75; [1902] P. 150; 86 L. T. 660; 50 W. R. 544; 9 Asp. M.C. 302—Jeune, P.

— Res Sold by Private Person—Action against Proceeds of Sale.—Where property, which might have been the subject of an action in rem under Admiralty jurisdiction, has been sold by a private person, there is no right of action in rem against the proceeds of sale in the hands of such person. The Optima, 74 L. J. P. 94; 93 L. T. 638; 10 Asp. M.C. 147—Gorell Barnes, P.

Stores were landed from a vessel by alleged salvors and were delivered by them to an agent for the owners of the vessel, under an agreement, as they alleged, that they should look to the agent for a settlement of their claims for salvage, and the agent sold the stores, they assisting in the sale. The alleged salvors afterwards brought in the County Court what purported to be an action in rem against the proceeds of sale of the stores in the hands of the agent. On motion for writ of prohibition,—Held, that the County Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the action. Id.

Action in Personam—Judgment upon Default of Appearance.—The plaintiff in an Admiralty action in personam is entitled to enter final judgment upon default of appearance under Rules of Supreme Court, Order XIII. rule 3, notwithstanding any practice to the contrary. The Madelaine and the André Théodore, 73 L. J. P. 24; 89 L. T. 675; 9 Asp. M.C. 508; 20 T. L. R. 83—Gorell Barnes, J.

Action for Salvage Services—Counterclaim for Breach of Charterparty—Embarrassing Fair Trial.—The Admiralty Division has jurisdiction to entertain a claim for damages in respect of a breach of a charterparty, and may in its discretion allow in a proper case such a claim to be set up by way of counterclaim in an action in rem—for example, in a salvage action. The Cheapside, 73 L. J. P. 117; [1904] P. 339; 91 L. T. 83; 53 W. R. 120; 9 Asp. M.C. 595; 20 T. L. R. 655—C.A.

Action Brought by Mortgagees in Possession—Claim for Declaration for Use in an Action in France—Stay of Proceedings.—Mortgagees of a ship, having taken possession under their mortgage, chartered the ship on a voyage to a French port. On her arrival at her destination she was arrested in an action brought in the French Courts by material men who had supplied necessities at the order of the mortgagors—a limited company which had since gone into liquidation—and the freight in the hands of the consignees was also attached. The mortgagees, having given the necessary security in France to obtain the release of the ship, commenced actions in the High Court against the material men and the mortgagors, claiming declarations as to the validity of the mortgage and their rights as mortgagees in possession, in order to make use of such declarations in the litigation in France. On motions by the material men and the mortgagors to stay proceedings or dismiss these actions,—THE COURT dismissed the motion on behalf of the material men, but stayed proceedings in the action against the mortgagors, on the ground that as against them—they having taken no step antagonistic to the mortgagees—the action was oppressive and vexatious. The Manar (No. 1), 72 L. J. P. 41; [1903] P. 95; 89 L. T. 26; 51 W. R. 687; 9 Asp. M.C. 420—Bucknill, J.

Cross-Actions for Collision—High Court and County Court Actions—Transfer of County Court Action to High Court—Conduct of Consolidated Actions.—Where cross-actions for collision have been commenced, the one in the High Court and the other in a County Court, and the County Court action is transferred to the High Court and consolidated with the High Court action, the conduct of the consolidated actions will be given to the plaintiffs in the action commenced in the High Court, unless it is clear that in point of time the County Court action was commenced first. The Mersey, 70 L. J. P. 100; [1901] P. 369; 85 L. T. 584; 9 Asp. M.C. 273—Jeune, P.

Bail—Release of Ship—Amount—Minority Owners.—In an action of restraint the amount of bail to be put in by the defendants is the same proportion of the whole value of the vessel as the number of shares held by the plaintiff bears to the whole number of shares in the vessel. The Cawdor (No. 1), 79 L. T. 357; 8 Asp. M.C. 475—Gorell Barnes, J.

Caveat Warrant—Præcipe for, Signed by Defendant's Solicitor—Subsequent Arrest of the Ship by Plaintiffs—Discharge of Warrant—Condemnation of Plaintiffs in Damages and Costs.—A solicitor who, without any qualification, signs a præcipe for caveat warrant is personally liable to see that the undertaking to give bail therein given is complied with. The Crimdon, 69 L. J. P. 103; [1900] P. 171; 82 L. T. 660; 48 W. R. 623; 9 Asp. M.C. 104—Gorell Barnes, J.

It is not a “good and sufficient reason” for arresting a ship, notwithstanding the entry of a caveat against the issue of a warrant, that the plaintiffs preferred the security of the ship to the undertaking of the defendant's solicitor to give bail. Id.

Action of Restraint—Bail Bond—Jurisdiction of Court to Enforce Bond—Ship not Lost.—Where in an action of restraint a bond is given in the usual form for the safe return of the ship to the port to which she belongs, the Court has jurisdiction to order the amount secured by the bond to be paid into Court, although the ship be not lost. The Cawdor, 69 L. J. P. 23;

[1900] P. 47; 81 L. T. 705; 48 W. R. 293; 9 Asp. M.C. 19—C.A.

Payment into Court with Denial of Liability—Tender—Acceptance—Plaintiff's Right to Costs.]—Order XXXIX.B, rule 50 of the County Court Rules of 1892 applies to cases where money is paid into Court with a denial of liability under rule 48 of the same Order, as well as to cases of tender. The Vulcan, 67 L. J. P. 101; [1898] P. 222; 47 W. R. 123—D.

Appeal—Final or Interlocutory Order—Costs.]—Where money paid into Court by the defendant with a denial of liability has been accepted by the plaintiff in satisfaction, a refusal to make an order for the taxation and payment of the plaintiff's costs is a final decree or order within the meaning of section 26 of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868. Ib.

Trial by Jury.]—Section 101 of the County Courts Act, 1888, does not confer a right upon the plaintiff or the defendant in an action brought on the Admiralty side of a County Court under section 2 of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Amendment Act, 1869, to have the case tried by a jury. The Theodora, 66 L. J. P. 50; [1897] P. 279; 76 L. T. 627; 46 W. R. 157; 8 Asp. M.C. 259—D.

County Court—Jurisdiction—"Damage by collision"—Damage by Ship to Pier.]—The County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868, s. 3, provides that any County Court having Admiralty jurisdiction shall have jurisdiction to try and determine any claim for "damage by collision":—Held, that this Admiralty jurisdiction does not extend to damage done by a ship or vessel to some other object not a ship or vessel (such as a pier) by striking against it. The Normandy, 73 L. J. P. 55; [1904] P. 187; 90 L. T. 351; 9 Asp. M.C. 568; 52 W. R. 634; 20 T. L. R. 239—D.

—Payment into Court in Satisfaction—Acceptance of Amount—Amount Recovered Less than 2l.—Taxation of Costs.]—In an Admiralty action in the County Court, where money is paid into Court unconditionally by the defendant and accepted by the plaintiff in satisfaction, the plaintiff is entitled to his costs under Order XXXIX.B, rule 50A of the County Court Rules and Orders, and to have them taxed under Column B of the County Court Scales of Costs under rule 80 of the same Order, unless the County Court Judge otherwise orders, even where the amount so recovered by him is less than 2l. The Skudenaes, 70 L. J. P. 64—D.

—Defendant's Ship Lost—Defendant Resident in Scotland—Agent in England—Service.]—In section 21, sub-section 2 of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868, the words "owner of the vessel or property to which the cause relates" refer, in collision cases, to the defendant; and the words "agent in England" mean agent in respect of the business of the particular vessel to which the cause relates, at the time of the issue and service of the summons. The City of Agra, 67 L. J. P. 81; [1898] P. 198; 79 L. T. 307; 8 Asp. M.C. 457—Gorell Barnes, J.

—Coal Trimmers' Union.]—Where a committee of a coal trimmers' union held that a certain vessel was, according to their by-laws, a "self-trimmer," the effect of which was to bind her to a certain tariff rate of the board,—Held, that the question was one of law, and was within the jurisdiction of the County Court, and not of the Trimmers' Union. The Swindon, 49 W. R. 634—D.

Transfer of Action from County Court to High Court.]—A wages suit having been instituted in the County Court of Lancashire holden at Liverpool sitting in Admiralty, the defendants, in accordance with section 6 of the County Court (Admiralty Jurisdiction) Act, 1868, moved the High Court of Admiralty that the action should be transferred to the High Court. The application to the High Court was made by motion in Court:—Held, that the transfer would be made, but that the proper method of asking for a transfer from the County Court to the High Court under section 6 of the County Court (Admiralty Jurisdiction) Act, 1868, was by way of summons in chambers. The Indra, 94 L. T. 110; 10 Asp. M.C. 196; 22 T. L. R. 12—Gorell Barnes, P.

Appeal—Damages under 50l.]—A plaintiff in a collision action, instituted on the Admiralty side of the County Court, whose damages are less than 50l., has no right of appeal from a judgment dismissing the suit on a question of fact, although he institutes his action in a sum exceeding 50l. The Burma (No. 2), 80 L. T. 839; 8 Asp. M.C. 549—D.

1. STATUTES.

Colonial Solicitors.—63 & 64 Vict. c. 14 is the Colonial Solicitors Act, 1900.

Solicitors.—6 Edw. 7 c. 24 is the Solicitors Act, 1906.

2. CERTIFICATE.

Refusal of Registrar to Grant—Undischarged Bankrupt—Discretion.—Under section 23 of the Solicitors Act, 1843, the registrar of solicitors has no discretion to refuse to grant a certificate for practice except in the one case mentioned in the section—namely, where he is not satisfied that the person applying for the certificate is on the roll of solicitors; therefore, the fact that an applicant who is on the roll is an undischarged bankrupt does not entitle the registrar to refuse to issue to him his annual certificate. Solicitor, In re, 71 L. J. K.B. 36; [1902] 1 K.B. 128; 85 L. T. 619; 50 W. R. 196—C.A.

Section 24 of the Solicitors Act, 1843, does not confer a general jurisdiction on the Judge; his power is limited to reviewing the decision of the registrar where the latter has refused to grant a certificate on the ground mentioned in the exception in section 23. Solicitors Act, 1843, In re (80 L. T. 720), overruled. Ib.

3. RETAINER.

Pauper Litigant in House of Lords—Right to Costs.—There is nothing in the Rules of the Supreme Court to prevent a litigant, who is suing in the House of Lords in forma pauperis, from retaining a solicitor in the ordinary way; and when this has been done, the solicitor will be entitled to have his costs of the proceedings paid, after taxation, as between solicitor and client. Raphael, In re; Salomon, ex parte, 68 L. J. Ch. 309; [1899] 1 Ch. 853; 80 L. T. 226; 47 W. R. 330—Kekewich, J. Reversed on the facts, 68 L. J. Ch. 765; 81 L. T. 479—C.A.

Order for Taxation Obtained by Solicitor—Disputing Retainer.—Quere, whether, on an order for taxation obtained by the solicitor under the Solicitors Act, 1843, s. 37, containing a specific statement of a retainer in a particular transaction, it is open to the client who chooses to go in under the order to dispute such retainer. Jones, In re (56 L. J. Ch. 720; 36 Ch. D. 105), considered on this point. Wingfield and Blew, In re, 73 L. J. Ch. 797; [1904] 2 Ch. 665; 91 L. T. 783, per Romer, L.J.

Retainer by District Council.—See Brooks v. Torquay Corporation, ante, LOCAL GOVERNMENT, col. 1810.

4. PRIVILEGE.

Person from whom Documents Received.—In the liquidation of a company a witness at his private examination under section 115 of the Companies Act, 1862, was represented by a solicitor. The solicitor had had in his possession documents belonging to the company which were wrongfully handed to him by a servant or servants of the company:—Held, that his privilege as solicitor excused his answering from whom he received such documents. London and Northern Bank, In re; Hoyle's Case, 50 W. R. 386—Byrne, J.

5. CLIENT AND SOLICITOR.

Relation to Client—Commission—Disclosure of Fact—Duty to Advise—Acting for both Parties—Right to Recover.—The owner of a patent gave a commission note to his solicitor agreeing to pay him a commission out of the purchase money if he introduced a purchaser. The solicitor introduced another client as purchaser, to whom he shewed the commission note, to which the purchaser consented, and further agreed to pay a reasonable commission himself to the solicitor if, owing to any defect in the commission note, the solicitor could not recover it from the vendor. The purchase was completed and the solicitor sued the vendor for the commission, who paid 210*l.* into Court, which the solicitor accepted. On a summons to tax the solicitor's bill by the purchaser's executors, the latter sought to surcharge the solicitor with the 210*l.*:—Held, that, though under the circumstances the vendor could have resisted payment of the commission, yet the solicitor, having received it with full knowledge on the part of the purchaser, was not bound to account for it to the purchaser. Haslam and Hier Evans, In re, 71 L. J. Ch. 374; [1902] 1 Ch. 765; 86 L. T. 663; 50 W. R. 444—C.A.

Per STIRLING, L.J.—The rule applicable to such a transaction is analogous to the rule which governs the validity of a purchase by a solicitor from his client, and not to the more stringent rule which governs the validity of a gift by the client to the solicitor, except so far as the solicitor bargained for payment of commission by the purchaser in the event of its not being recoverable from the vendor. Ib.

Fiduciary Relation—Lease with Option to Purchase from Client to Solicitor—Improper Covenants—Undue Influence—Independent Advice.—C., a solicitor who carried on business as a brewer, acting in connection with his brewery business, took a lease of a public-house, with an option to purchase at the end of the term at a fixed price, from A., who from time to time, to a small extent, employed him as his solicitor. After A.'s death his widow and executors brought an action to have the lease set aside on the grounds that the lease was not a proper one, in that it did not contain any power of re-entry on the part of the lessor on the lessee making default in payment of rent, that C. acted as solicitor for both parties in the transaction, and that A. had no independent advice:—Held, that at the time of the transaction C. had no personal influence over A., and that therefore C. was not acting as his solicitor in hac re. Allison v. Clayhills, 97 L. T. 709—Parker, J.

Mortgage—Priority—Joint Advance—Trust Moneys and also Moneys of Solicitors—Security not in Names of Trustees—"Residue"—Breach of Trust—Inadequacy of Security.—A firm of solicitors advanced on mortgage of certain freeholds a sum of money which was expressed in the mortgage-deed to belong to the mortgagees (one of whom was a member of the firm) on a joint account. The money was in fact advanced as to one moiety by trustees out of trust funds, and as to the other moiety by the firm out of their partnership assets. The security contemplated advances on the footing of equality, and contained no unusual provisions. The firm acted on the occasion of the mortgage as the solicitors of the trustees, and advised the investment, and subsequently became bankrupt. The mortgaged property was not at any time a sufficient security for the money advanced:—Held, that the firm were involved in a breach of trust, on the ground that the security was inadequate, and that it ought to have been taken in the names of the trustees, and that for omitting to advise the trustees that the investment was a breach of trust the firm might be answerable in damages, but that the benefit acquired by the firm under the security was one which was in the contemplation of the parties at the time of the advance, and was not a sufficient ground for declaring the firm to be trustees in the whole or in part of their moiety of the mortgage debt and security, and that consequently the trustees were not entitled to be paid out of the security in priority to the persons claiming under the firm. Stokes v. France, 67 L. J. Ch. 69; [1898] 1 Ch. 212; 77 L. T. 595; 46 W. R. 183—Stirling, J.

—Transfer of Solicitor's own Security—Insufficient Security.—In July, 1892, the trustees of an indenture of settlement, dated September 3, 1890, had a fund of 1,100*l.* for investment. By an indenture dated February 15, 1877, a sum of 2,100*l.* had been secured, but part of the mortgaged premises had been sold for 1,000*l.* The balance consisted of three brick and stucco houses, held for ninety-nine years at a ground-rent of 9*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.* S., the solicitor of the trustees, transferred this mortgage to the trustees and received the 1,100*l.*, without explaining what he was doing. It was alleged that at this time the property, which was in one of the worst districts in the town, was only worth 200*l.*, and the evidence for the defence did not prove that it was worth more than 600*l.* in 1892. S. paid interest until his death, and this action was brought by the trustees claiming that the security should be realised and the balance made good by S.'s executor. The Trustee Act did not apply, it was said, as S. retained the money and converted it to his own use. For the defendant it was said the claim was one for negligence, and was barred by the Statute of Limitations. The money was not still held by a trustee. Even if S. ought to have had a valuation made, his omission to do so was a mere common-law tort:—Held, that the property was now, and also at the date of the transfer, an insufficient security for 1,100*l.*, and that the solicitor had transferred a security belonging to himself with knowledge that to take the security involved a breach of trust; that the trustees never knew the facts, and that S. had received the 1,100*l.* as cash, and that, the defendant admitting assets, an order must be made for the realisation of the security, and that the defendant must make up the deficiency and pay the costs of the action. Mitchinson v. Spencer, 86 L. T. 618—Swinfen Eady, J.

Investigation of Title by Solicitor—Title of Solicitor to Part of Land Conveyed—Ignorance of both Parties at Time of Conveyance.—A solicitor was instructed by the plaintiff to investigate the title to and prepare the conveyance of property which the plaintiff had contracted to buy. The solicitor was himself the owner of adjoining property, and had, in fact, encroached and built part of his greenhouse on the property comprised in the conveyance to the plaintiff, and had acquired a title by adverse possession to the encroached land. The fact of the encroachment was not known either to the plaintiff or to the solicitor, though the solicitor might have discovered it by testing the measurements of the property on investigating the title. The plaintiff, who had no notion at the time that he was buying any part of the encroached land, subsequently discovered the fact and brought an action claiming the encroached land as against the solicitor's representatives:—Held, by BUCKLEY, J., that the solicitor was estopped by representation and by breach of duty from setting up his own title to the encroached land as against the plaintiff. Held, on appeal (reversing BUCKLEY, J.), that, assuming the solicitor's conduct to have amounted to a representation on which an estoppel could be founded (as to which quære), still the action could not be maintained by the plaintiff, since he had in no way acted to his detriment on the faith of the alleged representation. Bell v. Marsh, 72 L. J. Ch. 360; [1903] 1 Ch. 528; 88 L. T. 605; 51 W. R. 325—C.A.

Liability for Costs—Acting for Defendant Company Dissolved under Companies Act, 1862, ss. 142 and 143, before Trial of Action—No Knowledge of Dissolution—Want of Due Diligence.—The principle laid down in Smout v. Ilbery (12 L. J. Ex. 357; 10 M. & W. 1) and approved of in "Story on Agency," § 265*a*, as to the responsibility of an agent whose agency has been determined by the death of the principal, applies to a solicitor appearing for a party to an action, for he is an agent of a special kind, and known to the opposite party as such, and it applies just as much in the case of the dissolution of a legal entity, such as a corporation, as in that of the death of a living person. Salton

v. New Beeston Cycle Co. (No. 2), 69 L. J. Ch. 20; [1900] 1 Ch. 43; 81 L. T. 437; 48 W. R. 92; 7 Manson, 74—Stirling, J.

Where, therefore, a plaintiff had obtained judgment in an action against a company, and on proceeding to enforce his judgment discovered that, after the action had been set down for trial, but before the hearing, the company had been dissolved under sections 142 and 143 of the Companies Act, 1862, the solicitors who appeared for the company, and who at the hearing did not know of the actual dissolution of the company, were ordered to pay to the plaintiff his costs as between solicitor and client as from the date of the hearing only, on the ground that they had not at that date used due diligence to ascertain whether the company was dissolved or not. Whiteley Exerciser, Lim. v. Gamage (67 L. J. Ch. 560; [1898] 2 Ch. 405) explained and distinguished. Ib.

Work done before Formation of Company by Solicitor—Adoption of Work by Company—Fees on Registration—Liability of Company.]—A company is under no liability in equity to pay for work done before its formation merely because it has adopted and derived benefit from such work. Where, therefore, solicitors have done work in connection with the formation of a company which is subsequently incorporated, they must, in order to recover their costs of such work from the company, establish a legal claim against the company either on their own behalf or on behalf of some person in whose shoes they are entitled to stand. English and Colonial Produce Co., In re, 75 L. J. Ch. 831; [1906] 2 Ch. 435; 95 L. T. 580; 13 Manson, 387; 22 T. L. R. 669—C.A.

Per BUCKLEY, J.—They can, however, recover the fees paid by them on the registration of the company inasmuch as the company is under a statutory liability to pay the same. Ib.

Custody of Title-deeds—Legal and Equitable Owners.]—The legal owner of property is entitled to the custody of the title-deeds, even though only a bare trustee. Solicitors who hold title-deeds are under no duty to keep possession of them until the equitable owner joins with the legal owner in demanding them, or to refuse to hand them over to the legal owner without such concurrence. Tendring Hundred Waterworks Co. v. Jones, 73 L. J. Ch. 41; [1903] 2 Ch. 615; 52 W. R. 61—Farwell, J.

Settled Accounts—Re-opening—Statutes of Limitation.]—The time within which a client must assert his right as against his solicitor to obtain, or, in the case of error, to open an account, is not limited to six years or to any other definite period. Hindmarsh, In re (1 Dr. & S. 129) and Mainland v. Upjohn, 58 L. J. Ch. 361; 41 Ch. D. 126) distinguished. Cheese v. Keen, 77 L. J. Ch. 163; [1908] 1 Ch. 245—Neville, J.

6. UNDERTAKING BY.

Appearance—Undertaking by Solicitor in Writing to Appear—Duration of Undertaking—Motion for Attachment.]—Although, under Order VIII. rule 1, a writ of summons is not available for service, unless renewed, for more than a year from the date of its issue, it is not intended by that rule that the writ is not to be in force for any purpose after the lapse of that time. Kerly, In re, 70 L. J. Ch. 189; [1901] 1 Ch. 467; 83 L. T. 699; 49 W. R. 211—C.A.

The writ in an action was in February, 1899, sent to the defendants' solicitors, and they, with the authority of their clients, indorsed it, "We accept service for the defendants . . . and will enter an appearance in due course." Negotiations for a settlement followed. The defendants' solicitors made an offer. The plaintiff's solicitors replied that they were prepared to stay further proceedings pending further instructions from their client. The defendants' solicitors wrote that their clients' offer remained open for two months. By consent the time for entering appearance was extended to April 30. Nothing further was done in the action until October 24, 1900, when the plaintiff's solicitors wrote definitely declining the defendants' offer, and calling on their solicitors to enter an appearance according to their undertaking. The defendants instructed their solicitors, having regard to the long delay, not to enter an appearance, and they accordingly declined to do so. The plaintiff moved to attach the solicitors:—Held, that, looking at all the circumstances of the case, the delay had not been so great as to deprive the plaintiff of the right of having the writ treated as still an effective writ as regards service; and that an appearance to it ought to be entered forthwith. Ib.

Per FARWELL, J.—An undertaking by a solicitor to enter an appearance to a writ of summons remains in force for a period of six years. Ib.

A defendant who has authorised his solicitor to enter an appearance for him is not at liberty to withdraw such authority after the solicitor has entered into an undertaking with the plaintiff to enter such appearance. Ib.

To Deposit Documents on Oath—Breach—Attachment—Committal—Notice—Service.]—On a motion made in an action the defendants gave an undertaking on or before a certain date to deposit in the central office upon oath any papers or documents in their possession handed to them by certain clients and belonging to certain estates. In pursuance of that undertaking the defendants deposited certain documents in the Central Office, but their affidavit did not shew that they had not in their possession others to which the plaintiffs' application related, and, as the documents were required for an examination to be held on the day following the deposit, the plaintiffs on that day moved to attach the defendants for breach of their undertaking. The defendants opposed the motion on the ground (inter alia) that the order containing their undertaking had not been served upon them; that the notice of motion for attachment had not been personally served upon them; and that the proper remedy for breach of an undertaking was committal and not attachment:—Held, that service of the order containing the undertaking was unnecessary; that personal service of a notice of motion for committal was necessary; and that an undertaking, whether positive or negative, must be enforced by committal and not by attachment. D. v. A. & Co., 69 L. J. Ch. 382; [1900] 1 Ch. 484; 82 L. T. 47; 48 W. R. 429—Cozens-Hardy, J.

To Stamp Documents—Liability—Practice.]—Where judgment was pronounced, after the admission in evidence of unstamped documents, upon the usual undertaking by the solicitors to stamp them, but the order could not be drawn up owing to the failure of the solicitors to comply with their undertaking, THE COURT, upon the application of the successful litigant, directed the order to be drawn up without the insertion of the documents in question, and the solicitors were ordered to produce the documents, properly stamped, to the Registrar, within four days. Coolgardie Gold Fields, In re; Fleming, ex parte, 69 L. J. Ch. 215; [1900] 1 Ch. 475; 82 L. T. 23; 48 W. R. 461—Cozens-Hardy, J.

The practice as to the admission of unstamped documents traced and explained. Ib.

7. COUNTRY SOLICITOR.

Auctioneer Employed by Country Solicitor—Costs Received by London Agent—Action by Auctioneer against London Agent—Privity of Contract.]—H. had been employed in a foreclosure action by D. and B., a country firm of solicitors, as auctioneer, and when the costs came to be taxed by the London agent S. he received a voucher from H. for his fees. S. thereupon took the money out of Court after taxation, which included this item of H.'s fees. Before he received this money it came to his knowledge that H. had not been paid. In an action by H. against S. to recover these fees as money had and received—Held, that there was no privity of contract between them, and the action therefore failed. Hannaford v. Syms, 79 L. T. 30—Channell, J.

Country Agent—Scope of Delegated Authority—Power to Compromise.]—A solicitor who is employed in the general conduct of a cause, or matter, as the town or country agent of another solicitor, possesses the same general authority in the conduct of the cause, or matter—including the power to compromise in a bona fide and reasonable manner—as is possessed by the principal solicitor by whom he is employed, unless this general authority has been expressly limited. Dicta in Withers v. Parker (28 L. J. Ex. 292; 29 L. J. Ex. 320; 4 H. & N. 524; 5 H. & N. 725) considered and followed. Newen, In re; Carruthers v. Newen, 72 L. J. Ch. 356; [1903] 1 Ch. 812; 88 L. T. 264; 51 W. R. 297—Farwell, J.

Lien of Town Agents for Country Solicitors—Bankruptcy of Country Solicitors—Taxation of Country Solicitors' Bill by Client—Right of Country Solicitors to Production of Documents.]

—Country solicitors owed their London agents more than 100l. for general agency business, which included the agency charges in a bill of 24l. owing to the country solicitors from their client E. The country solicitors became bankrupt, and their trustee delivered a bill of costs to E., who obtained an order of course to tax the same against the trustee, the order being obtained through the London agents, who were acting in the matter as agents for another firm of country solicitors. The London agents were afterwards changed, and ceased to act in the matter. In the course of the taxation it became necessary for the trustee to produce documents in the hands of the London agents on which they claimed a lien for their general agency charges, and the Taxing Master directed the trustee to issue a subpoena, on which the London agents attended and refused to produce the documents on the ground of their lien:—Held, by Joyce, J., that the London agents were not bound to produce the documents at the instance of the country solicitors or their trustee except upon payment of the whole of their general agency charges, and that it made no difference that the London agents had acted in obtaining the order for taxation on behalf of E. An appeal from this decision was settled by the London agents delivering the documents to the trustee upon his undertaking to pay to them the whole amount received from E., less the costs of taxation. Jones & Roberts, In re, 74 L. J. Ch. 458; [1905] 2 Ch. 219; 92 L. T. 562; 54 W. R. 22—C.A.

Unqualified or Unauthorised Person—Entering Caveat—Ministerial Act.]—Any person may enter a caveat on behalf of a country solicitor, and in doing so it is not necessary for him to give a London address. Entering a caveat is a ministerial act only, and a lay person who does so on behalf of another is not liable to attachment as an unqualified person under section 26 of the Solicitors Act of 1860. Panton, In re, 70 L. J. P. 95; [1901] P. 239; 84 L. T. 725—Jeune, P.

8. COVENANT AS TO PRACTICE.

Articles of Clerkship—Covenant not to Practice within Certain Radius—Breach—Work usually done by Solicitors.]—The defendant had bound himself to a solicitor practising at M. by articles for a term, and covenanted that he would not at any time act for or on behalf of any persons or do any work usually done by solicitors within a radius of fifteen miles from M. without written permission. The defendant took proceedings to obtain probate of the will of a person within the prohibited radius, and corresponded from H. with a witness within the prohibited radius with a view to obtaining his evidence in order to enable probate to be obtained. He signed the præcipe directing a plaint note to be issued for a County Court summons at a Court in the prohibited area on behalf of a plaintiff residing therein, and conducted the proceedings until receipt of the amount paid into Court. He prepared the will of a testatrix residing within the area on instructions received outside the area, and received a small fee therefor, but was present when she executed it within the area; and, lastly, he advertised in a paper circulating within but published outside the area a farm for letting within the prohibited district:—Held, in an action to restrain the defendant from practising within the prohibited limit, that the covenant might be broken although the defendant or his clerks did not go professionally within such limit. That therefore the proceedings in connection with the collection of the debt through the County Court infringed the covenant. Also the acts done in relation to the execution of the will, which must be held to have been done by the defendant in his character of a solicitor, constituted a breach of such covenant, but that those as to advertising the farm did not break it. Quere, as to applying for the proof of evidence infringing the covenant. Edmundson v. Render (No. 1), 90 L. T. 814—Kekewich, J.

Prohibited Area—Acts Done Within by Letters from Without.—A covenant by a solicitor that he will not do any professional work within a radius of so many miles from a place is broken if he writes as a solicitor and sends to addresses within the radius, letters, for example, demanding payment from the addressee or giving advice to the addressee, for in such case the demand is made or the advice given at the place at which the letter is received. Edmundson v. Render (No. 2), 74 L. J. Ch. 585; [1905] 2 Ch. 320; 93 L. T. 124; 53 W. R. 632—Buckley, J.

9. UNCERTIFICATED SOLICITOR.

Right to Recover Costs—Father and Son—Son's Certificate Omitted to be Taken Out—Work Done by Father.—P. and P. junior, who were father and son, carried on business together as solicitors at A., under the name of J. E. P. & Son. P. junior had served his apprenticeship to his father, and had been admitted a solicitor about five years. There was no deed of partnership between them, no division of profits, and no account of profits between them. An action was commenced in 1902 by the plaintiff with J. E. P. & Son as his solicitors; it was tried in the summer of 1902 and resulted in judgment for the plaintiff with costs. By an oversight of the town agent of J. E. P. & Son the duty was not paid on the certificate of P. junior for 1902 till October of that year, when the omission was discovered and the duty paid. The duty for the certificate of P. senior was duly paid. On taxation of the costs the defendant objected to such of the items of the bill of costs as represented work done while the duty on the certificate of P. junior remained unpaid. P. senior deposed that all the work in the case had been done by himself:—Held, that P. senior was entitled to recover the whole costs. Martin v. Sherry, [1905] 2 Ir. R. 62—C.A.

Submission by Client to Pay.—Where a client has obtained an order of course for taxation of his solicitor's bill of costs, with the usual submission to pay what should appear to be due, the solicitor under section 12 of the Attorneys and Solicitors Act, 1874, cannot be allowed items in the bill for business done while he was without a certificate. Jones, In re (89 L. J. Ch. 88; L. R. 9 Eq. 63), distinguished. Sweeting, In re, 67 L. J. Ch. 159; [1898] 1 Ch. 268; 78 L. T. 6; 46 W. R. 242—North, J.

10. BILL OF COSTS AND TAXATION.

Oral Agreement to Charge Less than Ordinary Costs—Validity of.—An agreement by a solicitor to charge a client less than ordinary costs is not required by section 4 of the Solicitors Act, 1870, when set up by the client, to be in writing. Clare v. Joseph, 76 L. J. K.B. 724; [1907] 2 K.B. 369; 96 L. T. 770; 23 T. L. R. 498—C.A.

Contentious Business—Agreement in Writing—Examination by Taxing Master.—An agreement in writing between a solicitor and client agreeing remuneration to be paid by the client to the solicitor for contentious business previously done by him is a sufficient agreement within section 4 of the Attorneys and Solicitors Act, 1870, if it is signed by the client only, and it must be referred to the Taxing Master for examination. Pontifex v. Farnham (62 L. J. Q.B. 344) doubted. Bake v. French (No. 2), 76 L. J. Ch. 605; [1907] 2 Ch. 215; 97 L. T. 750—Warrington, J.

Solicitor—Trustee—Power to Charge Profit-Costs—Insolvent Estate.—Where a solicitor is appointed executor and trustee of a will and is empowered by the testator to make professional charges as solicitor to the estate, he will not, if the estate is insolvent, as against creditors, be entitled to his profit-costs in relation to an administration action brought against him by a creditor, or otherwise incurred in the administration of the estate. White, In re; Pennell v. Franklin, 67 L. J. Ch. 502; [1898] 2 Ch. 217; 78 L. T. 770; 46 W. R. 676—C.A.

Solicitor—Mortgagee.—See Cheese v. Keen, 77 L. J. Ch. 163; [1908] 1 Ch. 245—Neville, J., and MORTGAGE, col. 1732.

Disbursements—Estate Duty Paid on Obtaining Probate for Client.—A payment for estate duty made by a solicitor when obtaining probate of a will on behalf of a client ought not to be included in the solicitor's bill of costs as a disbursement. Lamb, In re (58 L. J. Q.B. 455; 23 Q.B. D. 5), overruled. Kingdon & Wilson, In re, 71 L. J. Ch. 604; [1902] 2 Ch. 242; 86 L. T. 639; 50 W. R. 533—C.A.

Estate duty is not, like probate duty, merely a stamp duty, but is a duty for which the executor is personally accountable. Id.

Bill Improperly Headed—Sufficiency of Bill—Costs of Proceedings before Justices.—The plaintiffs had acted as solicitors for the defendant's wife in a petition for judicial separation in the High Court, and subsequently in proceedings before Justices under the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895. The petition in the High Court was dismissed, but the defendant was ordered to pay the costs as between party and party, which he did. The proceedings before Justices were successful, and the defendant was ordered to pay a certain fixed sum for costs, which he paid accordingly. The plaintiff then delivered to the defendant the bill of costs on which the present action was brought, which was headed "In the High Court of Justice, Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division (Divorce)," and which contained not only the items of extra costs as between solicitor and client in the proceedings in that Court, but also items of costs in advising the wife as to her differences with the defendant and items of costs in respect of the proceedings before justices. The items allowed on taxation in the party and party bill of costs in the High Court were not included in the bill:—Held, that the bill was not invalid, since in respect of the High Court costs it might be regarded as having been delivered in two parts, and in respect of the other items it gave the defendant all the information he could reasonably require, although those items were not separately headed. Cobbett v. Wood, 77 L. J. K.B. 406; [1908] 1 K.B. 590; 98 L. T. 45—Pickford, J.

Held, also, on the authority of Cale v. James (66 L. J. Q.B. 249; [1897] 1 Q.B. 418), that the costs in respect of the proceedings before Justices could not be recovered. Id.

Drawing Bills of Costs—Costs of.—Costs of drawing bills are allowed where there is litigation or quasi-litigation, but not where bills already delivered are ordered to be taxed or the order is one between a solicitor and his own client for delivery and taxation. National Bank of Wales, In re, 71 L. J. Ch. 679; [1902] 2 Ch. 412; 87 L. T. 436; 50 W. R. 541—Buckley, J.

Claim for Costs against Client—Cross-claim by Client—No Signed Bill—Adjustment of Accounts and Balance Struck in Favour of Solicitor—Account Stated.—Where a solicitor has a bill of costs against a client, and the client has a contra account against the solicitor for work done as a tradesman, and the parties adjust their accounts and a balance is struck in favour of the solicitor, he is entitled to sue for such balance on an account stated, although no signed bill of costs was delivered, and although there was no written agreement as to the costs within the meaning of the Solicitors Acts. Turner v. Willis, 74 L. J. K.B. 365; [1905] 1 K.B. 463; 92 L. T. 412; 53 W. R. 348—D.

Bill of Costs Paid by Executor—Right of Creditor to Taxation—"Party interested."—A creditor is entitled, as "a party interested" in his deceased debtor's estate, to apply for taxation of a bill of costs paid by the executor out of the estate, within section 39 of the Solicitors Act, 1843. Dictum of SIR GEORGE JESSEL, M.R., in Leadbitter and Harvey, In re (48 L. J. Ch. 242; 10 Ch. D. 388), as to the meaning of "party interested," explained. Roberts-Jones and Everett, In re, 73 L. J. Ch. 706; [1904] 2 Ch. 363; 91 L. T. 286; 53 W. R. 59—Buckley, J.

Security for Costs of Discovery and Interrogatories.—Payments by a solicitor out of his own pocket into the "Security for Costs Account" in respect of discovery and interrogatories under Rules of the Supreme Court, Order XXXI. rules 25-27, are not payments by him as solicitor for his client, and ought not to be included in his bill of costs as disbursements. They are, in effect, loans to the client, and should be entered in the cash account. The rule laid down in Remnant, In re (18 L. J. Ch. 374, 377; 11 Beav. 603, 611), applied. Buckwell and Berkeley, In re, 71 L. J. Ch. 713; [1902] 2 Ch. 596; 87 L. T. 215; 51 W. R. 21—C.A.

Amended Bill—Action to Recover Costs—Reference for Moderation after Verdict.—A reference of a bill of costs for moderation to a Taxing Master directed by a Judge at the trial after verdict for the plaintiff in an action to recover the amount of the bill is not a reference under section 37 of the Solicitors Act, 1843. Where a solicitor, having sent in a bill of costs, subsequently sends in a corrected or amended bill for a larger amount, and brings an action to recover the amount of the second bill, the first bill is cogent but not conclusive evidence of the amount due to him. After verdict for the plaintiff, the Judge at the trial is not bound to refer the first, and only the first bill, but may and ought under ordinary circumstances to refer the second bill to a Taxing Master for moderation. Heather & Co., In re (39 L. J. Ch. 781; L. R. 5 Ch. 694), and Thompson, In re (55 L. J. Ch. 138; 30 Ch. D. 441), distinguished. Lumsden v. Shipcote Land Property Co., 75 L. J. K.B. 665; [1906] 2 K.B. 433; 95 L. T. 17; 54 W. R. 461; 22 T. L. R. 559—C.A.

Order for Delivery of Bill of Costs—Order for Extension of Time not Drawn up—Non-compliance—Motion for Attachment—Service of Orders.—Before a client, who has obtained an order against his solicitor for delivery of his bill of costs within a fixed time, which time is afterwards extended by order, can obtain leave to issue a writ of attachment for non-compliance with the orders, both orders must be drawn up and served, or a four-day order obtained. Seal, In re; Seal and Edgelow, In re, 72 L. J. Ch. 58; [1903] 1 Ch. 87; 87 L. T. 731; 51 W. R. 164—Byrne, J.

Delivery of Bill—Disclaimer by Solicitor of Right to Costs.—Where a solicitor disclaims all right to be paid costs, whether by way of set-off against money of his client in his hands or otherwise, he cannot, under the common order to tax, be compelled to deliver a bill of costs merely in order that the client may obtain an account of cash advanced to the solicitor. Landor, In re, 68 L. J. Ch. 373; [1899] 1 Ch. 818; 80 L. T. 643; 47 W. R. 457—North, J.

Common Order to Tax—Suppression of Material Facts—Agreement to Refer.—An agreement was made to pay reasonable and proper costs, and a bill of costs was delivered. The only real question was whether the negotiation fee was properly chargeable. It was agreed to refer the question to the council of the Law Society, and a case was submitted to the respondents for approval. The respondents said they would have altered the case by stating that no negotiation in fact took place, and refused to proceed with the reference, and obtained the common order to tax. For the applicants it was said that an order of course would not have been made if the agreement to refer had been disclosed. The respondents said that only a special agreement going to the whole bill required to be mentioned, not an agreement as to one item, even if such an agreement was in fact concluded:—Held, that the test was that stated in Gedye, In re (15 Beav. 254, at p. 257): Was the matter omitted of sufficient moment and importance to require grave consideration or discussion? Only matters of real moment and importance require to be mentioned, and the fact that at one time the parties intended to refer the question to the Law Society was not such a matter. Collyer-Bristow & Co., In re; Fletcher, ex parte, 81 L. T. 110—North, J.

Bill Delivered More than One Month—Common Order—Expiration of Time Limit—Proceeding with Taxation—Jurisdiction.]—Under the common order for taxation obtained by the client when the bill has been delivered more than one month and less than twelve months—which directs the Taxing Master to make his certificate within a month (unless he shall extend the time), or the order is to be of no effect—by virtue of Order LXV. rule 27, sub-rule 57 of the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883, the Taxing Master can in his discretion extend the time, though the application is not made to him to do so till after the month has elapsed, and even though the order was not served on the solicitor till after that date; but, under such circumstances, an extension of time ought not to be granted by the Taxing Master as a matter of course. Macintosh, Dixon & Co., In re, 72 L. J. Ch. 609; [1903] 2 Ch. 394; 88 L. T. 820; 51 W. R. 659—C.A.

Third-Party Order for Taxation.]—A third-party order for taxation does not alter the nature or enlarge the scope of the liability upon the existence of which the order is based. Where such an order has been made for the taxation of a lessor's bill of costs, at the instance of a lessee, the Court is bound to look at the nature of the items in the bill and to consider whether, apart from the order, the applicant is bound to pay them. The lessee does not by obtaining the order render himself liable to pay the whole bill. Negus, In re (64 L. J. Ch. 79; [1895] 1 Ch. 73) applied. Gray, In re, 70 L. J. Ch. 133; [1901] 1 Ch. 239; 84 L. T. 24; 40 W. R. 298—Cozens-Hardy, J.

— Arbitration—Umpire's Solicitor's Costs of Preparing Award—Payment on Taking up Award—“Special circumstances.”]—An umpire, in an arbitration under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Acts for the purpose of assessing the compensation payable upon a compulsory purchase of land, directed by his award that the purchaser should pay to the vendor his costs of the reference and the costs of the award, including the umpire's own fee, and in addition the costs and expenses of and incidental to preparing and perfecting the award. The purchaser having, upon taking up the award, paid to the umpire's solicitors the amount demanded for the umpire's fee and their charges, applied in the King's Bench Division for an order for the delivery by the umpire's solicitors of their bill of costs and for its taxation under section 38 of the Solicitors Act, 1843:—Held, that, the bill of costs being between solicitor and client, and the purchaser being a person not chargeable therewith who had paid it, the case fell within section 38, and that the impossibility of the purchaser knowing the effect of the award when he took it up constituted a “special circumstance” justifying the order for taxation after payment of the bill; but that the application ought to have been made in and must be transferred to the Chancery Division. Collyer-Bristow & Co., In re, 70 L. J. K.B. 941; [1901] 2 K.B. 382; 85 L. T. 208; 50 W. R. 4—C.A.

— Mortgagor and Mortgagee—Practice.]—On taxation under the common order of the mortgagee's solicitor's bill, under section 38 of the Solicitors Act, 1843, the mortgagor is entitled to have the taxation limited to such items of costs as have been incurred by the client, the mortgagee, strictly in his position of mortgagee. Gray, In re (70 L. J. Ch. 133; [1901] 1 Ch. 239), approved and followed. Per ROMER, L.J.—The scope and effect of section 38 considered. Longbotham & Sons, In re, 73 L. J. Ch. 681; [1904] 2 Ch. 152; 90 L. T. 801; 52 W. R. 660—C.A.

Taxation by Cestui que Trust—Twelve Months after Payment.]—The discretion given to the Court by section 39 of the Solicitors Act, 1843, to order taxation at the instance of a cestui que trust of a bill of costs which has been paid by a trustee is limited by the proviso in section 41 that the application must be made within twelve months after payment. Downes, In re (13 L. J. Ch. 159; 5 Beav. 425), followed. Wellborne, In re, 70 L. J. Ch. 172; [1901] 1 Ch. 312; 83 L. T. 611; 49 W. R. 113—C.A.

Order for Taxation Obtained by Solicitor—Disputing Retainer.]—Quere, whether, on an order for taxation obtained by the solicitor under the Solicitors Act, 1843, s. 37, containing a specific statement of a retainer in a particular transaction, it is open to the client who chooses to go in under the order to dispute such retainer. Jones, In re (56 L. J. Ch. 720; 36 Ch. D. 105), considered on this point. Wingfield and Blew, In re, 73 L. J. Ch. 797; [1904] 2 Ch. 665, per Romer, L.J.

Solicitor Acting as Parliamentary Agent—Charges for Obtaining a Bill in Parliament.]—Where a parliamentary agent who is also a solicitor is employed to do work in his capacity of parliamentary agent, and delivers a bill of costs containing only charges which might be made by a person acting as a parliamentary agent, and there is nothing to show that the relation of solicitor and client exists between the parties, the bill of costs is not taxable in the High Court under the Solicitors Act, 1843. Sadlow, In re (18 L. J. Ch. 182; 11 Beav. 400), and Strother, In re (26 L. J. Ch. 695; 3 K. & J. 518), explained. Baker, Lees & Co., In re, 72 L. J. K.B. 186; [1903] 1 K.B. 189; 87 L. T. 662; 51 W. R. 246—C.A.

Non-professional Work.]—The solicitors to a trust presented a bill of costs, one of the items of which was commission at the rate of 5 per cent. for the collection of the rents of the trust estate. There was no agreement between the solicitors and the trustees as to the remuneration to be paid for the collection of these rents:—Held, that if the collection of rents were non-professional work, this commission ought not to be included in a bill of costs submitted for taxation; and that, on the other hand, if the collection of rents were professional work, it was not open to the Taxing Master, in the absence of agreement as to remuneration, to allow this commission as a lump sum without reference to the items. Held, accordingly, that the commission must, in either case, be struck out of the bill, without prejudice to the right of the solicitors to recover proper remuneration, in a proper manner, for the collection of the rents. Swilson, Coope & Co., In re, 73 L. J. Ch. 541; [1904] 1 Ch. 837; 90 L. T. 641; 52 W. R. 556; 20 T. L. R. 418—Swinfen Eady, J.

Bill of Sale—Bankruptcy of Grantor—Costs of Preparation and Redemption.—The grantor of a bill of sale became bankrupt, and the grantee, having sold the chattels therein comprised, realised a sum more than sufficient to discharge the amount secured by the bill of sale. By an antecedent agreement the grantor was liable to pay all the expenses of the bill of sale, and the grantee now claimed to deduct out of the fund in his hands his solicitor's costs in connection with the preparation and redemption of the bill. The official receiver, as trustee, having paid the costs under protest, moved in the bankruptcy for a declaration that certain heads of these costs could not be charged:—Held, that the Court having jurisdiction in the bankruptcy had a discretionary power under the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, s. 102, to tax the costs of the grantee's solicitor, and that the third-party taxation provided by the Solicitors Act, 1843, s. 38, did not exclude this discretionary jurisdiction. Ford, In re; Official Receiver, ex parte, 84 L. T. 829—D.

Bills of Fees, Charges, and Disbursements—Subsequent Addition of Item by Master—Correction of Arithmetical Error.—A solicitor's bill contained an item not properly chargeable, but omitted a second item properly chargeable, and also of greater amount. It further contained an arithmetical error:—Held, that the Taxing Master was not at liberty to allow the improper item as standing pro tanto in the place of the proper item omitted, but that he was justified in correcting the arithmetical error. Grant, Bulcraig & Co., In re, 75 L. J. Ch. 106; [1906] 1 Ch. 124; 93 L. T. 760; 54 W. R. 165; 22 T. L. R. 96—Farwell, J.

Deposit under Rule 147 of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1883 and 1890—Inclusion in Bill of Costs.—A deposit paid under rule 147 of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1883 and 1890, on the presentation of a petition is properly included in a solicitor's bill of costs by virtue of rule 112, sub-rule 1 of the same Rules, and of the scale of costs thereunder. Id.

Payment on Account.—The plaintiff had paid the amount of an account sent in by his solicitor, which account was not, however, a "bill of costs," inasmuch as it did not set out the particular items charged. More than twelve months after such payment the plaintiff took out a summons for delivery and taxation of the solicitor's bill of costs. No bill of costs had been delivered at the date of the hearing of the summons:—Held, that the payment on account could not in the circumstances be made referable to the bill of costs which would be delivered after the hearing of the application; and that the plaintiff was entitled to the common form order for delivery and taxation, notwithstanding the payment made upwards of twelve months before the issue of the summons. Callis, In re, 49 W. R. 316—Joyce, J.

Statute-barred Items—Fund Recovered for Client—Lien—Set-off—Right to Appropriate.—In an action brought in 1902 upon a solicitor's bill of costs for the period from 1878 to 1899, which bill, together with a cash account, was delivered to the defendant in 1899, the Statute of Limitations (21 Jac. 1, c. 16), s. 3, was pleaded as a defence. At the trial the Judge held that the defence was good as to all items incurred before 1893, and ordered the bill to be referred for taxation, and to take the cash account from 1893, and that the plaintiff should give credit for all sums received on account of the defendant "in respect of, or which ought to be treated as reducing or discharging, the bill of costs." On the taxation the defendant brought in a surcharge for 66l. 3s. 8d. received by the solicitor on May 9, 1894, as solicitor for the defendant in an action brought by him against a third party. The surcharge was valid, and had been omitted through inadvertence from the cash account delivered. The plaintiff contended that this sum ought not to be treated as reducing the bill of costs under taxation, but as applied in payment of what was due to the solicitor from the defendant on May 9, 1894, in respect of statute-barred items:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled so to treat the sum—either on the ground of lien, since the lien of a solicitor on a fund recovered is confined to the costs of the action in which it is recovered, and none of these were in the present case among the statute-barred items; or upon the ground of set-off, since no debts can be used by way of set-off except such as are recoverable by action, and the statute-barred items were not so recoverable; or upon the ground of appropriation, since, assuming the right to appropriate, no appropriation had been in fact made, and after the judgment in the action it was no longer open to the plaintiff to make an appropriation. Smith v. Betty, 72 L. J. K.B. 853; [1903] 2 K.B. 317; 89 L. T. 258; 52 W. R. 137—C.A.

Administration Action—Infant—Guardian ad Litem—Order for Costs to Come out of Estate—Infant Coming of Age before Taxation—Discretion of Taxing Master to Order Attendance of Guardian.—An order was made in an administration action that the costs of the plaintiff and of the defendants should be taxed as between solicitor and client and be paid out of the testator's estate. One of the defendants was an infant, who appeared by her guardian ad litem. After the order for taxation the infant came of age and changed her solicitors. The Taxing Master thereupon directed that the guardian ad litem should attend before him by his solicitors upon the taxation:—Held, that the Master had a discretion under Order LXV, rule 27, sub-r. 27, to make the order, and the Court would not interfere. Salmond, In re; Rydon v. Williams, 22 T. L. R. 161—Farwell, J.

Winding-up of Company—Liquidator's Costs, Charges, and Expenses—Inclusion of Disbursements as well as Professional Charges—Inclusion of Costs already Paid—Reduction by One-sixth Taxed off.—For the purpose of ascertaining whether a bill of costs has been reduced on taxation by one-sixth, under Order LXV. rule 27, sub-rule 38B, professional charges only, and not also disbursements, are to be considered. The present practice in the Taxing Office (of including disbursements) is wrong. Mercantile Lighterage Co., In re, 75 L. J. Ch. 171; [1906] 1 Ch. 491; 94 L. T. 405; 54 W. R. 389; 22 T. L. A bill carried in for taxation as between solicitor and client properly includes party and party costs already taxed and paid by a third party, credit being given for the amount so received. Ib.

11. SCALE OF ALLOWANCES.

Action Brought in Mayor's Court—Amount Recovered under 50*l.*—Award of Costs by Judge on Higher Scale.]—The plaintiff in an action in the Mayor's Court having recovered an amount exceeding 20*l.* and under 50*l.*, the Judge, under rule 13 of the Mayor's Court Rules, 1890, awarded costs on the scale applicable to cases in which the amount recovered was 50*l.* and above. The unsuccessful defendants obtained an order under the Solicitors Act, 1843, to tax in the High Court their solicitors' bill of costs in the action:—Held, that the Taxing Master was right in taxing these costs upon the higher scale. Briggs & Son, In re, 72 L. J. K.B. 644; [1903] 2 K.B. 156; 89 L. T. 7; 51 W. R. 577—C.A.

Building Lease.]—A lease for seven hundred years at the yearly rent of 50*l.*, with a covenant on the part of the lessee to expend within five years the sum of 500*l.* in building and in effecting permanent improvements, buildings or improvements in corrugated iron to be deemed permanent improvements; and also a covenant to keep the premises and improvements in repair, and a covenant to insure,—Held, to be a building lease within the General Order, 1884, made under the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881. Hall to Sutton, [1900] 1 Ir. R. 137—V.O.

— Scale of Charges.]—A lease of a house in a town was made to a municipal corporation for the purpose of a technical school, for thirty-five years, at the yearly rent of 35*l.*, with a covenant by the lessees to expend 250*l.* within two years from the date of the lease in improvements and alterations, according to the specification of an engineer. The matters provided for in the specification did not involve rebuilding, but comprised a good deal of new work and structural alterations in addition to repairs:—Held, that the lease was a building lease within the General Order, and that the costs of the lessor's solicitor for preparing it were to be taxed accordingly. Kilkenny Corporation, In re, [1904] 1 Ir. R. 570—M.R.

Compromise of Litigation—Agreement to Pay Costs.]—On a taxation at the instance of a third party under section 38 of the Solicitors Act, 1843, according to the rule established by Longbotham & Sons, In re (73 L. J. Ch. 681; [1904] 2 Ch. 152), the Taxing Master is right in disallowing, as against the third party, any unusual and unnecessary costs, though incurred by the special instructions of the person chargeable, which apart from such special instructions would not have been allowed against the person chargeable on an ordinary taxation between solicitor and client; and it makes no difference whether the liability of the third party arises out of an implied contract, as in the case of mortgagor and mortgagee, or under an express agreement by the third party to pay the costs, not amounting to a complete indemnity to the person chargeable. Holliday and Godlee, In re (58 L. T. 301), overruled. Cohen & Cohen, In re (No. 2), 74 L. J. Ch. 517; [1905] 2 Ch. 137; 92 L. T. 782; 53 W. R. 529—C.A.

Disbursements—Stamp Duty on Capital of Company—Practice.]—A solicitor retained in the matter of the formation and registration of a joint-stock company paid on behalf of his client the ad valorem stamp duty payable under section 112 of the Stamp Act, 1891, and section 7 of the Finance Act, 1899, on the statement of the amount of nominal share capital of the company. In the bill of costs delivered to the client the amount so paid appeared as a professional disbursement. On taxation of the bill of costs the Taxing Master disallowed this item:—Held, that the payment was made by the solicitor as agent for his client, and not in pursuance of his duty as solicitor; that there was no general custom or practice in the profession to regard such a payment as a professional disbursement; and therefore that the amount was not properly included as a professional disbursement in the bill of costs. Remnant, In re (18 L. J. Ch. 374; 11 Beav. 603), and Kingdon and Wilson, In re (71 L. J. Ch. 604; [1902] 2 Ch. 242), followed. Blair and Girling, In re, 75 L. J. K.B. 624; [1906] 2 K.B. 131; 94 L. T. 873; 54 W. R. 549; 22 T. L. R. 547—C.A.

Fees of Counsel—Brief—Instructions of Client not to Brief Counsel who has Advised during Action—Professional Etiquette.]—The rules of etiquette as between members of the legal profession have no effect beyond their relations inter se, and do not in any way affect the legal relations between solicitor and client. If such rules are enforceable, it is only because the members of the profession choose to govern their conduct by reference to them. A solicitor cannot therefore brief a counsel whom his client has instructed him not to brief, and charge the client with the fees and other expenses incurred in delivering the brief, merely because the counsel is entitled to a brief under the rules of professional etiquette. The solicitor's proper course in such circumstances is either to explain the rule to the client and say that he must state the facts to any other counsel whom he briefs, and that such counsel may probably return the brief, or to say that he is himself so clearly governed by the rules and etiquette of the profession that if he is not allowed to brief the counsel in question he must throw up his retainer. Harrison, in re, 77 L. J. Ch. 143; [1908] 1 Ch. 282; 97 L. T. 902—Parker, J.

Fee-farm Grant—Filling in Printed Form—Scale Charge.—A solicitor prepared a series of fee-farm grants, following a printed form previously approved by the grantee, and annexed to the agreement for the grants, adding a recital of the grantor's title, filling in the names of the parties, parcels, rents, &c., and adding a map to each grant:—Held, that he was entitled for each conveyance to the remuneration for preparing, settling, and completing conveyances provided by the scale of charges in Schedule I. Part 2 of the General Order, 1884, under the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881. Aiken, In re; Shannon, ex parte, [1902] 1 Ir. R. 1—M.R.

Lease "not at a rack rent"—Fine.—A firm of solicitors, acting for the lessor, prepared, settled, and completed a lease of premises for a term of one hundred years, in consideration of a fine of 500*l.* and a rent of 30*l.* per annum; no abstract of title was made out:—Held (FITZ-GIBBON, L.J., dissenting), that the solicitors were entitled to charge 10*l.*, being the scale fee on the rent reserved, and also 7*l.* 10*s.*, being the scale fee on the fine, the fine being treated as if it were the purchase-money paid on a sale. Robson, In re (59 L. J. Ch. 627; 45 Ch. D. 71), followed; Ferguson, Ex parte (21 L. R. Ir. 392), dissented from. Connolly to Sheridan and Russell, Ex parte, [1900] 1 Ir. R. 1—C.A.

Lease—Renewal—Scale Fee.—In 1906 the Corporation of the City of London granted a renewal of the lease to the trustees of the will of their original lessee, with whom in 1892 it had covenanted to renew the lease "at the request, costs and charges" of him, his executors and assigns. The probate of his will and a deed of appointment of new trustees had both been previously registered with the Corporation, but upon the renewal of the lease the solicitor for the Corporation delivered a bill not only for a scale fee for the new lease and counterpart, but also for items for investigation of title and searches, which latter items the Taxing Master struck out as charges for business connected with the lease and on the ground that they were not covered by "costs and charges" in the covenant:—Held (reversing the Taxing Master), that the costs of investigation of the title of the applicants to a renewal were costs reasonably incurred within the meaning of "costs and charges" in the covenant for renewal, and that they were not covered by the scale fee under Part II. of Schedule I. to the General Order under the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881. Baylis, In re, 76 L. J. Ch. 358; [1907] 2 Ch. 54; 96 L. T. 812—Kekewich, J.

Concurring Parties—Separate Solicitors—Collective Costs included in Lessor's Solicitor's Bill—"Disbursement"—"Cash account."—There is no general custom binding a lessee to pay more than one set of costs where there are several lessors represented by different solicitors. If, however, the lessee has agreed to pay all those costs he is entitled to have all the bills taxed. If the solicitors of one of the lessors include the costs of the other separate solicitors in their bill, and more than one-sixth is taxed off the whole bill, the costs of taxation will be disallowed, although less than one-sixth is taxed off those solicitors' own charges. Remnant, In re (18 L. J. Ch. 374; 11 Beav. 603), Mining Lease—Negotiations—Scale Fee.—A lessor who has paid his solicitor's bill of costs in relation to the lease can recover what he has paid from the lessee except charges for matters antecedent to the instructions for the lease, such as fees paid to a mining expert in the case of a mining lease. Gray, In re, 70 L. J. Ch. 133; [1901] 1 Ch. 239; 84 L. T. 24; 49 W. R. 298—Cozens-Hardy, J.

Sale of Leasehold Property by Original Lessee—Abstract of Lease—Vendor's Solicitor—Scale Fee for Deduction of Title—General Order under Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881, Schedule I. Part I.—The vendor's solicitor who, on a sale of leasehold property by the original lessee, simply delivers an abstract of the lease under which the lessee holds, does not "deduce" title within the meaning of Schedule I. Part I. of the General Order under the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881, and consequently is not entitled to charge the scale fee. Welby v. Still (63 L. J. Ch. 931; [1894] 3 Ch. 641) approved and followed. Webster and Jones, In re, 71 L. J. Ch. 749; [1902] 2 Ch. 551; 87 L. T. 213—C.A.

Employment by Local Authority—Conveyancing Business—Remuneration—Election.—A solicitor employed by a school board in a purchase of real estate duly elected under rule 6 of the General Order under the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881, to charge under Schedule II. to the Order instead of taking the scale charge under Schedule I. The board assented to the election, but on taxation of the bill for the purposes of public audit the Taxing Master disallowed all the items, and in lieu thereof allowed only the scale fee, on the ground that a public authority dealing with public moneys occupied a fiduciary position and was not entitled to employ a solicitor for ordinary conveyancing work on other than usual terms. On a summons for a review of taxation,—Held, that there was no justification for modifying the express provisions of rule 6 so as to except from their operation local authorities or other public bodies, and that the bill must go back for taxation on the basis of the election. Evans, In re, 74 L. J. Ch. 204; [1905] 1 Ch. 290; 92 L. T. 151; 69 J. P. 104; 3 L. G. R. 169—Farwell, J.

Mortgage—Negotiating—Solicitor Himself Mortgagee—Scale Fee for Negotiation.—A solicitor is entitled under the General Order under the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881, Sched. I. Part I. rule 11, and under section 2 of the Mortgagees' Legal Costs Act, 1895, to the scale fee provided for negotiating a mortgage, even in cases in which he himself advances the mortgage-money. Norris, In re, 71 L. J. Ch. 187; [1902] 1 Ch. 741; 86 L. T. 46, 616; 50 W. R. 316—Swinfen Eady, J.

Present Advances—Future Possible Advances.—The remuneration of solicitors by way of scale fee, as provided for by the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881, Schedule I. and the General Order thereunder, does not apply to work done as to securities for loans, which consist partly of present advances and partly of future possible advances. Barton to Irvine, [1899] 1 Ir. R. 515—C.A.

— Transfer of—Costs of Transferor's Solicitor—Solicitors' Remuneration Act.—The solicitor for the transferor of a mortgage is to be remunerated for shewing any title required and for approving of the transfer under the old system as altered by Schedule II. of the General Order, 1884. Briscoe & Smith, In re, [1908] 1 Ir. R. 29—M.R.

“Negotiating loan.” — Under the words “mortgagee's solicitor for negotiating loan” in the General Order made under the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881, Schedule I., Part I., a solicitor is entitled to charge the scale fee there mentioned for negotiating mortgages, notwithstanding that they are not exclusively upon “freehold, copyhold, or leasehold property.” The word “loan” in the schedule means a loan on mortgage, and not any other sort of loan. Furber, In re; Furber, ex parte, 67 L. J. Ch. 598; [1898] 2 Ch. 538; 79 L. T. 266; 47 W. R. 184—Kekewich, J.

Negotiating Purchase—Re-sale—Investigating and Deducing Title—Scale Fee—General Order under Solicitors' Remuneration Act.—To be entitled to the scale fee, under Schedule I. Part I. of the General Order under the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881, for negotiating a purchase or sale, a solicitor must substantially do the whole of the negotiation. MacGowan, In re; MacGowan v. Murray (60 L. J. Ch. 118; [1891] 1 Ch. 105), and Withall, In re (61 L. J. Ch. 14; [1891] 3 Ch. 8), applied. Romain, In re, 72 L. J. Ch. 309; [1903] 1 Ch. 702; 88 L. T. 125; 51 W. To be entitled to the scale fee for investigating title and preparing and completing conveyance on a purchase, or, on a sale, for deducing title and perusing and completing conveyance, he must do, respectively, all those things. Ib.

L., having contracted to buy a property for 3,350*l.*, agreed the next day to sell it to D. for 3,700*l.* L.'s solicitor received an abstract of title from the vendor's solicitor and passed it on to D.'s solicitor, and, similarly, passed on to the vendor's solicitor requisitions received from D.'s solicitor. The conveyance was made direct from the vendor to D., L. being a party:—Held, that L.'s solicitor was not entitled to the scale fee for investigating title and preparing and completing conveyance on the purchase by L., or for deducing title and perusing and completing conveyance on the re-sale. Lacey & Sons, In re (53 L. J. Ch. 287; 25 Ch. D. 301), followed. Read, In re (63 L. J. Ch. 831; [1894] 3 Ch. 238), distinguished. Ib.

Purchase of Land in Register County—“Completing conveyance”—Charges for Registration.—The scale fee allowed to the purchaser's solicitor on a purchase of land by part 1 of Schedule I. to the General Order under the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881, covers, in the case of a purchase of land in a register county, the solicitor's charges for preparing the memorial of the deed of conveyance for registration, and registering it at the proper office. Such services are included under the expression “completing conveyance.” Grey v. Curtrice, 63 L. J. Ch. 60; [1899] 1 Ch. 121; 79 L. T. 713; 47 W. R. 294—C.A.

Sale of Land in Lots—One Title—“Transaction”—Scale of Charges—General Order under Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881.—Where freehold property held under one title is sold by auction and separate abstracts are delivered to the respective purchasers, the sale of each lot is a separate transaction within rule 8 of the rules annexed to Schedule I. part 1 of the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881, and consequently the prescribed remuneration to which the solicitor for the vendor is entitled is 3*l.* in respect of each such transaction under 100*l.* Thomas, In re; Evans v. Griffiths, 69 L. J. Ch. 219; [1900] 1 Ch. 454; 82 L. T. 105; 48 W. R. 299—Stirling, J. And see Simmons' Contract, In re, 77 L. J. Ch. 215; [1908] 1 Ch. 452; 98 L. T. 185—Parker, J.

Shorthand Notes—Personal Liability of Solicitor.—Where a solicitor employs a shorthand-writer to take shorthand notes of a case in which the solicitor is acting for a client, in the absence of a special arrangement the solicitor is personally liable to the shorthand-writer for the costs of the notes. Cocks v. Bruce, Searl & Good, 21 T. L. R. 62—Channell, J.

— of Evidence—Patent Action.—At the trial of an action for the infringement of a patent an arrangement was made in open Court between the counsel for the parties, at the instance and with the sanction of the Judge, that a shorthand note of the evidence should be taken at the joint expense of the parties, and should constitute the record of the evidence for the purposes of the trial. The defendants' solicitor did not inform them that the cost of the shorthand note might not be allowed on taxation between party and party:—Held, that the rule laid down in Blyth and Fanshawe, In re (52 L. J. Q.B. 186; 10 Q.B. D. 267), did not apply, and that the solicitor was entitled to be allowed, on taxation between solicitor and client, the amount disbursed by him as the defendants' share of the expense of taking the shorthand note. Osmond v. Mutual Cycle and Manufacturing Supply Co., 68 L. J. Q.B. 1027; [1899] 2 Q.B. 488; 81 L. T. 254; 48 W. R. 125—C.A.

Translations of Foreign Documents.—It is within the scope of a solicitor's duties, if he has a staff competent for the purpose, to assist the Court by translating documents originally in a foreign language which have to be brought to the notice of the Court, and which are entered as read in the orders of the Court; and he is consequently entitled to be allowed, on taxation of his bill of costs, reasonable costs in respect of such translations. Bowes, In re; Strathmore (Earl) v. Fane, 69 L. J. Ch. 544; [1900] 2 Ch. 251; 82 L. T. 673; 48 W. R. 604—Gozens-Hardy, J.

Winding up of Estate—Special Costs Incurred by Particular Beneficiaries—Anticipatory Costs.—On a taxation under section 39 of the Solicitors Act, 1843, of the costs of winding up an estate, it is right to allow all costs properly and reasonably incurred by the trustees or executors, even though certain items of these costs have been occasioned by the action of particular beneficiaries, and even though it be right that these items should be ultimately charged against the share of these particular beneficiaries. The question whether these items ought ultimately to be charged against the shares of these particular beneficiaries does not arise on a taxation under section 39. Such reasonable and proper charges as will be incurred in carrying out the final division of an estate may be allowed on a taxation under section 39 by anticipation, if the costs to be taxed are those of the final division and settlement of the estate, but not if they are those of an interim division and settlement. Miles, In re, 72 L. J. Ch. 704; [1903] 2 Ch. 518; 88 L. T. 863; 52 W. R. 47—Swinfen Eady, J.

Solicitor and Client Scale.—The taxation of the costs of parties as between solicitor and client should still in a proper case be expressly directed by the Court, notwithstanding the provisions of the new regulation in the Rules of the Supreme Court, Order LXV. rule 27 (29) (January, 1902, rule 10). Bradshaw, In re; Bradshaw v. Bradshaw, 71 L. J. Ch. 280; [1902] 1 Ch. 436; 86 L. T. 253—Kekewich, J.

—Electric Lighting Works.—The erection of works for the purpose of supplying electric light by a municipal corporation under a provisional order obtained under the Electric Lighting Act, 1882, is "an act done in pursuance, or execution, or intended execution of a public duty or authority" within the meaning of section 1 of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893. The corporation therefore will be entitled to their costs as between solicitor and client from the plaintiff where they obtain judgment in an action brought against them for damages for injury caused by such works. Ambler v. Bradford Corporation, 71 L. J. Ch. 744; [1902] 2 Ch. 585; 87 L. T. 217; 66 J. P. 708—C.A.

12. ACTION FOR COSTS.

Statute-barred Items—Fund Recovered for Client—Lien—Set-off—Right to Appropriate.—In an action brought in 1902 upon a solicitor's bill of costs for the period from 1878 to 1899, which bill, together with a cash account, was delivered to the defendant in 1899, the Statute of Limitations (21 Jac. 1, c. 16), s. 3, was pleaded as a defence. At the trial the Judge held that the defence was good as to all items incurred before 1893, and ordered the bill to be referred for taxation, and to take the cash account from 1893, and that the plaintiff should give credit for all sums received on account of the defendant "in respect of, or which ought to be treated as reducing or discharging, the bill of costs." On the taxation the defendant brought in a surcharge for 66l. 3s. 8d. received by the solicitor on May 9, 1894, as solicitor for the defendant in an action brought by him against a third party. The surcharge was valid, and had been omitted through inadvertence from the cash account delivered. The plaintiff contended that this sum ought not to be treated as reducing the bill of costs under taxation, but as applied in payment of what was due to the solicitor from the defendant on May 9, 1894, in respect of statute-barred items:—

Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled so to treat the sum—either on the ground of lien, since the lien of a solicitor on a fund recovered is confined to the costs of the action in which it is recovered, and none of these were in the present case among the statute-barred items; or upon the ground of set-off, since no debts can be used by way of set-off except such as are recoverable by action, and the statute-barred items were not so recoverable; or upon the ground of appropriation, since, assuming the right to appropriate, no appropriation had been in fact made, and after the judgment in the action it was no longer open to the plaintiff to make an appropriation. Smith v. Betty, 72 L. J. K.B. 853; [1903] 2 K.B. 317; 89 L. T. 258; 52 W. R. 137—C.A.

Solicitor Employed at Fixed Salary.—A district council appointed as their clerk a solicitor who by the terms of his appointment was to act as their solicitor and do other work, in consideration of an inclusive salary of 400l. a year, and his out-of-pocket expenses. In an action against the council, in which the clerk acted as their solicitor, the plaintiff was ordered to pay their costs. Their bill of costs amounted to 17l. 8s. 1d., of which part was claimed in respect of out-of-pocket expenses, and part in respect of the clerk's services as solicitor in the action:—Held, that the council were not prevented by the proviso to section 5 of the Solicitors Act, 1870, or otherwise, from recovering the costs claimed in respect of such services. Henderson v. Merthyr Tydfil Urban Council, 69 L. J. Q.B. 335; [1900] 1 Q.B. 434; 48 W. R. 332—D.

13. LIEN AND CHARGING ORDER.

Common-law Lien—Infant Clients—Compromise of Action.—The effect of the sanction of the Court on behalf of infants to a compromise of an action is, as regards their solicitor's lien for the costs of the action, only to place the infants in the same position as parties sui juris, and the sanction does not in itself prejudice the lien. Wright's Trusts, In re; Wright v. Sanderson, 70 L. J. Ch. 119; [1901] 1 Ch. 317; 83 L. T. 515—C.A.

Payment of Money out of Court—Sanction of Compromise by Court on Behalf of Infants.—In an action brought by infant cestuis que trust against trustees in respect of alleged breaches of trust, a compromise was arrived at and sanctioned by the Court on behalf of the infants, and an order was made in pursuance thereof directing certain of the trust funds which had been brought into Court to be paid out to new trustees. The defaulting trustee was ordered to pay to the next friend of the infants their party and party costs, and the difference between those costs and the solicitor and client costs was ordered to be raised by the new trustees out of the trust funds and paid to the next friend. There was no mention in the order of the right to costs of the solicitor who had acted for the infants:—Held, that there was nothing in the order to interfere with the solicitor's common-law lien for his costs. Ib.

Documents—Administration Action—Solicitor Acting for Parties to the Cause—Documents Received before Commencement of Litigation—Production for Inspection.]—Solicitors acting for executors who are parties to an administration action may, as officers of the Court, be ordered at the instance of a creditor to produce for inspection documents in their possession on which they have a lien for costs, if such inspection is necessary for the purposes of the action, although the documents came into their possession from the executor's testator, and the lien was acquired before the commencement of the proceedings. Hawkes, In re; Ackerman v. Lockhart, 67 L. J. Ch. 284; [1898] 2 Ch. 1; 78 L. T. 336; 46 W. R. 445—C.A.

Partnership Action—Receiver—Judgment Creditors—Charges on Assets—Priority—“Property recovered or preserved.”]—A receiver was appointed in a partnership action, and three judgment creditors obtained charging orders in respect of the amounts of their judgments over the assets of the firm represented by money in Court and in the hands of the receiver, and they undertook to deal with their charges according to order of the Court:—Held, that the lien of the solicitor of the plaintiff in the partnership action for his costs in respect of “property recovered or preserved” and his right to a charge in respect thereof took priority over the other charges, the persons entitled to them not being purchasers for value without notice, within section 28 of the Solicitors Act, 1860. Kewney v. Atrill (56 L. J. Ch. 448; 34 Ch. D. 345) commented on. Ridd v. Thorne, 71 L. J. Ch. 624; [1902] 2 Ch. 344; 86 L. T. 655; 50 W. R. 542—Joyce, J.

Fund in Court—Jurisdiction—Delay—Intervening Rights.]—Under section 28 of the Solicitors Act, 1860, the Court has a discretionary jurisdiction to aid with a charging order a solicitor's common-law lien for his costs over a fund in Court recovered through his exertions. Mere delay of three years on the part of the solicitor in enforcing his lien will not of itself disentitle him to the charging order when there are no intervening creditors whose rights might be thereby prejudiced. Born, In re; Curnock v. Born, 69 L. J. Ch. 669; [1900] 2 Ch. 433; 83 L. T. 51; 49 W. R. 23—Farwell, J.

Charge Given by Client—Waiver of Lien.]—A lady (on the day on which she came of age) wrote a letter to her solicitor requesting him to negotiate for her a loan, upon the security of a reversionary interest to which she was entitled. By the letter she charged this reversionary interest with the payment of the solicitor's costs. A loan was procured by the solicitor for the lady upon a mortgage of her reversionary interest. Subsequently the lady applied that the solicitor might be ordered to deliver up to her all her papers then in his possession:—Held, that the order asked for must be made, as the solicitor, by taking the charge, had waived his lien for costs. Douglas, Norman & Co., In re, 67 L. J. Ch. 85; [1898] 1 Ch. 199; 77 L. T. 552; 46 W. R. 421—North, J.

Effect of Taking Security from Client.]—Per LORD ALVERSTONE, C.J.—Where a solicitor takes from his client a security which is in any degree inconsistent with the retention of his lien, it is his duty to give express notice to the client if he intends to retain the lien. If the solicitor fails to give this notice he will be taken to have abandoned his lien. Morris, In re, 77 L. J. K.B. 265; [1908] 1 K.B. 473—C.A.

Per BUCKLEY, L.J.—A solicitor does not necessarily waive or release his lien if he takes security for his costs or for part of them without expressly or, having regard to all the facts, impliedly reserving his lien. Where, however, the nature of the security taken is such as to create a new arrangement between creditor and debtor, the existence of the security is inconsistent with the continued existence of the lien. Ib.

Semble (per KENNEDY, L.J.), if a solicitor who takes from his client any security for costs generally intends to retain his lien, he ought, either by express words or by necessary implication, to make that intention known to the client; and if he fails to prove such a reservation he ought, whatever be the nature of the security he takes, to be treated as having waived or abandoned his lien. Ib.

Charging Order—Property Recovered or Preserved.]—A testator by his will bequeathed his household furniture to his second wife and devised and bequeathed the residue of his real and personal estate to his wife for life and after her decease unto and between his natural daughter and his daughter by his first wife in equal shares, and appointed one J. W. executor and trustee of his will. The testator died leaving real estate, but no personalty except household furniture to the value of about 20l. His wife survived him, and the daughters having entered a caveat against the will, the executor brought an action against them to establish it, the result of which was that the will was declared to be proved and judgment entered for the plaintiff with costs:—Held, that the solicitor who acted for the executor in the action was entitled under section 28 of the Solicitors Act, 1860, to a charging order for the amount of his costs in the action upon the real and personal estate devised and bequeathed by the will, as “property preserved” by his instrumentality within the meaning of the section. Tweed, Ex parte, 68 L. J. Q.B. 794; [1899] 2 Q.B. 167; 81 L. T. 1; 48 W. R. 5—C.A.

— — — Action Compromised.]—The plaintiff recovered judgment against the defendants for extras under a building contract and in respect of certain retention money. Three months prior to the issue of the writ in the action a portion of the retention money coming to the plaintiff was assigned by him for value to W. G., a member of the defendant council. Pending an appeal in the action, a consent was signed by the parties, by which the defendants were to pay the plaintiff a portion of the sum claimed in full satisfaction, the plaintiff paying the defendants their taxed costs of the action. Upon an application by the plaintiff's solicitor in the action for a charging order for his costs under 39 & 40 Vict. c. 44, s. 3,—Held, first, that the money payable under the consent was money "recovered or preserved in the action" by the instrumentality of the plaintiff's solicitor; and secondly, that the assignee, having known of and adopted the proceedings, and now seeking payment out of the money so recovered, was not entitled as a bona fide purchaser for value without notice to payment in priority over the costs of the plaintiff's solicitor. M'Larnon v. Carrickfergus Urban Council, [1904] 2 Ir. R. 44—K.B. D.

— — — Trustees' Costs, Charges, and Expenses — Priorities.] — Property is "preserved" within the meaning of section 28 of the Solicitors Act, 1860, if it is managed and retained for the benefit of the parties entitled. Accordingly an estate which has been taken care of and administered under a compromise in an administration action is preserved within the meaning of the section. Baile v. Baile (41 L. J. Ch. 300; L. R. 13 Eq. 497) applied. It does not matter that the property, when preserved for the benefit of the parties entitled, yields little or nothing for them. The power of the Court to make a charging order is discretionary, and it will not be made if the effect is to deprive trustees of their costs, charges, and expenses when they have done nothing to disentitle themselves to the consideration of the Court. Turner, In re; Wood v. Turner, 76 L. J. Ch. 492; [1907] 2 Ch. 126, 539; 96 L. T. 798; 23 T. L. R. 524—C.A.

— — — Ship—Sale by Client—Purchaser without Notice—Discharge of Order—Discretion.] — The master of a ship brought an action against the owners for wages, and recovered judgment for a less amount than that claimed; and on payment by the owners of the amount due under the judgment, the ship, which had been arrested at the commencement of the action, was released. The owners afterwards transferred the ship to a limited company consisting in part of the same persons as themselves, and having as its managing director the former managing owner; and the company mortgaged the ship to a bank to secure an account current; both the transfer and the mortgage being registered. Subsequently, the solicitors who had represented the owners in the action delivered their bill of costs, which not having been paid, the solicitors, alleging that to the extent of the difference in amount between the claim and the judgment they had recovered or preserved the property of the owners, obtained ex parte, and without giving notice to the company or the bank, a charging order under section 28 of the Solicitors Act, 1860, for their costs upon the ship:—Held, by GORELL BARNES, P., and by the COURT OF APPEAL, that these facts were not sufficient to fix the company as transferees of the ship, or the bank as mortgagees with notice of the solicitors' prior right to a charge; that they were bona fide purchasers for value without notice within the meaning of the section; and therefore that the charging order could not prevail against the transfer or the mortgage, and must be set aside. The Birnam Wood, 76 L. J. P. 1; [1907] P. 1; 96 L. T. 140; 10 Asp. M.C. 325; 23 T. L. R. 58—C.A.

Per GORELL BARNES, P.—The charging order did not relate back, so as to take precedence of the transfer or the mortgage. Ib.

— Ex parte Application.] — A charging order under the Solicitors Act, 1860, ought not to be made on an ex parte application except in very special circumstances. Ib.

— — — Company—Scheme of Arrangement.] — A limited company being unable to meet its liabilities, executions were levied on the company's property by creditors, and other creditors threatened actions. An extraordinary meeting of the company was then held, and resolutions were duly passed to wind up the company voluntarily. It was further resolved that the liquidator should submit a proposal for the reconstruction of the company. A scheme of arrangement, sanctioned by order of the Court, under the Joint Stock Companies Arrangement Act, 1870, provided that a new company should be incorporated; that one of its objects should be the acquisition and undertaking of the assets and liabilities of the company; that the new company should discharge the unsecured debts of the company by allotting to the unsecured creditors fully paid-up shares in the new company in full discharge of their claims against the company; and that the shareholders of the company should receive partly paid-up shares in the new company. It was also provided that the new company should pay all the costs of the winding-up and of the scheme of arrangement. In pursuance of this order an agreement, subsequently adopted by the new company, was made between the liquidator and the trustee of the future new company whereby it was provided that part of the consideration payable by the new company to the liquidator should be cash. The new company did not pay cash, and the assets of the company accordingly were not transferred to the new company:—Held, that the company's assets purchased by the new company and retained by the liquidator were to be charged with the costs of the company's solicitor which had arisen in connection with the winding-up and reconstruction of the company, the company's property having been "recovered or preserved" through the instrumentality of the solicitor within the meaning of section 28 of the Solicitors Act, 1860. Clayton, Lim., In re, 92 L. T. 223—Buckley, J.

— — — Proceedings other than by Suit, Matter, or Proceeding in Court of Justice.] — Property recovered or preserved through the instrumentality of a solicitor, in respect of which a charging order for costs may be made in his favour under section 28 of the Solicitors Act, 1860, must be recovered or preserved by the solicitor in some suit, matter, or proceeding in a Court of justice. Humphreys, In re; Lloyd-George, ex parte, 67 L. J. Q.B. 412; [1898] 1 Q.B. 520; 78 L. T. 182; 46 W. R. 322; 5 Manson, 11—C.A.

The solicitors to the trustee in the bankruptcy of a debtor who had absconded to Australia, taking with him 813*l.*, the proceeds of a sale of his stock-in-trade, applied to the Court having jurisdiction in the bankruptcy for, and obtained, an order for the prosecution of the debtor for offences under the Debtors Act, 1869.

The debtor was arrested in Australia, brought back to this country, tried for the alleged offences, and acquitted. The debtor when arrested had with him the 813*l.*, which was taken possession of by the police authorities in Australia. The solicitors claimed the money on behalf of the trustee in bankruptcy, and prepared and forwarded to their agent in Australia a power of attorney to enable him to receive the money. This he did, and remitted the amount to the solicitors:—Held, that the money, not having been recovered or preserved in the criminal proceedings or in the bankruptcy, was not property in respect of which the solicitors could obtain a charging order under section 28 of the Solicitors Act, 1860. Ib.

— Property Recovered in Chancery Division—Jurisdiction—Bankruptcy.—A Court exercising bankruptcy jurisdiction has no power under section 28 of the Solicitors Act, 1860, to make a charging order on property recovered in a Chancery action because it is represented by a dividend in bankruptcy. Nor has the Court any power under section 102 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, in the absence of the creditor to direct payment of the dividend to the creditor's solicitor on the ground that such dividend represents property recovered by him even on an indemnity. Cook, In re; Cripps, ex parte, 68 L. J. Q.B. 597; [1899] 1 Q.B. 863; 80 L. T. 495; 47 W. R. 524; 6 Manson, 185—D.

— Debenture-holders' Action—Solvent Company—Recovery and Preservation of Assets outside Action—Difference between Party and Party and Solicitor and Client Costs.—The Court will give the solicitor to the plaintiff in a debenture-holders' action a charging order under section 28 of the Solicitors Act, 1860, on the property recovered in the action for the debenture-holders, for his costs in the action as between solicitor and client, even when the property so recovered proves sufficient for the payment of the debenture-holders in full, provided that there is reason to believe that he will not be able to recover from his own client the difference between solicitor and client and party and party costs. Dichum of Kay, J., in Harrison v. Cornwall Minerals Railway (53 L. J. Ch. 596, 597), followed. Horne & Sons, Lim., In re; Horne v. Horne & Sons, Lim., 75 L. J. Ch. 206; [1906] 1 Ch. 271; 54 W. R. 278; 13 Manson, 165—Farwell, J.

Charging Order for Costs made Ex parte—Time for Application to Discharge—Delay.—An application to the Court to set aside a charging order for costs made ex parte under section 28 of the Solicitors Act, 1860, must be made with reasonable promptitude. A delay of two months held to be too long. Deakin, In re; Daniell, ex parte, 69 L. J. Q.B. 725; [1900] 2 Q.B. 489; 82 L. T. 776; 48 W. R. 678; 7 Manson, 302—C.A.

Jurisdiction to make Order—Property Recovered or Preserved by Order of Court of Appeal—Judge of Division to which Matter Attached—Judge in Bankruptcy.—Where property has been recovered or preserved by means of an order of the Court of Appeal, a Judge of the division of the High Court to which the matter in which the order has been made is attached, can make a charging order for costs under section 28 of the Solicitors Act, 1860. Ib.

Semble, where property is recovered or preserved in the course of proceedings in bankruptcy, the Judge in bankruptcy would have jurisdiction to make a charging order for costs. Opinion of VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, J., to the contrary, in Wood, In re; Fanshawe, ex parte (66 L. J. Q.B. 69; [1897] 1 Q.B. 314), doubted. Ib.

Set-off of Damages—Solicitor's Lien—Charging Order.—Where a defendant against whom judgment has been obtained for an amount of damages has an unsatisfied judgment against the plaintiff obtained in a former action, a set-off of damages may be allowed him under Order LXV. rule 14, notwithstanding that the plaintiff's solicitor has upon an ex parte application obtained a charging order upon the amount recovered in the action for his costs under section 28 of the Solicitors Act, 1860. *Goodfellow v. 14. MISCONDUCT.

Litigious Proceedings—Conflicting Interests of Clients—Undisclosed Agreement by one Solicitor to Pay Share of Profit to another Solicitor.—Where solicitors represent conflicting interests in litigious proceedings of any kind, any arrangement or understanding or practice whereby a share of profit, whether called "agency" or by any other name, is paid by one of the solicitors to another is wrong in principle and fraught with risk to the welfare of clients and to the administration of justice. A solicitor who carries on the practice of undisclosed profit-sharing with a solicitor who represents conflicting interests is guilty of professional misconduct. Lydall, In re; Incorporated Law Society, ex parte, 70 L. J. K.B. 5; [1901] 1 K.B. 187; 83 L. T. 484; 49 W. R. 219—D.

Offence not in Itself of a Pecuniary Nature—Protection of Public and Profession—Attempt to Murder.—Where a solicitor has been convicted of a crime which is not in itself a pecuniary offence, the Court will, if the crime is of such a character that it is expedient for the protection of the public and the profession that the solicitor should be struck off the roll, order that he be struck off accordingly. Therefore, where a solicitor had lent large sums of money belonging to clients to a third person for speculative purposes, and in consequence of the money having been lost became so depressed that he attempted to murder his wife and afterwards to commit suicide, and he had been sentenced to penal servitude, the Court ordered him to be struck off the roll. Cooper, In re, 67 L. J. Q.B. 276—D.

Carrying on Business of Bookmaker—No Certificate taken out while Carrying on Business.—The respondent, a solicitor, who had ceased to practise in 1898 and had not since taken out a certificate, carried on the business of a bookmaker, and in the course of his business had sent circulars to a minor, a married woman, and a bank manager:—Held, that the respondent had been guilty of conduct unworthy of a member of the profession, and must be struck off the rolls, but that it would be open to him, if he bona fide abandoned the business, to apply to the Master of the Rolls for reinstatement. Solicitor, In re; Law Society, ex parte, 93 L. T. 838; 22 T. L. R. 127—D.

Permitting Name to be Used by Unqualified Person — Punishment — Discretion of Court — Striking off Roll — Suspension — “Shall and may.”—Section 32 of the Solicitors Act, 1843, provides that if any solicitor shall permit his name to be made use of in an action on account of any unqualified person, he “shall and may” be struck off the roll:—Held, that the section does not give the Court a discretion to inflict upon the offending solicitor any less punishment than that of striking him off the roll. Kelly, In re (64 L. J. Q.B. 129; [1895] 1 Q.B. 180), followed. Burton and Blinkhorn, In re, 72 L. J. K.B. 752; [1903] 2 K.B. 300; 89 L. T. 549; 51 W. R. 668—D.

Unqualified Person Carrying on Proceeding — Giving Notice of Appearance — Contempt of Court.—An unqualified person giving notice of appearance as agent on behalf of a defendant in an action is “carrying on a proceeding” within the meaning of section 2 of the Solicitors Act, 1843, and is therefore guilty of contempt of Court by virtue of section 26 of the Solicitors Act, 1860. Ainsworth, In re; Incorporated Law Society, ex parte, 74 L. J. K.B. 462; [1905] 2 K.B. 103; 92 L. T. 652; 53 W. R. 538—D.

Mortgage-Deed — Execution by Mortgagor Obtained by Fraud of His Solicitor — Receipt in Body of Deed — Production of Deed to Mortgagee — Solicitor's Authority — Valid Deed and Receipt — Estoppel.—A solicitor acting for the plaintiff in a series of purchases of real estate by him, fraudulently and in abuse of the plaintiff's confidence obtained the execution by him of a deed mortgaging some of the property to the defendants. There was a receipt for the consideration-money in the body of the deed. The solicitor afterwards produced the deed to the defendants, who paid the mortgage-money to him and received the deed. The solicitor misappropriated the money. In an action by the plaintiff against the defendants to set aside the deed,—Held, that in the circumstances the plaintiff must have known that he was “doing something” with his property within the meaning of MELLISH, L.J.'s judgment in Hunter v. Walte s (41 L. J. Ch. 175, 185; L. R. 7 Ch. 75, 36), and that he was therefore estopped from denying either the validity of the deed in the hands of the defendants, or the authority of the solicitor to produce the deed and thereby give a good discharge for the consideration-money to the defendants under section 56 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881. Day v. Woolwich Equitable Building Society 58 L. J. Ch. 280; 40 Ch. D. 491) commented upon. King v. Smith, 69 L. J. Ch. 598; [1900] 1 Ch. 425; 82 L. T. 815—Farwell, J.

Unfounded Defences Placed on Record — Liability of Solicitor to Pay the Costs.—Upon an application by the plaintiff, who was propounding a will for which the Court pronounced, that the defendant's solicitor should be ordered to pay the costs upon the ground that charges of undue influence and fraud had been unreasonably placed on the record,—Held, that, as the facts did not shew that the solicitor had made the case his own and was really the person fighting the case, he ought not to be ordered to pay the costs personally. In such a case there is no difference between the case of a plaintiff and that of a defendant. Scott v. Hitchcock, 20 T. L. R. 759—Gorell Barnes, J.

Payment of Special Jury obtained by Plaintiff without Means — Personal Order.—The plaintiff served notice for and obtained a special jury. The jury found for the defendant. In the course of the trial it appeared that the plaintiff was almost without means and that she had given a mortgage to her solicitor upon whatever property she had, to secure his costs:—Held, that the Court had jurisdiction under the circumstances to order such solicitor personally to pay the jury fees. Monseratt v. Scott, [1899] 2 Ir. R. 551—Gibson, J.

Certificate — Suspension — Discretion of Incorporated Law Society.—Under section 23 of the Solicitors Act, 1843, the Incorporated Law Society, acting as registrar of solicitors, are not bound to issue a certificate to practise as a solicitor, but have a discretion to refuse to issue the same, and if they decline to grant the certificate upon grounds which seem to them to justify the refusal, as, for instance, that the solicitor has been suspended from practice for misconduct, and is at the time of his application for a certificate an undischarged bankrupt, and an application is made to the Court under section 24 of the Act, the Court has power under that section to make such order “as shall be just,” and are not bound to make an order for the certificate to be granted. Solicitor, In re, 80 L. T. 720; 47 W. R. 575—D.

Trust Fund in Hands of Solicitor as Private Individual — Constructive Trustee — Solicitor not Party to Action — Officer of Court.—A solicitor who has received trust funds on loan as an investment with a knowledge that they are such—the investment being an improper one as between trustee and cestui que trust—may be ordered by the Court to refund the money in the exercise of its summary jurisdiction over its own officers, notwithstanding the fact that he is not solicitor to the trust estate, and notwithstanding that he has not been made a party to the action. Carroll, In re; Brice v. Carroll; De Mortimer-McIntosh, In re, 71 L. J. Ch. 596; [1902] 2 Ch. 175; 86 L. T. 862; 50 W. R. 650—Farwell, J.

Breach of Undertaking to Pay Money to Person not a Client — Breach of Trust — Summary Order for Payment.—Where an applicant, although he is not a client, invokes the summary jurisdiction of the Court over a solicitor as one of its officers, and shews conduct towards him which the Court considers dishonourable, or shews that the solicitor, as his trustee, has been guilty of a breach of trust, and also that by such conduct or breach his position had been prejudiced, the Court will exercise such jurisdiction whether or not a remedy by action exists or relief in equity can be obtained in respect thereof, and will make a summary order on the solicitor to pay the applicant money which it considers he ought to pay as an honourable man under the circumstances. Solicitor, In re; Hales, ex parte, 76 L. J. K.B. 931; [1907] 2 K.B. 539; 97 L. T. 212; 23 T. L. R. 573—D. And see UNDERTAKING, col. 2454.

Report of Committee of the Incorporated Law Society—Complainant in Person—Appearance by Counsel.—An application to the Court under section 13 of the Solicitors Act, 1888, for an order that a solicitor be struck off the roll or required to answer allegations contained in an affidavit, upon the report of the committee of the Incorporated Law Society, must be made by counsel. A Solicitor, In re, 72 L. Enquiry before Committee of Incorporated Law Society—Costs of Enquiry—Application for, whether to Court or Chambers.—An application by a solicitor for the costs of an enquiry into his conduct before the committee of the Incorporated Law Society which has resulted in his favour should be made to the Court and not to a Judge at chambers. Davidson, In re; Davidson, ex parte, 68 L. J. Q.B. 836; [1899] 2 Q.B. 103; 81 L. T. 182—D.

Order of Colonial Court Striking Solicitor off Roll.—The fact that a Colonial Court has struck a solicitor off the roll of solicitors of that Court is not of itself sufficient to justify the English Court in striking him off the roll of solicitors in England without making further enquiry. Incorporated Law Society, Ex parte, 67 L. J. Q.B. 245; [1898] 1 Q.B. 831; 77 L. T. 661; 46 W. R. 803—D.

Companies Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7 c. 50), s. 16.

2. OF WHAT AGREEMENTS GRANTED.

Tenancy Less than from Year to Year.—Specific performance of an agreement for a much shorter tenancy than a tenancy from year to year will be granted in a proper case. Clayton v. Illingworth (10 Hare, 451) distinguished. De Brassac v. Martyn (11 W. R. 1020) approved. Lever v. Koffler, 70 L. J. Ch. 395; [1901] 1 Ch. 543; 84 L. T. 584; 49 W. R. 506—Byrne, J.

Agreement to Lend Money on Debentures.—No action will lie for specific performance of a contract to lend money on the debentures of a company. The only remedy is an action for damages. South African Territories v. Walington, 67 L. J. Q.B. 470; [1898] A.C. 309; 78 L. T. 426; 46 W. R. 545—H.L. (E.) But see now Companies Act, 1907, s. 16.

3. DISCRETION OF COURT.

Hardship—House Used as a Brothel—Ignorance of both Parties—"Eligible investment"—Relief not Granted.—The Court will not grant specific performance against a purchaser of a contract to buy a property, which, if he takes no steps to prevent it, will expose him as owner to criminal proceedings by reason of its state at the time of sale, unless he knew or ought to have known of the state of the property at the time of the sale. Hope v. Walter, 69 L. J. Ch. 166; [1900] 1 Ch. 257; 82 L. T. 30—C.A.

A house sold by auction was described as an "eligible freehold property for investment," let on a quarterly tenancy at 55l. a year. It was discovered before completion that the house at the date of the sale was used by the tenant as a disorderly house, of which fact both the vendors and purchaser were previously ignorant. The agreement of tenancy contained a covenant not to use the house as a disorderly house and a proviso for re-entry on breach of covenant:—Held, that the improper use of the house was a sufficient ground for refusing specific performance at the suit of the vendors. Dictum of WIGRAM, V.C., in Lucas v. James (18 L. J. Ch. 329; 7 Hare, 440, 418) distinguished. Ib.

Open Contract—Undisclosed Restrictive Covenants—Innocent Vendor—Compensation not

Assessable—Hardship.—The Court will not, at the instance of the purchaser under an open contract containing no provision for compensation, decree specific performance of the contract with compensation in respect of covenants restricting the building on or user of the land sold. By granting the purchaser such relief, the Court would not only be making a new contract never contemplated by the parties, but would also be extending the equitable doctrine of specific performance with compensation beyond its proper limits. Rudd v. Lascelles, 69 L. J. Ch. 396; [1900] 1 Ch. 815; 82 L. T. 256; 48 W. R. 586—Farwell, J.

The extreme difficulty in assessing compensation in respect of covenants of that nature is another consideration which will influence the Court in refusing such relief. Ib.

Where the purchaser seeks specific performance with a proportionately large abatement of the purchase-money in respect of defects of which, as the purchaser knew, the vendor was unaware at the time of entering into the contract, the Court will not grant him relief, because of the great hardship which would be thereby imposed upon the innocent vendor. Ib.

Agreement for Lease in Consideration of Contract to Rebuild and Repair—Undefined Works.—The defendant agreed to take a lease of certain premises and within twelve months from the date of the agreement to expend the sum of 600*l.* in such substantial repairs and improvements as were mentioned in the schedule—namely, to take down, rebuild, and repair such portions of the premises as the plaintiff's architect should direct, under his direction, and to his satisfaction. The defendant did not execute the repairs and improvements mentioned in the schedule. The plaintiff claimed specific performance of the agreement to rebuild and repair the premises in accordance with the terms of the agreement and damages by reason of the defendant's failure to carry out the agreement:—Held, that it was not a case for specific performance, but for an enquiry as to damages. Wolverhampton Corporation v. Emmons (70 L. J. K.B. 429; [1901] 1 K.B. 515) discussed. Rushbrooke v. O'Sullivan, [1908] 1 Ir. R. 232—M.R.

4. MISDESCRIPTION.

In Particulars—Verbal Rectification by Auctioneer—Statement not Heard by Purchaser—Specific Performance—Compensation—Injustice to Vendor.—The Court will not enforce specific performance of a contract for sale where, owing to a mistake on the part of the defendant, injustice would be done to him by a decree for that purpose. Hare and O'More's Contract, In re, 70 L. J. Ch. 45; [1901] 1 Ch. 93; 83 L. T. 672; 49 W. R. 202—Joyce, J.

Accordingly, where in a purchaser's action for specific performance, with compensation for a material misdescription in the particulars of sale, it appeared that the auctioneer had before the biddings commenced drawn attention to and rectified the misdescription, but that the purchaser had not heard his statement, the Court, notwithstanding a condition for compensation in that behalf, dismissed the action and rescinded the contract. Manser v. Bach (6 Hare, 443) applied. Ib.

5. MISTAKE.

Bidding for Different Property—Auctioneer—Authority to Sign Contract—Statute of Frauds.

—A purchaser of freehold property at a public auction who has made a mistake, in no way induced by the vendor, in bidding for and becoming the purchaser of a different property from that which he came to buy, will not be relieved from the specific performance of the contract upon the ground of such blunder, where no hardship amounting to injustice is thereby inflicted upon him. Malins v. Freeman (2 Keen, 25) considered as modified by Tamplin v. James (15 Ch. D. 215) and Goddard v. Jeffreys (51 L. J. Ch. 57). Van Praagh v. Everidge, 71 L. J. Ch. 598; [1902] 2 Ch. 266; 87 L. T. 42—Kekewich, J.

6. EFFECT OF DELAY.

Contract for Sale of Reversionary Interest—Deposit Paid—Equitable Assignment.—Where a person agrees by a contract, which does not amount to an equitable assignment, to purchase a contingent equitable reversionary interest, and is unable to obtain completion of the purchase at the time, and does nothing until—ten years afterwards—the reversion has fallen into possession, his delay will be a bar to a claim by him for specific performance of his contract. Levy v. Stogdon, 68 L. J. Ch. 19; [1899] 1 Ch. 5; 79 L. T. 364—C.A.

Lien for Instalments—Damages.—In 1892 A agreed to sell and B to purchase some land for 150*l.*, B paying 40*l.* on account and the balance by instalments. In case default was made for thirty days in payment of any one instalment, the whole of the remaining instalments were to become due and payable, and, if not paid, A was to be at liberty to re-sell the land and apply the net proceeds in payment of the amount due. B took possession of the land, and by August, 1895, had paid all the instalments but one. In October, 1896, B disappeared without having paid the final instalment. A then resumed possession of the land, which was in a derelict state and worth less than the instalments paid by B, and let it to another person with an option to purchase. In 1898, after the lessee had built a house on the land, B reappeared and desired to pay the final instalments and obtain a conveyance free from the lease. A declined to grant it:—Held, that B had lost his right to specific performance by reason of his delay, and was not entitled to a lien on the land for the amount of the instalments which he had paid, or to damages, as his conduct amounted to a repudiation on his part of the contract, and left A free to deal with the land as owner. Cornwall v. Henson, 68 L. J. Ch. 749; [1899] 2 Ch. 710; 81 L. T. 113; 48 W. R. 42—Cozens-Hardy, J.

7. MINERALS.

Tenants in Common—Agreement for Lease of Undivided Moiety—Inconvenience.—Where a tenant in common of an undivided moiety of freehold lands has agreed to grant a lease to work the minerals in or upon such moiety, the Court will in a proper case specifically enforce such contract. Heater v. Pearce, 69 L. J. Ch. 146; [1900] 1 Ch. 341; 82 L. T. 109; 48 W. R. 330—Farwell, J.

The comparative convenience or inconvenience of the parties concerned, apart from any considerations of misconduct or hardship, is not by itself a sufficient ground for refusing specific performance of such a contract. Price v. Griffith (21 L. J. Ch. 78; 1 De G. M. & G. 80) distinguished. Ib.

8. BUILDING CONTRACT.

Contract to Erect Building—Conditions on which Granted—Work Defined—Damages Inadequate—Possession of Site Obtained by the Contract.—The Court has jurisdiction to grant specific performance of a contract to erect a building if, first, the work to be done is defined; secondly, the plaintiff has a substantial interest in its execution which cannot be adequately compensated for by damages; and thirdly, the defendant has by the contract obtained from the plaintiff possession of the land on which the work is to be done. Cubitt v. Smith (11 L. T. 298) approved. Wolverhampton Corporation v. Emmons, 70 L. J. K.B. 429; [1901] 1 K.B. 515; 84 L. T. 407; 49 W. R. 553—C.A.

Lease—Covenant to Build—Work Defined—Damages Inadequate—Lessee's Conflicting Rights under Different Leases.—The defendant was lessee for a term of ninety-nine years from 1894, at the yearly rent of 50*l.*, of lands in a mining district, except the mines and mineral rights, his lease containing a covenant by him within three years from the commencement of the term to build seven dwelling-houses similar to adjacent houses already built, to keep them in repair, and to deliver them up at the end or sooner determination of the term in such repair. The lease contained an exception and reservation in favour of the persons who would, if the lease had never been executed, for the time being be entitled to the same, of the above mentioned mines and mineral rights, with power to occupy the surface for working such mines without leaving any support for any buildings that might be erected thereon, and generally use the surface, making reasonable compensation to the lessee for the damage done. The defendant was also the lessee under an earlier lease of the mines and minerals, with full working powers, including the right to make pit-hills and spoil-banks on the surface. He declined to perform the covenant to build, on the ground that his powers under the mining lease and the reservation in the surface lease were inconsistent with the covenant to build. The plaintiff, as mortgagee in fee of the premises comprised in the surface lease, required specific performance of the covenant to build in order to protect the security for his debt:—Held, that the covenant to build was binding on the covenantor and unaffected by his powers as to covering the surface, and that the plaintiff was entitled to specific performance, notwithstanding the general rule, on the grounds that the work was sufficiently defined, that there was a definite contract to build, and that damages would not afford an adequate remedy. Wolverhampton Corporation v. Emmons (70 L. J. K.B. 429; [1901] 1 K.B. 515) applied. Molyneux v. Richard, 75 L. J. Ch. 39; [1906] 1 Ch. 34; 93 L. T. 698; 54 W. R. 177; 22 T. L. R. 76—Kekewich, J.

9. TITLE OF VENDOR.

Adverse Claim—Practice.—When a bona fide claim has been made by a third party affecting the vendor's title, although no action to enforce such claim is actually pending, the Court will not make a decree for specific performance of a contract for sale against the purchaser; but will order the vendor's action for specific performance to stand over for a reasonable interval, to see whether the third party will meantime institute proceedings to enforce his claim. On a sale of house property the vendor represented that rates were payable by the tenant. At the date of the sale the vendor knew that the tenant claimed that rates ought to be paid by the landlord. Before completion of the purchase the tenant brought an action against the vendor to enforce his said claim; but this action was dismissed on a technical ground. The tenant, however, expressed an intention of taking further proceedings in the matter against the vendor. The purchaser refused to complete, on the ground that the vendor did not shew a good title. In an action for specific performance brought by the vendor, the Court refused to make an immediate decree for specific performance, and ordered the case to stand over for a definite period in order to see whether the tenant would in the meantime institute new proceedings to enforce his claim. George v. Thomas, 90 L. T. 505; 52 W. R. 416—Swinfen Eady, J.

10. VENDOR'S LIEN.

Contract to Purchase Land by Trustee of Settled Estates—Non-payment of Purchase-Money—Entry of Successive Tenants for Life and Payment of Interest.—In 1873 a trustee of a settled estate with power to invest in land and the tenant for life contracted to purchase the glebe lands of a vicarage of which the tenant for life was patron. The purchase-money was never paid, but the successive tenants for life entered into possession and paid interest. The trustee having been long since dead and his estate fully administered, an action for specific performance of the contract was brought by the vendors against the present trustees and tenant for life:—Held, that the contract was not enforceable against the persons who had become entitled to the settled property or against the trust estate, and that the vendors were entitled only to their vendor's lien on the land contracted to be sold. Ecclesiastical Commissioners v. Pinney, 69 L. J. Ch. 844; [1900] 2 Ch. 736; 83 L. T. 384; 49 W. R. 82—C.A.

11. ACTION FOR.

Practice—Undertaking not to Defend—Lease found Invalid—Leave to Defend.—In an action for specific performance of an agreement to purchase leasehold houses, the defendant gave an undertaking not to deliver any defence in the event of the plaintiffs undertaking not to move for judgment in default of defence until a date named. The defendant subsequently found that the lease was invalid:—Held, that the Court had jurisdiction to give the defendant leave to deliver a defence notwithstanding his undertaking. Scott v. Mowon, 81 L. T. 774—Kekewich, J.

Specific Performance Decreed against Purchaser—Default by Purchaser—Vendor's Remedy—Forfeiture of Deposit—Form of Order.]—The contract for the sale of certain property contained a provision that, if the purchaser failed to complete the purchase, the deposit should be forfeited and the vendors should be at liberty to proceed to another sale, the defaulting purchaser to make good any loss occasioned by such re-sale, together with all expenses attending it. The vendors having obtained an order for specific performance, with which the purchaser failed to comply, the Court, on the motion of the vendors, made a declaration that, in pursuance of the above-mentioned provision, the deposit was forfeited and the plaintiffs at liberty to proceed to another sale, the defendant to make good any loss occasioned by such re-sale, together with all expenses attending it; all further proceedings in the action to be stayed except for the recovery of certain costs then or previously ordered to be paid. Griffiths v. Vezey, 75 L. J. Ch. 462; [1906] 1 Ch. 796; 94 L. T. 574; 54 W. R. 490—Swinfen Eady, J.

Action Dismissed—Vacating Registration of Lis Pendens.]—The Court may on giving judgment dismissing an action by a purchaser for specific performance include in the judgment on the vendor's application an order vacating the registration of the action as a lis pendens unless the purchaser sets down an appeal within a limited time. Baxter v. Middleton, 67 L. J. Ch. 200; [1898] 1 Ch. 313; 46 W. R. 350—Kekewich, J.

Neglect of Defendant to Comply with Judgment—Rescission of Contract—Form of Order.]—In a vendor's action for specific performance, judgment had been recovered against the defendant in default of appearance, and an order made on further consideration that the defendant should pay the costs; that the usual account of rents, profits, interest, and costs should be taken, and on payment of the balance a conveyance should be executed to the defendant. The accounts had been taken into chambers, but not proceeded with. The vendor now moved, upon evidence that the purchaser had no means and could not complete, for rescission of the contract and stay of all proceedings except for the recovery of costs:—Held, that the only order the Court could make was that the contract be rescinded and all proceedings stayed, the defendant to pay the costs of this application. Henty v. Schröder (12 Ch. D. 666) explained and followed. Jeffery v. Stewart, 80 L. T. 17—North, J.

Vendor Plaintiff—Judgment with Costs—Subsequent Default by Defendant—Order for Rescission—Form of Order.]—The plaintiff, who was vendor, obtained a judgment for the specific performance of a contract with costs. Upon default of the defendant to pay the purchase-money or the costs, the plaintiff moved for rescission of the contract. THE COURT made an order in the form in Westerman v. Pantlin (3 Seton on Decrees (6th ed.), p. 2288), and not in the form in Jeffery v. Stewart (80 L. T. 17). Olde v. Olde, 73 L. J. Ch. 81; [1904] 1 Ch. 35; 89 L. T. 604; 52 W. R. 260—Farwell, J.

Interest on Purchase-money.]—In an action for specific performance, interest on the purchase-money will be given from the date when the Master certifies that a good title was first shewn. Halkett v. Dudley (Earl), 76 L. J. Ch. 330; [1907] 1 Ch. 590; 96 L. T. 539—Parker, J.

2. AREA OF APPLICATION.

Per LORD SALVESSEN.—Where a British statute prohibits a certain thing to be done within a definite geographical area, there is no presumption that such prohibition shall be confined only to British subjects. If, on examining the subject-matter of the prohibition, it is found that it will be futile or ineffectual unless its operation is general, its generality is not capable of any limitation in favour of persons who do not ordinarily owe obedience to the British Parliament. Mortensen v. Peters, 8 F. (Just. Cas.) 93—Ct. of Justy.

3. CONSTRUCTION.

Title.]—The title of an Act of Parliament is to be read as part of the enactments. Fielden v. Morley Corporation, 67 L. J. Ch. 611; [1899] 1 Ch. 1; 79 L. T. 231; 47 W. R. 295—C.A.

Long Title.]—The "long title" of an Act of Parliament is to be read as part of the Act. Att.-Gen. v. Margate Pier and Harbour Co., 69 L. J. Ch. 331; [1900] 1 Ch. 749; 82 L. T. 448; 48 W. R. 518; 64 J. P. 405—Kekewich, J.

Construction of Statute not Limited by Title—Probate.]—The operation of section 3 of the Wills Act, 1861, in spite of the expression "British subjects" in the title of the statute, is not limited to British subjects, and enables probate to be granted in this country of the will of an alien testator in spite of his or her marriage since the date of execution of the will, such marriage, according to the law of the domicile at the time, not effecting a revocation. Groos, In the goods of, 73 L. J. P. 82; [1904] P. 269; 91 L. T. 322—Gorell Barnes, J.

Heading to Section—Effect of.—The effect of words in a section of a statute perfectly clear in themselves is not limited by general words in the heading to the section. Hammer-smith Railway v. Brand (38 L. J. Q.B. 265; L. R. 4 H.L. 171) distinguished. Fletcher v. Birkenhead Corporation, 76 L. J. K.B. 218; [1907] 1 K.B. 205; 96 L. T. 287; 71 J. P. 111; 5 L. G. R. 293; 23 T. L. R. 195—C.A.

Semble, the headings of sections of a statute—for example, the heading to section 104 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901—are, as distinguished from marginal notes, part of the statute, and are to be taken into account in construing it. M'Ewan v. Perth Magistrates, 7 F. 714—Ct. of Sess.

General Act.—According to the maxim “Generalia specialibus non derogant,” the presumption is that where special statutory provision has been made for a special class of cases, a subsequent general enactment is not intended to interfere with such provision. Barker v. Edger, 67 L. J. P.C. 115; [1898] A.C. 748; 79 L. T. 151—P.C.

Construction of Earlier by Later Acts.—Where there are two or more Acts of Parliament in pari materia, the earlier Act cannot be construed by what is enacted in a later Act. Bolton Estates Act, In re; Russell v. Meyrick, 72 L. J. Ch. 55; 88 L. T. 581—Joyce, J. See s.c. in C.A., ante, SETTLED LAND.

Incorporation of Sections of Former Statute with Omission of Certain Words.—Where a statute incorporates a section of a former statute, and directs that it is to apply as if certain words were omitted therefrom, the incorporated section is not to be construed as if such words had never existed therein. The principle of Att.-Gen. v. Lamplough (47 L. J. Q.B. 555; 3 Ex. D. 214) applied. Att.-Gen. v. Smyth, [1905] 2 Ir. R. 553—K.B. D.

Construction of Codifying Statute.—The principle of construction of codifying statutes considered by Palles, C.B. Wallis v. Russell, [1902] 2 Ir. R. 585—K.B. D.

Two Statutes Passed Same Day—Provisional Order.—An Electric Lighting Provisional Order gave a corporation power to purchase compulsorily the undertaking of a company upon the terms of issuing to the company such an amount of corporation stock as would produce, by the dividends thereon, “an annuity of 5 per cent.” upon the capital properly expended by the undertakers. By a Local Government Board Provisional Order, the power (which the corporation then had) to issue irredeemable stock was repealed. Each of the Acts of Parliament which confirmed these orders received the Royal assent on the same day:—Held, that the stock to be issued to the company was irredeemable stock; that the corporation had not, by implication, power to issue such stock; and that so long as they were unable to issue such stock their power of compulsory purchase could not be enforced. Sheffield Corporation v. Sheffield

Electric Light and Power Co., 67 L. J. Ch. 113; [1898] 1 Ch. 203; 77 L. T. 616; 46 W. R. 485; 62 J. P. 87—North, J.

Whether Permissive or Obligatory.—An Act of Parliament authorising and empowering a person to improve the passage of boats, and for that purpose to cleanse, scour, and deepen the river where and as often as occasion should require, although intended to serve a public purpose, must be construed to be permissive only, and not obligatory. Simpson v. Att.-Gen., 74 L. J. Ch. 1; [1903] A.C. 476; 91 L. T. 610; 69 J. P. 85; 3 L. G. R. 190; 20 T. L. R. 761—H.L. (E.)

Elimination of Words Preventing Plain Object of Statute being Attained.—The plain object of section 13 of the Salmon Fishery Act, 1873, was to extend to salmon rivers the provisions of section 32 of the Malicious Damage Act, 1861, in order to prevent the destruction of property in salmon rivers by the serious act of poisoning the water. Therefore section 13 of the Act of 1873 must be read as if the words “in lieu of the words ‘private rights of fishery’” were omitted, inasmuch as the manifest intention of the statute would be absolutely defeated if section 32 of the Act of 1861 were altered in the strict way which the amending section directs. Rex v. Vasey, 75 L. J. K.B. 19; [1905] 2 K.B. 748; 93 L. T. 671; 54 W. R. 218; 69 J. P. 455; 21 Cox C.C. 49; 22 T. L. R. 1—C.C.R.

Exclusion of Class.—Where a statute excludes in plain language from its operation a class of persons to whom its provisions do not appear to be applicable, such exclusion cannot be held to apply to another class of persons not expressly named. Smyth v. Reg., 67 L. J. P.C. 129; [1898] A.C. 782; 79 L. T. 199—P.C.

Extension by Inference to Cases not Originally Contemplated.—The rule that statutes extend by inference to cases not originally contemplated depends upon shewing that the statute deals with a genus within which the new species is brought; but if the statute shews plainly that the word is not used as describing the whole genus put forward as the one applicable to the case, but only some particular species thereof, the rule has no application. Birmingham Corporation v. Birmingham Canal Navigations, 3 L. G. R. 1287; 21 T. L. R. 548—Farwell, J.

Protection of Certain Persons—Lunatic—Powers of Committee.—The insertion in an Act of Parliament of words protecting certain specified persons does not by implication exclude others from such protection. Accordingly, persons acting under the instructions of the committee of a lunatic who in good faith and with proper care convey the lunatic to an asylum are not liable to an action, although they are not enumerated in the persons protected by section 171 of the Lunacy Act (New South Wales), 1898. McLaughlin v. Westgarth, 75 L. J. P.C. 117; 94 L. T. 831; 22 T. L. R. 594—P.C.

Exemption—Interference with Treatment or Utilisation of Sewage—Woolcombing Effluent—Penalties—Named Persons Exempted—Successors.—Section 45 of the Bradford Tramways and Improvement Act, 1897, prohibits the discharge of certain refuse into the city sewers subject to two exceptions, the first in favour of "the persons named in the first part of the schedule to this Act," and the second in favour of "the persons referred to in the second part of the schedule to this Act or the successors of any such person."—Held, on an originating summons taken out by a company to whom had been assigned the business, goodwill, and property of several of the persons named in the first part of the schedule, and who were carrying on the same business, on the same premises, and under the same names, as those persons, that the company were not entitled to the exemption in favour of the persons named in the first part of the schedule, as it was not expressed to extend to the successors of the named persons. Woolcombers, Lim. v. Bradford Corporation, 4 L. G. R. 1038; 70 J. P. 434—Swinfen Eady, J.

"Week"—Advertisement of Notice in Newspaper "for two successive weeks."—A statute requiring publication of certain notices in a newspaper "for two successive weeks" is complied with by the insertion of a notice in a newspaper on Friday in one week, and on Wednesday in the following week. Aberdeen Corporation v. Watt, 3 F. 787—Ct. of Sess.

"Person"—Corporation.]—The word "person," when used in a statute, does not include corporation where the statute contains expressions that are repugnant to that construction. Thus, under a statute providing that the persons present at a meeting may vote, but that a proxy shall not be admitted, a corporation, though a person in law, is debarred from voting. Wills v. Tozer, 53 W. R. 74; 20 T. L. R. 700—Farwell, J.

— Limited Company.]—A limited company is a "person" within the meaning of section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, which provides that "No person shall sell to the prejudice of the purchaser any article of food or any drug which is not of the nature, substance, and quality of the article demanded by such purchaser" under a penalty. Pearks v. Ward, 71 L. J. K.B. 656; [1902] 2 K.B. 1; 87 L. T. 51; 66 J. P. 774; 20 Cox C.O. 279—D.

Proviso—"Expressio unius est exclusio alterius."—A proviso attached to an enacting or exegetical section of a statute is not necessarily to be construed on the principle of Expressio unius est exclusio alterius. Stevenson v. Hunter, 5 F. 761—Ct. of Sess.

Inclosure Act—Contemporanea Expositio.]—In construing an Inclosure Act it is right to take the whole of the document as one complete document. It is not sufficient to take out one section and disregard others which are germane to the same subject. Att.-Gen. v. Lumsdale Rural Council, 86 L. T. 822—Farwell, J.

Taxing Act—Effect of Continuous User.]—No amount of subsequent user will control the plain meaning of an Act of Parliament; but, where the meaning is not plain, a continuous user, extending over many years, may be called in aid to shew what the true meaning is. Dublin Corporation v. Trinity College, 88 L. T. 305—H.L. (Ir.)

— Courts of Co-ordinate Jurisdiction.]—In the construction of a taxing statute applicable to the United Kingdom the Court of one country ought not to differ from the construction already given to the statute in another country by a Court of co-ordinate authority. Studdert, In re, [1900] 2 Ir. R. 400—C.A.

Transfer to Public Body—Common-law Obligation of Class.]—In construing an Act of Parliament which transfers to a public body the common-law obligations of the inhabitants at large to repair highways, there is a prima facie presumption that the Legislature did not by such a transfer intend to impose any greater obligation on the public body than that which existed on the inhabitants at large before such transfer. Maquire v. Liverpool Corporation, 74 L. J. K.B. 369; [1905] 1 K.B. 767; 92 L. T. 374; 53 W. R. 449; 69 J. P. 158; 3 L. G. R. 485; 21 T. L. R. 278—C.A.

Variation between Enacting Clause and Schedule.]—Where the language used in the schedule to an Act of Parliament varies from that of the enacting clause to which it relates, the language of the enacting clause prevails. Jacobs v. Hart, 2 F. (Just. Cas.) 33—Ct. of Justy.
